Dr. Parsons, I think, believes in the full efficacy of that process. My friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who has discussed this question more on the floor of the House than anyone else, is, as I understand, also a believer in the Haber process. There are a group of chemical scientists in the country who are of the opinion that eventually the Haber process of nitrate fixation will be developed to a point when by that method nitrates can be fixed at a cheaper cost than by the cyanamid process which is used by the American Cyanamid Co., and which is the process for the use of which plant No. 2 was built.

There is no connection whatever between the process used in plant No. 1 and that used in plant No. 2, which latter is the big project. But we must bear in mind that, however hopeful gentlemen may be of the eventual development of the Haber process, it does yet remain speculative in this country, and the cost of production by it is necessarily speculative.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. SIMS. Is the Haber process covered by a patent, and do we have to pay a royalty for the use of it?

Mr. GARRETT. Whatever patents there are of the German process, and, of course, the German patents were taken over during the war. There would be no difficulty growing out of any patent rights or improvement held by the citizens of Germany.

Mr. SIMS. I wanted to know what it was going to cost the Government.

Mr. GARRETT. So far as the Haber process is concerned, the cost is speculative because it has not been developed in America. A very small quantity of fixed nitrogen was turned out from plant No. 1, but it was never satisfactory in operation.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I know the gentleman does not want to be inaccurate about this, but it was developed that in Germany the use of the Haber process was very successful.

Mr. GARRETT. Indeed, it was, and I have made that statement. If it had not been a fact that Germany knew that the Haber process had been developed to an absolute success she never would have entered on the war because Germany not only depended upon the strategy of war, not only appreciated tactics in battle, but Germany more than any other nation up to that time realized the necessity for proper logistics in war. By logistics I mean that part of the military art which deals with the supply and movement of materials and munitions for the armies.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman happen to know what proportion of nitrate used in commercial fertilizer is produced in this country by any process?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not tell the gentleman; there are different processes. Of course, the by-product of the coke oven is one, and there is a certain amount of fertilizer manufactured from garbage. I think the American Cyanamid Co. is manufacturing on the Canadian side at Niagara Falls considerable cyanamide, which finds its way into fertilizer.

Mr. HUSTED. I was interested in knowing what proportion we imported through Chilean nitrate of soda.

Mr. GARRETT. I can not give the gentleman the figures.

Mr. ALMON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I refer the gentleman from New York to a copy of the hearings before the Senate last April, in which that information is given in detail.

Mr. GOOD. Would it disturb the gentleman if we go back to the power development?

Mr. GARRETT. Not at all.

Mr. GOOD. All the data that I had was gathered largely from the Senate hearings, and if the gentleman will look on page 15 I think he will find quite a different picture from that drawn by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Secretary of War Baker had spoken of the fact that the power plant would develop 200,000 primary horsepower. I will read from the hearings:

Senator NORRIS. How much power will it develop?
Secretary BAKER. It will develop 200,000 primary horsepower.
Senator NORRIS. The year around?
Secretary BAKER. That is primary power; yes, sir.
Senator NORRIS. When that is developed the steam units will be of no consequence, will they?
Secretary BAKER. The steam units will be of consequence, because they will be used to supplement the low stage of the river.
Senator NORRIS. Then the horsepower developed by water power that you have given applies only to the maximum and not to the steady flow?
Secretary BAKER. That was the primary power. Then, in addition to that, they have 200,000 horsepower secondary power.
Mr. ROBERTS. They claim it can go up to 400,000, but that 400,000 can only be used, a part of it, for six months.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me right there? The testimony of the Secretary—it can not be a misprint—but everywhere else it has been drilled into us that the primary or minimum horsepower would be about 100,000.

Mr. GOOD. He speaks of it all the way through as 200,000 horsepower, and it was stated before the Committee on Appropriations that it was 200,000 horsepower.

Mr. ALMON. That was with reference to the supplementary horsepower to be secured from steam-plant power.

Mr. GOOD. To continue the reading:

Senator NORRIS. What proportion of the year can you develop that 200,000 every day?
Mr. ROBERTS. Well, sir, I will tell you—I will have to answer that this way: We have got it all here in detail that we are going to present to you. But the river does have some few days in some years when it gets down as low as 70,000 kilowatts. I have to think in kilowatts, because all the power is measured in kilowatts, and a kilowatt is 1⅓ horsepower. You see, 75,000 kilowatts is exactly 100,000 horsepower. For a short period of time we will have to run the steam plant. It is figured that if we supply industry on the 8-hour basis, or two-thirds, if we were going to sell that power to industry, the best way to do it——
Senator NORRIS (interposing). What I am trying to get at is your maximum and the minimum power. In the driest day of the driest year during the time the stream has been measured, how low would the horsepower be?
Mr. ROBERTS. I think it has gotten down as low as 89,000 horsepower.

The point I was trying to get at is that I stated yesterday it would be necessary to use this auxiliary steam plant to produce nitrogen, if nothing else was done to produce it at its maximum, and that was based on that statement, which seems to be at variance with the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; but that statement, I think, is an error. My recollection is that it will require only 60,000 horsepower to operate nitrate plant No. 2 at any time, and the minimum which the gentleman has just read there of production will be 89,000 horsepower. My attention has just been called by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] to the fact that in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, at page 985, the minimum is fixed there at 100,000 horsepower. It is said that there can be a maximum of 500,000 horsepower produced by the putting in of additional turbines and various things, but nobody is asking for anything of that sort now; 100,000 as a minimum, or 89,000 as a minimum, will be always all that will be required to operate nitrate plant No. 2—in fact more. As I recall the testimony, 60,000 horsepower will operate plant No. 2 in all its units.

About the steam power plant, let me drop this thought here: In order to obtain the full benefits from your maximum water-power capacity it will be necessary always to keep ready for operation and sometimes operating the big power plant which now stands in the grounds of nitrate plant No. 2. Every large hydroelectric plant in this country is supplemented by a steam-power plant. The reason for that is that it is an economic desideratum; otherwise you could never contract for the sale of your water power except at the minimum capacity; whereas during eight or nine months of the year you can develop, say, 200,000 or 300,000 water power, and in selling your power you can fix upon an average, and then when it falls below that average and goes to the minimum, if you have kept your steam-power plant in the correct stand-by condition, you can immediately put it into operation and thereby supplement your water power and make it economically profitable. Therefore this steam-power plant ought to be maintained in connection with the water-power development at Muscle Shoals. Only by that can the highest and best economic results be obtained.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is familiar, of course, with the plan to supply industries and municipalities that would like the power in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals. Does not the gentleman see that to do that it will be necessary to draw very largely at some seasons of the year on the steam-power plant, and, if the argument of the gentleman is correct that it is necessary to have the water power in order to bring low production costs, which will necessarily increase production costs to produce nitrogen at the same time to supply this light and power?

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is correct; if they undertake to run the plant and at the same time sell an excess of power. I would suppose, as a matter of course, that if there be merely 100,000 water power developed as a minimum, and they require 60,000 horsepower to operate this dam, and if the Congress shall subsequently determine that the plant shall be operated as a fertilizer plant in accordance with the suggestions that have been offered by the War Department, that they will not enter into contracts for the sale of blocks of this power very much in excess of 40,000 horsepower to the surrounding cities.

I said a while ago that this dam ought to be completed, whether nitrate plant No. 2 is put into operation or not. That is my opinion about it. I do not know whether my colleagues who are interested in this project share that opinion with me or not, but I think so, and because there can be, without the operation of this nitrate plant, sales of this power to all of the industries surrounding it. Let me call attention to this fact: Within 135 miles up to the northeast of Muscle Shoals is the city of Chattanooga. About 100 miles north is the city of Nashville. About the same distance south is the city of Birmingham, and then some 125 miles to the northwest is the great city of Memphis—four great cities with developing industries, and all the country in between developing; and let me say this, further: Between this plant and Nashville, Tenn., there lie the principal phosphate beds of the United States, outside of those of Florida. The three elements that compose fertilizer are phosphate, nitrate, and potash. So that even without this nitrate plant, in view of its location it seems to me it would be most desirable to develop this dam, not only for its future effect on navigation but for power purposes, particularly in view of the fact that it is started and of the unique situation which there prevails.

Mr. GOOD. What alarmed me when I read of the scheme of the War Department to produce nitrogen in such large quantities was the statement that they would make out of the sale of power at the same time that they were producing nitrogen something over $2,000,000. It seemed to me that the two things were not physically possible. I did not think that they could produce nitrogen in any amount that was required and at the same time sell power to any such extent as that.

Mr. GARRETT. If this dam will develop, as I understand it will, a minimum of 100,000 horsepower, and it will require only 60,000 horsepower to operate nitrate plant No. 2, there would be 40,000 horsepower left for sale at all times without the necessity of having to bring the steam plant into operation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I understand the Government or the company that operates these nitrate plants in making nitrogen will have to pay a royalty on the patents. In the contract to pay this royalty is there any limitation as to the number of tons, or whatever the unit of measurement may be, per annum? In other words, will the Government be forced to manufacture a certain amount of nitrates? If they do, of course they are bound to use that much power, which can not be sold. I am very much taken up with the idea that the gentleman has stated that the power itself is worthy of the project, but if we have a limitation in the contract that we must make so many tons of fertilizer, or pay these companies so much royalty whether we make it or not, that fact may be very much in the way.

Mr. GARRETT. Royalties do have to be paid.

Mr. SIMS. Whether used or not?

Mr. GARRETT. That has nothing to do with the amount of power. The royalties will have to be paid upon the amount of nitrogen turned out from plant No. 2, as also from plant No. 1.

Mr. SIMS. And they demand that they must produce so much?

Mr. GARRETT. No; it is not stipulated that they must produce any given amount. There will be a royalty simply on what is produced. But there has been some question about these contracts entered into with Mr. Washburn, of the American Cyanamid Co., and his company. If the bill to provide for the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 as a fertilizer plant shall come before the House, it will be necessary then to notice very carefully those contracts. That is a question of contention, and I shall not now enter into a discussion of whether the contracts are fair or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there any other plant where power is generated and sold to private enterprise by the Government of the United States?

Mr. GARRETT. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This will be the first experiment of that sort?

Mr. GARRETT. So far as I know, it will be the first experiment of that sort, and, as I said in the beginning, if this were to start the proposition, under conditions now prevailing, I would not be here advocating it. I am making my appeal in behalf of the project or projects upon which some $100,000,000 of the money of the United States has been expended, and which if we withdraw will go absolutely to waste. Now, let me emphasize this in regard to nitrate plant No. 2: You must not lose sight of the fact, gentlemen—here are where the logistics of war come in—that that plant constitutes to-day the Government's greatest material military asset. Now, it does not matter whether gentlemen agree that was the right place to locate it or not, whether in the struggle between communities to obtain this project another might have been chosen. Personally I think it was a most desirable place, although many points in my own State were suggested for it, but that question is wholly immaterial. It is not a question of whether it was wise to embark, if you please, in the building of it. That is not now a live question. The fact remains that there stands a plant which has cost the Government many millions of dollars, and to-day it is the greatest nitrate plant anywhere upon the earth, and which is an absolute success, as has been conclusively demonstrated in its operations since the signing of the armistice.

You can not get in your minds a picture of the magnitude of the plant without visiting it. You may see it in the movies, you may see photographs of it, but you can not by these envision its bigness. The main and principal building of that plant, in which one of the processes essential to the manufacture of cyanamid is carried out, is, as I now remember, one-third larger than this Capitol Building itself, 100 feet wide and 1,000 feet long. It has a capacity, working at full power in all of its units, of 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per year. Now, it is desirable from a military standpoint alone, in my opinion, and the recent war has taught us that, for this Government to have ready at a moment's notice such a plant as this which it can put into operation within 24 hours and begin to produce that material without which no nation can live either in war or in peace.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is my impression correct that the nitrate plant is dependent upon the completion of the dam?

Mr. GARRETT. No, sir. Its economic operation in times of peace as a fertilizer plant would require power from this dam, but they have there now a great steam power plant. There is also built in connection with it a transmission line from the Warrior River, 90 miles away, which supplies 30,000 horsepower. These can be used in war time, when costs are disregarded. That Warrior River plant is the plant of the Alabama Power Co., and, by the way, let me say right here, if gentlemen will do me the honor to read the minority views which I presented with the Graham report, they will find that I concur with the majority upon certain phases of it. I said there that the Alabama Power Co. did not stand in a favorable light in the records before the committee. That company to-day—it is an English concern, by the way, and is, I think, mostly owned by English capital—practically has a monopoly of the water power in northern Alabama, and perhaps the whole State of Alabama.

Mr. FESS. I think I was misled by the suggestion of the gentleman that whatever we do with the nitrate plant we ought to finish the water-power plant.

Mr. GARRETT. I think that is true. I think we ought to finish the dam, that is my individual opinion, whatever we determine to do with the nitrate plant.

Mr. FESS. The nitrate plant does not depend upon finishing the dam?

Mr. GARRETT. But its economical operation would depend very largely upon power from this particular dam, as I see it.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I do.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman happen to know how much it has cost since the armistice to produce nitrate per ton at plant No. 2?

Mr. GARRETT. I know there was a test in January, 1919, just about a year ago, when there was the first and I believe the only test that has been had, but gentlemen can readily understand that the main purpose was to determine whether it would do the thing intended to be done.

Mr. HUSTED. Pardon me there. Did the test develop to the extent of showing that the cost was prohibitive in turning out commercial fertilizer——

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will allow me to answer that question, the cost under actual experimentation of the production of ammonium nitrates showed that it was $65 a ton, not at all prohibitive, but cheaper than the current commercial rate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are figures available as to the possible capacity of production of plant No. 2?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes, sir; it can produce 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate. Now, let me explain——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In what time?

Mr. GARRETT. In a year. Now, let me explain what is desired by this bill that is pending before the Military Affairs Committee of the House and that has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate.

Up to a certain point—of course, these things are pretty technical, and not being a chemist I shall not attempt to make a technical explanation—up to a certain point the processes used in the manufacture of ammonium nitrate and ammonium sulphate are precisely the same. In other words, this material starting in at the beginning of the plant as limestone of very high order and coke runs down through the various processes of manufacture until it finally reaches the stage of ammonium nitrate.

Now, they can begin back at a certain point—I do not remember how many units behind; can the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] refresh my recollection about that?—some two or three points behind the finished product of ammonium nitrate—they can put in some additional equipment, estimated, I believe, to cost, or it was at the time, about $3,000,000, and turning the process there can manufacture ammonium sulphate, which is the desirable form of ammonia for fertilizer purposes. I understand ammonium nitrate has all the fertilizer properties, that it has, indeed, a higher percentage of nitrogen than ammonium sulphate has, but by reason of its peculiar nature it is not and never has been anywhere used to any appreciable extent as a fertilizer. Therefore, to put nitrogen into the form that is desired and to make it a commercial proposition, it will be necessary to turn the plant into an ammonium-sulphate plant. Now, that can be done, as I said a few moments ago, without affecting the ammonium nitrate possibilities or units, and upon a notice of only 24 hours, should war come, the sulphate units can be stopped and the nitrate units put into operation, and you have started on the process of creating that basic element of destruction in war. As a military asset, therefore, gentlemen, consider and consider seriously the matter of the preservation of this plant. It is not possible, in my opinion, to dispose of this plant to private parties at any price that would remotely approach a just return to the Government of the expenditures it has made.

I have tried to study this matter in all of its various phases. I, as gentlemen here who have associated with me and know the bent and tendency of my mind realize, have uniformly been opposed, and am now opposed, to Government operation of industry where it can be done by private parties under ordinary conditions. But this proposition is so unique, it is so remarkable, that I have come—I confess with reluctance, because it has run counter to my feelings and convictions through all life—to the conclusion that it is to the interests of the Government to put this plan into operation, to expend the relatively small amount that would be required—and I shall discuss it further if it ever comes before the House—to make of plant No. 2 an ammonium-sulphate plant, thereby assuring ourselves that it will be retained and continue to be what it is now, the Nation's greatest matériel military asset, ready for instant and effective use in time of national need.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman tell us what in his judgment will occur if this appropriation that is asked for is not made relative to that plant? What in your judgment will be the result?

Mr. GARRETT. If this appropriation is not made——

Mr. HUDSPETH. At this time.

Mr. GARRETT (continuing)—and no appropriation is made anywhere else; practically all the work of preparation which has been made there will have been wasted, even if it should be revived a year from now.

Let me emphasize, Mr. Chairman, this point, that our people, recognizing as they do that this is not a local project, but that it is a national one, are very apprehensive on account of the committee's action, because they are fearful it means that the party in power has determined as a policy that this project is to be abandoned; that the nitrate plant is to be permitted to fall into ruin, and that the dam, so much of it as has been constructed, is to be permanently thrown away, so far as the Government is concerned. It would be absurd, let me venture to say—and I do not care to use harsh language—if it is the purpose in the future to carry on this work it would be absurd to stop it now. The force that is required has been organized there by the engineers of the War Department. They have all the labor that is necessary now. There are 5,000 or more workmen there. The moment that plant shuts down that labor will drift to the four winds of the earth. If within a year thereafter it should be determined to start it, all the work of organization will have to be done over again, all the force will have to be built up. Not only that, but the physical properties that have been built there, the cofferdams, will deteriorate, necessarily; they will probably be swept away by high water. The bridge itself is in danger. I saw it stated in the record that Col. Cooper, who has been referred to in this debate, and referred to favorably by all, the builder of the Keokuk Dam and the consulting engineer upon this project, had stated his estimate of the loss to the Government if it should be abandoned over a period of time sufficient to permit the organization to go to pieces would be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Am I correct in the understanding that about $100,000,000 has been spent on the nitrate plant and about $17,000,000 by the President for the dam?

Mr. GARRETT. Seventeen million dollars has been allotted by the President for the dam. My recollection is that the expenditure on the plants Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 and the dam was about $116,000,000. I can not give the gentleman the exact figures on 1 and 2, but there was $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 each on 3 and 4, at Cincinnati and Toledo.

Mr. ALMON. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that I think there was about $13,000,000 spent on plant No. 1 at Sheffield and about $72,000,000 on plant No. 2. The hearings will show.

Mr. GARRETT. The Graham report states, and I read from it—

> The committee finds there has been expended for construction upon the Government's nitrate program to the present time the sum of $116,194,934.37.

That included the expenditures on the dam and on plant No. 1 and plant No. 2, located at Sheffield and Muscle Shoals, and upon plants 3 and 4, which were begun at Cincinnati, Ohio, and at Toledo, Ohio.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I ask, not in the spirit of criticism at all, but only to ascertain the facts, how much of that money was expended in experimentation?

Mr. GARRETT. Let me say this—my view of it is that all of plant No. 1—that is, the ammonium part of plant No. 1—was really an experiment. The amount expended on that part was something like $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. I think that was all experimental, because the Haber process had not been developed at that time up to the point of success in this country, nor has it yet been so developed. The cyanamid process was a complete and an entirely successful process. Nothing was expended on experimentation in that regard. Let me say, because I do not want to be misunderstood, that I think the Government was entirely justified in expending the amount they did expend on experimentation. It required more than seven years of intense experimentation in Germany to bring the Haber process up to the successful producing point.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was there money expended on the other three plants in experimentation?

Mr. GARRETT. No. Plants No. 3 and No. 4 were to use the cyanamid process. They were to be duplicates, each one of them half the size of plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals. In other words, the two were to have each a capacity of 55,000 tons per annum.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Gladly.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true that the engineers in charge of this project have heretofore examined it rather from the military than from the commercial point of view? For example, has there been any real comparative examination of the cost of producing nitrogen which will have to be used at these plants as against other possible means of producing it in the country?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that since the armistice, during the year 1919, a very careful study was made by officers of the Ordnance Department of costs of production, with a view to determining whether or not it could be economically operated as a fertilizer plant, and those figures are contained in what is known as the Glasgow report. It was from that report that I obtained my first knowledge of them. It was a comparison of the cost of Chilian nitrates particularly, and I am sure that fuller and more elaborate information was given in the hearings that were had before the Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HUSTED. I was particularly interested to know whether it covered also the possible production at a place like Pittsburgh, for example, where we have large coke ovens, and where it is said it can be produced very cheaply.

Mr. GARRETT. It was compared with the cost of production of ammonia from the coke ovens. The conclusion was that they could, after a comparison with the Chilian nitrate, and with the by-products of the coke ovens—the Government could afford to operate this as a commercial proposition. Of course, it is true that the War Department has the military concept in its mind, and its primary interest is undoubtedly to preserve it as a war instrument. There is not, I am sure, any question about that.

Mr. HUSTED. They are not usually very much concerned with cost. That is, it is not a primary consideration with them?

Mr. GARRETT. That is quite true, but I think in this instance they have very scrupulously studied that question of costs with the commercial idea in view; but of course they have the military idea, and I have it. I think that until we have reached a point where, by the invention of man, the necessity for these nitrates will be done away with, or until we have reached a point where some cheaper process is shown to be practicable in their production, it would be the height of folly for this country not to take advantage of the lessons it learned from the late war and maintain in a going condition this great plant which has cost the country from $70,000,000 to $80,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand why the gentleman refers to the Haber process as the experimental one, and the cyanamid process as a demonstrated success, when very large quantities of ammonium nitrates have been made by the Haber process, not in this country but elsewhere.

Mr. GARRETT. I meant in this country, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But very small quantities, or at least comparatively small quantities, have been made by the cyanamid process anywhere.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I am not mistaken. I have the figures at my command. Where will the gentleman say it is being made at the present time by the cyanamid process except as a by-product in small quantities?

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman knows that the cyanamid was the first process to be developed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the arc process was the first.

Mr. GARRETT. I mean between it and the Haber process. The cyanamid process has been used in various countries in Europe. Germany itself has used the cyanamid process during the war, although the great bulk of nitrate has been produced by the Haber process or its modifications. But we have never had the Haber process in this country. The process which the General Chemical Co. has experimented with, and which was later put into plant No. 1 at Sheffield, was not the Haber process itself. It was a modification of the Haber process, and I apprehend there would be quite a contest between the General Chemical Co. and any one who claimed that the German process patents had been infringed upon by that company. Of course, as I stated in the very beginning, it was a tremendous success in Germany; and if Germany had not known it would be she never would have gone to war at the time she did.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. FREAR. The engineers' report shows an expenditure of $20,000,000 on this project, and they are asking for $10,000,000 this year. Is that covered by the $116,000,000 already spent, and is this $10,000,000 proposed to be given to the engineers on the river and harbor bill the $10,000,000 that is asked for to-day of this committee?

Mr. GARRETT. No. This is the situation: Out of the $20,000,000 appropriated in the national defense act, with which the gentleman is perfectly familiar, the President has allotted $17,000,000 to the dam. Now, let me say—and I see the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is examining his book there—there is a discrepancy in testimony. It was shown before our investigating committee that about $13,000,000 had been allotted out of the President's fund to the dam, and that the remainder had been allotted to this nitrate plant No. 1. That is what our report says. As a matter of fact, it seems that subsequently, and probably out of the item of "Armament of fortifications, C," there was allotted to the nitrate plant No. 1 a certain amount of money. It does not appear in any hearing anywhere. I called up an officer of the War Department yesterday afternoon when I discovered the discrepancy. They allotted from somewhere that sum.

It was allotted out of some fund, and went to this nitrate plant No. 1, which enabled them to reimburse the President's fund; so that the total amount allotted to the dam out of the $20,000,000 originally appropriated to the President is $17,000,000. Of that $12,000,000 has been expended. It is expected that the remainder of this allotment will be exhausted by the 30th of May of this year, and this $10,000,000 estimated for, which is not in the present bill but which we hope to put there, is to carry on the work during the fiscal year 1921–22.

Mr. FREAR. Is the $10,000,000 that is asked for by the engineers under the river and harbor bill the $10,000,000 that is suggested here, or is that cumulative? Does it mean $20,000,000; that is, $10,000,000 in the river and harbor act and $10,000,000 in this bill? They asked for $10,000,000, which, I assume, will be brought in by the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Is this independent of that?

Mr. GARRETT. Is that asked for Muscle Shoals in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. FREAR. For Muscle Shoals. It is asked for by the engineers, and I assume that it is for this particular work. I was asking purely for information. Then comes the additional question of the $20,000,000 which has been expended here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee five minutes more.

Mr. FREAR. This is a pretty important matter. I wish to get clear the amount of money that has been expended and what is proposed to be expended. As I understand it, $116,000,000 has been expended. That is right, is it not?

Mr. GARRETT. That is on nitrate plants and everything connected therewith and the dam.

Mr. FREAR. Then is this $20,000,000 which has been expended under the Army engineers in addition to the $116,000,000?

Mr. GARRETT. No; that is included in it.

Mr. FREAR. That is a part of it?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. McKINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKINLEY. If this water power is so valuable for commercial purposes, as well as valuable for the Government in time of war, would it not be entirely feasible to lease the project in its present state of completion, the Government making a long-time and very favorable lease at a very low rate of interest, and let the private concern then expend the additional money to develop the water power? Is not that a feasible proposition?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think so. All the reason I can give for not thinking so is to go back into the past history of this matter and judge from the statements that have been made before various committees of the House in regard to it. So far as I know, no one has ever believed that it was possible for private capital to construct this dam economically. That is to say, the cost of construction would be so great that no private company could afford to do it simply in order to obtain power to operate plants. There are some pretty interesting figures in the record about that, compiled by Mr. Washburn, who is a very eminent student of these questions, and who, by the way, is much opposed, I think, to the position I am now taking. But let me say this further to the gentleman from Illinois: If this nitrate plant No. 2 could be leased, there is absolutely only one concern in the United States or anywhere else in the world, in my opinion, that would lease it, if indeed it would. That is the American Cyanamid Co. I have not examined the contract with care upon the right of the Government to lease the use of the processes, but the question has been raised, and I think it is a very serious question whether under the contract whereby the Government uses the patented processes of the American Cyanamid Co. it can lease to some third party the privilege of using them. I think it is a very doubtful legal question.

Mr. McKINLEY. I think perhaps the gentleman misunderstands me. As I understand it, this money is asked for the purpose of building a dam to create water power, which power is good for any purpose?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. McKINLEY. My question is whether it is not feasible to use that power in commercial business, not to make nitrates? You have your steam plant there, which will stay there, and which in an emergency will make the nitrates when it does not make much difference what the nitrates cost. This is a question of developing that dam, but it would seem to me that if it would not pay a private concern to use it, then it would be very foolish for the Government to develop something to hold simply for use in time of war.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, in manufacturing fertilizer the plant will be kept in a going condition. I will say very frankly to the gentleman that I do not know whether there would be anybody who would be desirous of going in there and spending $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 or $20,000,000, or whatever sum it may require to continue this dam development. And then arises the question of what sort of contract the Government would have to make whereby they could acquire the right to what the Government has already done. I doubt exceedingly whether the gentleman or anybody else would find anywhere in the country the capital that would be willing to go in there.

Mr. OLIVER. The national defense act of 1916 contemplated the development of water power, and it was coupled with the proviso that the Government should build and operate it, and it negatived the idea that any private concern would have any hand in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, that law could be repealed or changed if it should become desirable to do so.

There is one point which I wish to refer to as delicately as I can. I wish to reiterate the disappointment and the perplexity which has resulted from the action of the Appropriations Committee. Our people do not understand it. They know what this project is. They have read the criticisms that have been made in this matter. They are familiar with this development; and I regret to say that almost to a man they find themselves unable to understand any other ground for the throttling of this project, for the stopping of this great work in this great section except the sectional ground. I do not believe that is a reason which the responsible authorities of the party in power in this House desire to be believed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have a feeling of the utmost respect for my colleague on the committee [Mr. GARRETT] who has just left the floor, not only respect for his judgment but for his extraordinary ability, and I am therefore the more pained when I reflect on the last expression he used on the floor—that his people were inclined to think that we were treating this project in a sectional way.

There is nothing sectional about this proposition as far as I am concerned, and I dare say I speak the mind of a great many on my side of the House in that respect. The question we are confronted with, gentlemen of the committee, is not a question of the North or the South or the East or the West, or any one section as opposed to any other section, but is rather a question of policy which should be pursued by we Representatives of the people in our work in the future.

If there has been anything, in my judgment, that has brought the last Congress into seeming disfavor with the people of the country it has been the fact that we have run in a large degree to paternalism and to State socialism. Departing from the doctrine of our fathers, we have come to the place where, when any hard question arises, we say, "Let the Government do it." In my judgment, in this particular emergency we have arrived at the parting of the ways. We have come to the place where we must either embark on the national management and manufacture of fertilizers or we must take the other road, which I believe leads to individual initiative and enterprise.

During the last year the subcommittee of which I am chairman has gone into the question of the manufacture of nitrates very extensively. We have gone into it from a historical as well as from an economical standpoint.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS], and I have spent many hours and a great deal of thought on this particular matter. Hearing that this bill was to be discussed, I hastened back from home to give the House what little information I could. I want to give the committee the facts, and in doing so if I state any fact that is not borne out by the evidence I am willing that any gentleman should challenge that statement at once.

I think it might be well in order to understand this nitrate proposition that we should go back to the beginning and trace the course of events that leads us to this particular question. In my judgment, there has been an effort for years to do the very thing that is being now attempted to be furthered by the gentleman from Tennessee and those who advance the idea of appropriating $10,000,000 for this project. It has been made for the single purpose, in my judgment, of erecting at the Muscle Shoals rapids at Government expense a water-power plant for the development of that part of the country. I have no doubt, nor can any sensible man have any doubt after looking at the facts as I shall attempt to disclose them briefly, that that has been the plan from the beginning, and that this is a step in the plan, and that the consideration of the ultimate welfare of the country as a whole from an economic standpoint and from the standpoint of war preparedness is a secondary question; that the one big question is the improvement of that section of the country by Federal funds.

Away back in 1906 this proposition began. Many bills on this subject have been introduced by Members of Congress. I should first say what I think properly should be said, that as a result of a provision in the river and harbor act passed in the seventies there was built around the Muscle Shoals rapids a canal having a depth of 6 feet. That canal still exists, with locks. To-day there is a depth of 5 feet all through the canal. The Muscle Shoals rapids are about 30 miles in length, including the Muscle Shoals, the Little Muscle Shoals, and the Elk River Shoals. This canal makes the river navigable around them to a depth of 5 feet. I am advised that the canal is but little used. There is little traffic on the Tennessee River at that point, and there will be little if this improvement is made. As a matter of fact, from the Muscle Shoals to Chattanooga there has been no depth of water that would insure navigation. From Muscle Shoals to Paducah, Ky., where it enters the Ohio River, there has been some navigation, but not to an appreciable extent.

The plan is to destroy the canal, to do away with it, and make at the Muscle Shoals a number of dams which will ultimately make navigation possible. To do so would require not one dam but several dams.

The first bill that was introduced was introduced by Mr. Richardson, of Alabama. It was introduced on the 18th of January, 1907. It is typical of all the bills introduced after that. The bill provided that three dams should be built at Muscle Shoals, that locks should be built, that the cost of the locks should be borne by the United States Government, and that one-half of the cost of one dam should be borne by the Government. The bill was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and it died there. After that, in many other Congresses, other bills of a similar character were introduced, sometimes providing for three dams, sometimes four, but always having in view the element that the Government should bear a certain proportion of the cost.

In 1906 a man named Frank S. Washburn, who had become interested in the manufacture of air nitrogen and who had been in Europe, went to Alabama and became interested in the Tennessee River rapids and the power that was latent there. He organized what was known as the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., and from the moment that Mr. Washburn entered the field in 1906 up until this time he has been extremely active in the promotion of this whole project. From that time on to now he has appeared before the numerous committees of Congress that have heard this proposition. Mr. Washburn has always been on hand. He is one of the cleverest, most suave, and affable gentlemen I ever saw. He is well informed, well posted, and on numerous occasions he has filled volumes of hearings before the various committees in Congress on this particular proposition—always with the idea in mind that there should be built at Government expense at Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the Tennessee River, a dam where the power could be sold to the people of the country.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. FREAR. Referring now to the question of sectionalism which was adverted to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], is there any such dam in the United States, North or South?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There never was any other such dam, to my knowledge, built anywhere in the world by the Government.

Mr. FREAR. And this proposition has been before the Congress for 13 years, according to the statement of the gentleman, so that during that period it was subject to the same charge of sectionalism as it is to-day.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, yes. I have looked at the hearings and at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the past Congresses, and charges and countercharges have been made for 13 years about this thing. One man would get up and advocate this project and another man would say it was not feasible. Immediately the charge of sectionalism would arise. It has been bandied back and forth for 13 years. This effort has been going on constantly to do this thing, and we are just simply now in one step of the process. I want to show you what the succeeding processes have been and how it was possible on account of this great war and this emergency for this thing to get as far as it has.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is there any such natural highway in the way of water that is capable of such construction as this?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Are there many such in the country?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There is one, and I want to refer to it. It is the most notable example in the United States. That is the Mississippi River. The testimony before my committee shows that the power developed at the Keokuk Dam was about the same power that would be developed at Muscle Shoals, after its completion. That project was built by private capital. The gentleman himself, if he was in Congress at the time—and I do not know whether he was or not—voted for a franchise to the Mississippi River Power Co. to build a dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, at their own expense, they building a lock, and the only thing they had to do was to turn over the lock to the United States Government, and they even keep it up, and it has cost that private concern, as I am advised, $30,000,000.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Did that improvement provide for navigation purposes?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, yes; it did. They made a lock, a first-class lock, with ample width, one of the best on the Mississippi River, and it is maintained by the Mississippi River Power Co., and absolutely makes a passage over that shoal water and rapids possible, one that is unexcelled on the Mississippi. The question arises in my mind, and in the mind of every other man, if this thing can be done and has been done by private capital, why should we here and now embark on the proposition of doing this thing by Federal aid or by having the Government do it all, if you please, without any participation by the State of Alabama or the State of Tennessee, for not a cent have they ever expended, so far as I have been able to ascertain, except in the matter of propaganda?

These three Richardson bills were proposed and all were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. They got no recognition and were not even reported out. In the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, there was a provision calling for a survey.

The efforts have been so vigorous along the line of the propagation of this particular enterprise that in that river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, there was inserted a provision for a survey of the Tennessee River. Inasmuch as this is the opening legislation that was ever had on this proposition, I want to call your attention to it briefly. It will be found on page 2540 of the hearings of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and it is as follows:

> And the Secretary of War may appoint a board of engineers whose duty it shall be to examine the present condition of the United States canal and the Tennessee River from the head of Elk River Shoals to the Florence Railway bridge, in the State of Alabama, with a view to permitting the improvement of the above-described stretch of said river by private or corporate agency in conjunction with the development of water power by means of not more than three locks and dams; and the said board may examine any plans presented by such agency and shall report whether the same, if constructed, can, without injury to navigation, or with advantage thereto, be used to develop water power, and what portion, if any, of the expense of the work should be borne by the United States.

There was a preliminary examination. Mr. Taft at that time was Secretary of War, and on March 12, 1908, he transmitted to the Congress the following report, of which I read a part:

> The board is of the opinion that no portion of the expense of an improvement in strict accordance with the plans submitted by the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Co. should be borne by the United States.

It will be understood that at that time there was but one plan submitted, namely, the plan of Mr. Washburn, who has pursued this thing for years. It was the plan of the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co. The board of engineers reported to Mr. Taft, and he to Congress, that in their judgment no part of this expense should be borne by the United States Government. This, however, was not satisfactory to those who were advocating this particular measure, and in the succeeding Congress, the Sixtieth, there were two other bills introduced along the same purpose. On April 29, 1908, Hon. T. E. Burton, of Ohio, who was at the time chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, asked the board of engineers for river and harbor improvement to review this report.

Those gentlemen who represented these constituencies were insisting that this report should be reviewed, and so Mr. Burton sent to the board and asked them to review it. On January 11, 1909, they made the following report in part. I shall not weary you with very extensive readings of these things, but I think you ought to know how this thing has been progressing step by step.

I will read the conclusion:

> The board therefore adheres to the recommendation of its report of November 7, 1907, as printed in House Document No. 728, Sixtieth Congress, first session, to which attention is invited.

That is, they adhered to the original view they took of the matter. Mr. Burton was chairman of this committee at the time. I dare say Members of this House knowing of the ability of the gentleman from Ohio will appreciate fully that the matter received fair and full consideration at his hands. I have learned and believe it is true that if there ever was a friend of river improvement in the House it was the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. Richardson persisted and introduced more bills in the Sixty-first Congress. In the river and harbor act of 1909 there was a report on this same subject. The river and harbor bill of 1909 had the following provision:

> Survey of Tennessee River from the confluence of the Holston and French Broad Rivers to its mouth, with a view to securing the best permanent navigation by open-channel work, or locks and dams, or both, and making an estimate of the cost of same, with a view to securing a depth from Knoxville to Chattanooga of 6 feet, if obtainable, or any such less depth as may be practicable between such depth and the present project depth; and from Chattanooga to the mouth of the river a depth of 9 feet, if obtainable, or such less depth as may be practicable between such depth and the present project depth. (P. 1, Doc. No. 360.)

The report submitted through the Chief of Engineers contained the following language:

> Browns Island to Florence (Muscle Shoals section). In examining this portion of the river the question at once arises as to whether the facilities afforded by the present Muscle Shoals Canal, so far as it extends, will not be fully adequate until the improvements elsewhere have been brought further along toward completion. This section has now available practically 5 feet of depth in the improved parts, and this might be slightly increased, perhaps to 6 feet, at small expense. All that seems to be actually necessary for many years is the improvement of Little Muscle Shoals (between Florence and Lock 9), of the section between Lock B and Lock 1 (at Nances Reef), and of the approach to Lock A.

Another object in postponing the full improvement of this section is to allow for the possibility of the development of the water power now going to waste. Several plans have already been prepared by private interests, and it is obvious that the carrying out of any undertaking of this character would affect the navigable capacity of the stream. It seems doubtful whether the Government will ever enter into partnership relations with private persons or corporations for the development of this power, but some new project may be proposed that will obviate the objectionable features of those already submitted. Inasmuch as there is no great urgency in carrying forward the improvement of this reach, it may well wait until the possibilities of hydroelectric development are better known and until the less-favored places in the river have received their share of attention.

For these reasons the improvements at present recommended in the stretch between Browns Island and Florence involve no more than the following: (1) The reconstruction of the dike across the river above Lock A; (2) the construction of a low dam across the river at Lock 1 to provide sufficient depths up to Lock B; (3) the construction of two locks, with accessory dams, in the channel north of Pattons Island, to submerge the rapids at Little Muscle Shoals.

This was the extent of their recommendation at that time. On two other occasions, gentlemen, the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House asked for a review of this old report of 1907, and on both of those occasions reports were made by the Board of Engineers reiterating their original conclusion, without any change from what they had formerly stated about the matter. In the river and harbor bill of 1914 those who advocated this measure had a paragraph inserted calling for an appropriation of $150,000 for a survey of the Tennessee River. When it came to the House Mr. LENROOT, of Wisconsin, made a motion to strike out this appropriation of $150,000 for a survey, and the House voted to strike it out, and it was stricken from the bill; when the bill passed no such appropriation was in the bill. In 1915 those who still advocated this project asked that Members of Congress go to Muscle Shoals and look at the Tennessee River. In 1915 the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this House and a good many other Members of Congress went to Muscle Shoals and viewed the project. This seems to have had absolutely no effect upon their opinions, and the Congress took no different view of the matter than before. At about this time Mr. J. W. Worthington, who was interested in the Muscle Shoals hydroelectric enterprise, together with Mr. Washburn, concluded that they would never get anything from Congress under ordinary circumstances. You will remember that the European war had broken out at that time and had been raging approximately a year. Mr. Worthington testified before our committee on oath. I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the testimony taken by the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department was every word taken under oath, while the testimony taken by these other committees was in the form of statements, not under oath. It does not make any difference ordinarily, but the testimony contained in the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department is verified under oath, and therefore carefully stated, and I think we are justified in relying upon its truthfulness. Mr. Worthington said this in his testimony: After the committee went down in 1915, after those who were proponents of this legislation concluded that there was no longer a possibility for them to get anything through Congress on the merits of the proposition, seeing the war raging in Europe, thinking perhaps we might become involved in it, his conclusions were as follows:

Early in June, following the visit of these Congressmen and Senators to the Tennessee River, I discovered to my surprise that the recommendations made by the United States engineers in Document No. 20, with reference to the Muscle Shoals project, would perhaps receive no favorable consideration at the hands of Congress, and it was very well known to us that there were some Members of Congress that were rather bitter in their opposition. I then decided that the only hope for the development of the great possibilities at Muscle Shoals and at other points on the Tennessee River would probably be that Congress would have to decide—or the Government would have to decide, certainly so if we went into the war—upon some plan of providing this country with the needed supply of nitrogen. I laid the whole matter before Senator UNDERWOOD—

Mr. GRAHAM (interposing). When was this now?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That was in June, 1915.

Mr. GRAHAM. 1915?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes. I laid the whole matter before him and he said very frankly that he did not think that Congress for a number of years would consider doing what the engineers recommended at Muscle Shoals. He said, however, after I had discussed the subject with him for nearly half a day, that perhaps if Muscle Shoals turned out to be the best location for any air-fixation development that the Government might decide upon, it might stand a chance to get it.

Those who were the proponents of this enterprise were then considering ways and means to bring about a feeling in the minds of Members of Congress that there should be some air-fixation program started by this Government for military purposes, and that when this wedge had once entered, this enterprise should go to Muscle Shoals. Mr. HEFLIN, of Alabama, went before the Agricultural Committee in 1916, in the spring, and tried to get an appropriation for a nitrate plant. He was unsuccessful. Then came the agitation leading to the Hay National Defense Act. In 1916 the bill, as it passed the House, had no nitrate clause in it, and it went to the Senate in this shape; in the meantime a Senate bill had been introduced, and that bill had no nitrate clause in it; when it was voted out of committee Senator UNDERWOOD, I think, gave notice that he would offer on the floor of the Senate when the bill came up in the Senate a nitrate clause amendment. The House bill was then taken up as a substitute. Finally the nitrate clause, known as section 124, was put in the House bill in the Senate. Then it went into conference between the House and the Senate and the conferees disagreed. Finally it came upon the floor of the House and a spirited discussion was held on the floor of this House.

I was not then a Member of Congress, but have read the RECORD. Considerable discussion was had, and as the result of that discussion, finally section 124 was agreed upon between the two Houses and was incorporated in the bill. I want to call attention now to section 124. It perhaps is fresh in your memories. I may, incidentally, say to the Members of the House, the House Committee on War Expenditures has filed heretofore a report on this particular subject. We took about three or four thousand printed pages of testimony on the question and filed a voluminous report. That report has never been given formal consideration by the House. The reports are accessible for any gentleman who wants to see them and can be furnished by the clerk of our committee. Now, section 124 is as follows, and I wish you to note the reading of it:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to make, or cause to be made, such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products by water power or any other power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest to use; and is also hereby authorized and empowered to designate for the exclusive use of the United States, if in his judgment such means is best and cheapest, such site or sites, upon any navigable or nonnavigable river or rivers, or upon the public lands, as in his opinion will be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act; and is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate at or on any site or sites so designated dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment, or other means than water power, as in his judgment is the best and cheapest, necessary, or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power, and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

Now, what is the purpose of the act?

And he is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate at any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, powerhouses and other plants or equipment, or other improvements than water power, as in his judgment are best and cheapest, necessary, or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power, and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

I want you gentlemen to note that the language of this act is not in the disjunctive but in the conjunctive; that the thing that Congress is trying to get at is for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in fertilizers. The first thing that Congress was doing, the first essential on which anyone must base his acts in this matter, is that they must be needed for munitions of war.

Mr. FREAR. Is there any other place in the United States outside of Muscle Shoals that has been under consideration for the manufacture of nitrates, so far as you know?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will answer——

Mr. FREAR. Why was the law put in the form that it was, other than for this improvement, as they call it, at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is the point I want you gentlemen to notice: The prime prerequisite of this thing was that it had to be necessary for munitions of war, and, following that, that the products might be useful for agricultural or other purposes. And there is no justification, gentlemen of the committee, for any appropriation by this committee or by this Congress of a single cent of money unless it is necessary to manufacture munitions of war. The Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, so testified before our committee, and his testimony can be readily referred to. He said they based their right to build these plants for the necessities of war; that they did not have any right to spend this money to erect fertilizer plants.

Mr. GARRETT. The Secretary, the gentleman will remember, further said that, in view of the language of the act, they had the fertilizer idea in mind.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; he did; but he said we could not spend any money, and had no right to do so, unless it was for a munitions plant. The $20,000,000 fund was appropriated for a specific purpose.

Mr. ALMON. Does not the nitrate section make it the duty of the President to make nitrate in peace times as in time of war?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that if he will read it as it should be read, the first thing you have got to build is a munitions plant. Then, if your product is useful for agricultural purposes you have a right to use it for that purpose in time of peace.

Mr. FREAR. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the only legislation we have had before the House relating either to a fertilizer project or a nitrate project has concerned Muscle Shoals, prior to the passage of the national defense act?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely. There were plenty of other places that would have done just as well, but nobody in the Government ever talked about any place much except Muscle Shoals. There were plenty that wanted it, but they had no show of getting it, in my judgment.

Mr. RAKER. On your construction of the statutes, with the conjunctive "and" in there, could the Government have constructed the plant for nitrates solely for munition purposes?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I think they could.

Mr. RAKER. Where do you leave the "and"?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is where I leave it. I think the Government could have constructed solely a munitions plant, but I think they also had the right to go further, and if they constructed a munitions plant and made a product that was also useful for agriculture, they had that right. I think the manifest intent of Congress was to prepare for war, if the gentleman please. It was a national defense measure, as was the whole national defense act. It was not proposed to make a fertilizer factory, but to get something that was useful in time of war.

I want to call attention to how this plant got down there at Muscle Shoals in the first place. Nothing was done about this thing by the President. Although that became a law in the middle of 1916, not a step was taken, although war was blazing across the ocean, until along in July, 1917. No. 1 plant was not located until the latter part of September, 1917, after we had been in the war six or eight months, although that act had been passed in 1916, and you gentlemen thought you voted for it as a preparedness measure. Various boards went out to look at various places in the summer of 1917 and brought in various reports. I want to call your attention to a report that was brought in by the board of engineers selected by the President to show you where they thought the plant ought to be.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Before you read that, I would like to ask a question just for the purpose of the construction of this statute here.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. In section 124 it says the President shall engage in the production of munitions of war and products useful in the manufacture of fertilizer or other useful products.

Now, what I am asking the gentleman is—and he has given the subject a great deal of thought—supposing you did install a plant and you did manufacture material that was necessary, and absolutely necessary, for munitions of war, the war having ceased, you have your plant there; and is it not the duty of Congress, then, to maintain that plant and manufacture material necessary for fertilizer?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will go this far with the gentleman from California, and in my report which I have here I have gone that far: I am opposed to junking this plant. I have always been opposed to junking this plant. I do not know what the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations is about junking this plant; but I am equally opposed to the Government running it if there is any other way to do it. I favor operating it by private capital if there is any means of doing it in that way.

Mr. FESS. If it should be given away, would anybody take it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will get to that. There is a report made by a board of engineers that was sent out. The board of engineers examined about 60 sites in the United States. Some were offered in the North and some were in the West. I know there were some in my State. But this board of engineers did not look at any of them. They went down into the States of Virginia and Maryland and West Virginia and Tennessee and Alabama and Kentucky and looked at about 60 sites down there. They went over them very carefully. One man at the head of that board was Col. Joyes, and he was then, and I believe is now, at the head of the nitrate division in the War Department. He is the man who, I think, will be placed in charge of the proposed corporation to run this plant. Finally they brought in a report along in September, 1917. They made this report to the Secretary of War after going all over this Muscle Shoals proposition. They discuss the Muscle Shoals site and give it particular notice in the following language:

> The vicinity of Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, has been so widely advertised and so strongly advocated by the agricultural interests of the South, and by a number of Members of Congress and other prominent men, as the location at which even this initial plant would be of the greatest value by the reduction of fertilizer prices, that surprise may be felt that Sheffield, Ala. (at the Muscle Shoals), is rated no higher than second, from the fertilizer standpoint. The argument for location here, in view of possible future developments of the water power at the shoals, is thought to be really an argument against the location of this plant at this site, for the process to be used required no large amount of power, but does need steam, as such, in the process, and if later plants should use a process requiring much power, such a plant would gain rather than lose by a separate location, as this would spread the advantages more uniformly over different sections of the country.
> Proximity of the phosphate rock mines of central Tennessee appears at first sight to be conducive to saving of freight, and therefore cheaper fertilizer, as, if the nitrogeneous materials be produced near the rock, it would seem that there should be less hauling of bulky materials, but the acidulation of phosphate rock at Sheffield or elsewhere near the mines would necessitate unduly long and expensive haul of sulphuric acid from the acid plants now maintained by fertilizer factories at widely separated points or the discarding of such plants and erection of new; also, as one ton of phosphate rock produces 16 units of phosphoric acid the effect of the Sheffield-Chattanooga freight differential of $1.30 (it will probably be less) per ton of rock would be to increase the cost of a standard mixed fertilizer (8–3–3) by only 65 cents, while, on the other hand, the freight differential of $1.20 per ton on fertilizer in favor of Chattanooga or Knoxville as against Sheffield (on shipments to Columbia, S. C., a fairly representative point) is a direct increase in the final price nearly double the saving due to shorter haul of the crude rock.

No one, to my knowledge, has ever contradicted these statements of fact. But finally, after going all over these things, the report of Col. Joyes concludes:

> Therefore I strongly recommend the location of this plant at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Following the making of this report, Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, made his recommendation to the Secretary of War in this way, in part:

> It is my opinion that the site at North Chattanooga, Tenn., having been adjudged first from the fertilizer standpoint and first from the compromise standpoint, is best fitted for the construction now contemplated, and I recommend its adoption and the purchase of a tract of 500 to 600 acres.

This report was made to the Secretary of War. Our subcommittee went down to the War Department to look at the original papers. We got to rummaging around among the papers, and we found that report, and on the edge of it we found this, written in longhand:

> The President has selected Sheffield. So informed by the Secretary of War. 9/28. W. C.

Gen. Crozier has stated that was his handwriting and notation. So when the report had gone to the Secretary of War, and all the boards had recommended Chattanooga, Tenn., as the most logical and economical and available place at which this plant could be located, it goes to the President, and the President says, "I put it at Sheffield." Nobody has ever satisfactorily explained that decision.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Was there not a board consisting of three Cabinet officers—the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior—who made a very thorough investigation, and was it not testified by the Secretary of War that they made a recommendation favoring Muscle Shoals as the location?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It was never so testified before my committee. All I know is what is contained in the official reports found on file, and I have given them exactly as they are.

This report, mind you, of Gen. Crozier was made on September 22. The statement of the President appears on the margin to have been made on the 28th—six days after. What time was there for any board to make any report? Where was there any official board that made a report in those six days? What happened in the President's mind happened in those six days.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Assume that is all true for the sake of argument. Can the gentleman tell me what light that throws upon the question now before the House?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; if you will listen to me carefully I will attempt to illuminate that subject.

Mr. GARRETT. I will listen with very great pleasure.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, the President fixes this at Muscle Shoals, which is the next step in the proposition. Does it not strike us all as significant, looking back at the statement of Mr. Worthington, who said he went to his representative in the Senate and talked to him about the probability of getting the Muscle Shoals improved as a war necessity, that when, against the advice of every board that ever sat in the matter, it was located at Sheffield, on the Muscle Shoals, it was probably done in pursuance to that first plan?

Let me call your attention to another significant bit of testimony. Mr. Worthington was on the stand. He was a gentleman who maintained a lobbying parlor in the city here for a while, where he had moving-picture shows of Muscle Shoals and a general headquarters for those who favored this movement; and Mr. Worthington testified on oath before the committee. When I asked him how it happened that this plant went to Muscle Shoals, he said:

> I returned to Washington, and I understood from the statement of men who lived at Chattanooga—I think that must have been on the 9th of September, perhaps, in 1917.

Notice the date. That was as soon as Worthington found it out. The President made his order on the 28th. Mr. Worthington seemed to have had information to that effect. Mr. Worthington said:

> I returned to Washington, and I understood from a friend of mine who lived in Chattanooga and who was here at that time—I think that must have been the first days in September, perhaps, of 1917—that nitrate plant No. 1 would be located at Chattanooga, Tenn., and this gentleman, who was Mr. Howard, of Chattanooga, seemed to have the information definitely to that effect.
> Mr. GRAHAM. Well, do you know why it was not?
> Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not personally know, but I think if Senator Martin, of Virginia, were living he could tell how it happened, because I was informed—I have learned that as a fact since—that farmers in Virginia went to Senator Martin. Mr. Thornhill went to him and urged that Muscle Shoals was the first location from a fertilizer standpoint. I think if you would have a conversation with Senator UNDERWOOD he could give you details that I do not know about.
> Mr. GRAHAM. You think it was due to the efforts of Senators Martin and UNDERWOOD that it was located at Sheffield?
> Mr. WORTHINGTON. I don't know that it was due alone to their efforts, but I know that they took an interest in it.
> Mr. GRAHAM. Do you know whether they saw the President about it?
> Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was advised that Senator Martin did see him.

Following the location of this plant at Muscle Shoals contracts were made for the erection of plant No. 1. Gentlemen of the committee, plant No. 1 is a failure, always has been a failure, and always will be a failure in all probability, and I will tell you why. There was a good deal known about the Haber process that has been talked about here. That is the cheapest process——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will it disturb the gentleman's line of thought to give the location of plants Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will do that. I may have to get my time extended.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman state the location of those plants with respect to the dam?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I wish I had a map of the United States here, but I think perhaps I can describe the location adequately.

The Tennessee River flows in a westerly and southerly direction through that country. Sheffield is on the south and east side of the river. The little town of Florence lies immediately north across the river. Muscle Shoals is east of Sheffield about 3 miles, and they lie right in there together, all small towns along the Tennessee River. Muscle Shoals begins at the village of Muscle Shoals and runs quite a long distance.

The map which has been brought in here since I mentioned it is not large enough, is not drawn on a big enough scale. The situation is as I have stated it. The little town of Tuscumbia, a county-seat town, is also near there.

Plant No. 1 is located at Sheffield. Plant No. 2 was built about 3 miles east of there in the village of Muscle Shoals, where there was not much village but a small settlement, as I remember it, and the dam runs across the river about opposite where Muscle Shoals plant No. 2 was.

They located that plant down there and built it, and it cost $12,500,000, in round numbers. It is not worth having. It never was worth anything. At the time it was built they knew considerable about the Haber process, which, by the way, is the coming process in this country. Much has been said in this debate about this process. If those who are interested in it will study the proposition, they will find that the method that is used in plant No. 2 is obsolescent, and inside of 10 years from now will probably not be used at all. It is too expensive. The Haber process is a simpler process. It is the process which made Germany so powerful. It is the process that grew by leaps and bounds during the war and that we know all about now.

The trouble with plant No. 1 was the same trouble that was developed in the aeroplane proposition. The people who were building it thought they would improve a little on the German method; that they would do it on a little bigger scale, and they changed the German method and made something that would not work at all. That is what happened. If they had followed what they knew about the German Haber process, they would have had a plant that would have been a producer. But they did not do it. They experimented and fiddled around and they got something that would not work, and all the Army officers and other witnesses before our committee testified that it was not a working plant and is not to-day.

Mr. FREAR. Were there not some very valuable and important patents that were involved in this present system of which you speak, in which Mr. Worthington and some of the other gentlemen may have been interested? Was not that an element that may have had some influence?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If you gentlemen will look it up and find out the royalties that will have to be paid by this Government to the American Cyanamid Co. if you run this plant, you will be astounded at the millions that will pour into the coffers of that company as a result of Government operation of this plant. I know that Mr. Washburn is going about the country trying to prevail upon Members of Congress not to favor this measure, and perhaps that is in pursuance of a selfish interest. I have no sort of community of interest with him at all, but I tell you it is not wise for this Congress to embark upon this enterprise, for many good and sufficient reasons.

Mr. HUSTED. Is there any reason why plant No. 1 can not be changed so as to be made to work under the Haber process?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. You would have practically to tear the converters out of the plant and put in other ones, so that the pressures exerted in this process could be exerted properly and with proper catalysts. The trouble was that the converters we had and the plant that we had were on too big a scale, and it would not work.

Mr. HUSTED. Would the process of reconstruction be very expensive?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I think it would cost half of what the plant is worth to reconstruct it, from what I have seen of it.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman spoke about Mr. Worthington, but did not show any connection between him and the American Cyanamid Co. The gentleman did not state whether there was any connection between the two.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Worthington in the beginning was operating with Mr. Washburn. Mr. Washburn and Mr. Worthington organized the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co. They were also associated in many other enterprises down there together, public utilities of various kinds, and were associated for years in this particular proposition, and are still associated together to some extent in advancing that project, and of course that is one of the reasons why he particularly interested himself in this thing, probably, that they are associated in a business way.

Mr. ALMON. I would not want that statement to go unchallenged. I want to state that I know of my own personal knowledge that there has been no business connection in any way whatever between Mr. Worthington and Mr. Washburn for a number of years.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will take the word of the gentleman from Alabama for that. All I know is that he has been maintaining a lobby here in Washington, and has been persistent and assiduous in his statements to the Members of the House about these things.

Mr. SIMS. Does Mr. Washburn have any connection with the Cyanamid Co.?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He is the president of it.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman did not state that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; he is the president of that company.

Mr. FREAR. Is Mr. Washburn the man who has these patents and now has a strangle hold on the Government under those patents?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Absolutely. Mr. Washburn controls them. The Haber patents are open to the use of any man. I am informed privately—it is not in the sworn testimony—that there are at present organizations in the United States, companies of strength, with great capital behind them, organized for the manufacture of synthetic ammonia by the Haber process. If the United States Government goes into the business, that industry perishes immediately, as do all others in which the Government is interested, all other industries relative to the production of nitrates from the atmosphere. How can any privately owned industry compete with the United States Government?

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I did not intend to go into this matter, but I did propose when the bill for the organization of the Nitrate Corporation came up to go extensively into the cost of the manufacture of nitrates by the Government; but I do not care to go into it now. The question that immediately confronts us is whether we ought to spend $10,000,000 more on this dam.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman should know that Mr. Worthington's presence and activity in this city was as the representative of the Tennessee River Improvement Association, and in no way connected with the American Cyanamid Co.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That may explain the gentleman's activity in the matter. I have no doubt the Tennessee River Improvement Association has in mind the welfare of their community and locality. I do not blame them for that. I assume that he has severed the connection with the American Cyanamid Co., and that may be the moving power behind him.

You will remember that $20,000,000 was appropriated by section 124 of the national defense act for the construction of the plant and necessary dams for experimental nitrate purposes. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] told you that there was approximately $17,000,000 allotted for the building of that dam, and he says that comes from a reallotment of certain funds and the payment back of money enough to the original nitrate fund by the President or some other agency of the Government. I want to call attention to the sworn testimony before us as to where that money came from that built plant No. 1. The gentleman told you that the whole plant cost approximately $12,300,000. The gentleman said the ammonia plant cost $6,000,000. That is true, but the conversion plant made the whole cost about $13,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood the gentleman to say he was not in favor of junking this plant.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. After the exhaustive investigation the gentleman has made, what does the gentleman think ought to be done by the United States, who now owns it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There are two things, in my judgment, that could be done. First, it can be kept in a stand-by condition; and, second, it could be leased, or at least some effort could be made by the Government to enlist private capital before we embark on this extremely expensive burdensome program that is contemplated.

Now, I want to call attention of the committee, briefly, to the items of cost in plant No. 1. You will find on page 58 of the report a sworn statement given by an officer of the War Department who had charge of the allotment of funds to plant No. 1. Out of the amount appropriated for fortifications they got $5,395,245.59. Under the national defense act, $5,350,000; under the national security and defense act, $3,500.000. That is to say, they took over $5,000,000 out of the fortification fund, $5,350,000 from the $20,000,000 appropriation, and three and a half million dollars from the President's defense fund, and they put all that into this fund. The testimony before our committee shows that they had expended the $5,350,000 from the $20,000,000 fund.

Now, they say that they have $17,000,000 left. Where did they get it?

Mr. ALMON. I think I can explain that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It needs explanation.

Mr. ALMON. After the President allotted $13,170,000 toward the construction of a dam, and after nitrate plants No. 2 and No. 2 were completed, it was found that some of the funds that had been used in building No. 1 could have been used in building No. 2, and they transferred from that fund back to the nitrate fund of $20,000,000 the $4,000,000, making $17,170,000 that is now allotted to the dam out of the $20,000,000 of the national defense act.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The whole thing shows that they first took $5,350,000 out of this fund, and then later, when they thought they needed more money for the dam, in order to further put us in a position where we could not recede, they paid this back into this fund and thus fixed it so more money could be used for the dam.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am told that I have only a few minutes remaining. Can the gentleman from Iowa give me any more time?

Mr. GOOD. I expect to close debate to-day, and there are some more requests for time, but I will yield the gentleman 15 minutes more.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. During the discussion with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] there was a statement made under the authority of some engineer that commercial fertilizer could be produced in Plant No. 2 under the cyanamid process at one-half of the present cost of fertilizer to farmers in the United States. Has the gentleman any information about that?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I have a lot of it.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from New York does not quote me as making that statement?

Mr. HUSTED. No; I understood the statement was made.

Mr. GARRETT. I did not make a statement as to the cost, but the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] made a statement as to it.

Mr. HUSTED. I did not say that the statement was made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have a lot of information about it. They never tested but two units at that plant. A man by the name of Glasgow, an Englishman, made a report in which he said that the stuff could be made down there cheap enough to sell ammonium sulphate at $48 a ton at that time, and that they could compete with commercial fertilizer. At that time the reports were based on the proposition that sodium nitrate, Chilean nitrate, was selling at $90 a ton, and on other war conditions. It is down to $55 a ton to-day. There is no reasonable man within the sound of my voice who knows anything about it who will contend that the Government can operate that plant down there in competition with the Chilean or sodium nitrate producers. So far as the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is concerned, that you can not use Chilean nitrates in time of war, I can correct him by saying that we did use them in the time of this war. We built a plant at Perryville, Md., where we converted Chilean nitrate into ammonium nitrate and ammonium sulphate, and we made all that we used there, outside of what we got from the by-products of coke ovens.

There never was any reason for this nitrate program, never on earth. It was all born in the mind of Bernard M. Baruch, of New York. They got scared when they got into this war. The President sat around and did not do anything until 1917 about this one nitrate plant that Congress had authorized, and in the fall of 1917 and in the spring of 1918 Mr. Baruch got excited about the thing and started them to building nitrate plants. Plant No. 2 was located at Muscle Shoals, at the oral order of the Secretary of War, and against the advice, I think, of those who were called into consultation. It was built from money taken from the item of armament and fortifications, C. There never was a cent of money from the $20,000,000 of the national-defense fund put into plant No. 2.

It is said that this is proper as an amendment to this bill, because it is carrying out existing law and is an appropriation to build a dam authorized by the national defense act, section 124. The power is not needed for plant No. 1, because that has a power plant of its own which is amply sufficient, and the plant is not working anyway. It is said to be needed for plant No. 2. It was not built under the national defense act, and therefore if you appropriate money for this you appropriate money to build a dam for a plant not built under the national defense act at all. Do you think that is proper?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Plant No. 2 might have been built under that act.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Oh, it might have been, but it was not. So might this Capitol.

Mr. GARRETT. I am discussing the question from the legal point of view.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I say that it was not, and you want $10,000,000, which ultimately will be $40,000,000, for the purpose of building a dam for plant No. 2, which was not built under the national defense act. I contend that if there is any proper way to get it before this House, that amendment will be out of order, for it is not an amendment to existing law and it is not a provision to carry out existing law.

They said that this was necessary because the German submarines would cut off most of the Chilean nitrate. The Chilean nitrates, most of them, come from a town called Iquique, in Chile. Boats came up the west side of South America and came through the Panama Canal and up to New York. It was claimed that the submarines might cut across and cut off their lines of nitrate ships and, therefore, that it was necessary to build nitrate plants. The distance from Iquique to San Francisco is almost identically the same as the distance from Iquique to New York, and the distance to Los Angeles is less. There were powder plants in California and in New Orleans and in New York. There was no reason on earth why if German submarines had cut off passage to the east the ships could not have come up the west coast with nitrates. There was no reason for this excitement. If the submarines had been able to cut off our Chilean nitrate ships, would they not in the same way have been able to cut off the ships that carried our soldiers across? Nobody, however, thought of that—they wanted to build nitrate plants. The ultimate thing in their mind was not to build nitrate plants, but to improve Muscle Shoals and get us into a fix where we would have to do it whether we wanted to or not.

I have before me some tables which I shall have put into my remarks. Notice here the import of Chilean nitrates into the United States, for it is quite significant. It starts in 1900 with 180,000 tons. In 1917 we imported 1,300,000 tons; and in 1918, the last year of the war, we imported 1,800,000 tons.

Imports of Chilean nitrates into the United States.

	Tons.
1916	1,232,308

For some time before we started this war Gen. Crozier had been asking for years that we get on hand a supply of Chilean nitrate. I want to say that he is entitled to a great deal of credit for the stand that he took in that respect. As soon as the European war broke out he said let us lay in a stock of nitrates from Chile, but when our war broke out we had in this country only 31,500 tons. When the war ended, in spite of the scare, we had on hand 600,000 tons of sodium nitrate, not a pound of which came from our nitrate plants. We had improved. We had used all that we needed for war purposes, and in addition to that had 600,000 in store, as against 31,500 in store at the time the war broke out.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman makes a criticism because Gen. Crozier's recommendations were not availed of. Is it not a fact that Congress made no appropriation with which to buy nitrates?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am not prepared to say about that, but I say further that I do not know that the War Department ever asked Congress to make any.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it not a further fact that in the same report of 1915 Gen. Crozier also recommended the development of nitrogen fixation?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Surely, absolutely; but does that excuse anybody for not doing the simplest thing necessary? When Germany started this war she had on hand 600,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, while we had 31,500, less than we had had for years, and not enough for agricultural purposes. They talk about not having enough nitrates in time of war. Do you know that we spent hundreds of millions of dollars during this war for the by-products of coke ovens that produce ammonium sulphate? In 1901 we produced 29,901 tons of ammonium sulphate, and in 1919 we produced 500,000 tons. This year we are producing more. I give a tabulated statement here:

Production of ammonium sulphate in United States.

	Tons.

Estimated production 1930, 900,000 tons.

This material is the very thing that they are talking about making at Muscle Shoals. We are making more ammonium sulphate to-day than the country will take, and its price has gone down to $70 a ton. Do you want to put all of these by-products coke ovens out of business? That is what you are going to do if you go into this thing. We are talking about conserving our resources. Let us conserve them on that. Do you gentlemen know anything on earth that you ought to do more than to save the by-products of coal that have been going up into the air for years and years in this country?

This is the greatest measure of conservation that is possible to be made in this country. We started that program during the war and let us keep it up. Here is the amount of ammonium sulphate used in fertilizers in the years past:

Ammonium sulphate used in fertilizers in the United States.

Year:	Tons.
1930 (estimated)	780,000

In 1913 the country only used 215,000 tons of ammonium sulphate fertilizer. In 1919 we used 190,000 tons. Compare that with the 500,000 tons we produce. In 1930 it is estimated that the by-product coke ovens will produce 900,000 tons and that our agricultural demands will be 780,000 tons of ammonium sulphate. They are changing rapidly to the by-product oven. Do you want to stop that? Absolutely any reconsideration of the matter will convince anybody that it is unwise and that this thing proposed to be done to-day is going to affect this country for 100 years in the future.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman state which is the most economical of the two?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. To save your coal and gas, of course.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My time is so limited I regret I can not. Here is a table showing what was spent down there:

SUMMARY.

The total cost of the nitrate program of the United States, including estimates for the various improvements in the vicinity of the Muscle Shoals, when completed, will be as follows:

Already expended in Muscle Shoals territory:
United States Nitrate Plant No. 1	$12,152,636.91
United States Nitrate Plant No. 2	69,985,221.42
Alabama Power Co	5,167,277.14
Wilson Dam	13,170,000.00
Waco quarry	60,000.00
Total	100,535,135.47
Expenditures contemplated in Muscle Shoals territory:

Plant No. 1 cost $12,152,636.91; nitrate plant No. 2, $69,985,221.42. We spent on the plant of the Alabama Power Co., when they put in the power plant for the manufacture of 30,000 kilowatts of electric power, $5,000,000. We spent all of this on property that does not now belong to us, but to the Alabama Power Co. No wonder my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said that we created a monopoly. We paid for their plant and then gave it to them. That is the size of it.

Mr. GARRETT. I hope the gentleman will not quote me as saying we created it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No. I am quoting myself when I said we built it and gave it to them. I have not ascribed that to the gentleman from Tennessee. They have now spent on the Wilson Dam $12,000,000. The figures of cost I have given above are based on their original estimate of a cost of $25,000,000 for the dam. Now they want $45,000,000, which will increase my total estimated cost to $189,110,125.57. Another dam, No. 1, to cost about $2,500,000, and another dam, No. 3, to cost $12,033,150—all these are contemplated. They do not talk about them now, but they want them. The Muscle Shoals Dam will not help the navigation of the Tennessee River 1 inch, so the testimony is. They have expended on the Waco Quarry and other unnecessary work approximately a million and a quarter dollars since we had these hearings and in spite of continued protest. There was a good deal of comment in Congress at the time this Muscle Shoals matter was originally before the House. Vigorous objections were being made in the Congress to the location of the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals and to the way the matter was being manipulated. There was also serious comment about the necessity of building plant No. 2 at all. No one took a more prominent part in that discussion than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. Mr. Baruch had insisted that more nitrate plants be built, and a board of engineers and scientists advised that they be located at points in Tennessee. The plants, however, were located at Cincinnati and Toledo, Ohio. The reason did not appear until Col. J. W. Joyes, of the Ordnance Department, took the stand. He said:

Col. JOYES. * * * While I liked very much the Kingsport site and thought perhaps the best thing to do, and the best thing we could do, was to go right up to Toledo and Cincinnati and build up there; and, furthermore, I don't mind saying to you that I mentioned to Mr. Stettinius that I thought it would not hurt anything to quiet some of the opposition that was coming from that neighborhood up here to anything that we were attempting to do down South. We could not afford to be handicapped by interruption of everyday business by the attacks that were made.

Mr. GRAHAM. You refer, I suppose, to the attacks of Congressman LONGWORTH?

Col. JOYES. Not particularly; no, sir. I do not refer to anybody as making attacks that were not advisable or making attacks at all. But there were attacks of this and that and the other community, you know. The communities claimed that they had everything that goes to make up a plant site; and it takes time when you are busy, as we were at that time, to handle those matters, and it is desirable not to have those things come in.

Mr. GRAHAM. Congressman LONGWORTH was making statements in Congress on the Muscle Shoals plant?

Col. JOYES. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM. You had that in mind to some extent, I suppose?

Col. JOYES. Oh, yes; undoubtedly.

So they started to build two nitrate plants in Ohio and they spent about $15,000,000 on them. Here is an enlarged photograph of the quarry they operated during the war, the Rockwood, and it is a fair illustration of the wonderful supply of stone there. They abandoned this quarry, which was practically inexhaustible.

They are developing another quarry now. At plant No. 1 they built a clubhouse for officers to live in. They built it at a cost of $120,000; it has 30 suites of rooms with baths, providing for 30 bachelors. At plant No. 2 they built a clubhouse costing approximately $360,000 for officers to live in, called "first quarters." This picture shows pretty well what they have done in reference to the dam; these are all temporary structures. While we were there in the spring of the present year it was in that condition. And now, gentlemen, briefly, I want to make a comparison to show what we are going into here. The amount of money they have spent is represented on this chart. What we have already spent down there would buy the buildings and grounds of the Library of Congress, Senate Office Building, House Office Building, Capitol, State Department, Treasury, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Pension Office, General Land Office, the Department of Agriculture, Pan American Union, Patent Office, Interior Department, Munitions Building, War and Navy, and 160 public school buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia. Now, that is what we have spent, and what we propose to spend; $60,000,000 would build the Assuan Dam, 17 temporary war buildings, food buildings Nos. 1 and 2, fuel buildings Nos. 4 and 7, H. L. Peters Building, War Trade Building, War Industries Building, National Defense Building, Archie Butt Building, Corcoran Courts, Tempo No. 6, 1800 Virginia Avenue, buildings A to F Sixth and B, Roosevelt Dam and Reservoir, Elephant Butte Dam and Reservoir, Keokuk Dam, and then have money left over. The money being spent on our nitrate program would build 12 battleships of the Idaho type, 4 destroyers of the Manley type, and leave a balance of $533,897. The cost of the Idaho was $13,645,000. What we have already spent would build a concrete road 18 by 7 by 8 by 7 at $52,500 a mile from New York to San Francisco and would build a concrete road 18 by 7 by 8 by 7 at $46,728 per mile from New York to San Francisco and have 400 miles left.

The cost of the nitrate plant here—$169,000,000—is about half what it cost to build the Panama Canal.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In a moment.

One more comparison of expenditure. The nitrate program is shown at the bottom, at approximately $170,000,000. The United States naval programs from 1883 to 1915 were $150,000,000; the United States reclamation projects total appropriations to 1911, $120,000,000. The public roads expenditures in the United States were a little over $110,000,000. And so on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The school expenditures in the United States from the South Atlantic and South Central divisions of 1916 were only $105,000,000; the average naval appropriations of the United States Navy from 1883 to 1914 are only a little over $70,000,000. By comparison, gentlemen, when we were starting out on this program we observe we are spending a large amount of money and we do not see any end of it. They say this $10,000,000 item is a mere bagatelle. They say, "Will you let waste what we have got in there?" It will be better to lose the $12,000,000 already spent than to start out on a proposition to spend $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 unless such an expenditure is wise. I do not believe in wasting it. But here is a more sensible proposition, it seems to me. Up to this time Congress has not established any fixed policy. We have not concluded whether the plant should be leased, sold, or operated by the Government. Until such time as that policy is established, I say we ought to mark time. We ought to stand still until we determine what we are going to do. Every dollar we appropriate for this dam until such policy is fixed only further makes it impossible for us to recede, if we care to do so. We had better wait and see what the incoming administration thinks about the proposition. The plant can be leased to private enterprise and yet preserve it as a possible war plant. Offers have already been made to the Secretary of War of that kind and refused by him.

I would like to see a policy established in this House. We stand at the parting of the ways. The Government and private enterprise can not compete in commercial business. To attempt to do so only means the destruction of private enterprise. It must be either all public or all private. I incline, by training and by experience, to the encouragement of private initiative. In what I have said I have given you what I have concluded as the result of all the investigation I have made of this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, there are two phases of this big sundry civil bill which I desire to discuss. One is the failure of the committee to report any appropriation for the continuance of the construction of the dam at Muscle Shoals; the other is the inadequate appropriation and the manner in which the appropriation is made for the continuance of the activities of the Government in the operation of boats upon some of our inland waterways.

Within the time allotted to me I can not go into great detail, but must confine my discussion to some of the general propositions affecting the question.

I believe the committee made a serious error in failing to report an appropriation for the continuance of the Muscle Shoals Dam, and if the House and the Congress as a whole shall adopt the same policy, an injury to the country will be inflicted which will be almost irreparable.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] has just made an argument against the continuation of this project, or against any appropriation at this time. I will be just to the gentleman and say that he is capable of making a plausible argument, even in a bad cause, and that he made some statements and some arguments which, while plausible on their face, do not affect the merits of the proposition.

The distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], said the other day that it was necessary to make additional investigation. He did not indicate the kind of investigation, but he left the inference that he meant investigations as to the merits and importance of this dam as a water-power proposition and in connection with the use of the power so generated. The gentleman who just preceded me, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], certainly relieved this proposition of any suggestion that further investigation was necessary. He narrated in great detail the number of investigations which have been made by the engineers of the War Department. He might have emphasized that in every one of those reports this dam was singled out as one of the most important power propositions in the United States. Now, it is true in every one of their reports the engineers recommended that Congress should expend the money in the construction of the dam which affected navigation, and that the remainder of the expenditures affecting the development of water power should be made by private interests under some arrangement or contract made with some private corporation.

The last report that was made, to which the gentleman referred, submitted to Congress on June 28, 1916, was substantially in line with the report which had been made two years prior to that time, and while, as I said, it emphasized strongly the value of this water power, it recommended that the amount necessary for its construction be divided between the Federal Government, which should pay for that part of the expenditure involved in navigation, and the remainder by some private corporation under a contract made with the Government.

But in this last report the engineers call attention to the fact that in the meantime the national defense act had been enacted and that section 124 conferred upon the President certain power, and they recommended Congress do nothing in connection with the adoption of this project until opportunity had been given to the President to carry out the provisions of the national defense act. The President did act, and he selected this site as the most valuable and available in the United States.

I would like for this question to be considered without regard to its location in the State of Alabama and upon the Tennessee River, and without regard to any partisan consideration. While it is true our friends upon the other side are in the majority in this House and in this Congress, and control legislation, I for one, even if it brought partisan advantage to our side of the House, would not like to see them commit the grievous error, as I think, of neglecting this project. It is sufficient to say that it was selected after the most careful investigation, by impartial men, who presumably had no other thought than to serve the best interests of the Government. If it had been located in New England or in the Middle States or in the Middle West or on the Pacific coast, some gentlemen suggest that the criticisms which we have heard during the last two days against the continuance of this project would not have been heard.

Personally I believe that the majority in this House are too broad and too patriotic and too willing to serve the country to have anyone upon any justifiable ground draw the conclusion that they are acting upon sectional or partisan considerations.

There was a feature in connection with the selection of the site in section 124 of the national defense act which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] did not quote. It contains this language:

> The plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital.

I would call the attention of the House, then, to the status of this matter at the present time. The President having exercised the discretion reposed in him, this provision of the law became applicable and its development became exclusively a governmental function; and Congress can not, without repealing that provision of the law, do otherwise than proceed with the completion of this dam as an exclusive function of the Federal Government.

Why should the appropriation be made? Because it is the most important water-power site in the United States and more power can be generated there than from any other single site east of the Mississippi River, except Niagara Falls, and it is capable of generating more power than is now being generated on the American side at Niagara Falls. The particular reason for this legislation under which work was begun arose out of the exigencies of the war. With the exception of the production by artificial means of nitrate, we had no other recourse than the nitrate beds in Chile, and in order to relieve our country from its sole dependence upon the Chilian beds it became necessary to engage in the artificial production of nitrate, and, preferably, by the fixation of nitrogen from the atmosphere.

There can be no question of the importance of the power generated at this site for this purpose. While it is true that a magnificent steam plant was installed for the purpose of furnishing power, yet every official connected with the War Department recognized that this was only temporary and to be used subsequently as auxiliary power, and that the economic production of nitrates could only be effected by the construction and use of the dam and the development of hydroelectric energy.

It has been pointed out that the difference is $26 per horsepower per annum between water power and steam power in the production of these nitrates, so that as the officers of the War Department and every student of the question recognized at the time, and so it must be recognized to-day, that if that plant is to be economically used in the interest of the Government and of the people we must complete the dam and use the energy so generated.

Why should we complete the dam in a time of peace? Because it is so essential that we should be prepared at all times to obtain a supply, independently of every other country in the world, of the necessary nitrates to be used in explosives and propulsive materials. We may spend millions on our Army and our Navy, and yet we can not fire a gun, nor can we prepare and use the explosives now so familiar in modern warfare without these essential nitrates; and our only source of supply outside of the Chilean beds is from their artificial production in our own country, and preferably, according to the opinion of everyone, more economically and more abundantly produced by this plant that has been started at Muscle Shoals.

Other countries recognize the necessity of preparing for a supply of nitrate in time of peace. Gentlemen have spoken about the activity of France at the present time. If it has not been mentioned, it is true that Japan is exceedingly active in preparing for the production of nitrate.

Reference was made yesterday to the action of Great Britain, and it was said that England had no water power. That statement, I believe, is true, and she must utilize steam power in the production of nitrate. And if England, the mistress of the seas, is not willing to take her chances on an open pathway from England to Chile in time of war, but, upon the contrary, is willing at great expense to prepare for the production of nitrates by steam power, how inexcusable and indefensible it would be for the United States to cease preparation of its activities in time of peace when we have this abundant facility for the production of hydroelectric energy at Muscle Shoals.

I shall not dwell upon the proposition. Nitrates are essential. As an independent Nation, and having in mind a reasonable degree of preparation, we, in common with the other countries of the world, ought to prepare ourselves to furnish nitrates in such abundance as may be necessary for our own purposes in time of war.

A good deal has been said about the use of nitrates in different forms for the purpose of fertilizer and fertilizing ingredients. I do not see the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] here, but his questions yesterday indicated that he was doubtful of the value of these products as fertilizer. Some gentlemen have said that they were only necessary along the Atlantic seaboard States and not in the States of the Middle West. Surely gentlemen have not taken the time to familiarize themselves with the proper sources of information. These nitrates are valuable as fertilizer material. Their value has been so thoroughly demonstrated, according to my reading, that the proposition can not be gainsaid, and they are needed also in the Middle West.

I was impressed, perhaps as other Members were who happened to be in the House at the time, on February 19, 1920, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asked leave to read a letter to the House. It transpired to be a letter from his distinguished brother, Mr. Frank I. Mann, of Gilman, Ill., who is reputed to be as distinguished in the problems of agriculture as is his distinguished brother as a Representative and a statesman. It was a very impressive letter, and by leave of the House I shall here insert his letter in full:

[Muscle Shoals nitrate plant—Letter of Mr. Frank I. Mann, of Gilman, Ill., to Hon. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois—Printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Feb. 19, 1920.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in order to advertise myself partly and mainly for the benefit of the House, I am going to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter written by my brother, Frank I. Mann, of Gilman, Ill., who is one of the experts of this country on soil and farms, and, I think, if gentlemen will listen they will hear some interesting and instructive information about soils.

GILMAN, ILL., February 16, 1920.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JAMES R.: Ever since I learned of the Muscle Shoals project, when in Tennessee a few years ago, I have felt quite an interest in its success, because of the great opportunity it seemed to present for an increased and economical production of crops by supplying a cheaper form of fixed nitrogen. The value of nitrogen and phosphorus in the production of crops has not been properly realized. Take an example of corn for instance: In 100 pounds of corn there are but about 3½ pounds of materials which were taken from the soil; the balance of the dry weight is made of compounds formed from carbon taken from the air by the leaves of the plants and formed into sugars, starches, oils, etc. The amount of these carbon compounds that can be formed are measured, however, by the amount of materials that could be secured from the soil. If the same plants, which produced 100 pounds of corn, could have secured another 3½ pounds of soil materials—mostly phosphorus and nitrogen—they could have formed another 100 pounds of corn, without any further effort on the part of the grower, and the yield would be increased 100 per cent. On the best corn-belt soils we find it is comparatively easy to double the yields of crops by doubling the phosphorus available to the crops, where there is sufficient nitrogen to match such an amount of phosphorus. The soils which contain such an amount of nitrogen, however, are small in area. On the early glaciated and the unglaciated soils nitrogen is in small amount, and the crops will grow in proportion as they can secure nitrogen, except on the natural rich soils, which are usually alluvial and limited in extent. As a rule, the soils south of the Ohio and Missouri Rivers are unglaciated and low in nitrogen, except the alluvial types. A large part of southern Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Ohio is composed of soil types on which crops—other than legumes—will grow in proportion as the plants can secure nitrogen from the soil.

This increase in yield, which comes from the proper element of fertility, increases food production without an increase in area or of man labor, and is real economic production if the cost of the fertilizing element is small.

A good deal of the corn-belt soils have already or will soon reach a nitrogen limit to their production, and, while we will be able to profitably maintain a nitrogen supply for some time by using legume crops for the purpose, it might also be profitable and economical to supplement this legume nitrogen with a fixed commercial nitrogen. In the South, however, with the high average temperature and rainfall, it is doubtful if it would be possible to maintain enough legume nitrogen in a soil to secure a high production of food products, because of the great destruction of the organic matter in which such nitrogen must be held from the bacterial action and leaching when crops are not taking food from the soil.

I know of no one thing which could add so much to the production of more and cheaper food, and in such an economical way as to supply cheap nitrogen for these lands, so poor in humus. I do not know how cheaply nitrogen might be fixed at Muscle Shoals, but it would certainly be much cheaper than to secure it through legume growth. I figured out once the relative horsepower equivalent at Niagara Falls in fixing nitrogen compared to a clover field. The nitrogen fixed by an 80-acre field of clover, under favorable conditions and a large growth, could be fixed by a 28-horsepower engine working throughout the season. If the Tennessee River can be properly harnessed, it should be able to fix nitrogen at a small fraction of the cost of fixing it by means of bacterial or legume energy.

In these days of low man power on the farms and the need of more food economically produced, it would seem to be almost a crime against civilization to not heed this great need for cheap nitrogen.

If there is any possible and fair way to provide that the Muscle Shoals power might be used for fixing nitrogen, and that it might be obtained cheaply for farm use, it would be a wonderful step in the production of cheaper food and help to quiet the unrest of the present and future.

I understand that Mr. GRAHAM'S committee is considering matters relative to the Muscle Shoals plant and expects to take action soon. Some representatives of the Illinois Agricultural Association are going to Washington this week and I was asked to go with them, but other matters in which I am deeply interested are likely to prevent. If you can see the nitrogen problem as I see it, and the matter can be put into satisfactory shape, I hope you can see your way to help it along in the interest of humanity.

Affectionately, (Signed) FRANK.

The only inference which can be drawn from that statement is that the country as a whole does need this nitrogen, that it can be obtained by fixation in the cheapest way by the utilization of water power, and that it constitutes one of the very important essentials of the soil in order to maintain the normal production of crops. He said:

If there is any possible and fair way to provide that the Muscle Shoals power might be used for fixing nitrogen, and that it might be obtained cheaply for farm use, it would be a wonderful step in the production of cheaper food and help to quiet the unrest of the present and future.

I do not understand that there is any dissent throughout the country, from any student of plant life and of soil, as to the transcendent importance of supplementing our supply of nitrogen by the method which could be secured through the completion of this dam and the utilization of the nitrate plants which are already there.

Do gentlemen understand what would ensue if this plant should be abandoned, if no appropriation should be made by this Congress? Under the present funds available the work must stop on the 1st of June. If this Congress does not make any appropriation, it is quite evident that work must stop perhaps a month before that time, because as a prudent man the Chief of Engineers would not expend all the money available, but would reserve a certain amount in order to maintain the plant until Congress made some other provision. So that it is fair to say that the plant will close down on May 1 unless some appropriation is made.

Congress can not say that by suspending the appropriation no money will be necessary. A very large sum will be essential if the construction of the plant is suspended. I do not recall whether reference has been made to a letter which appears in the hearings before the committee, written by Col. Hugh L. Cooper, reputed and acknowledged, as I understand, to be among the most eminent of hydraulic and water-power engineers of the country. In a letter to Gen. Harry Taylor, of the office of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, Col. Cooper says:

On the second question, as to the cost of closing down the work at this time, this is difficult to answer. It is not conceivable that the Government would withdraw from this project entirely in view of the more than $12,000,000 already invested and the showing in the foregoing paragraphs. In order to estimate the cost of a shutdown it would be necessary to have a basis as to the date when work would be resumed, so that the loss in interest might be computed. If the work should shut down at this time, to be resumed, say, in three years, I am of the opinion that the combined losses to the Government would be around $4,000,000, and without any compensation therefor unless the Government might claim there was a compensation to be expected in waiting for a lower interest rate three years from now than can be obtained at this time.

So that in the first place there is the cost of maintenance, the loss by deterioration of the plant and works; there is the disintegration of the organization which has been built up; and in addition to that the loss of this immense potential energy which ought to be utilized for the benefit of the country.

It is nothing new to state that the production of power is one of the most important elements in our industrial life and absolutely essential in time of war. The records disclose that the Council of National Defense in more than one statement gave more serious consideration to the production of more power and its coordination for war purposes during the period of the war than perhaps to any other essential. Private industries which were engaged in the use of power, and not using it for essential purposes, were required to suspend their operations and to devote that power to production of war essentials; and in time of peace we should not only conserve and augment our facilities for the production of power, but as prudent citizens we should also prepare that power for the needs of the country in the emergency of war.

The gentleman who preceded me [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois] argued that the Government should not appropriate further money for the construction of this dam. He contended that it was not an appropriate governmental activity. I have already pointed out that under the provisions of the national defense act that question is in the past, because under the provisions of that act no private interest can operate there along with the Government. But I would point out in addition that the construction by the Government of a dam in a navigable river is not a new proposition, and I will cite only one illustration. The Government has constructed, at great expense, a dam in the upper Mississippi, at Minneapolis—a dam which when I last inquired had not been utilized for the production of power; that is to say, the power house had not been constructed. And I presume that one of the matters which will come before the Federal Water Power Commission will be the disposition of this great dam.

And dams have been constructed for the joint purposes of navigation and water power in other navigable rivers throughout the country. Why, then, make this an exception? Why attempt, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] urged, to make this the parting of the ways? Why should he emphasize the importance of the Government getting away from the construction of dams in navigable rivers, as at Muscle Shoals, when the Government has been constructing dams in other navigable rivers in the past years, and I doubt not will authorize the construction of dams in navigable rivers for many years to come?

Many of the most valuable of our rivers, rivers which will develop commerce, which will establish their importance as coordinate units in the transportation system of the country, can not be made navigable except by the construction of locks and dams, and wherever those dams can be utilized in addition for the production of hydroelectric energy under a general provision of law which exists at present, the plans must be made and the money must be expended for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Can the gentleman yield me five minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SMALL. So I submit that the argument that this should not be a Government activity, and that therefore we should wait, has no application to this case unless it is intended to apply exclusively to the dam at Muscle Shoals and not to the construction of dams upon navigable rivers in other sections of the United States.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who made a most illuminating and, as I think, convincing presentation of the importance of making this appropriation, intimated at the conclusion of his remarks that there were some who regarded opposition to this proposition as sectional. I was exceedingly glad to hear the gentleman who succeeded him [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois] disclaim any such purpose. And yet I was impressed, and not favorably, with the statement which was made by the same gentleman that the construction of this dam had been proposed for many years because it would benefit the section of the country in which it was located.

Is that a fair statement to make? The Government can not construct or engage in any activity locally without perhaps conferring some benefit of a local kind greater than that which is contributed to all the country. We can not build a dam on any navigable river anywhere unless the money that is expended is being largely spent within the territory where the dam is constructed.

There are certain local benefits which must occur, but is it possible that this is a local and not a national activity? The production of water power is one of the most important problems before the people of the country, and wherever water power is utilized in the production of hydroelectric energy the country is benefited not only locally but as a whole.

Hydroelectric engineers have now learned that by tying up the energy produced by the various power plants in various sections of the country that not only will the power not be reduced but that it will be actually increased. The time is not far distant when water power produced in the Appalachians, whether in North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, or Tennessee, will be interlaced, each contributing its share, and which will help in the upbuilding of industry by the furnishing of additional power. I repeat it is not creditable to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to have intimated that the motive of those who favor the construction of this dam was to secure local benefits rather than the national interest.

Mr. Chairman, I shall anticipate that in the consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule, when an amendment shall be offered, that gentlemen on both sides of the House will consider this proposition in a broad national spirit. Forget that it is located in Alabama; forget, if you please, that the majority of the committee who reported the bill without any appropriation happen to be of the majority party in this House; forget every consideration except the merits of the proposition and let us in the recognition of these merits make an appropriation for the continuation of this important work. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. SMALL were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS].

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at this time we are considering the question of an additional appropriation of $10,000,000 to carry on the project of building the Wilson Dam on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals. We should look at it from the standpoint of the present conditions of our country. We should view it from an economic standpoint, from a peace-time standpoint, from a war-time standpoint, and from a commercial standpoint, or a fertilizer standpoint, if you please. We should get our bearings from a consideration of all of these conditions.

I do not care to discuss the proposition simply because it is located in a particular section of our country, or because nitrate plant No. 2 was built during the time of war. The money that was expended at that time has gone over the wheel, so to speak. It is spent. The question now is, Shall we appropriate more money for the damming of the river? It is easy for Congress to appropriate, but it is hard for the taxpayers to raise revenue and pay it into the Treasury, and money should not be appropriated except and on condition that the people of the Nation and the Nation as an entity is to receive some lasting permanent benefit therefrom.

What are the facts? Nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals cost the Government about $70,000,000, and in addition thereto the Government paid the Alabama Power Co. nearly $6,000,000 for building a transmission line to furnish electric power to run the plant. In addition to these sums, the Secretary of War has spent about $1,250,000 in altering and making additions to the plant, so that the total cost to the Government of plant No. 2 is approximately $77,000,000. In speaking of the cost of No. 2 plant I have not included any money that has been spent upon the Wilson Dam. The Wilson Dam is a separate undertaking. It is no part of plant No. 2. Plant No. 2 was equipped when built with a steam-power plant which cost about $12,500,000, and also with the transmission line built by the Alabama Power Co. The plant, having as it does, two equipments of power for its operation, a third power equipment to be furnished by the building of the Wilson Dam is not required or necessary. Nitrate plant No. 2 is at this time a completed plant, provided with power for the manufacture of nitrates for war.

It is a nitrate plant to-day regardless of the Wilson Dam, a finished instrumentality for war for the manufacture of nitrate, and can be utilized and used at any time in the future for the production of nitrates for war purposes.

In other words, if we look at the proposition as it is, the Government now has the instrumentality for war for the production of nitrates, the essential thing for explosives, in plant No. 2. It might be expensive to run the institution during times of war, but nevertheless we have the thing we started out to get, namely, the instrumentality for the production of nitrates in the time of war. True, peace has come, but if war came to-morrow we could operate the nitrate plant without the Wilson Dam. Now that the Nation has reached the time of peace, and because of the fact that the War Department and the President started to build a dam across the Tennessee River, shall Congress continue to expend ten or more millions of dollars to complete the same? If so, what is to be the use of the dam in times of peace?

Of course, it could be used if it were finished in times of war in place of the steam power plant and the transmission lines and at less expense than either of them, but if we expend more money to complete the dam now what is our purpose? Is it to aid navigation on the Tennessee River? If so, that which is to be appropriated now, $10,000,000, is but a small part of what will be necessary for the Government to expend in order to make the river navigable, because, as has been shown here, it will be necessary to build a dam below the present one at a cost of $2,500,000 and another one above the Wilson Dam at a cost of $12,500,000, and also other dams must be built, and these dams will destroy the canal that was built by the Government prior to this time. If the object of building these dams is to improve navigation, then the proposition means that the Nation will be spending these many millions of dollars for that purpose on that river when, as a matter of fact, the river is already provided with a canal which makes it navigable for all practical purposes if the people of that community desired so to use it. Why destroy the canal by building dams if navigation is the object to be attained?

Another contention is that it will help navigation and at the same time it will furnish great water power—power for war purposes.

But we have power now for war purposes. It might be a little more expensive, that is all. Power for what? Power to lessen war expenses when war comes, or power for manufacturing purposes. If we appropriate $10,000,000 and whatever other millions may be necessary to complete the one dam and drop the navigation idea, then what must be done in the expenditure of money to complete the one dam and provide for the sale of power? If we are going to provide power for sale to the cities mentioned by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], it will be necessary to appropriate millions of dollars to build transmission lines from the Muscle Shoals Dam to the different cities to which power might be supplied. Was that the object of the Government in starting this proposition? The money that was spent for building nitrate plant No. 2 I do not call wasted.

It can stand there as an implement of war like a great battleship, if you please, ready to be operated at any time, but if the Nation continues to build a dam for the purpose of furnishing additional power to be utilized in time of peace in the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 what follows? What is the Nation going to produce? Where does it lead us and how far will we go? As I understand it, in order to transform nitrate plant No. 2, which is now ready for manufacturing nitrates for war materials, into an ammonia-sulphate plant, it would be necessary to add to it another building at a cost of some $3,000,000 and a working capital to carry on a manufacturing business, which has been estimated at $12,500,000, in order to utilize the power coming from this dam that is to cost ten or fifteen million more than has already been expended; and what would the Government manufacture? It would manufacture what is called ammonium sulphate. The nitrate manufactured at plant No. 2 for war purposes, because it hardens, is not practicable for the use of the farmer as a fertilizer, and yet no one is going to say that nitrate should not be used as a fertilizer to the greatest extent.

It is not for any reason of that kind that I am saying what I say now. But if the Nation builds the other building and finishes the one dam then it will be necessary to appropriate money for working capital, or some twelve millions of dollars. Thus equipped the Government will start producing ammonium sulphate for sale to fertilizer manufacturers; and how much would the plant produce? The evidence before the committee informs us that it would produce, according to the plans of the War Department, about 86,000 tons of ammonium sulphate per annum. What is it going to cost? Mr. Glasgow gives some figures, but I claim that those figures have no real foundation in fact that would lead anyone to accept them as true. The foundation of the Glasgow figures, or cost of production, are those of Maj. Gaillard and a number of officers who went down there to watch the operations of the plant during the experimental period, and who afterwards made estimates, figuring coke, which is one of the essential ingredients in the manufacture of ammonium sulphate, at a cost of $5 or $6 a ton, when the market price at that time was $11 a ton, and the same was true of lime and other materials. With whom will the Government compete if it appropriates money for the dam and to remodel the plant and for operating capital for the manufacture of ammonium sulphate? What is it going to do?

Gentlemen, we should know the conditions of the day in which we are living. We should comprehend what has taken place in our country since the beginning of the war. We should realize that during the war the National Government expended from its Treasury millions and millions of dollars for the building and for the development of by-product coke ovens of this country. There are now in this country, because of the acceleration caused by the war, nearly 11,000 by-product coke ovens. The old beehive oven is now regarded as obsolete, and in the States of Alabama, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and all of the manufacturing and coal-producing States where coke is produced the by-product coke ovens are now producing, as a by-product, large quantities of the very thing—ammonia sulphate—that the Government would undertake to manufacture at plant

No. 2 after it had been converted into an ammonia-sulphate plant, should Congress make the appropriation for the dam, and then the appropriation for the remodeling of the plant, and then the appropriation to go into the business.

What is the effect of all this? Men in different parts of this country now have their capital invested in by-product coke ovens. They are engaged in the coke business and are paying taxes for the support of our Government. If the Government itself becomes a manufacturer of ammonia sulphate, which is a by-product of the coke ovens, it will either have to compete with the by-product coke-oven prices, or else it will not sell, and if it did succeed, what a small amount it would produce, some 86,000 tons in a year, whereas the by-product coke ovens produced, in 1919, 500,000 tons, and will, according to estimates, by 1930 produce 900,000 tons of ammonia sulphate. What would be the effect of the manufacture of only 86,000 tons of ammonia sulphate at Muscle Shoals? How would the men of the coke industry, who are paying taxes, feel about the Government's competition? Why should the Government, after spending millions of dollars toward the development of by-product coke ovens during the war, now start in to destroy them by competing in the manufacture of ammonia sulphate, which the coke ovens produce as a by-product?

We have moved since 1916, and many things have happened. The by-product coke ovens have been encouraged and developed and are producing 500,000 tons of ammonia sulphate per year, and will double that amount within the next few years. With such vast quantities of ammonia sulphate being produced as a by-product, and which must to a large degree become available for the manufacture of fertilizers, surely the Government does not want to jeopardize millions of dollars in the manufacture thereof. Then, again, according to the best-informed men who have studied this subject, the Haber process, which was developed by Germany during the war, is far more economical than the process that would be used at Muscle Shoals. The Haber process is the process of the future, and already individuals in the Nation have the knowledge of that process, and will without doubt proceed to utilize their knowledge if governmental competition does not deter them from so doing.

The fact is that there was such a surplus of Chilean nitrates in the country at the close of war that our Government lifted the embargo and permitted it to be sold to foreign nations, and one company alone exported some seventy or eighty thousand tons thereof.

If the initiative of private institutions and of men is to be regarded as of aid and benefit to America in the future, then it should be the policy of our Government to say to them who have studied these things, go on and establish, if you can, in this country the Haber process and add in the production of ammonia sulphate to that which is produced by the by-product coke ovens and furnish the farmers of the country fertilizers in an abundance. Why should we not encourage the development of the Haber process by permitting it to have an opportunity to live without governmental interference or competition, and if it is established—and I believe it is going to be—we will have here in this country in the next two or three years, aye, in five years at least, such an immense quantity of ammonium sulphate from the by-product coke ovens of this country and from the Haber process in the country as to convince those who vote for this $10,000,000 that such a vote was in favor of an absolute waste of public funds.

As I look at this question we have not wasted all that has been expended at Muscle Shoals from a war standpoint. We have spent enough, supplemented by what we spent for the Alabama Power Co., so that if war came to-morrow we could start the plant and go to producing nitrates, the thing that is necessary for war and which we started out to produce when we commenced to build nitrate plant No. 2. The money which has been spent upon the dam and which amounts to $17,000,000 may be wasted if the dam is not completed, but by completing the dam the waste to the Government may be increased many times over. In my opinion the manufacture of 86,000 tons of ammonia sulphate, to be sold as a fertilizer to the farmers of the country, is a dream, an absolute dream, and can in no way be of any real help to the farmers of the country.

If the dam is to be built to develop power and the building of extension lines for the transmission of power from Muscle Shoals to the cities of Alabama and Tennessee, then the building of the dam is a local matter, and not one of real national importance. Of course, to the extent that it furnished power to be sold to the different cities or institutions, it would help to build up industries, great institutions of manufacturing, and so forth, which in time would pay taxes to the Government for the support of the Government. But under present conditions of the finances of the country, considering the burdens that the taxpayers are bearing, I am opposed to the Government's appropriating money with which to enter the manufacturing business. It is better by far to permit plant No. 2 to remain as a utility for war in a stand-by condition.

It seems to me we have to take the bark off these things and look at the condition of our country and what has passed, and should not stifle and destroy an industry that has been created, as is exemplified by the by-product coke ovens, and through which we are retaining and conserving for the use of the people a product that has gone off in smoke and thin air in the years past. Another by-product from the coke ovens which can be utilized is toluol, a good substitute to take the place of gasoline in the operation of motor cars, and so forth. So I for one am convinced with the light that I have, not a sectional light, not anything of the kind, but the light of the past, and considering present conditions of our country, realizing that we have a great nitrate plant equipped for war, ready to be utilized for war, and realizing the further fact that we have developed these by-product coke ovens, to say nothing of stripping plants, and are producing yearly some 500,000 tons of ammonia sulphate, and realizing also that the agricultural interests of this country used only 190,000 tons of ammonium sulphate for fertilizers last year, that this country will be in the ammonium sulphate export business in a short while with the product from the by-product coke ovens, to say nothing of any other developments. It will have to be, or else the price thereof must go down so low that the by-product coke ovens will be compelled to almost give ammonium sulphate to fertilizer manufacturers, for sale to the farmers.

That has got to come. It is only the development or evolution of the forces that were put in motion during the war. Then why continue—building a dam—and lose sight of conditions prevalent in our country to-day? It is true agriculture could use more fertilizer than it does, but the Agricultural Department sends out their agents to instruct the people, the agriculturists, in the use of fertilizer, and they state that it is hard to get them to use any great amount of fertilizers. The farmer wants to see a practical demonstration of it, and if the Government goes into the manufacture of fertilizer the Government will have to appropriate more money for more men to go over the country and convince the agricultural people of the country that this particular ingredient, ammonium sulphate, is the one that they should use for fertilizer purposes.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit a question, I just want to ask the gentleman whether or not if the Government goes on with this project and manufactures this product for the use of the farmers will we have to pay a royalty on that character of manufacture to the men who control the patent?

Mr. JEFFERIS. Well, that is contended by some, but I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it is very important.

Mr. JEFFERIS. I do not claim to be enough of a lawyer to say at this time positively as to that. Another thing. Suppose we manufacture ammonium sulphate. Suppose we get this power developed and we start the wheels to moving. Who are we to sell it to? The War Department officials say they are going to sell it to the fertilizer manufacturers.

The fertilizer manufacturers, I suppose, will say to the Government right away, "Well, here are 500,000 tons of this stuff coming from these by-product coke ovens that have been built here in the last few years, and they offer to sell it as a by-product, so the Government will have to meet that competition if it is to have any market at all for this product."

Now, if it were not for the fact that we have these by-product coke ovens, producing this very substance which it is contended the Government should manufacture for sale, I might look at this question in a different way, for I would not want to do or say anything that would in any way stifle the progress of American agriculture, because if there is any department of life that is necessary for this Government to encourage and have produced to the fullest extent, it is agricultural products for the support and maintenance of our people, to say nothing of foreign nations. Under present conditions why should the Congress appropriate $10,000,000 to complete the dam, and then, if you have one dam completed, add $12,500,000 to build another dam, and another $2,500,000 to build another dam for transportation on the Tennessee River? Or why should the Congress appropriate this fund from the standpoint of selling power for the manufacturing interests of the cities that are there within the radius of 150 and 200 miles?

It seems to me if we ever enter upon a program of that kind in one particular section of the country, there would be more requests here in a short while to build up other power dams in other sections of the country, and in a short while the Government would be undertaking to furnish power for all the manufacturing businesses of the country.

Even the lime men down in that section are opposed to the Government going into the manufacturing business. A number of them appeared before the committee while we were down there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I would like a couple of minutes on the lime question.

Mr. GOOD. I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. JEFFERIS. The lime interests of western Tennessee, in that section, appeared before the committee to oppose the operation of these plants by the Government. Why? They said, as I remember the testimony, that if the plant was run to the full extent for the manufacture of ammonium sulphate in times of peace it would take some 1,500 to 1,600 tons of limestone a day, and that about 500 or 600 tons of that limestone in the operation of the cyanamid process would become dust, so to speak, and would have to be sold as a by-product in competition with their lime industry all through western Tennessee and northern Alabama.

And, for their part, while they believed in that nitrate plant No. 2 as a war agency and knew that it could be operated as a war instrumentality, yet if it was run as a commercial proposition these 500 or 600 tons of lime dust would go into competition with their products in that community, when they were compelled to pay taxes for the support of this Government.

They, of course, would pay part of the taxes that would go into this appropriation of $10,000,000, and for the subsequent appropriations that will have to be made. The result would be, as they viewed it, that it was rather an unpleasant situation to require them to pay taxes into the Government of the United States in order that the Government might expend that money as a competitor in a commercial business in competition with them and that would in all likelihood destroy the business of the lime quarries in that section and cause them great losses.

So, analyzing the thing as I do, not as a sectional proposition or anything of that kind, realizing as I do that we have the war instrumentality ready for operation, why should we undertake to enter into competition against by-product coke ovens when they are producing sufficient and more than is used for fertilizer purposes, or enter into competition with the lime people? Why should the Government do that and then ask the very men who conduct the by-product coke ovens and lime quarries to gladly reach down in their pockets for the payment of taxes into the National Treasury in order that the Government might utilize their own money in a manufacturing business and thereby destroy theirs? So I for one at this time—and I am not closing the book—I for one at this time feel that I should not vote—and I will not vote—for the appropriation of $10,000,000 to further the project of completing the Wilson Dam. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the act of Congress, the national defense act, in section 124, known as the nitrate section, made it just as much the duty of the President and the War Department to build a plant for fertilizer purposes as for war purposes. The mistake of my distinguished friend from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS], who has just preceded me, is that he looks upon this plant as a war plant. I know that discussions here in Congress at the time the national defense act was passed and the wording of section 124 makes this plant just as much a fertilizer plant as a munition plant. I know well that the farmers' organizations of this entire country appealed to Congress and to the different Members in 1916 to make provision for a nitrogen plant. It was reported here in this section, as has been said, by the Military Committee of the House when it was first voted out, and it was reported in the Senate on an agricultural bill from the Agricultural Committee of the Senate in almost an identical provision for the building of plants for war purposes and for fertilizer purposes, and finally became a part of the national defense act.

What next? When the question of the location of a plant to carry out the provisions of section 124 of the national defense act came up what occurred?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman the language there from which he construes the meaning that Congress during the war gave the President power to use money for the establishment of a fertilizing plant?

Mr. ALMON. Yes; here it is:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to make, or cause to be made, such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products by water power or any other power as, in his judgment, is the best and cheapest to use; and is also hereby authorized and empowered to designate for the exclusive use of the United States, if, in his judgment, such means as is best and cheapest, such site or sites, upon any navigable or nonnavigable river or rivers, or upon the public lands, as in his opinion will be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act; and is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at or on any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment, or other means than water power, as in his judgment is the best and cheapest, necessary, or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power, and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

I say that any man possessed of a grain of intelligence in reading that will come to the conclusion that this plant is just as much a plant for fertilizer purposes in peace times as it is a plant for the production of munitions in time of war.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman was here during the war when this measure was enacted. I was not.

Mr. ALMON. This act was passed in 1916, the year before we entered the war.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes. Let me ask you: At that time was this particular project of building a plant on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals pending?

Mr. ALMON. There was no project or plan before Congress. There had been, as has been said, some discussion about developing water power there for the purpose of improving navigation. But the question of location of the plant was not considered and determined when this law was passed. When the question of location was taken up the War Department expressed its preference in the matter of location, but every farmers' organization in this entire country, from Maine to California, took a deep interest in it and had their representatives at the hearings, and everybody throughout the length and breadth of this country understood that this great plant, wherever located, was going to be located and built as much as a fertilizer plant for the benefit of the farmers of this Nation as it was a munitions plant in time of war.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. ALMON. I would rather not. It breaks the connection of my argument. If the gentleman will just wait a moment, I will yield to him.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My question evidently was not understood by the gentleman. My question was whether this particular plant was mentioned in the discussions in the House at that time?

Mr. ALMON. Not that I recall.

It was located. I do not think any man who ever studied the question would for a moment question the fact that the plant is properly located. It is far away from the Atlantic coast and from the Gulf of Mexico. From a military or national-defense standpoint it is ideally located, the greatest inland water power. From an agricultural standpoint it is nearest to that section of the country that uses the most fertilizer, with the very best transportation both by water and rail. But this has been settled, and why do the gentlemen want to discuss it? And, in addition, all the raw material used in the manufacture of explosives for war purposes or for fertilizer are found nearby in inexhaustible quantities, such as limestone rock, coal, coke, and phosphate rock.

Something has been said about the cost. My distinguished friend who preceded me [Mr. JEFFERIS] has suggested that instead of spending more money on this plant we should close the plant up and let it stand idle, just as a battleship, until we have another war. The gentleman seems to overlook the fact that the economic value of that great plant to make fertilizer is dependent on cheap water power that is being developed. If it had been built for no other purpose except as a munition plant, there might be some force in the gentleman's argument to close up this great plant probably for 40 or 50 years before it will be needed again for war purposes, and I hope it will never be so needed. But if you did that, it would rust out and be of no value, even although it might be looked after carefully and guarded and painted as best it could be. The fixation of atmospheric nitrogen is a comparatively new art or science. Of course, it will be improved upon from time to time, and in order that that plant be kept up to date, going, running, and kept ready as a plant for munition purposes in the event of a military emergency, it ought to be in operation during peace times.

That would be reason enough for not abandoning it, but in addition to that it is the duty of Congress to complete this dam and operate this plant to carry out the provision of section 124 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, for the production of fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of this country as well as for munition purposes.

Something has been said about the supply. It is said it is not needed. Who is opposing this measure here? Who is opposing the proposition that the Government should operate this great plant for the manufacture of fertilizer for the benefit of agriculture in this country? No one has come out in the open in opposition except Mr. Washburn, president of the American Cyanamid, who operates a similar but much smaller plant at Niagara Falls, on the Canadian side. This plant would be a competitor of his. I have heard of some fertilizer mixing plants sending telegrams to Members of the House expressing their opposition to the bill providing for the operation of the plant by the Government. Why are they doing this? It is because they are not interested in getting cheap fertilizer for the farmers. The greater the price that the farmer pays for fertilizer the greater the profit of the fertilizer mixers and manufacturers.

The by-product coke-oven people have no cause to complain. They are going to make ammonium sulphate anyway, because it is a by-product, and there will be a demand for all that they can make, and all that can be made at the Government plant.

The farmers of this Nation have been robbed by the Chilean interests and the Chilean Nitrate Trust for all these years. Since 1879 the farmers of this country have paid the Chilean Government $153,000,000 export duty for the privilege of sending its nitrates out into this country. There is an export duty of $11.18. There is no competition. If there was, they would take off that $11.18 on sodium nitrate, and the farmers of this Nation and the War Department in time of war would be relieved of that extraordinary export tax placed upon America by the Chilean Government, raising revenue almost enough to carry on the general expenses of the Chilean Government, as I am told; at least two-thirds of the general expenses.

Now, something has been said about the cost. Of course, the building of this great nitrogen plant was begun in war times and under war conditions, when labor and materials were high. It is possible, as has been said, that there was some waste there, but no more than at every other war plant in comparison with the importance and magnitude of the job.

There is nothing in the report of the investigating committee to show that. But one thing is certain, and neither the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] nor the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] nor any other member of the investigating committee will deny that nitrate plant No. 2 is a complete plant, that it is 100 per cent of what was contracted for in point of quality and in point of production. It provided in the contract that it should produce 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum, and the tests which have been made have demonstrated the fact that it can turn out that much product; and, in addition to that, it is one of the few war industries that has a real peace-time value. The plant at Nitro has been sold for 7 per cent of what it cost. The Old Hickory powder plant has been sold at probably less than 10 per cent of its cost. But no Member of either House, as far as I have heard, has ever said that nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River should be sold or disposed of. Everybody says it ought to be kept. Some say it should be maintained only for war purposes; but the great masses of the people of the Nation expect and have the right to expect that this Congress is going to carry out the mandate of the nitrate section of the act of June 3, 1916; and the President and the War Department having built this great plant for war and fertilizer purposes, that Congress will appropriate whatever money is necessary. Everybody agrees that nitrate plant No. 2 would not be an economical success without the development of the water power. The sum of $17,000,000 has been made available for the development of the power. About $12,000,000 of that has been spent. Another $5,000,000 will have been spent by the last of next May, and the engineers of the War Department have sent to this Congress an estimate for an additional $10,000,000.

I wish every Member of this House could visit that great nitrogen plant that Mr. GRAHAM spoke so eloquently about and see its possibilities to this country and to agriculture, on which all of our national prosperity is based. I wish they could see that wonderful plant for which this dam is being constructed. About 5,000 men are engaged in the work, a majority of them, I am told, being ex-service men. It can be finished in two years more. If this $10,000,000 is given, it is the testimony of Col. Cooper that probably an additional $15,000,000 will be necessary a year or two from now in order to complete it and put in all the machinery that is necessary to develop this great power.

Something has been said about the amount of power to be developed. In the first place, the chairman of this committee [Mr. GOOD] has said that it seems to him there is merit in this proposition, but that it occurs to him that it would be a matter of wisdom to postpone it a couple of months in order to investigate it. I understand that if this $10,000,000 appropriation does not go into this sundry civil bill it will probably be a year before another sundry civil bill is in order, and during that time the plant will be shut down. Seventeen million dollars was made available for the construction of the dam, locks, and power house. About $12,000,000 of that amount has been spent, including more than $1,000,000 worth of machinery, such as turbines, generators to be used in the power house which has been contracted for. There are about 5,000 men engaged on the work at this time, and something like 2,000 tons of concrete is being poured daily. The available funds will have been exhausted, according to the hearings in the sundry civil bill, about the 1st of June. The War Department has asked for an additional appropriation of $10,000,000. The work is something like 30 per cent completed. A great amount of money was necessarily spent in getting ready to build the dam. A camp had to be built, temporary and permanent housing facilities to the amount of $1,245,205; about 25 miles of railway construction; cofferdams costing $350,000; a bridge costing $588,000; concrete-mixing plant costing many thousands of dollars; a large gravel pit opened up; dredges and boats purchased, as well as barges and cars. About 100 cars were purchased for the purpose of hauling cement, because the railroads could not furnish them. The work is being done by the engineers of the War Department, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers; Col. Hugh L. Cooper, who built the Keokuk Dam on the Mississippi River and important works in South America, and who has an international reputation as a successful dam builder, is the consulting engineer for the War Department, and is in close and constant touch with the work on this dam.

According to the testimony of the experts of the engineering department in hearings before the Appropriations Committee in making up the bill now under consideration, construction work of this kind would suffer more seriously in stoppage and delay than any other kind of improvement. They explain that the steel railroad bridge across the entire width of the stream, with three tracks, which cost the Government $580,000, in case of high water is liable to be washed away or materially damaged, and that the sooner the concrete is poured into a number of cofferdams, giving greater strength to the bridge, the sooner would the possibility of destruction or damage to the bridge by reason of high water be removed. The cofferdams costing many thousands of dollars would be destroyed. The machinery and equipment would be seriously damaged; besides, the disorganization of the labor forces of more than 4,000 men would cost many thousands of dollars to reorganize. The Government now has an efficient labor organization; better than it has ever had.

Col. Taylor, of the engineering department, testified before the committee that the temporary suspension of this work would mean a loss of at least $4,500,000, and $25,000 per month, or $300,000, to care for and properly guard the property of the Government, the project being scattered over a large area.

Col. Hugh L. Cooper estimates that it would cost the Government $4,000,000 to close the work down and then start up later.

Two thousand cubic yards of concrete is now being poured daily.

The dam will develop about 500,000 horsepower, according to the statement of Col. Cooper, 125,000 primary power and 350,000 secondary power; and it was shown in the hearings that only about 80,000 horsepower will be needed in the operation of this nitrate plant; and the testimony in the hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture last spring of the officers of the Ordnance Department and the nitrate division showed that the secondary power can be used by the Government in the operation of the plant and that the balance, at least 200,000 primary power, can be disposed of by the Government by using the steam plant at the very lowest stages of the river.

Oh, but somebody holds up his hands in holy horror and says, "Why should we be developing water power for the benefit of agriculture and for the benefit of the farmers?" Has not the Congress been doing something for some other interest?

The United States participated and aided in the financing of six of the pioneer railroads of this country, namely, the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Kansas Pacific, Hannibal & St. Joseph, Sioux City & Pacific, and Western Pacific (all located in the Western States), to the extent of $64,623,512. Bonds of the United States to this amount were issued to aid the financing and construction of these railroads.

Not only so, the United States has made land grants to aid in the construction of railroads, wagon roads, canal and river improvements.

The United States has made land grants in cooperation with and in aid of the construction of railroads to the extent of 78,944,573.55 acres, and the Government has issued State grants to the extent of 37,870,852.30 acres, a grand total of corporation and State grants of 116,815,425.85 acres. In aid of wagon roads in various States, the Government has issued land grants totaling 3,060,563.10 acres. In aid of the construction of canals, Government land grants have been made to the extent of 4,597,668.32 acres, and in aid of river improvements the Government has issued land grants amounting to 2,245,252.13 acres.

The Government reclamation of the arid West is both a paternal and an internal improvement which is essentially a cooperative arrangement between the Government and private parties. The summary of appropriations made by Congress for western land irrigation to 1915 amounts to $116,824,894.82, and of that amount there was an authorized Government bond issue of $20,000,000, and none of these appropriations in aid of irrigation improvements in the West returns any interest payment to the Government.

One of the most prominent examples of the reclamation projects of the West is the case of the Roosevelt Dam, 79 miles northwest of Phoenix, Ariz., this dam being 284 feet high and 235 feet long, originally estimated to cost $5,000,000, but the total cost of this reservoir, dam, power system, diversion works, canals, drilling, and so forth, to July 1, 1913, was $11,193,687.

I am not criticizing that. The money was loaned to them to aid in irrigating their lands, without interest for at least 20 years, and in some places it goes on into a revolving fund year after year without any interest to the Government.

One purpose of this development is to aid the farmers who need fertilizer to secure it cheaper. Why should it not be done, especially when it can be done without expense to the Government? The plant is already completed, and can be operated without expense to the Government. Besides, the Government can sell enough power to the public to pay 5 per cent on the cost of the dam. This is all shown in the hearings.

That question is involved in the decision of this committee when it comes to determine whether the amendment will be adopted allowing $10,000,000 additional to go on with this work. I do not want any Member to lose sight of the fact, and I want to impress upon you this idea, if I do no other, that there was just as much demand on the part of agriculture for a Government nitrate plant when the act of June 3, 1916, was passed as there was on the part of the War Department for a plant for munitions for war purposes. And, fortunately, the two are combined, because the peace-time operation makes it a better plant when war comes, if it ever does.

Something has been said about the cost of power at this plant.

Col. Hugh L. Cooper, according to the hearings on this bill, estimates the power that will be developed by this dam to be as follows: 700,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum, the average primary power, and 1,470,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum secondary power, which expressed in horsepower is about 125,000 primary and 375,000 secondary horsepower. Secondary power will be used to operate the nitrate plant, and there will be at least 200,000 primary power for sale by using the steam plant for a short time at the lowest stages of the river.

He also states that at an unusually low selling price of 1.2 mills per kilowatt hour for secondary power and 4 mills per kilowatt hour for primary power it would earn an annual income of $4,554,000, which would be 10 per cent on a cost price of $45,540,000. This would mean 5 per cent interest and 5 per cent for depreciation and operation, leaving $540,000 to be applied on advantages to navigation if the dam, locks, and power house should cost $45,000,000.

No primary power is sold in Alabama for 4 mills per kilowatt hour per annum. The Alabama Power Co. gets more than 4 mills for the secondary power, and manufacturing plants pay from 1 to 2 cents for primary power.

The rate paid by the very largest industries in the Muscle Shoals district, such as the Merrimac Cotton Mills, of Huntsville, Ala., which uses upward of 5,000 horsepower, is 1.1 cents per kilowatt hour ($71.50 per horsepower per year), which is just about three times as much as Col. Cooper sets down as the rate per kilowatt hour for primary power.

The Tennessee Coal & Iron Railway Co. of the Birmingham district, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, pays the Alabama Power Co. more than 4 mills for secondary power, and Col. Cooper places 4 mills as the unusually low price, he says, for primary power. The Tennessee Coal & Iron Railway Co. has its own coal mines and the most efficient facilities, and yet it is paying the Alabama Power Co. more for secondary power than Col. Cooper sets down as the price of primary power for Muscle Shoals.

Electric furnaces in operation at Anniston, Ala., producing phosphorous-acid fertilizer of concentrated and high grade, are served with power by the Alabama Power Co. at not less than 1 cent per kilowatt hour, which, again, is nearly three times the rate set down by Col. Cooper for primary power at Muscle Shoals.

Some gentlemen do not seem to want to be fair about this proposition; they say that if this dam is completed the people will want other dams built. It is true that there will be a necessity for another dam, very much less expensive, in order to make the Tennessee River navigable over obstructions at Muscle Shoals, but nobody is before Congress asking for that. If that is ever done, and I hope it will be eventually, it will come through the River and Harbor Committee. It is not right nor fair to try to confuse this question with what may be asked for hereafter.

I might say that up to the beginning of the war, on this great river that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] told you about this morning, only three other rivers in the whole United States could be considered greater—I do not know of any that has more commerce upon it—up to the beginning of the war there had been only $10,000,000 spent in improving the Tennessee River for navigation purposes, and there had been over $100,000,000 spent on the Ohio River. I do not think we are subject to criticism in the Tennessee Valley for asking that the same thing be done for navigation purposes on the Tennessee River that has been accorded to other rivers of no greater importance in many parts of the United States.

Something has been said about further hearings in order to get further information. The Secretary of War testified before the Appropriations Committee. Gen. Taylor also testified, and no doubt the farmers would have been glad to have had an opportunity. They have had their hearings; and if anybody wants more information about what the dam will cost, what the power will be worth, how cheaply fertilizer can be made, I would refer them to the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture in the Senate last May. That will give you full and particular information by experts of the War Department and in the nitrogen division of the Ordnance Department.

I want to say to the members of the committee that this is not a local project. While we down in that locality may get some immediate benefit from a water-power development this great nitrogen plant for war or commercial purposes is a national project. The farmers in Maine in their organizations, and in almost every State—I believe every farmer organization is on record in favor of the completion of this water-power dam and the operation of this plant for fertilizer purposes. They are expecting it; they have reason to expect it. Congress has said that it would be done, and the administration has gone as far as it can in carrying out the will of the people on this subject. The question is now whether we shall disappoint them in their expectations or go on and carry out the mandate that Congress do something to relieve the situation.

Agriculture is the foundation of all of our wealth and prosperity, and now, at a time when the farmers of the Nation are crying out to be relieved from the Chilean nitrate monopoly, what are we going to do? The price of Chilean nitrate went up during the war to $100 per ton. It is all right for some of these fertilizer companies to want to continue to sell to the farmers the stuff they have been selling to them—which has about 280 pounds of plant food in it to the 2,000 pounds of fertilizer, costing the farmer enormous amounts in freight rates and causing him great trouble to haul it over bad roads. The hearings in the case show that at this plant we can produce real fertilizer. Ammonia nitrate contains 35 per cent of nitrogen, and ammonia sulphate 20 per cent. Cyanamid contains more nitrogen than Chilean nitrate. It is from this that the farmers of this country expect to be relieved by securing at about half what it has cost them heretofore. I believe the more you study this question the more you will be convinced that it is in the interest of this entire country; I do not care whether the Member is from the city or not.

A city Congressman well knows that farmers and agriculture make the cities. Let the soil go to waste and not be replenished, let agriculture go down, and the streets of the city will grow up in grass and weeds. Every man, woman, and child, I do not care where he lives, is interested in the success of agriculture. It seems to me that the farmers have been hit harder than any other class of people in the last 60 or 90 days, when the bottom has dropped out of the price of farm products. We are appealing to you now to do something to help the farmer hereafter to produce something, and it is nothing more than should be expected. We have a chance now to do something in the way of fertilizer. There is no competition. There is no private capital directly interested in this country in the manufacture of nitrogen, except as a by-product. Private capital will not build nitrate plants. The farmers of this country have waited all of these years, hoping capital would build nitrate plants for the manufacture of nitrogen, but they have not done it, and all that we get to-day is from Chile—except what we get from the by-product of coke ovens and a little organic nitrogen, and that has become so valuable as a food product that practically none of it is used as fertilizer. It is more valuable as food.

These great resources of the country—the water powers—can not better be utilized than, through governmental activity, be harnessed for the service of all the people in the production of the necessary elements required for food production, and Theodore Roosevelt must have visualized the problem that this House is called upon to solve to-day when he wrote in the Outlook of September 7, 1912, as follows:

> The Government must cooperate with the farmer to make the farm more productive. There must be no skinning of the soil. The farm should be left to the farmer's son in better and not worse condition because of its cultivation. Moreover, every invention and improvement, every discovery and economy, should be at the service of the farmer in the work of production.

You have a simple decision to make, gentlemen. The door is open through which the operation of this plant to free the American farmer from the burden of paying the high prices of the past for nitrogen compounds, and further to secure results which have been clearly demonstrated as entirely possible in the matter of producing higher and better grades of phosphate and potash fertilizers, and the choice you must make is whether you will hold this door open and insist that these wonderful possibilities shall be made available to the American farmer in the producing of food, or you will close this door in the face of the need and demand of the public welfare, and hand the key to the corporate interests of the country to maintain their monopoly and their profits.

It has been stated that the fertilizer industry of the country wraps up a great deal of intelligence in the mixing of its various brands for sale to the American farmer. But when it is considered that 80 per cent of the commercially mixed fertilizer that goes to the American farmer will average the content of 3 per cent ammonia, 8 per cent phosphoric acid, and 3 per cent potash, making a total of 14 per cent of plant-food elements, or 280 pounds in a ton of the material sold, we contend that this intelligence is mostly filler and that in order to secure the results of this intelligence farmers must pay the warehouse charges, the bagging, the cost of handling, the freight, and in turn haul over our muddy roads in the spring of the year 1,720 pounds of this intelligence filler in order to get 280 pounds of the plant food material we are endeavoring to buy.

It is inconceivable that anyone would not be in favor of the completion of this dam after spending $17,000,000 on it and the future usefulness of a $70,000,000 nitrate plant being dependent upon it both as a war-time plant and one for the manufacture of fertilizer in order to give the farmers a greater supply and a cheaper price for fertilizer.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman has stated that within the last 60 or 90 days the bottom has dropped out of the prices of farm products. That is true, but does the gentleman believe that farm products have declined more in value in the last 60 or 90 days than have the prices of mining products, such as copper and lead and zinc?

Mr. ALMON. I am not advised as to that. But if it be true, I hope they are more able to stand it than the farmers are their losses.

Every year that this great enterprise fails to operate we have needlessly consumed upward of 2,000,000 tons of coal in uneconomical plants. We have needlessly required the use of 2,000 freight cars. We have deprived the farmer and the fertilizer industry of over 200,000 tons of high-grade material and we stand with a great club in our hands over the manufacturing industries which employ thousands of people.

To complete this plant, on the other hand, is to provide a sound and fundamental basis for prosperity in a section embracing a superpower area mapped out by Government engineers and extending from Cincinnati nearly to the Gulf.

The farmer has received many assurances that Congress will do its utmost to help him. Here is one important chance to do it. The dam is that part of the nitrate plant that makes our $80,000,000 war-time expenditure of inestimable value to agriculture. The farmers are watching the progress by Congress of the nitrate program with keen interest. It is not only for his advantage but for our national welfare that we should not deny him any aid within our reach. And here in labor saving fertilizer is a most valuable aid. So we can not escape the fact that if we stop work on this dam we stop it at the expense of the farmer. We have had a time of deflation in all lines, but no one has been deflated more rapidly or more disastrously than the farmer. We have hundreds of bills before us for his relief, but shall our first real concrete action be a blow at the farming interests of the country? Any delay in this work would be another blow at the farmers of this country, who have already suffered a loss of $4,000,000,000 by falling prices. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, interesting and informing as the discussion has been on the Muscle Shoals proposition, it is my intention to speak to another subject just for a little while.

Every 10 years it becomes necessary for the Congress to make a reapportionment of the Representatives of this country. The committee is now engaged in hearings with that end in view. As a member of that committee I speak only for myself, not having taken any consensus of opinion of the committee——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. If we are going to have the census matter before the few of us who have stayed here on the eve of a holiday, I think we ought to have a good-sized audience here to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, because I want the gentleman to be heard by a larger audience.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not do that, because it will be my purpose Monday morning to move to close debate.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is going to have a hearing before his committee on January 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please desist. Unless he withdraws the point of order no discussion is in order upon the ascertainment of whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman how long he is going to run to-night?

Mr. GOOD. I hope to let the gentleman speak his time, and then there is five more minutes to another gentleman, and there is another short speech.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in the matter. I will say I have been very much interested in the attitude of Members of the House as to the increase in the number of Representatives. Consequently I have inquired of very many men as to what their idea is in regard to the number that should be reported by the committee. Almost universally the men whose judgment would be taken upon matters in connection with legislation in this body have deplored the fact that the House is already too large and somewhat unwieldy. There are those who advocate—I might say incidentally I sit here for long hours and refrain from talking, hoping in this regard I should shorten the exercises, but there seems to be no possibility of doing that—there is one group, I think a small group, who advocate the number reported of 483, which is practically an increase of nearly 50 Members of the House with an additional expenditure of at least $500,000 yearly. There are others who suggest that we ought to retain the number as it now is, permitting those States which have an increase in population, to take their legitimate increase and States that have not sufficient increase to lose whatever would be necessary under that apportionment. There is a suggestion of a compromise that the House be made 460 in number. That would take care of all the States save one, so that one State at least would lose a Representative. Many men have said to me very frankly that they have heard no good reason advocated by anybody why there should be an increase in the number of Members of this House. Other men have stated that State pride would control the delegation. It may be that a sufficient reason for some men will be the exigencies of their own political fortunes, but I submit, gentlemen of the committee, that none of those reasons are worthy. If there be no other reason why there should be an increase in the House sufficient to convince men that they ought to make the increase in the number, with the increased expense, then it would be the duty of the committee to report a bill that provides only for the present representation. Without endeavoring to be an advocate of any particular view my own thought has been that possibly there might be other reasons why, when we have doubled our suffrage and increased our population, that for representative purposes there should be some increase in the number of the House. The argument against it is that the body is inefficient, that it is too large now, and yet I am reminded that another body with fewer Members sometimes does not act as expeditiously as this House.

It may be that they act more wisely, but in my limited service here my judgment upon the question would not be of very material weight, and yet I am constrained to believe that most men who have been here for years would say that the House is not less effective than another body in the efficiency with which it legislates. There are those who say that it would be better even to reduce the number in the House, and so, taking the consensus of opinion again and again, one finds almost a continuous judgment against increase. Are there any reasons of any consequence that would justify a man standing for any increase——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Just for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is arranging now to have hearings before the committee, of which he is a member, on the 4th of January, and in that connection I want to call his attention to the fact that the newspapers of the country have reported, and I take it that it is authentic, that the gentleman's party has met in caucus and thrashed the matter out and has already determined upon having an increase to 483 men; in other words, have adopted the Siegel bill.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The gentleman is absolutely misinformed. No action in caucus has been taken upon that matter, and the committee itself has not conferred upon it. So he is without any foundation in fact for the suggestion that he makes. In other words, this is not in any sense a partisan question and can not be made such. It is a question as to whether under existing circumstances there is any reason at all for an increase. In the ideal democracy the individual voter, as in the New England township, was a determining factor with regard to every question, economic or social. The same is true of the Swiss Cantons. The only reason why we have departed from that is because large populations make it impossible. So we have gone to the representative form of government.

Here is the problem: Where shall we draw the line so that adequately the common man in the country will have due influence with regard to matters of legislation? I understand men who honestly work here in positions of leadership have felt the dead weight of an inert body at times, one that did not move quickly and responsively to legislation which they were trying to have passed. But, on the other hand, shall it be said that the smallest parliamentary body, relatively speaking, in the world has already reached the position where an increase in its membership is inadvisable? I am not prepared to say, men, whether we have reached the point here and now where it is advisable to increase the number of Representatives, but I think it is well for men to think down to the basic things that have to do, first, with the organization of this Government and which have already given to the world the idea of Americanism, where the humblest man by his vote, reaching through his representation, which ought to be adequate, can become a determining factor in legislative bodies. Whether we have reached that point yet is an open question; but for men to say that there is no reason, or ever will be, for an increase in the number of Representatives, in my judgment, is, to say the least, unwise.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman considered at any time the feasibility of limiting the number in the House through amendment to the Constitution—would that be wise or unwise—so as not to bring this up every 10 years?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will say to the gentleman I had thought about that; but when I remember the disposition of the House, as manifested just now, and also know that England, with about half the population we have, has a parliamentary body of 707, I am a little loath to say that I would advocate an amendment unless it would be fairly representative of two or three hundred million people.

Mr. FESS. My friend is a student of political science and knows very well that the British Parliament, although it has 707 members in the House of Commons, sits as a small body in legislation, and only a small proportion of that body is ever present.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. On occasion, though, the whole body could assemble for the purpose of determining any crisis as to their action. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I am not saying now this ought to be increased. My impression was from the beginning that it ought not to be. And being of that opinion, I began to think as to whether there were any reasons at all whether there might be under some circumstances an increase.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that we must redistrict the country now, whether we increase the membership or not? We must go ahead and redistrict, must we not, according to the population as it is now?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have thought of this, namely, that some Members have a district 500 miles long. My district, and I think the gentleman's district, is about 60 miles square, or something like that. Now, are there not times when he would need a little help in his district if it were 500 miles long? If it increased in population, would it not be represented better if it was divided a little bit?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I think it well enough to take into consideration not only the number of people in the district but the area over which those people are distributed. I confess I sought this opportunity not to advocate but to get before the body an exposition of the situation as I see it.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], I may say that of course we have nothing to do with redistricting; that is, laying out the districts in the various States. That is left to the various State legislatures. We apportion here. We fix the representation. We do not cut up districts and make them long or short, or round or square, or determine what shape they shall be.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Of course, the gentleman has reference to some of the States out West, where they have all out of doors in their districts.

Mr. HASTINGS. I know the Congress of the United States does not fix the places of the districts. It fixes the representation.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If we should remain as at present some of the States would have but one Representative, and therefore there would be no opportunity to make the districts smaller.

These are considerations that I wanted to bring before you, so that possibly a man, thinking about questions of fair representation, whereby the people's thought with regard to any great problem might be secured through their Representatives, might deem it wise to increase the representation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I think we all found it necessary, every one of us, after the declaration of war, to go into our own districts and as quickly as possible reveal to the people the reasons for our acts; and I am only raising the question as to whether, when great exigencies are on and decisions have been made, if it should appear that the demagogues would rise and say to the people, "Representation has been changed from the foundation of Government from 30,000 to 211,000, and now it is intended that it shall be less representative," there might be some question as to the propriety of increase.

The answer, of course, to those who might charge that representation is inadequate would be that every Member of Congress represents not only the people of his own district but the people of the whole country. If the units are increased in number and the area diminished more and more would the representative become provincial in his thought and confine his activities to the needs of a limited area. Perhaps in the past there has been some tendency for men of limited outlook to narrow their interests to their immediate district. While it is true that every Member of Congress is immediately answerable to the folks at home and should work diligently for every legitimate interest of the people of his own district, yet in a far larger sense he solemnly obligates himself in the interest of the whole country. It might be very truthfully said that on all problems that are of Nation-wide importance each citizen has the whole body of the Congress as his personal representative. Certainly some weight ought to attach to the judgment of that large body of men in Congress who have for so many years ably and honestly represented not only their own constituency but the interests of the people of the whole country. There seems to be no immediate danger that any considerable body of people in the Republic feel that they are not now adequately represented.

Having purposely held my mind open and earnestly studied to know what is best, the conclusion that I have reached is that at this time there should be no increase in the membership. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a short editorial which appeared in the New York Herald this morning, commending the services of Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan on retiring from the service of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the editorial indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the editorial referred to:

[From the New York Herald, Friday, Dec. 31, 1920.]

UNCLE SAM LOSES A GOOD MAN.

Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan, Paymaster General of the Navy and chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, has resigned from the service and will end his official activities for Uncle Sam to-day.

He must not doff his uniform without a word being said in praise of his record, for that record is one of conspicuously excellent work in the public interest.

Before the United States entered the conflict against the Teutonic Empires Rear Admiral McGowan was a member of that small but foresighted body of American citizens who had the courage to recognize the inevitable and the energy to do everything which lay in their power in time of peace to prepare for war.

Wherever and whenever it was possible he translated into acts the advice of Washington, an example far too few of us followed; would that all officials in the Government had been inspired to do as he did.

It will not be asserted that under the immediate chieftainship of Josephus Daniels as Secretary of the Navy Paymaster General McGowan was able to do everything he wanted to do or by any means everything which on April 6, 1917, the Nation wished had been done to prepare the fighting ships for their task, but it is a matter of record that his energy and his prevision had accomplished so much toward the preparedness intelligent men longed for that he had earned the gratitude of all patriotic Americans.

Consequently it is no more than fair at this season to recall Samuel McGowan's services to his country and to wish for him the reward of prosperity and happiness through all his days.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me to make a similar request?

Mr. GOOD. We have only two more speeches, and I think there are quite a number of requests of that kind, and I fear if we started on that now we would be delayed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is with extreme trepidation that at this late hour I undertake to trespass further upon the patience of the members of the committee for the purpose of discussing the question that has already been under discussion since we met at noon to-day. But there is one phase of this particular proposition to be presented from the standpoint of the desires and wishes of the agricultural interests of the country, in connection with which I desire to offer for your consideration some data and some representation of their position which I think may possibly justify this appeal to your patience.

Theodore Roosevelt, a man whom all Americans respected and many millions of them loved, in the course of an article which was published in the Outlook magazine of October 12, 1912, used this language, and it shall be the basis of the arguments that I expect to suggest for your consideration this afternoon:

I have always been deeply impressed with Liebig's statement that it was the decrease of soil fertility, and not either peace or war, which was fundamental in bringing about the decadence of nations. While unquestionably nations have been destroyed by other causes, I have become convinced that it was the destruction of the soil itself which was perhaps the most fatal of all causes.

And this question of the reclamation of our waste and arid lands, particularly in one section of our country, for the purpose not only of preventing soil deterioration but bringing into actual use soils that have heretofore remained vacant and idle, has been one that has met with a generous response from the American Congress. Very casually a day or so ago I picked up a little pamphlet entitled, "The Imperial Valley of California," and I read its opening sentence, and I wanted to read it to you, because it is in direct line with the appeal which the farmers of the country are making to the Congress of the United States on this proposition of continuing the fertility of our soil. It says:

When dreaming engineers first glimpsed from distant heights the pitiless waste of the Colorado desert, the peerless Imperial Valley of California was yet to be. Visualize, if you will, a lofty rim of colorful mountains, imprisoning a long, narrow valley, its greater area beneath the level of the sea. At one end perceive the pale blue Salton Sea, at the other the wide channel of the Colorado, seemingly feeling its tortuous way carefully to the Gulf. This was a scenic view, yet awesome. The very soul-repelling heat from endless miles of yellow sands, baking in the fierce rays of a semitropical sun, instilled uncertainty and fear in even the more ambitious ones, and led them, perchance, to doubt the ultimate success of their daring plan of reclamation. Turning the silt-laden waters of a madcap stream onto the rich virgin soil of Salton sink and magically transforming the broad, dry acres into a great garden of growing things was the accomplishment of but a day when calculated in terms of empire building. This conquering of desert terrors and dedicating of arid lands to useful purpose was truly royal work. What better name than "Imperial Valley" could therefore be conceived?

Imperial Valley's first decade of progress proved a thrilling epoch. Pioneering hardships, grim human tragedy, and romantic adventure intermingled to build the valley's earlier history. Venturesome men came boldly from busy metropolis or from remote corner of the earth to join gladly in the fascinating task of replacing the water-hating cactus and stunted greasewood with fields of luxurious alfalfa and snowy cotton. Gradually thorny mesquite and purple sage gave way to fruitful palm of date and trailing vine and cantaloupe. The infant years of Imperial Valley overflowed with productive achievement from that eventful day in June, 1901, when the first faint rivulet of water trickled through the main canal, inaugurating an irrigation project the equal of which modern history had not recorded.

Let us draw a curtain between the past and the present. In a world commercially mad, we can not deal in romance nor in dreams. Imperial Valley's youthful period of conquest served its purpose in presenting to an amazed Nation an agricultural manufactory of half a million acres, where water, soil, and sunshine conspired in 1918 to harvest a crop worth fifty millions. Imperial Valley farming is surely established upon a business basis. It has graduated with full honors from the experimental stage. It has amply demonstrated the farseeing wisdom of those who backed their glorious faith in nature against great obstacles of finance or the elements and have won in triumph.

And this is but one instance of the great projects of reclamation that have been assisted by direct appropriations from the Treasury of the United States.

I hold in my hand, and will ask permission to insert in the RECORD, a statement of the reclamation project investments by the Federal Government up to June 30, 1919, as follows:

[1] Deduct.

It will be seen that the total amount is $154,127,905.48. Now, gentlemen, what was the purpose of those appropriations on the part of the Federal Government, for the particular benefit, you might say, of one section of our country as indicated by the figures here upon this map—the extreme western section of the country? Was it that we desired to indulge in favoritism toward those sections of the country? No. The logic of the facts upon which we argued was that we were by Federal assistance, out of the Federal Treasury, reclaiming and bringing into fruitful fertility a vast acreage of that western country. These projects include great dams that have been built directly from Federal appropriations in the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming. What has been accomplished, gentlemen? By the building of those dams out of the Federal Treasury water has been collected, impounded, and turned upon these great areas of arid land; and last year, in the one project of the Imperial Valley alone, they raised, according to the statement contained in this article, more than $50,000,000 worth of farm products. Water in that instance occupied the place of fertilizer. Gentlemen who have not thought about the importance of the decadence of our soil with respect to the future and the immediate present are justified in giving that matter their very mature consideration before they decide to vote against the proposition now pending to put into continued operation for the purpose of manufacturing and putting upon the market not necessarily more fertilizer for the use of soil fertility but cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of America. If it can not be demonstrated by this proposition that there is a logical likelihood of reducing the price of fertilizer to the American farmer, then I must confess that it would not make a very strong appeal to the judgment of Congress.

I do not propose to discuss the Muscle Shoals proposition from the standpoint of its military necessity nor from the standpoint of the local development of industry that may be served; but the purpose I have in calling your attention to these irrigation projects was to show that the principle involved is the same. I wanted especially to remind our friends in these great States of the West that we are not here in this proposition invoking a new principle of legislation at all, but one which, on the contrary, has met for the last 20 years with a generous response from the Congress of the United States and from all political parties; and the proposition at Muscle Shoals is but a replica in argument of the irrigation projects of the West. Instead of the water being turned upon those arid lands through irrigation canals to make them produce crops, the scheme at Muscle Shoals is by taking the water—and very strangely and uniquely the same medium of production of soil fertility—carrying it over this dam, over the turbines, and generating electricity to be used in great electric furnaces for the purpose of reducing the nitrogen that the Almighty has placed at our disposal in opulent and unmeasured amounts in the atmosphere above us. It is a proposition that not only appeals to the imagination but it is one which by the tried standards of scientific experimentation is no longer within the realm of conjecture or theory. How many of you gentlemen who have got to vote on this question have read the farmer's case here presented in this Muscle Shoals proposition? If you have not read it, I appeal to you to get the hearings in the Senate Committee on Agriculture on the bill which the Senate committee has already unanimously reported, the Kahn-Wadsworth bill, providing for the operation of this plant at Muscle Shoals by the Government of the United States, very largely if not exclusively, in times of peace, based on the proposition that it is designed to reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers of this country, and between now and the time you are called upon to vote upon this measure I appeal to you to read those hearings.

With reference to the labor-saving feature of this proposition, every man from a farming district knows that that is one of the greatest problems with which we are confronted to-day. Upon that subject I want to ask you this question: If scientific experimentation has shown, as it has, that with the same amount of labor upon a similar area of cultivated land a farmer can produce from 60 to 100 per cent more of oats and wheat and corn, and if you believe from the evidence that the carrying into execution of this plan will materially reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers of the country, making it possible for them to use more of it on their lands, will you hesitate for a moment as to the propriety of an affirmative vote upon this proposition?

On my right are some charts prepared by an authority in the Department of Agriculture showing the production of oats and potatoes in the principal countries of the world. In the yield per acre Belgium stands first, Germany next, the United Kingdom, Austria-Hungary, France, and then comes the United States, with less than 30 bushels per acre. That is for the production of oats. In potatoes we stand at the very bottom of the list with reference to the amount of production per acre of yield.

Here is a chart illustrating the production in acreage with reference to the use of fertilizer on the soil in the various countries. Belgium, as you will see, uses more fertilizer per acre than any other country and her products are the largest of wheat, which this chart illustrates. So with Germany. You will see here that Germany is the highest, and so on down the line, and the United States of America stands only next to Russia.

Now, with reference to this question of whether or not it is a labor-saving proposition. I do not know that I shall have time to read it all, but I desire to incorporate in the RECORD a statement of some of the actual experiments made by the Ohio experiment station. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. FESS, to this, for I feel sure he will give credence to the report of his own State.

OHIO EXPERIMENT STATION—MEMORANDUM.

At the end of the Civil War there was a labor revolution in the Southern States. Happily, its solution was found, for the most part, by the introduction and use of commercial fertilizers. Economists can not now fine, in the light of facts since the Civil War, imagine, or conjecture just how the economic question of labor after the Civil War for cotton growing would have been solved but for fertilizers that started to be used in an increasing way in the early seventies.

At the present time there is the most serious farm-labor problem in the cotton-growing States since the Civil War. Negro cotton-farm labor is leaving the Southern States by thousands and going to railroads and factories in the Eastern and Middle Western States, where the labor wage is higher than Negro labor can earn on cotton farms in the Southern States. Statistics gathered by the Colored Citizens' Virginia Patriotic League, of Richmond, Va., show that some 309,000 Negroes left the South between September 1, 1916, and May 1, 1917. From the State of Alabama alone it is estimated by careful investigation made by railroad transportation companies that over 60,000 Negroes have gone from that State in the past year. The Pennsylvania Railroad has brought over 40,000 colored laborers for employment on its lines from the Southern States in the last 16 or 18 months. Southern Negro farm labor is becoming seriously disorganized, demoralized, and restless. The solution of this serious question of the withdrawal of colored help from southern cotton-growing States is to be found by southern cotton farms being able to receive higher grade, cheaper fertilizers, and there is no other solution for it.

In support of the above statement, the following statistical investigation and examination demonstrates how more fertilizers instead of more labor is one of the greatest economic needs at the present time, and the selection of a nitrogen process and location of the Government nitrate plant can receive no better and no more economical examples of the opportunity to increase the fertilizer supply of the country and raise the efficiency of the farm man power of the country than is offered by the following:

Measurements taken by two of our Middle West experiment stations show that the labor cost of producing corn is slightly more than 25 hours per acre. Similarly, on oats the labor cost is about 13½ hours, while on wheat it is somewhat less—between 11 and 12 hours. Areas of these crops can be increased only by finding additional labor for our farms and by plowing up land which may be needed for pasture or for hay.

At the Ohio station rotation plots the effect of fertilizer applied to grain crops has been to increase the acre yield of corn from 28.9 bushels to 45.2 bushels. Using the above labor figures, this means that the returns per hour of human labor spent in growing corn on unfertilized land has been about 1¼ bushels of corn, but where the same hour was applied to the same crop but on soil properly fertilized the returns have increased to 1.8 bushels of corn per hour spent—an efficiency increase of human labor of just about 60 per cent.

For the oats crop the case is even stronger. In Ohio the effect of using fertilizer has been to increase the average yield over a 20-year period from 30 bushels per acre to 45 bushels per acre. Measured in terms of human energy this means that an hour spent in growing oats on unfertilized land has returned 2¼ bushels of oats, while the same hour spent in growing the same crop on land that has been well fertilized has returned 3⅛ bushels of oats—an efficiency increase on the time put in of over 50 per cent.

Finally, take wheat, the great bread crop of the country. The Ohio results show a yield of 10.7 bushels of wheat per acre on the unfertilized land, whereas 24.1 bushels have been obtained on the fertilized plots. Once again, applying the human yardstick, we find that an hour of labor put into growing wheat without fertilizer applied returns less than a bushel of grain. The same hour on the fertilized plots has given over 2 bushels of wheat per acre—an efficiency increase of more than 100 per cent.

The real significance of these figures is seen only when we translate them into terms of the labor which may be available for the individual farm. On corn and oats, for instance, the effect of fertilizer applied is to make two men equal in food-producing power to three men employed on a farm where no fertilizer is used. In other words, through the great oat-growing sections of the country, assuming the Ohio figures to be of general application, the effectiveness of the labor supply can be increased nearly one-half if fertilizer in necessary amounts is available and if it be used in the right way.

Similarly on the wheat crop the effect of applied fertilizer is to give one man the food-producing power of two men working under the disadvantage of the crop limited in size by lack of plant food. Economically, then, it is idle to talk of our labor supply being too small and of the necessity of persuading more people to move back to the land until the great bulk of the American farmers are educated to an appreciation of the effect of fertilizer on the efficiency of the labor which they already have.

With respect to the man power and its increased efficiency in cotton growing it is found that the labor time required on 34.5 acres of cotton was 160 days, according to Bulletin 33, United States Department of Agriculture, Office of Experiment Stations.

Assuming the days to be of 10 hours each, this is 46.4 hours of labor per acre without fertilizer and, say, 50 hours per acre with fertilizer. The effect of using fertilizer, according to average of 62 tests made in 1913 by the Mississippi Experiment Station, was to increase the crop by 203 per cent—call it 200 per cent. This means that every hour of labor put into the work of raising a cotton crop on unfertilized land returns but one-third of the results that the same hour of labor produces on well-fertilized land. In other words, one man on properly fertilized land has the same cotton and food producing power that three men equal to him in skill and ability have on unfertilized land.

According to statistics contained in Government crop reports, the total fertilizer bill of the country for 1914 amounted to $185,000,000.

Of this total $86,395,000 was for nitrogen, $69,005,000 for phosphoric acid, and $29,600,000 for potash, the total for nitrogen and phosphoric acid amounting to $155,400,000.

Suppose the farmers of this country, as suggested and explained in March of last year before the Agricultural Committees of both Houses—it would be possible in connection with the building of a Government nitrate plant—suppose a fertilizer available to the farmers compounded of phosphoric acid from phosphate rock and nitrogen from the atmosphere at one-half the price the farmers have been paying for such a fertilizer, and suppose that in one year the farmers of this country should use this fertilizer to the extent of the nitrogen and phosphoric acid used in 1914, viz, $155,400,000—if such a fertilizer was available the saving in one year would be $77,700,000, on the basis of 1914.

If the time ever comes when such a high-grade fertilizer can be purchased at one-half the cost of present fertilizers, there will be a revolution in farm production and a reduction in the high cost of food crops.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. FESS. I fear my friend misinterpreted my question which I asked if he thinks that I meant that fertilizer was not a valuable element on the farm. The only thing I am resisting is this uncertain expenditure of money, the amount of which nobody knows exactly, and the result of which when it is expended nobody can tell.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stated in the outset that I was going to present this matter from the standpoint and investigation of the farmers of America. I hold in my hand a letter addressed to each Member of the House of Representatives on May 11, 1920, signed not by irresponsible and local farmers' organizations, who represent a mere minority of agricultural States in some sections of the country, but it is signed by the official representatives of the greatest farmers' organizations in the United States. In the State of Iowa, the State of the chairman of this committee [Mr. GOOD], the organization there, containing an active membership in that State of 130,000 farmers who pay $10 a year membership dues into this organization, has signed this petition, showing that they are interested and mean business by that organization. This petition is signed by the American Farm Bureau Federation, by the National Grange, by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, and by the National Board of Farm Organizations. They combine a membership of over 3,000,000 of the best farmers of America. What case do they present here for the consideration of this Congress?

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS] said a few moments ago that he believed from the standpoint of the farmers the proposition of getting fertilizer cheaper from this project was a dream. Now, gentlemen, that is a very serious reflection, it seems to me, on the intelligence and judgment of these great farm organizations, who are truly and deeply and vitally interested in the Government operation of this plant. I offer their appeal to each Member of Congress and insert it:

THE FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE
UNION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1920.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Are you willing for Congress to recess and let the inclosed bill, H. R. 10329, go without any consideration?

With the slogan "Food will win the war" you asked the farmers to increase production during the war. They did it. The food crops of 1918 exceeded those of 1916 by 862,000,000 bushels. If the farmer is to be able to meet the present critical food situation, he must have your cooperative assistance.

The most important element in maintaining soil fertility is nitrate. Nitrate is the most valued and the most expensive element of fertilizing. The proper use of fertilizers will enable one man to produce what requires two men without fertilizer. It is agriculture's greatest labor-saving device.

The farmers' organizations have fought for four years to secure the Government nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals. Our first resolutions were adopted asking for this plant on February 8, 1916. The emergency of war crowned our efforts with success. The plant is built and ready for use. Its operation will not require one cent of appropriation, and yet there has been no constructive and progressive consideration of this legislation.

Hearings on this same bill have been held by the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and we expect a favorable report from that committee within a few days.

We are attaching the farmers' case representing the food supply, as presented to the Senate committee, which we most earnestly ask you to read. Supporting our case, we send also the Government's case as presented to the Senate committee.

The reason we send you these hearings and do not send you any hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, to which H. R. 10329 was referred, is because there are no reports of any hearings to send you.

You will be able to find out as we have, why there are no printed reports of hearings before the Military Committee of the House.

Operating this plant does not bring the Government into competition with American manufacturers making nitrates as their principal product. There is no such industry in America. Domestic production of nitrates is entirely a by-product industry. It is thus limited in its ability to meet the demand and is dependent entirely on its primary products for its continuation.

We appeal to your sentiments of American fairness and to your American feelings in favor of a square deal, and earnestly entreat not to let this legislation be choked to death by quiet strangulation.

All we ask is a report on the Kahn bill and let the Members of the House consider it on its merits, and if private interests opposing this legislation and always striving to keep the prices of fertilizer compounds up have more friends on the floor of the House than we have, the legislation will fail. If a majority of the Members of the House favor the operation of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals to bring prices of fertilizer compounds down, the legislation will pass.

Upon considering this matter, please reply at your earliest opportunity so that we may report to our members the most efficient action to secure this legislation.

Yours, respectfully,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION.

For years and years through their organizations, through scientific investigation, they have studied these matters. Do not think that the farmers of this country represented by these organizations are fools; do not deceive yourselves into believing that they are going off after strange vagaries and dreams in presenting this earnest petition to the Congress of the United States. They have investigated this proposition from every possible angle. They are interested in the economical administration of the Government, probably as much as any class of our citizens, and possibly more so than the general run; they have given this matter consideration, especially this Muscle Shoals plant, and are appealing to the Congress of the United States to complete the Wilson Dam, so called, so as to operate a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, with the hope and belief, based on investigation that they have made, that it will afford them some remedy in the price of fertilizers which they shall pay.

It does not do them any good if 10,000,000 tons of this article are made in the United States if it is not available to them in the matter of price that is charged for it. The whole case they make is based on the proposition, after thorough and scientific investigation, that it will reduce to them the price of fertilizers that they have to buy.

Do not think that this question of fertilizer consumption is confined to one section of the country. There on that chart you will see the consumption in 1914, and that is a long time ago, and it has increased very materially since then. In the State of Maine, for instance, 168,000 tons of commercial fertilizer were consumed in 1914, largely upon the truck and potato crop of that State, a larger consumption per acre cultivated than any State in the Federal Union. Take the great State of New York, and at first thought probably you would not think that that State used much of this commercial commodity, and yet the statistics of the Bureau of Soils show that six years ago New York used 420,000 tons of this product. Pennsylvania used 381,000 tons, Illinois 240,000 tons, though that is a little bit misleading, because in Illinois they use a vast amount of ground phosphorous rock. Sixty thousand tons were used in Michigan, 219,000 tons in Indiana, and in the State of Ohio 203,000 tons, and so on, as you will see by that chart; and that ratio of commercial consumption is increasing constantly and necessarily with the reduction of the fertility of the soil.

Gentlemen, I want you who represent these great wheat and corn growing States of the Middle West and west of the Mississippi River not to deceive yourselves into believing that you and your constituents and the posterity of your constituents whom you represent in a short time are not going to be vitally interested in this proposition. Why is it that the farms of New England have been abandoned of late years? Because all of the nitrogen has been consumed and it did not pay to cultivate them. The same thing is going to be true about the great wheat and corn and oat areas of the West, because statistics show—and I shall insert them in the RECORD by your permission—that every year, because of the great staple crops of wheat and corn and oats, there are not only millions but billions of pounds of nitrogen consumed, and it is not going back into the soil unless you use some remedy to put it there.

In 1909 the three great cereal crops of America—corn, wheat, and oats—removed from the soil in the grain alone 3,965,000,000 pounds of nitrogen, 606,000,000 pounds of phosphorus, and 875,000,000 pounds of potassium. Reducing this nitrogen to tons of ammonium sulphate shows that to replace this amount with ammonium sulphate would require 9,912,500 tons of ammonium sulphate. This is an indication of the demand for nitrogen in agriculture, and the satisfying of this demand is limited only by the cost of the materials. These facts demonstrate the overshadowing position which nitrogen compounds hold in the problem of maintaining and increasing the fertility of the soil. At this point I wish to quote from the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House on February 9, 1916, where Mr. Washburn makes the following statement:

"I believe, therefore, that the best way in which I can contribute something of possible value to your deliberations is to confine myself in the main to what is possibly the most important single difficulty the farmers of this country face in the matter of fertilizing their crops, and the most effective single remedy therefor. I refer to the always high and frequently prohibitive cost of the nitrogen fertilizer as the difficulty, and to Government cooperation in the establishment of the nitrogen industry within the borders of the United States as the remedy."

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in the course of this debate said that he did not use much of this commercial fertilizer in his State, and up to the present time that is true, but the productive capacity of the soil of Iowa or any other State of that class is not unique or distinctive. The same character of soil attrition, by washing and draining, and the same character of destruction and absorption of the natural nitrogen in the soil is going to happen in those States as it has happened in the past in the States of New England and some of the States of the southern seaboard.

There is one phase of this discussion that has not possibly been brought to your attention, at least I have not heard it, and I hope you will read the hearings before the Agriculture Committee and before the Graham committee that also went into this question. There was not a single man representing any class who appeared before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate, as I recollect, except Mr. Washburn, president of the American Cyanamid Co.—and the American Cyanamid Co. has a monopoly upon the patents of that process in this country, and have already established on the Canadian side of the Niagara River a plant for the manufacture of cyanamide—there is not a man who appeared before that committee who did not feel about it as I have said except Mr. Washburn. It is no wonder that the head and front of the great fertilizer commodities trust in the country should be opposed to this proposition. Take those hearings and read of the business organizations of the country, of the different legislatures of the country who have passed resolutions asking that this plant be put into operation. Take the farmers' organizations, take the experts of the War Department, take Mr. Glasgow, that great English expert, who has no national or personal interest in the result of this proposition, take the heads of the Bureau of Agriculture here in Washington, your own officials, and without exception all classes and all interests who testified before that great committee said that in their judgment this plant could be successfully operated for the manufacture of commercial fertilizer compounds, and the only opposition expressed to it was from Mr. Washburn, the president of the American Cyanamid Co. Naturally he did not want this thing to run. The whole case is the farmers of America against the Fertilizer Trust.

There is another fact that you thoughtful men will not overlook. Do you know that we are to-day standing barely upon the threshold of scientific investigations of electrical energy? I want to show you here a specimen of a new fertilizer that is in an experimental state, made out here at the experimental station, called urea, containing 45 per cent of nitrogen. Nitrate of soda, as imported from Chile, on the average contains only about 17 per cent of nitrogen. Of ammonium nitrate manufactured in the plant at Muscle Shoals to-day by the War Department, of which to-day 3,000 tons have already been put out, I can exhibit to you here a sample which I hold in my hand. It is true that that is not in an ideal form as a fertilizer that can be used for agriculture, but as has been explained to you here by those who have preceded me plans have already been made for the conversion of that ammonium nitrate into sulphate of ammonia, which is an ideal compound for fertilizing purposes. As I say, we do not know what is going to be developed. These investigations are made in secret by the great private interests of the country. If you were to go to the headquarters of the Aluminum Co. of America and ask them to let you go through their plant, they would not let you do it, because their process is a secret and they have a monopoly. It would be to the interest of the farmers of America, as well as to the other business interests of the country, if for experimental purposes alone the Government of the United States had a plant such as is afforded down there for the purpose of continuing these scientific experimentations into this great domain of electrical chemistry, upon which we are just entering.

Do you know what the private interests have done in the development of phosphoric acid by the electric furnace? You do not, because they will not tell you; and yet phosphoric acid is an essential compound of fertilizer.

As has been well said by one who has given this question a good deal of thought, Robert Kennedy Duncan, late professor in the University of Kansas—and I want to quote from a statement he makes in his book entitled "The Chemistry of Commerce"—

> The present-day practical lesson of this whole strenuous successful work lies in the little object lesson it affords of the immense importance which technical science is assuming in our daily lives and in all our industrial operations. The substitution of real knowledge and high technical skill for the "rule of thumb" of our ancestors has created a revolution in industry. This revolution took its rise in Germany, and it is spreading rapidly to every corner. It is spreading silently, too, because it does not pay to tell. During the next five years the small manufacturer who is swept out of existence will often wonder why. He will ascribe it to the economy of large-scale operations, or business intrigues, or what not, never knowing that his disaster was due on the application of pure science that the trust organizations and large manufacturers already are beginning to appreciate.

These great private interests who are opposing this bill will not give the benefit of their investigations to the farmers of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want a few minutes more.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I must apologize again for trespassing on the patience of the committee, and I shall consume only a few more minutes. Senator GRONNA, when this matter was in the Senate for discussion, made this significant declaration in that connection.

He is chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the Senate and a great member of the Republican Party.

> Mr. GRONNA. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama also that it has been demonstrated—I think quite satisfactorily—to the Committee on Agriculture that it would cost the Government approximately a half million dollars annually to take care of this plant if it is locked up.
> Mr. GRONNA. More than that, it is not only necessary to manufacture nitrogen, but I think what the Government needs as much as anything is a great laboratory. At Muscle Shoals we shall have cheap power. There is not any question about that, when the dam is completed. We ought to have in the country to-day from 500 to 1,000 experts working on these problems. That is being done in foreign nations, as the Senator knows. Even during the war in Germany they had thousands of experts who were locked up in laboratories working and experimenting on these different compounds. I think it would be extremely unfortunate to put any provision in the bill which would stop the work of this plant.
> I am not going to say what the Committee on Agriculture will do in reference to the bill before it, but I will say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I believe we will have to yield to the wishes of the Secretary of War and let him dispose of 150,000 tons of the nitrate ammonia which they have on hand. I think they have 300,000 tons on hand. It has been stated to us that it would be unsafe for us to have on hand less than 300,000 tons, unless this plant could be put in operation so that the Government would be able to go ahead and manufacture it.

Now, gentlemen, this whole question resolves itself into the proposition of the cheap and economical operation of this plant. If you can not run it in competition with other institutions that are manufacturing the essential ingredients of fertilizer, then it is assumed to be a failure.

You can not run it by steam power and make it successful, because the cost would be prohibitive. We know something about that down in Alabama, and you know something about it probably in your own coal-producing States, where you have electrical energy by water power. The great Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., that owns coal and owns mines, is installing electrical machinery for their operation, because they can do it cheaper than they can by steam from their own coal. And the same is true of other industries in Alabama. The electric current you pay for in Washington made by steam costs five times as much as water-power current in other cities. There, gentlemen, is the proposition of power at Muscle Shoals—403,200 horsepower, when there are only 385,000 available on the American side of Niagara Falls. If we expect to make an American plant, for the benefit of the farmers of America, we have got to have a continuation of this dam in order to get the benefit of that cheap water power there so as to run it successfully in the years that are to come. That is the reason, gentlemen, why we are making this appeal to the calm and considerate judgment of the Congress of the United States.

The proposition I have been undertaking this afternoon to represent is for every farmer in America, and I do not say that in any demagogic sense. They are not entitled, of course, to any special legislation, except it so happens that Providence has created, and human ingenuity has harnessed there at Muscle Shoals, a great proposition of potential power for their benefit and for the benefit of other people. The man on the farm is not the only one interested in this question of economical production of food. You men who live in the city districts, let me remind you that the people who toil and work there are themselves always and on every day of every year deeply interested in this question of the production of food.

And the burden of its production is upon the farmers of the country, and they come to you, as I say, not in a hysterical manner but come to you with a calm and dignified and intelligent appeal, based, as they say, upon the facts of the case. They know more about it, gentlemen, than the average Member of this House, because they have given it more consideration than you have, and they ask you to take an existing agency of the Government, already paid for out of the Treasury of the United States, regardless of any mistakes of policy or extravagance or waste in its construction, and run it not only for the purposes of national defense, but in times of peace you can take that power, and manufacture more cheaply for their benefit this essential ingredient for the production of crops, and they could secure it much more cheaply than in the market now controlled by the Chilean monopoly and by the private fertilizer trusts of the United States. And, gentlemen, this appeal is being made to your calm and dispassionate judgment, and I trust you will give it ample consideration before you decide to vote against the proposition.

I also insert the estimate of the cost of producing these compounds by water power at plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals:

Col. BURNS. Yes. As I say, the first period designates the time we were obligated to pay this royalty, to June 1, 1921—the royalty to the American Cyanamid Co. and an operating fee to the Air Nitrates Corporation—and after January 1, 1921, the royalty to the American Cyanamid Co. and the operating fee to the Air Nitrates Corporation are subject to arbitration; and, therefore, we have assumed certain amounts to cover both operating fee and royalty in the second instance, and were only carrying it to the time when we have water power, which will become available from the dam erected in the Tennessee River; so our total costs are $36.16 for cyanamid, $96.92 for nitrates, and $58.76 for sulphate, each, per ton. When the water power becomes available these figures develop into $27.03 for cyanamid, $75.35 for nitrates, and $48.19 for sulphate, each per ton, and with certain assumptions as to royalties, etc., so that our expectations in the future are for these latter costs of $27.03 for cyanamid, $75.35 for nitrates, and $48.19 for sulphate.

I also append a comparison of American crop yields versus European yields:

AMERICAN CROP YIELDS VERSUS EUROPEAN YIELDS.

European soils are naturally no better and no worse than the soils of the United States, yet in Europe some countries get a crop yield of more than double the same yields in the United States per acre, and the difference is very largely due to the difference in the heavy use of fertilizers on European farms. The following table is interesting:

Country.	Fertilizer used per cultivated acre, 1910.	Yield, bushels per acre, 1905–1913.
		Wheat.	Rye.	Oats.	Potatoes.
	Pounds.
United States	37	14.6	16.0	29.5	95.0
France	111	20.2	16.9	30.6	130.7
Germany	207	30.9	27.4	53.6	204.8
Great Britain and Ireland	244	33.4	29.1	43.5	211.7
Belgium	495	37.0	34.7	71.5	306.0

An examination of statistical facts will show that prior to the use of fertilizers in European countries now enjoying very large yields per acre, the average yields were little better than are found in the United States. In the case of Germany, the increase in yield has taken place in the past 30 years, and during the same period there was a corresponding increase in fertilizer consumption. The following table gives comparisons of interest:

Average yields per acre, bushels.

	United States.			Germany.
	1888 to 1892.	1905 to 1913.	Gain.	1888 to 1892.	1905 to 1913.	Gain.
Wheat	12.8	14.6	1.8	20.2	30.9	10.7
Rye	12.9	16.0	3.1	15.8	27.4	11.6
Oats	25.3	29.5	4.2	33.5	53.6	20.1
Barley	23.5	24.8	1.3	24.8	37.2	12.4
Potatoes	73.7	95.0	21.3	130.0	204.8	74.8

The following table shows the relative increase in fertilizer consumption in the two countries of the United States and Germany during the period of time under consideration:

Tons of fertilizer consumed.

	United States.	Germany.
Year:
1890	724,000	1,790,000
1900	2,795,000	3,410,000
1910	5,779,000	6,520,000
1913	6,801,000	9,454,000
Cultivated acreage, 1913	320,000,000	65,000,000
Pounds fertilizer per acre, 1913	42	291

Germany has only one-fifth the cultivated acreage, but uses 40 per cent more fertilizer than the entire United States. The average fertilizer consumption per acre in Germany is seven times that in the United States, and it ought not to be forgotten that the German farmer does not use fertilizer merely to please or accommodate the German Government in respect to the need of growing large crops in Germany, but the German farmer uses fertilizer to the extent he does because it pays him a profit to do so, and a large one on his fertilizer investment.

In respect to nitrogen as a fertilizer, it should be kept in mind that more money is paid by the farmers for nitrogen than for phosphoric acid and potash together. Of the total cost of fertilizer materials, 52 per cent is paid for nitrogen, 28 per cent for phosphoric acid, and 20 per cent for potash.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes a similar request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman from Iowa that there is one more speech on this side. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is very anxious——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Alabama came into the Chamber after we stated to the House that we would rise as soon as we had the two speeches. There have been many repeated attempts to get the committee to rise, and threats to make a point of order. I thought the gentleman from Alabama had leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say that the matter I have in mind is of such importance that if I could not get opportunity to say it I would want to extend my remarks. But I want to extend my remarks anyway. I trust that the gentleman will at least allow me a few minutes in which to disclose the subject I wish to discuss. I will say to the gentleman that I have not been absent from the Hall. I may have sought a little rest from the agitation that we have been having here.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has been here all the time.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman can proceed under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to advise the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] that he has consumed 4 hours and 29 minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has consumed 5 hours and 31 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman from Alabama desires to proceed he will have opportunity to proceed now under the five-minute rule. I understand the first paragraph has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the first paragraph has not been completed. The Clerk will read the first paragraph of the bill if no other gentleman desires to use any more time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, namely——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the opportunities which the Esch-Cummins railroad act gives to the crooked manipulators of the railroads to plunder the public become more manifest every day. Even the credulous gentlemen who allowed themselves to be persuaded into supporting that measure are now beginning to find out that they were deceived by the railroad lobbyists and their astute lawyers. Those who opposed the measure find all their fears verified and see new perils for the future.

The lobby behind the railroad legislation enacted in the spring of 1920 was the most powerful ever assembled in Washington. It had all the sinews of war, money, prestige, influence, and the best brains purchasable on the market. It finally succeeded in forcing upon the people a measure of tremendous consequence. The lobby won for the financiers who use the railroads as their playthings, advantages which the public had never dreamed of giving and which even the imagination finds it difficult to grasp. All this is being disclosed day by day as the victors reach out to grasp their spoils.

The eyes of the people are being opened at last. They are seeing now what they should have seen months ago. Their anger rises as they become enlightened, and it may yet transpire that they will be fully aroused before it is too late to take vengeance.

The power of the interests behind the railroads is overwhelming. They are able to mold and control public opinion at will. At a sign from them the presses of great newspapers change stroke, the channels of public information are blocked, criticism is silenced, and bandages are placed upon the eyes of the people. Dealing with these great selfish interests we are confronted not only by railroad officials and manipulators but with captains of industry and finance, capitalists, and, after them, with civic bodies and with wealth and property interests with lines running from the heart of Wall Street throughout American business life down to the shareholder of the country bank. All are marshaled to meet an attack. It is not merely a matter of politics or business but ties onto social affiliation and prestige; and the attacker finds himself not only strangled in business life but alienated from his friends. To attack these great financial interests is, they say, "making war on society and on our institutions." To criticize the crooked managements of railroads, and the schemes by which they are enabled to fleece the people, is to be a "socialist" or a "bolshevist" and an enemy of society and to be frowned on by the highest social classes from the metropolitan club to the lively circles of the village literary society.

"THE CRIME OF 1920."

But, as I say, the people are awakening and there is yet hope. I observe signs of it in some of the smaller newspapers. I quote from an article in the Advance, a newspaper published in Birmingham, Ala.:

The iniquities of the Esch-Cummins Act passed by Congress last spring are now being seen more clearly. When they are fully understood by the public this infamous piece of railroad legislation will be known as the crime of 1920. Never was a more outrageous law forced upon the American people.

When the measure was being criticized at the time of its passage those who voted for it in Congress held themselves out as defenders of the public against the aggressions of organized railroad employees. They made a labor issue out of it, representing themselves as standing between the public and selfish railroad workers who were seeking to manipulate the railroads for their own advantage. As a matter of fact, it was not a labor issue. The labor end of it was its least important aspect. What those responsible for the measure really did was to betray the American public for the benefit of the capitalists who own the railroads. Then they tried to escape under a smoke cloud of prejudice against organized labor. They did not defend the American shippers and consumers; to the contrary, they betrayed them. It was a clear case of treason to the interests of the people.

The true inwardness and meaning of the Esch-Cummins Act now begins to be seen by even the least informed. The most simple-minded can not shut his eyes to the startling increase in railroad rates which the law has caused. Under it the Interstate Commerce Commission was compelled to grant exorbitant increases, which in this territory are 25 per cent on all freight rates, 20 per cent on passenger fares, and 50 per cent on Pullman charges. It is estimated that the annual charge upon the pockets of the people of the United States which the increased rates will produce is over $1,500,000,000, the equivalent of $75 for each family. Think of it! A tax of $75 annually levied by this law upon every head of a family in America.

But the increase of $75 annually on each head of a family, which goes into the pockets of Wall Street, does not represent all of the added burden imposed upon the people, for to the increased rates must be added increased profits, manufacturing costs, overhead charges, and a multitude of other items. Experts on the subject estimate that for every dollar that goes into the pockets of the railroads, $5 are taken from the consumer. So that the colossal steal from the American people chargeable directly to the Esch-Cummins Act reaches the stupendous total of $7,500,000,000, or $375 for each family per year.

A sinister feature of the situation is that the railroad question appears to be barred out of political discussion. Neither of the great parties is discussing it. The railroad magnates were not only strong enough to force the bill through Congress but are powerful enough to forbid discussion of the railroad question by newspapers and public men. They are able to keep the issue away from the people who are left to find out what they can about it from their own bitter experiences and from private sources.

It was obvious to those who understood the Esch-Cummins Act that the Public Treasury would be rifled under the provisions by which earnings were guaranteed for a limited time. Under that provision $650,000,000 has already been taken out of the Treasury by the railroad owners, and it is reliably stated that another $650,000,000 will be required to discharge the obligation which was assumed by that act. This will make a total of $1,300,000,000, which is $65 for every head of a family in the United States.

EARNINGS NOT CONDITIONED ON HONEST MANAGEMENT.

It was also clear that the passage of that measure would result in large increases in freight and passenger rates. The increases have been asked for and given. They range from 20 per cent to 50 per cent, according to territory and subject, on passenger, freight, and Pullman rates. The express companies have received similar increases. These increases aggregate no small sum. They are computed to yield a total of sixteen hundred millions annually, which means in the end, as stated in the article in the Advance, some five to seven billions added to the annual cost of living.

Friends of the farmers say that they want to do something for the agricultural interests. I tell them that the best thing they could do for the farmer is to see to it that he gets reasonable transportation rates for himself and for his produce.

The Esch-Cummins Act provides for the adjustment of railroad rates so as to allow net earnings of 5½ per cent, with an additional 1 per cent for repairs, and so forth, making a total of 6½ per cent net earnings authorized. It was to afford this net of 6½ per cent that the recent increases in rates were allowed. But the law does not require that railroad earnings shall be based upon honest management or economical administration. To the contrary, it left the door wide open for recklessness, bad judgment, and even actual dishonesty. A railroad is entitled to its 6½ per cent net no matter how extravagant the salaries of its officials may be nor what waste or incapacity they may be guilty of. They may wantonly waste the railroad's money, yet they are entitled to demand rates to meet the very waste at which they have connived.

The railroad financiers at whose behest the transportation act became a law, have been quick to avail themselves of the jokers concealed in the law. The act did not bind them to economical management. Therefore they have entered upon a course of deliberate waste, by which perhaps they do not harm the railroads, for the latter are protected by the 6½ per cent clause, but by which they are able to benefit themselves individually. I refer now particularly to the matter of repairs and replacements which many railroads are letting to outside concerns in which their owners have a financial interest.

NOTORIOUS COST-PLUS CONTRACTS.

As has already been found out, more than 20 railroads of the United States, among which are great lines like the Pennsylvania, New York Central, and North Western, are practicing letting repairs to outsiders instead of doing the work in their own shops. In practically every case the contract price is from three to five times what it would have cost the railroad to do the work in its own shop. On one road—the Erie—so I am informed, the railroad has leased its shops to a newly organized corporation in which some of its officials have a financial interest, and purpose to have this concern conduct their shops and do their work, including repairs, on the notorious cost-plus basis, resulting in great increases in the cost of the work, and yielding large profits to the contractors.

I have some details of the practices to which I have referred. The New York Central has had 65 locomotives repaired by the Baldwin Locomotive Works, at an average cost of $19,057 for each locomotive. These engines might have been repaired in the Central's own shops for an average cost of $4,466. The Pennsylvania has had 200 locomotives repaired by the Baldwin Co. under the agreement that the charge for repairs should be actual cost, including material and labor, plus 90 per cent of labor, plus 15 per cent of the total, resulting in an expense of about $15,000 per locomotive in excess of what it would have cost the railroad to do the work in its own shops. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul has had 20 locomotives repaired by the Baldwin concern upon a similar cost-plus basis. Similar contracts with various repair concerns have been made by the Atlantic Coast Line, Jersey Central, Burlington, and other railroads.

I refer to the foregoing merely by way of illustrations. The same method is practiced as to repair of freight cars and to other railroad repairs.

It is estimated that repair costs for all the railroad systems of the United States aggregate about $500,000,000 annually. If this work were all done in contract shops at similar expense to the contracts I have mentioned, the annual waste resulting will aggregate over $500,000,000. This will cost the railroads nothing, for they may increase their rates to absorb it and still get their 6½ per cent net. But it will be added to the rates that the people must pay. The people must pay for this waste by increased rates. It may easily transpire that the railroads waste on repairs more than a billion dollars per year, to be added to the already crushing transportation burdens resting upon the people.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO.

On yesterday the President vetoed Senate bill 4526, which had for its purpose the further postponement of the effective date of section 10 of the Clayton Antitrust Act. The great importance of the President's action may not be appreciated by the general public. It is my purpose to explain its deep significance.

The antitrust act was approved October 15, 1914. Section 10 of that act prohibits railroad companies from having business dealings amounting to over $50,000 annually with other corporations having any of the same officers as the railroad company, except after receiving competitive bids. For illustration, section 10 prohibits a railroad from purchasing material from another concern owned by the railroad company's officers, no outside bids being considered. The purpose of section 10 was to protect the railroads from being plundered by their officers through contracts made with concerns in which the officers were beneficiaries. It was intended to protect railroads from looting by their own officers. Clearly it was a wise and salutary measure.

By the original terms of section 10 it did not become effective for two years after its approval. This interval was given to enable railroad officers who were interested in contracting and supply concerns to withdraw from them and put themselves in a position to deal honestly with the railroads which they were managing. Upon one pretext and another the effective date of section 10 has been postponed from time to time until December 31, 1920, a total of over six years having been allowed railroad officers to disentangle themselves from their conflicting interests.

Attention is particularly called to the fact that section 10 does not forbid railroads from dealing with concerns having interlocking ownership absolutely, but merely requires in such cases that competitive bids be received and that outsiders be given the chance to do the work or supply the material on more favorable terms. Therefore at most it involves merely the inconvenience of considering competitive bids. Very mild indeed is the prohibition which it involves. Six years has been abundant time in which railroad officers might accommodate themselves to the law.

Perhaps managers of railroads might have been content with the extensions of the antitrust act heretofore given them, except for the passage of the Esch-Cummins Railroad Act last spring. Many iniquities of that act were pointed out at the time of its passage. Other vicious features have been coming to the surface from time to time. One matter which escaped general criticism at the time the law was passed was the opportunity which it affords railroad managers for deliberate dishonesty. Perhaps this feature may have been overlooked even by the railroad lobby, if it be possible that anything could escape the supernaturally cunning members of that organization. However, the managers very soon showed their knowledge of the opportunity given them and their purpose to avail themselves of it.

MANAGERS GIVEN A FREE HAND.

The transportation act authorizes railroad rates which yield net earnings of 6½ per cent. This return is not conditioned upon capable or economical or even honest management. The railroad managers are given a free hand to increase the costs of operation by any means they choose. Always they are allowed the 6½ per cent net return, with the only limit being "what the traffic will bear." With this feature of the Esch-Cummins Act in view it becomes at once clear why section 10 of the antitrust act should become effective. The law was passed originally primarily for the benefit of the innocent stockholders of railroads. It now needs to be enforced for the protection of the long-suffering public against the rapacity of railroad executives. It is the only bar between the public and transportation charges made as high as the traffic will bear.

As the practice of contracting with outside concerns in which they were interested developed and the railroad financiers saw what a splendid opportunity for looting they had, it became obvious to them that section 10 of the antitrust act would be inconvenient if their practices were to continue. They dreaded competitive bidding. They were unwilling even to go through the form of taking competitive bids. And then it dawned upon them that unless the effective date of section 10 was further postponed they would find the situation more difficult with the beginning of 1921. But Congress was in vacation during the summer; the subject must not be publicly mentioned for fear it would arouse opposition. There were secret conferences among powerful executives and consultations with lobbyists and "legal advisors." "There was racing and chasing on Cannobie Lee" for the gathering of the clans in Washington with the beginning of the new session. A program of haste and stealth was agreed to.

Drawn with exceeding craft, twin bills were offered in House and Senate on the second day of the session. Again lobbyists pranced before somnolent or docile committees. Favorable reports were made promptly, the House report being filed on December 15. Three days later, the Senate bill having already been passed, it was called up in the House without notice. Very little informing discussion occurred. Few realized the importance of the measure. Less than a quorum of Members were present. The bill was perfunctorily passed. The House did not even divide. Scarcely more than a dozen Members voted on the measure.

The purpose of the bill was to postpone for another year the effective date of section 10 of the antitrust act—to give railroad officials another year in which to buy, sell, and contract with themselves at the public expense without let or hindrance. Section 10 is at most a poor safeguard of the public interest under the Esch-Cummins Act. Without it the public is stripped and undone, and the rapacity of dishonest managers unrestrained.

Railroad officials, with whose practices section 10 of the antitrust act interferes, have never had any intent to comply with that law. They have always purposed to postpone its operation from time to time and finally to escape by changing the law. This is yet their plan. They dared not at this time present a measure which would relieve them permanently from competing with others in the contracts for railroad work and materials which they make with themselves. They did not dare that. They sought to postpone the matter to a more convenient season and to a Congress more inclined "to listen to reason."

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT.

This is what the President has done by his veto of Senate bill 4526: He has prevented the further postponement of the effective date of section 10 of the antitrust act. He has prevented dishonest railroad officials from continuing to make contracts with themselves for work and materials without competition from outsiders. An important service has the President performed for the people of the United States.

The President has performed an important service by his veto unless the railroad lobby have the power to induce Congress to override the veto. That issue will no doubt be presented within a few days. In the meantime the people are arousing. Oh, that they had patriotic newspapers to warn them. But they are arousing, and I presume to advise gentlemen who would have the good opinion of the public to beware of lending themselves to thwarting the President's veto.

Thanks to the President of the United States for his veto.

COMPARATIVE COSTS OF LOCOMOTIVE REPAIR WORK.

ANALYSIS OF TABLE SHOWING OUTSIDE REPAIR CONTRACTS.

Broadly speaking, the cost of locomotive repair work when done under contract by large equipment concerns costs the roads on an average four times as much as it would cost the road to do similar work in its own shops. In other words, repair work which would under ordinary circumstances when done at the present time in railroad shops cost from $4,000 to $5,000, tends when done under contract with equipment concerns to cost between $19,000 and $20,000.

The following table affords a partial survey of the extent to which the railroads of the country have subcontracted the maintenance of their locomotives during the past eight or nine months. The data is not by any means complete as yet, so far as it has been possible to gather statistics. We have record here as shown in column 1 of the contracting for the repair of 617 locomotives. The most complete records which we have deal simply with the railroads which are doing this contracting and the names of the concerns which contracts are made with. The terms of the contract tend to be available only in the case of the larger contract concerns. There are certain facts, however, which should be noted in glancing over the table, which show that the material is really far more complete than would appear at first. These points will be noted as follows:

1. The actual price charged to the railroad by the equipment or other contract concerns is shown in the table for 350 out of the 617 locomotives of which we have record. These actual prices are available for 234 out of the 418 locomotives, which have been repaired at the Baldwin Locomotive Works. Further study on the situation reveals the fact that this really constitutes a very fair sampling from which conclusions may be drawn.

2. As already pointed out 418 out of the 617 locomotives are credited to Baldwin. This means that the Baldwin Locomotive Works have had contracts for the repair of over two-thirds of the locomotives repaired under these contracts. Prices for more than half of these Baldwin contracts are available. They show a variation from $14,114 in the case of the Union Railroad of Pittsburgh to $30,275.70 in the case of the Atlantic Coast Line. As the first of these roads is not a trunk line, it may be safely assumed that the first-mentioned price represents the minimum price charged by Baldwin Locomotive Works, and for the time being you may safely assume that the last-mentioned price represents the highest. As a matter of fact, this maximum includes the installation of a superheater and probably means that actual repair work was charged for from $24,000 to $25,000. If we assume $24,000 as the maximum price charged by Baldwin for actual repair work and $14,000 as the minimum we get as the average Baldwin price $19,057. It may be noted that by a strange coincidence this figure is exactly the average price charged by Baldwin for the 200 Pennsylvania Railroad locomotives repaired on the Baldwin cost-plus basis.

3. The figures as to the cost of similar work done in railroad shops are actual Railroad Administration figures for exactly similar work, and they are not figures for isolated instances, but are average figures for groups of locomotives and may, therefore, be taken as an accurate index of the cost of this repair work when done by the railroads themselves. It will be noted that the average would probably fall somewhere around $5,000 and the weighted average would fall somewhat below this figure, approximately $4,800.

4. Thus it appears that the average price charged by Baldwin Locomotive Works, which has been responsible for over two-thirds of the locomotives repaired, represents a figure approximately four times the cost of similar work done in the railroad shops. In other words, it is probably $14,000 above actual costs. This alone is an excess charge amounting for the total number of locomotives repaired under contract to approximately $5,852,000.

5. None of the other concerns have had anything like the number of contracts Baldwin has had. Aside from the few contract shops, which have repaired two or three locomotives apiece for various railroads, the only equipment concerns worth mentioning are the American Locomotive, with contract for repair of 75 locomotives; Rome Locomotive Works, with contract for 29 locomotives; and the Lima Locomotive Works, with contract for repair of 9.

A glance at the terms of the contracts made by these three concerns would lead to the conclusion that excess charges very similar to those in the case of Baldwin would come to light here also. The contracts in the case of the Davenport Locomotive Works also show a similar tendency. In other words, out of the 617 locomotives accounted for probably at least 535 have been contracted for on a basis which will bring the costs to at least $10,000 in excess of the cost of similar work done in the railroad shops.

6. Locomotive repair costs for the entire transportation system of the country amount annually to something between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000. If Baldwin and the interests involved were allowed to go into the business of repair work generally on the profitable lines shown under the contracts listed in our table, the effect would be to burden the country with an excess and unwarranted charge amounting to half a billion dollars a year.

7. It should be noted that those concerns, which are known to be a part of the railroad combine (see analysis of interlocking directors), find it necessary to add from 90 per cent to 125 per cent to the labor costs for overhead, and in addition to add from 15 per cent to 20 per cent for the total costs so determined for profit. On the other hand, regular railroad shops and smaller concerns have added for overhead only from 10 per cent to 40 per cent—in one instance 65 per cent is added. For profit these last-mentioned concerns tend to add approximately 10 per cent. As a result, so far as we have the data at hand, the cost of repair work when done in shops outside of the big combine tend to run very considerably below those in regular equipment shops. Costs in these smaller shops in fact tend to approximate the cost of similar work in railroad shops, increased by a legitimate charge for overhead. However, as already shown, 86 per cent of this contract repair work is handed over to the high-price concerns, whose profits go into the coffers of the combine.

8. The table upon which these comments are made follows: Data in this table can be counted on, as it will be found to check accurately against the material which is at present in the possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The approximate cost shown for the repair work done by Rome Locomotive Works, the American Locomotive Works, the Lima Locomotive Works, and the Baldwin Works represents the average of the figures which are at present in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission for this work.

As already stated, the cost of this work in the railroad shops is based upon figures compiled by Railroad Administration.

In case there is any question as to whether the cost of overhead should be added to the repair cost shown for work done in the railroad shops or not, it should be pointed out, in the first place, that the overhead for railroad shops must be carried whether the work is actually performed in these shops or whether in the outside contract shops. In other words, that to include such overhead would in fact be to assume that the country must carry a double overhead charge in order to afford work in the outside equipment concerns. In the second place, it should be pointed out that legitimate charges for overhead should not in any case exceed 50 per cent of the direct labor cost of the repair work, which item constitutes approximately 60 per cent of total cost of locomotive repair work. Adding in this charge for overhead would only increase the average cost shown by approximately $1,500, or, in other words, an average cost in the railroad shops of $6,500 to $7,000, would undoubtedly be absolutely fair if it is decided that such overhead should be included in making comparisons between the costs in outside shops and costs in railroad shops. With this addition, it should be noted that the prices charged by Baldwin, Rome, Lima, and American Locomotive Works still average over $10,000 in excess of legitimate cost, so increased by maximum charge for overhead.

Two other points should be noted. In the first place, it has been stated that Baldwin prices average four times costs for similar work in railroad shops. This may be supplemented by the fact that in certain instances work which could be done for approximately $5,600 in the railroad shops of the Pennsylvania cost on the Baldwin basis over $25,500, and work which could have been done in the railroad shops for under $4,000 cost on the Baldwin basis nearly $26,000, or over six times as much.

In the second place, it can not be contended that workers were not laid off until these contracts were completed, for the equipments are reported to have enough of this repair work to last them until spring. They have many locomotives still to handle.

COST OF VARIOUS CLASSES OF REPAIR WORK IN RAILROAD SHOPS.

The following tables show the actual cost data for the repair of a specified number of locomotives on five of the chief trunk lines of the country.

It should be noted that the majority of repairs fall into classes 3 and 5. This is generally true also of the repair work which has been done by the outside equipment concerns, although a very considerable number of locomotives have been given class 4 repairs by these outside concerns. Repairs classed as class 1 and class 2 repairs are extremely heavy repairs, which are not required frequently. I think it is safe to state that the cost of the repair work done by outside equipment concerns can be classified as class 1 work.

The following standard classification of repairs to locomotives and tenders will be useful as a key to the tables shown hereafter:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS,
Division of Operation—Mechanical Department.

STANDARD CLASSIFICATION OF REPAIRS TO LOCOMOTIVES AND TENDERS.

To be used beginning June 1, 1918, by all carriers for reporting repairs to locomotives made at their various shops and roundhouses.

CLASS 1.

New boiler or new back end.
Flues new or reset.
Tires turned or new.
General repairs to machinery and tender.

CLASS 2.

New firebox, or one or more shell courses, or roof sheet.
Flues new or reset.
Tires turned or new.
General repairs to machinery and tender.

CLASS 3.

Flues all new or reset. (Superheater flues may be excepted.)
Necessary repairs to firebox and boiler.
Tires turned or new.
General repairs to machinery and tender.

CLASS 4.

Flues part or full set.
Light repairs to boiler or firebox.
Tires turned or new.
Necessary repairs to machinery and tender.

CLASS 5.

Tires turned or new.
Necessary repairs to boiler, machinery, and tender, including one or more pairs of driving wheel bearings refitted.

General repairs to machinery will include driving wheels removed, tires turned or changed, journals turned, if necessary, and all driving boxes and rods overhauled and bearings refitted and other repairs necessary for a full term of service.

Running repairs unclassified.

Suffix "A" to any class of repairs will indicate that the repairs are required on account of accident.

Suffix "B" will show the initial application of stoker.

Suffix "C" will indicate the initial application of superheater.

Suffix "D" will indicate the initial application of outside valve gear.

Suffix "E" will indicate locomotive was converted from compound to simple or from one type to another.

Mallet locomotives will be indicated by a star following classification.

Locomotives receiving class 1, 2, or 3 repairs must be put in condition to perform a full term of service in the district and class of service in which they are to be used.

Locomotives receiving class 4 repairs must be put in condition to perform not less than one-half term of service in the district and class of service in which they are to be used.

Locomotives receiving class 5 repairs must be put in condition to perform not less than one-fourth term of service in the district and class of service in which they are to be used.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES.
(Brief summary.)

NEW YORK BANK CONTROL OF RAILROADS.

The New York banking combine is for the purpose of this analysis considered as composed of the following financial institutions:

J. P. Morgan & Co. (Drexel, of Philadelphia), Guaranty Trust, First National Bank, Equitable Trust, American Surety Co., National Surety Co., Mutual Life Insurance Co., Equitable Life Association Co., Chase National Bank, National City Bank, Mechanics & Metals National Bank, New York Trust.

This New York combine has approximately 270 railroad directorships on 93 Class I railroads. This means an average of about three directorships on the board of each road. As a matter of fact, the number of directors sitting for this combine on the boards of the more important systems is generally greater than this.

The Guaranty Trust Co. has 50 railroad directorships to its credit. National City Bank comes second, with 48 railroad directorships, while the Equitable Trust Co. has 34 such directorships. Here are three banks with a total of 132 railroad directorships.

The Guaranty Trust Co. has a director on the board of each of 40 separate Class I railroads.

These facts will serve as an indication of the control of the important railroads in their policy by the New York banking group. It should be mentioned that the chief Vanderbilt directorships are not here included. These would bring the total of New York control to well over 300 directorships.

NEW YORK CONTROL OF EQUIPMENT CONCERNS.

This same group of New York banks holds at least 54 directorships of the leading concerns which produce railway supplies and equipment and which in many instances have recently been engaged in the repair work already described. These directorships are divided among 20 equipment corporations, as follows:

Directors on the board of Baldwin Locomotive	2
Directors on the board of American Locomotive	4
Directors on the board of American Brake Shoe & Foundry	4
Directors on the board of Midvale Steel, which controls Cambria Steel	6
Director on the board of American Car & Foundry	1
Director on the board of Standard Steel Car	1
Director on the board of Woodman Iron Co	1
Directors on the board of New York Air Brake	2
Directors on the board of Westinghouse	3
Directors on the board of Bethlehem Steel	4
Directors on the board of United States Steel	3
Directors on the board of Lackawanna Steel	3
Directors on the board of Pullman Co	4
Directors on the board of Haskell & Barker	3
Directors on the board of Safety Car Heating & Lighting Co	2
Directors on the board of Railway Steel Spring	2
Directors on the board of Lima Locomotive Works	3
Directors on the board of Pressed Steel Car	2
Directors on the board of Southern Wheel	2
Directors on the board of Rail Joint Co	2

It should be noted that this does not in any way do justice to the extent to which these equipments are controlled by the railroad interests. In addition to the directorships held by the New York banking group, there are interlocking directorships among the corporations themselves, there being at least 13 nonbanking directors who tie into two and three of these equipment corporations, thus bringing into the group in addition to those mentioned the Franklin Railway Supply Co., American Steel Foundries, and Canadian Car & Foundry.

Thus it might be mentioned that Wm. H. Woodin, president of the American Car & Foundry Co., is also on the executive committee of American Locomotives, and a director of Canadian Car & Foundry. Financial papers treat this as evidence of the fact that the controlling interest of the National Surety Co., with five directors each from the National City and the Morgan banking group has been extended over these three concerns.

So also S. M. Van Clain, president of Baldwin Locomotive is also a director of Westinghouse, Midvale, and Cambria Steel.

Pullman Co. is, of course, closely connected with very many of the large railroad systems through the presence on its board of H. S. Vanderbilt. J. P. Morgan is also one of the directors.

Financial reports show a close combination of equipments, including pressed steel cars, Western Steel Car & Foundry, Illinois Car & Equipment Co., Steel Car Co., of Cleveland, the Liberty Car Co., of Chicago Heights, the Illinois Nut & Bolt Co., and the Southern Wheel Co. This latter company is controlled by the American Brake Shoe & Foundry, along with the American Malleables Co., the American Manganese Steel Co., and the Southern Foundry & Machine Co.

It should also be pointed out that Baldwin Locomotive owns the entire capital stock of the Standard Steel Works, which manufactures steel tires, steel tired wheels, rolled and forged wheels, steel castings, railway springs, etc.

American Locomotive has a similar subsidiary, the Penn Seaboard Steel Corporation, which produces the materials used by the parent concern.

The American Steel Foundries Co., in addition to its seven plants in various parts of the country, has recently acquired a controlling interest in the Griffin Wheel Co., largest manufacturers of steel wheels in the world.

These facts make it plain that much of the material supposedly charged for at cost may in reality be furnished by subsidiaries of the equipments at very profitable prices. In reality cumulative profit items may be found in the prices charged to the railroads by the equipment corporations doing repair work. In this connection it is interesting to note that for two years, 1916, 1917, and 1918, the manufacturing profits of the Standard Steel Works, subsidiary to Baldwin, averaged over $4,000,000, or a million dollars per year more than the entire capital stock of the concern.

Finally, it should be pointed out that many of the concerns doing repair work, either because of recent origin, or for other reasons, are not listed in the financial manuals. As a result, it has to date been impossible to trace their connections. A number of them have been started very obviously as a part of this new program, with the plan that they shall subcontract the maintenance of railway equipment. In the case of the incorporation of the Erie shops at Hornell, N. Y., this is quite obviously a dummy corporation.

All connections shown are based upon directorships. The connections through railroad officials are still to be worked out.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15442) had come to no resolution thereon.

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL SALARIES.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. PAIGE as a member of the Joint Commission on Postal Service, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. MADDEN.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2278. An act for the relief of John Healy;

S. 1546. An act for the relief of Katie Norvall;

S. 3218. An act for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca de Romero;

S. 1447. An act to correct the naval record of Fred C. Konrad;

S. 429. An act to authorize an exchange of lands with Henry Blackburn; and

S. 1743. An act for the relief of Matthew McDonald.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously made, adjourned until Monday, January 3, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TOWNER: A bill (H. R. 15475) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15476) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 15477) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to create in the United States Coast Guard the rank or grade of chief gunner, electrical, and to transfer thereto the present incumbent supervisors and assistant supervisors of the telephone lines in the Coast Guard; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FREAR: A bill (H. R. 15478) to levy a tax upon all imported meat held in storage for a period longer than 60 days, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 15479) to amend section 11 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 15480) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept a piece of land near San Diego, Calif., for aviation purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 15481) to confer upon commissioners of the United States District Court jurisdiction to try and determine misdemeanors, as defined by section 335 of the Penal Code, approved March 4, 1909; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 15482) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American National Red Cross," approved January 5, 1905; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 15483) to amend section 24a of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we bless Thee for the privilege of seeing the opening of another year, and we pray for Thy guidance and help through all the manifold duties and problems that may be confronting us. Grant Thy blessing and guidance for these Thy servants in their highly responsible tasks. We ask it for the glory of Thy great name, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

BOIES PENROSE, a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania; JAMES D. PHELAN, a Senator from the State of California; and ANDRIEUS A. JONES, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, appeared in their seats to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended March 1, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certificate of the governor of Utah certifying to the election of REED SMOOT as a United States Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1921, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 234) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks Quartermaster Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ACQUISITION OF OIL LANDS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. McKELLAR. I introduce a bill relative to the acquisition of oil lands by foreign Governments, and ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 4747) relative to acquisition of oil lands by foreign Governments was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That deposits of oil or oil shale, or the manufactures or refined products thereof, in the United States or its Territories or dependencies, or any land containing such deposits, or any stock or bond interest in corporations owning such land or deposits, or contracts for the purchase and development of the same, when the purpose is to export such products or otherwise to use them in foreign commerce, shall hereafter not be acquired or owned by any foreign Government or by the nationals of any foreign Government whenever the United States or its nationals having a like purpose are prohibited from acquiring such lands or rights or deposits or manufactured or refined products thereof owned or controlled by the Governments of such foreign countries, directly or by their dominions, dependencies, mandatories, spheres of influence, or otherwise, or the nationals of such Governments or foreign countries: Provided, That in all cases where the Government of the United States or its nationals is permitted to acquire such lands or deposits, or manufactured or refined products of same, or contracts for the purchase or development of the same, under foreign Governments or their dominions, mandatories, or dependencies, a like privilege to such foreign Governments or their nationals shall be accorded by the Government of the United States.

SEC. 2. That oil or oil shale, and the manufactured or refined products of same, shall not hereafter be exported to any foreign Government or to the nationals of any foreign Government in any case where such foreign Government, its dominions, dependencies, or mandatories refuse to permit the United States or its nationals to acquire and ship the said deposits or the manufactured or refined products to the United States or otherwise to use the same in foreign commerce; or where the vessels of the United States or the vessels of the nationals of the United States are discriminated against by any foreign Government or its nationals in the furnishing of oil or oil facilities, or in the acquiring of oil-supply stations in the territory of such foreign Governments, or its dominions, dependencies, protectorates, mandatories, or spheres of influence.

SEC. 3. The Shipping Board of the United States is hereby required to report on or before July 1, 1921, what foreign Governments, dominions, dependencies, protectorates, or mandatories, if any, are violating this act, and thereafter no oil or oil shale or the manufactured or refined products of same shall be exported to any foreign Government or its nationals so reported by the Shipping Board to be violating said act. Should said Shipping Board, by resolution of its members duly spread upon the minutes, report any Government, dominion, mandatory, or dependency as violating said act, the President, under and by virtue of this act, shall at once issue his proclamation declaring an embargo against shipping any of said products to such foreign Government or its dependencies, mandatories, or nationals; nor shall any of said products be exported to any foreign Government or its nationals until the Shipping Board reports that such Government or its dominions, protectorates, or mandatories are no longer violating this act, in which case the President shall issue his proclamation removing the embargo.

SEC. 4. Whenever an attempt is made to export or ship or take out of the United States any oil or oil shale or the manufactured or refined products of same, in contravention of this act, and after the President has issued his proclamation as aforesaid, the provisions hereof shall be enforced by the same officers, with like forfeitures and penalties and under like proceedings, provided in Title 6 of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1917, being an act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, etc., and known as the espionage act.

AMENDMENTS TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment is, on page 94, line 5, to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 8. That officers and members of the Metropolitan police and the fire department of the District of Columbia and the United States park police shall be allowed increased compensation for the fiscal year 1922 in accordance with the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922 at one-half the rate allowed the other employees of the District of Columbia in said act.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 22, insert, after line 12, the following:

Thirty-seventh Street NW., between Reno Road and Chevy Chase Circle, is hereby designated Chevy Chase Drive, and the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby directed to enter such change on the records of his office.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4746) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, in relation to forcible entry and detainer," which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RELIEF OF DISTRESS ABROAD.

Mr. EDGE. I submit a resolution and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 416), as follows:

Whereas hundreds of millions of dollars are being solicited from the American people for the relief of women and children in foreign lands, and the American people, as they always do, are properly and gladly responding with unbounded liberality, in appreciation and thankfulness for their own blessings and in true sympathy for those in want; and

Whereas as a business people the people of the United States are solicitous that every dollar so contributed is really necessary and shall do a dollar's worth of good to those in need, and that no one group of unfortunates shall profit at the expense of any other group, but that all shall share equally in the relief that the American people rejoice to provide; and

Whereas most of such contributions are made on the statements of individuals and organizations soliciting subscriptions, and oftimes without real knowledge by the generous people who make them as to actual conditions and needs—a knowledge which would stimulate, rather than discourage, American aid; and

Whereas as a practical business people they should have official knowledge in order to make their contributions the more positively efficacious: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, requested to obtain at once through the consular or other official representatives of the United States in foreign lands accurate information as to the actual conditions and the needs and necessities of the women and children of various distressed nations, countries, or foreign dependencies, and transmit the same to the Senate at the earliest possible moment, so that the people of the United States may make their contributions intelligently, with the greatest good to the greatest number of sufferers, and through this information may be inspired to greater good works through confidence that their money and supplies are really necessary properly to alleviate suffering and distress.

And further to ascertain, if possible, and report to the Senate what the various Governments in which such suffering exists are doing, looking toward the alleviation of such distressful conditions.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for two or three minutes to explain what I think is the necessity for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

As every Senator well knows, there is an intensive campaign on at the present moment to raise, or proposing to raise, millions of dollars for relief abroad. It does seem to me that the American people are entitled to and should have, without questioning in the slightest degree the humanitarian purpose and the necessity therefor, all the information it is possible for the Government to obtain for them. We have complete representation, of course, through our consuls, throughout the world and in these particular points where it is proposed that the relief shall be expended.

I am quite sure, if the information could be secured, it would be welcomed by those who are giving their time endeavoring to raise these large sums. If all that we hear is true, and these great sums are necessary, then such actual report will stimulate the collections. If they are not, necessarily and most certainly the American people should know it. So it appears to me as a businesslike resolution absolutely backing up and in the interest of making the campaign successful.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

KERENSKY GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit a Senate resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information. I ask that it be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 417) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate the following information:

1. Are funds of the United States being used either directly or indirectly to support or maintain an embassy in the city of Washington, D. C., representing the so-called Kerensky government of Russia, and if so, how much money has been thus expended and what authority is there for such expenditure?

2. Was money advanced from the Treasury of the United States to established a credit on behalf of the Kerensky government, and if so, in what amount, and for what purpose was it used?

3. What amount of money, if any, does the Kerensky government owe to the Government of the United States; how is it secured; what rate of interest does it bear, and when does it mature?

4. After the downfall of the Kerensky government did the Government of the United States purchase war material or other supplies from the officials of the Kerensky government with funds of the United States, and if so, what was the nature of the supplies; how much money was paid for the same; and was the purchase made at a time when the Kerensky government was indebted to the United States, and, if so, in what amount?

5. Has the Government of the United States taken any steps to reimburse itself for money advanced or loaned to the Kerensky government?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, do I understand the resolution is offered for immediate action?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is the first proposal of the matter, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT If there is any objection the resolution will go over.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should prefer to have it go over until to-morrow, so that I may have a chance to look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

PETER M'KAY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 390) for the relief of Peter McKay, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out the numerals "$2,500" and insert "$939."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

KATHRYN WALKER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2371) for the relief of Kathryn Walker, which was, in line 9, after the word "act," to insert "Provided further, That the relief granted be made conditional upon the land being free from valid adverse claim at the time payment is made under the terms of the bill."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My attention was distracted for the moment. Will the Senator state what the bill is?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a relief bill for a certain person in New Mexico. The House made an amendment to the bill providing that the beneficiary shall receive title if no valid adverse claim is made to the land. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have the original bill here?

Mr. SMOOT. The original bill is at the desk.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill as passed by the Senate was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to Kathryn Walker (formerly Kathryn McKnight) for the northeast quarter of section 12, township 29 south, of range 7 west, New Mexico meridian: Provided, That the said Kathryn Walker pay the lawful price of the land within six months after the approval of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I read a remarkable statement in one of the afternoon newspapers during the latter part of last week. The article is headed "Houston to decide war finance fate," and is as follows:

President Wilson has sent the resolution passed by Congress reviving the War Finance Corporation to Secretary of the Treasury Houston, and will be guided in vetoing or signing the measure by his recommendations, it was learned from an authoritative source yesterday.

Houston appeared before the Senate in opposition to the resolution, which, he says, will benefit the General Electric and International Harvester Cos. and the United States Steel Corporation more than it will the farmers. It is understood that the measure will be vetoed. Should the President veto the resolution an attempt will be made to pass it over his head.

The Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Agricultural Committee when it had under consideration the joint resolution to revive the War Finance Corporation and presented his views very fully in opposition to that joint resolution. He made the statement before the committee that there were certain large interests that would get the benefit should the corporation be revived; but Mr. Meyer, who was managing director of the War Finance Corporation and thoroughly informed as to the duties of that corporation and its operations, also appeared before the committee, and was a very fair witness. Touching the applications that were on file at the time the War Finance Corporation was suspended, he stated, on page 22 of the hearings, before our committee:

Under more or less similar arrangements the War Finance Corporation financed the export of $12,000,000 of wheat to Belgium and $5,000,000 of condensed milk to various countries in Europe. At the time that it was requested by the Secretary to suspend financing exports it had applications involving the export of $17,500,000 of copper, $2,200,000 fabricated steel to Italy, $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky, $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a large southern exporter, $25,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers, $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers, $9,000,000 by a group of bankers for export of cotton to Italy, $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of banks headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States, $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy, $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy, $4,000,000 for ships to be bought or constructed in this country for Italy; in all, $100,000,000 in applications promising practical results with adequate security, according to the opinion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

It is not a debatable question that it remained for those who were operating the War Finance Corporation to exercise their own judgment in allowing such applications to be taken care of as might be presented to the War Finance Corporation; and it seems to me that the words of the Secretary of the Treasury himself almost constitute an indictment against his management of the War Finance Corporation when he says that should it be revived the Bethlehem Steel Co. or the International Harvester Co. or the General Electric Co. would be benefited and the farmers of the country overlooked.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would depend upon the character of the men whom he recommended for directors, would it not?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Georgia is absolutely correct. We all know that if he saw fit to allow the farmers of the country to obtain loans with which to export their products, it could be done, and that, as Mr. Meyer says, when the corporation suspended business $100,000,000 worth of applications were on file, most of which were to take care of the export of farming products of this country. If the corporation should be revived, the Congress has expressed its opinion that agricultural products should be first taken care of, and there is no good reason advanced in that particular by the Secretary of the Treasury why the War Finance Corporation should not be revived.

However, Mr. President, we all know the situation at the White House. We know that since the President was taken sick he has not been so free to advise with the Congress as he was prior to that time. We know that the information which he obtains, as a general rule, is from his cabinet officers, and it would seem to me very unfair to the country indeed, it would be very unfair to the Congress of the United States and to the representatives of the American people, should the Secretary of the Treasury have his way and his advice be taken by the President of the United States.

The Senate of the United States, by practically a unanimous vote, said that the War Finance Corporation should be revived and should resume business. There was no opposition to that proposition to amount to anything at the other end of the Capitol. The people of this country believe that some benefit will accrue from a revival of that corporation. What we now need is markets abroad and credits to obtain those markets. So I can not understand the reasoning and the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury in continuing to oppose the revival of the War Finance Corporation after his statement to the Agricultural Committee of the Senate when the Congress has declared itself.

Let me read to the Senate the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury on that point. Before doing so, I desire to say these questions were propounded to him, Senators, because we were fearful that this very situation might arise; we wanted to adopt means that would revive the War Finance Corporation, and we thought if the Senate and the House of Representatives should express their opinion by a majority that that corporation should be revived, the Secretary of the Treasury, being only one man, would at least accept that direction and renew the functioning of that important corporation. So certain questions were propounded to him with that object in view.

I asked the question:

Mr. Secretary, you do not have any doubt that under the law now the War Finance Corporation could function if you and those who work with you saw fit to allow it to function?

Secretary HOUSTON. No; I think it could borrow money.

Senator HARRISON. Now, if the Congress should differ with you and your conclusions touching the operations of the War Finance Corporation, what could they do to get the thing set in motion and assist, if they thought it wise?

Secretary HOUSTON. It could direct it by legislation to do so.

Senator HARRISON. The Congress could direct it?

Secretary HOUSTON. Yes; by legislation.

Senator HARRISON. And then it could function speedily, notwithstanding any views you may have had in the past?

Secretary HOUSTON. Certainly. If a law is enacted directing the corporation to function, it goes without saying that it would function.

Senator HARRISON. The reason I say that is that some one has intimated that your past views might interfere with its functioning.

Secretary HOUSTON. I could have no discretion as to carrying out a direct mandatory act. I can exercise discretion only where the law makes it possible and where in my judgment it would be against the public interests to do a certain thing, and should I have discretionary power I would decline to do it, as in the present instance.

So, notwithstanding those statements by the Secretary of the Treasury to the committee—and the committee followed his suggestions and the joint resolution was passed through both Houses of Congress by practically a unanimous vote—we find from articles appearing in the newspapers that he is using the power of his office in advising the President to veto that very important legislation.

Mr. President, I have been one of those in this Chamber who have followed the President not only in most instances in his domestic policies but in his foreign policies as well, but if he should see fit to follow the advice of this one official of the Government, contrary to the unanimous opinion of the Congress of the United States and the sentiment of the people of the country, I hope that the Senate and the body at the other end of the Capitol will take up immediately the joint resolution and pass it over the President's veto. I shall join cheerfully in such an operation.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 76) defining a peace treaty which shall assure to the people of the United States the attainment of the ends for which they entered the war, and declaring the policy of our Government to meet fully obligations to ourselves and to the world.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on December 31, 1920, approved and signed the bill (S. 4565) extending the time for the doing of annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1920, to and including July 1, 1921.

FINANCING AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I am returning, without my signature, Senate joint resolution 212:

Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

The joint resolution directs the revival of the activities of the War Finance Corporation. This corporation is a governmental agency. Its capital stock is owned entirely by the United States. It was created during hostilities for war purposes. The temporary powers which it is now proposed to revive were conferred in March, 1919, to assist, if necessary, in the financing of exports. The general powers of the corporation expire six months after the termination of the war and the special powers with respect to the financing of exports expire one year after the termination of the war. While we are technically still in a state of war, it unquestionably was presumed, when this added power was granted, that peace would have been formally proclaimed before this time and that the limitation of one year would have expired.

In May, 1920, in view of the fact that export trade had not been interrupted but had greatly expanded, and that exports were being privately financed in large volumes, the War Finance Corporation, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and with my approval, suspended the making of advances.

This resolution was passed by the Congress apparently in view of the recent sudden and considerable fall in prices, especially of agricultural commodities, with the thought that some European countries to which certain products were customarily shipped before the war might again be enabled to resume their importation and that larger masses of domestic exports to European countries generally might be stimulated, with the resulting enhancement of domestic prices. I am in full sympathy with every sound proposal to promote foreign trade along sound business lines. I am not convinced that the method proposed is wise, that the benefits, if any, would offset the evils which would result, or that the same or larger advantages can not be secured without resort to Government intervention. On the contrary, I apprehend that the resumption of the corporation's activities at this time would exert no beneficial influence on the situation in which improvement is sought, would raise false hopes among the very people who would expect most, and would be hurtful to the natural and orderly processes of business and finance.

Large Government credits were extended during the war to certain European governments associated with us in the struggle. These ceased several months after the armistice, except for commitments already made. They should not now be resumed, either directly or indirectly. The recent Brussels conference, composed of experts from many European countries and from other nations, itself expressed the opinion that further credits should not be accorded directly by governments. I do not believe that they should be accorded indirectly.

Exports of domestic products have not declined since the armistice. On the contrary, they have greatly increased. From an aggregate value before the war of less than two and one-half billions of dollars, and of about six billions the last year of hostilities, they rose in the calendar year 1919 to more than $7,900,000,000, and this figure will probably be exceeded for the last calendar year. For the first eleven months of the last calendar year we exported more than seven and one-half billion dollars' worth of domestic merchandise. These have been largely privately financed. The difficulty in the way of still larger exports does not seem to lie so much in the lack of financial ability here as in Europe's lack of means to make payment. Her productive energies and the services which she renders have not yet reached a point where they balance the value of commodities taken from this Nation, and her ability to furnish for additional exports securities which business men would feel justified in taking is restricted. The experts of the Brussels conference reported that "one of the chief obstacles to the granting of credits is the absence in borrowing countries of sufficient securities for ultimate repayment." Until this obstacle is removed it is difficult to see how materially larger exports to Europe are to be made even if exporters, aided or unaided by Government finance, stand ready to do their part. It is remarkable that Europe is able to make an effective demand for as large a volume of our goods as she is making. It is gratifying evidence of her recovery and progress toward full production and sounder financial conditions.

Under the law, if the activities of the corporation were resumed, no direct advances could be made to producers and, if they could be, they would not accomplish the objects in view. They would not create demand for our products. They could be made only to exporters or to banks engaged in financing exports, and if they did in some measure stimulate exports they would probably not have the effect apparently most desired of substantially increasing those of agricultural commodities. Already, with the larger volume of exports which Europe is taking from us, she is exercising her option of taking a smaller volume of some of our principal agricultural products, such as meats, presumably because she herself has become more largely self-sufficient, or is again providing herself with supplies from distant countries which, with the opening up of shipping since the armistice, have once more found their place in the markets of the world.

It is highly probable that the most immediate and conspicuous effect of the resumption of the corporation's activities would be an effort on the part of exporters to shift the financing of their operations from ordinary commercial channels to the Government. This would be unfortunate. It would continue the Government as an active factor in ordinary business operations. If activities of any considerable magnitude resulted, they would necessitate the imposition of additional taxes or further borrowing, either through the War Finance Corporation or by the Treasury. In either case new burdens would be laid upon all the people. Further borrowing would in all likelihood tap the very sources which might otherwise be available for private operations or which the Treasury is now compelled to reach to meet current obligations of the Government. There is no question that the borrowing of the Government should be limited to the minimum requirements, and that the Government should not be called upon further to finance private business at public expense. To the extent that Europe is able to furnish additional securities, private financial institutions here will doubtless find means of giving the necessary accommodation. The way has been opened for added legitimate efforts to promote foreign trade. Financial agencies in aid of exports, privately financed, have already been planned to operate under the act approved December 24, 1919, authorizing the organization of banking corporations to do foreign banking business. One corporation has been organized in the South and a second of large scope is in course of development. These agencies may be expected to act as promptly and as liberally and helpfully as sound business conditions will permit. Through reliance on such enterprises, rather than through Government intervention, may we expect to secure a return to stable business relations. For many months there has been a demand that war agencies should be abolished and that there should be less Government interference with business. I have sympathized with this view, and believe that it is applicable to foreign trade as well as to domestic business. I am of the opinion that now, more than two years after the armistice, the Nation should resume its usual business methods and return to its reliance on the initiative, intelligence, and ability of its business leaders and financial institutions.

We shall not witness an immediate satisfactory adjustment of domestic and international trade relations. The burdens of war are not lifted when the fighting ceases. One sad thing about war is that it leaves behind it a legacy of economic ills and of suffering from which there is no escape. Conditions, however, are improving both here and abroad. The difficulties with which we are now confronted are of small consequence in comparison with those which we have met and overcome. Fuller restoration awaits the adoption of constructive measures of large consequence: the secure establishment of a just peace in the world; the cessation of fighting everywhere; the more complete resumption in Europe of the normal courses of industry, the return of her people to sounder fiscal and banking policies, and the breaking down within her borders of harmful restrictions.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
3 January, 1921.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, this veto message is of such great importance to the country that I hope the Senator in charge of the joint resolution will call for immediate action, and in order that absent Senators may be here and know what is before the Senate, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McKellar	Sheppard
Ball	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hale	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Harris	New	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harrison	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Nugent	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Hitchcock	Page	Swanson
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Thomas
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Townsend
Edge	Kellogg	Phipps	Underwood
Elkins	Kendrick	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Kenyon	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
France	Keyes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	Knox	Reed	Wolcott.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the President's message and the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The pending question is, Shall Senate joint resolution 212 pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the Senate at any length in addressing myself to the pending question, but I do not think I should let the vote come without a statement of the reason why I intend to vote that the joint resolution shall become a law notwithstanding the veto of the President.

When the joint resolution was originally before the Senate I voted in favor of its passage. I have not changed my mind as to the advisability of the measure becoming a law. I realize that the time has come when the great war endeavors of the Nation should cease and that we should readjust ourselves to peace conditions and allow business to flow along the usual channels that direct it in times of peace; but I see nothing harmful in the joint resolution and I see much that may be of service to the very distressed condition of the country.

In times of distress and financial danger there are many things that come before a legislative body that are initially wrong, fundamentally dangerous, which must be stopped, but when an opportunity comes where we may be of service in carrying the country over a dangerous situation, I think it is wise on the part of the Government to be responsive to those conditions and grant that aid as speedily as possible.

I have noted the objections stated by the President in his message. I have no point of difference with his expressed desire that war functions should cease and that we should return to peace conditions. Technically, we are still in a state of war. Technically, we can properly pass the joint resolution. During the period of the war the War Finance Corporation functioned properly and successfully in aid of business and in aid of the Government. There is no reason that I can see why it can not render aid to the people of the country as effectively now as it did during the stress of war. So far as our financial conditions are concerned, we are in a far more distressed situation to-day than we were at any period during the war.

It is not unusual, by proper methods along governmental channels, for the Government of the United States, by the weight of its influence and its power, to aid in the easing of financial conditions and distressed credit conditions.

I can recall the time many years ago when a Republican President of the United States withdrew from the Treasury tax moneys of the people and deposited them in New York banks in order to prevent financial difficulties and panic stringencies. Although that action might have been going to the extreme limit, it seemed to meet with the approval of the American people. More than that, I can recall in the hours of the present administration that the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Federal reserve system, placed moneys in the Federal reserve banks to be used for the purpose of loaning to the banks in that system in order that they might move the crops to the market of their final destination, exercising a governmental function with the power and the credit and the money of the Federal Government for the purpose of moving the crops to prevent stressed conditions at home.

All that the joint resolution proposes to do is to use the credit of the Federal Government through recognized governmental agencies to secure the money to move crops to foreign markets and relieve a distressed condition at home. I see no fundamental reason against the measure if the law is carefully and safely administered. There is no danger to the Treasury and no danger to the finances of the country. The administration that is charged with carrying out the terms of the joint resolution is the same administration that properly and fairly and justly administered the law but a few months ago in the times of war distress. I see no reason why the country or the Congress should not expect, and properly expect, that the provisions of the joint resolution can be and will be administered as safely, as conservatively, and as satisfactorily as was done a few months ago. Therefore I think it should become a law notwithstanding the veto of the President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that I would submit to the Senate to-day, upon the close of morning business, some observations upon the treaty which had been negotiated between the United States and Colombia. I am anxious to proceed with my address, but I am reluctant to interpose it at this time in view of the importance of the subject which is under consideration, and I shall not do so unless the pending motion will result in extended discussion. If it is the intention of Senators to argue the proposal to pass the joint resolution over the veto of the President, I see no reason why I should not proceed. If not, I shall willingly wait until a final vote is taken.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not believe that among those who are favorable to the passage of the joint resolution there is any intention to have an extended debate. So far as I know they are ready to vote. I think if the Senator will wait a few minutes he can ascertain whether that is true. I believe there will be no debate to amount to anything.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield the floor for the present, but with the understanding that if the debate is to be prolonged and I am able again to obtain the floor I shall proceed with my address.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let us vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote were he present, and not being able to secure a transfer of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. In his absence, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I refrain from voting. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have temporarily a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is absent. I understand that his vote, if present, would be the same as my own. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I have been informed that if he were present he would vote as I am intending to vote. Therefore, upon that assurance, I am going to exercise the privilege of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I do not know how he would vote if present. Therefore I am not at liberty to vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I do not know how he would vote if present. Therefore I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. I understand, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL. My colleague [Mr. GAY] is absent on important business and is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. COLT. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. I do not know how he would vote were he present. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber, but that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN. I inquire if the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore will withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). I understand that the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has not voted. I have a general pair with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I have a general pair, if present would vote "yea," and I will therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN. I am assured that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], with whom I am paired, if present, would vote the same way that I am going to vote on this question. I shall, therefore, vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I was requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent from the Chamber by reason of illness.

I desire also to announce that the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY].

The roll call resulted—yeas 53, nays 5, as follows:

YEAS—53.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 53 and the nays are 5. A quorum being present, and more than two-thirds thereof having voted "yea," the joint resolution is passed, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

TREATY WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, shortly after I became a Member of this body a treaty which had been negotiated by the administration of President Taft with the Republic of Colombia was laid before the Senate. That circumstance provoked considerable interest, both in the Senate and in the country, in consequence of which I deemed it my duty to investigate the circumstances which led up to and culminated in the formation and recognition of the new Republic of Panama. During my investigation that treaty was withdrawn, and consequently we did not pass upon it.

A subsequent treaty negotiated with the same Government by President Wilson was then sent to the Senate in place of the one which had been withdrawn. Pending the consideration of that treaty I prepared some observations upon the subject and gave notice that I would present them to the consideration of the Senate. Before doing so I was requested to postpone the delivery of the address for reasons which seemed to me at the time convincing. A second notice was followed by the same result, although I then reluctantly consented to the request. Since the death of former President Roosevelt I have regretted that I consented to the postponement, because I would have much preferred to have submitted my remarks to the Senate during his lifetime. It will be recalled, however, that in the campaign of 1912 Mr. Roosevelt, as a candidate for the Presidency, became the victim of a would-be assassin, whereupon one of his competitors, Gov. Woodrow Wilson, announced that, owing to that unfortunate occurrence, he would not during Mr. Roosevelt's disability discuss any questions or propositions directly affecting or concerning him. To that announcement Mr. Roosevelt responded in these words:

> Whatever could with truth and propriety have been said against me and my cause before I was shot can with equal truth and propriety be said against me now, and it should be so said; and the things that can not be said now are merely the things that ought not to have been said before. This is not a contest about any man; it is a contest concerning principles.

With the sentiment thus so well and so clearly expressed I am in the heartiest accord, and I feel therefore at liberty to read to the Senate what I have prepared without change either in substance or in expression. I might add, Mr. President, that I have had reason to expect that this treaty before now would have been laid before the Senate for its consideration, and it was because of that expectation that I determined to speak. The expected in this instance has not happened, and owing to the brevity of the present session it may not occur. Nevertheless, the result of my efforts perhaps should be laid before the Senate since those who in the future are to pass upon this very important subject may be thus relieved of the burden of much preparation that might otherwise be required.

No argument is needed to support the assertion that a sincere and cordial friendship between the United States and the Latin Republics to the south of us should have been established long ago. Nor is evidence needed to demonstrate that no such sentiment marks their opinion of our purposes, our policies, our institutions, or their intercourse with us. Our warm expressions of regard for them have not been reassuring; and our self-assumed guaranty of their political integrity has frequently challenged their avowed distrust. They measure both by the standards which we have erected along the pathway of our national history, and estimate with some degree of accuracy our precepts by our example. They have observed that with the exception of Alaska, the Gadsden purchase, and the purchase of the Virgin Islands, our extensions of territory in America since the announcement of the Monroe doctrine in 1823 have been wrested from Mexico, from Spain, and from Colombia; that in 1898, while carefully assuring the world that we waged war against Spain for Cuban independence, we did not hesitate to absorb her remaining territories. They have been disturbed by our military occupation of San Domingo, of Nicaragua, and of Haiti, by the eagerness of our citizens for concessions in Central and South America, and by our acquisition of the Philippines, in violation of a fundamental postulate of the Monroe doctrine. These progressive instances of territorial expansion have tended to confirm their suspicion that our magnanimous guardianship might mask a plan of aggression; that our lively apprehension of their foreign colonization might be a pretext, concealing our own designs for territorial expansion. Hence our attitude, whose sincerity has more than once been demonstrated by our actions, has inspired them with no sense either of appreciation or of security; while some of the nations against whose political designs we have safeguarded them have largely monopolized their markets and occasionally influenced their national policies.

Some years ago the senior Senator from Massachusetts expressed a belief that we were being looked upon with a mixture of dread and ill will in South America. This impression shortly afterwards received striking confirmation in the address of Dr. Freos, the president of the Museo Social of Buenos Aires, at the banquet in honor of Col. Roosevelt upon the occasion of his visit to that city. Dr. Freos cordially but honestly outlined the real sentiment of South America in words evidently selected with careful deliberation. He said:

There is a dominating fact in all South America. It is a manifest and undeniable fact, and it would be a great error to my mind to attempt to silence or even to disguise it. This fact, gentlemen, is that there exists a deep sentiment of apprehension which disturbs Spanish America and inspires it with precautions, causing it to withdraw itself instinctively, and to its own hurt, from the grand center of civilizing light and power established in the north of the continent. The establishment of United States interests in Spanish America is feared, because it is feared that they may incite and cause intervention, which no people can accept with good will. Such a fear holds it back from more open and friendly relationship with the great nation on the north.

Col. Roosevelt, the nations of Latin America will not feel at their ease so long as they do not rest in the security that no master may arise from them, either from within or without, and that no one, no matter where he may come from, may place in danger their integrity or their independence and sovereignty.

The evident inspiration for this historic utterance upon such an occasion was the Rooseveltian Latin-American policy, as exemplified by the episode of the Panama Canal. Before that event one element of warmth pervaded the unkindly atmosphere of South American opinion. It was quickened by the fact that throughout our history we had scrupulously observed our treaty obligations. The written word of the Nation had been its bond. No tarnish rested upon it. Administrations came and went, party succeeded party in governmental control, the fires of Civil War flamed to the skies, and battling sections jostled each other like colliding planets, but the Nation's honor suffered no reproach. Under the shelter of such an influence distrust could not permanently endure. The prospects of an ultimate rapprochement between the United States and the nations of Central and South America at the beginning of the year 1903 were not unpromising. Through the agency of the International Bureau of American Republics, precursor of the Pan American Union, we were establishing closer relations of confidence and esteem. A real sentiment of continental Americanism was within the range of early possibilities. An era of good feeling was taking definite outline and Pan Americanism seemed to be slowly rising above the level of the southern horizon.

These conditions were rudely interrupted in the autumn of 1903 by a vaudeville insurrection in Panama, swiftly followed by its secession from Colombia, its official recognition by the American Government, the establishment of diplomatic relations with the new political entity, and the negotiation of a canal treaty with the junta assuming to represent it, by which the United States, in consideration of the sum of $10,000,000 in gold, acquired the Panama Canal Zone in perpetuity. This action of our Government, ostensibly based upon the rejection by Colombia of a convention designed to accomplish the same purpose, seemed to disregard not only the most obvious principles of international law but our solemn treaty obligations assumed in 1846, and scrupulously observed for 57 years, by whose terms the United States had in consideration of most valuable concessions solemnly guaranteed to Colombia the perpetual sovereignty of the Isthmus.

Latin America held its breath in amazement; the flagrancy of our conduct taxed their credulity and our own. Then followed a revelation of the humiliating details. America had not only recognized and extended her protection to a State in rebellion against the central Government; she had encouraged, if indeed she had not fostered, the insurrection. She had forcibly prevented Colombia from landing troops upon her own soil for the vindication of her own sovereignty. Her prompt and repeated protests were disregarded. She was branded by the President as a blackmailer among the nations, whose infamous conduct in rejecting a treaty justified both the revolt of one of her constituent commonwealths, and his prompt recognition of it. She invoked our treaty obligations and confronted the extraordinary assurance that our action toward Panama was in conformity with them. Too weak to resent the affront, she appealed to our sense of justice. She beseeched us to arbitrate her claims for restitution, but her remonstrances and her appeals have been alike unheeded.

This affront was not to Colombia alone. She was the victim. Her territory was invaded by a friendly nation and partitioned over her protest. She alone demanded reparation, but every Government south of the Rio Grande was aroused in just resentment. As we had violated the sovereignty of Colombia, so might we outrage theirs when our interests or our policies required it. As we had rewarded rebellion and created republics in Colombia, so might we also spread sedition among their peoples with like result. As we had thrust aside our treaty obligations with her, so might we treat theirs as scraps of paper. As we had ignored our oft-repeated recognitions of international comity and torn a weak but friendly Republic apart, so might they encounter the same fate when the Colossus of the North should will it. To them our tributes to freedom and our ostentatious regard for the rights of small nations and weak peoples sounded like the essence of national hypocrisy.

Mr. President, this great Republic is the last and best citadel of democracy. It has waged war with the mightiest military power the world ever knew that the institutions and the blessings of popular government may not perish. It needs the support and welcomes the friendship of every nation, especially those of the Western Hemisphere. The power whose unspeakable misconduct compelled the United States to draw the sword has deliberately and repeatedly affronted the principal Republics of South America. They feared Germany as we did not. They had long been selected by her for political domination, and she would have overrun them had the Allies failed to overcome her. These countries know this better perhaps than we do. Many of them severed diplomatic relations with Germany, but, with the exception of Brazil and Cuba—the former peopled and ruled by a population descended from the Portuguese—and one or two Central American countries, they did not declare war against her. We do not fully know why, but we can well conjecture. They hated Germany, but they were not sure of America. They had no love for autocracy, but they distrusted a great democracy whose practices did not always square with its principles. The devil was to them no more attractive than the deep sea, and between these alternatives they did little in the world's great conflict. I fear their attitude will not change until we do justice to Colombia.

Pan-Germanism, a far more sinister foe to the Allies than the legions of the Kaiser, may no longer inoculate the southern continent with its deadly poison. But the removal of this evil does not mean the establishment of confidence and respect for America. The suspicions of the Latin survive and may be fed fat by the German protagonist, defeated but not wholly disarmed, partly with the facts of history, partly with the fictions of his own creation; and it may well be that if the process be not interrupted some of our neighbors may give substantial commercial succor to the defeated Teuton lest we may wax too great and powerful for their welfare.

Especially in Colombia might such results develop. She has not forgotten, and until her grievance is heard and adjusted she can not forgive our wanton assault upon her sovereignty. She has crystallized the outrage down to its most trivial incident upon the tablets of her memory. She has written the facts into her curriculums. The children in her schools are taught the story of Panama, which they treasure in their memory. Natural resentment toward America and desire for ultimate justice are part of the national consciousness. The one blot on our escutcheon is the wrong we did to Colombia in 1903.

Mr. President, if we have wronged Colombia, we should make due reparation. If we have done her no injustice, the world, and especially Latin America, should know it as speedily as it can be imparted through the processes of governmental procedure or by a court of arbitration. And we need the friendship of the entire hemisphere, whose estrangement we can neutralize by redressing the wrong, if wrong there be.

I have been so impressed by the conditions thus imperfectly outlined that I have given them a patient and, I trust, an impartial consideration. I have reviewed the facts regarding Panama as disclosed by official hearings, documents, and reports. I have reread contemporaneous and subsequent articles written by men of high position, and presumably familiar with the subject, assailing and upholding America's part in the formative processes of the Republic of Panama; and I am compelled to affirm that our conduct in that unfortunate affair is without justification and therefore indefensible. The only comfort one gathers from the shameful and sordid story is that it finds no precedent in our history. I trust that we may soon acknowledge our fault and make some reparation, lest it again be some time, as it has been, invoked to shelter or justify assault upon the integrity of some weak and helpless nation.

The speedy performance of this insistent duty, not alone because of its justice to Colombia and to ourselves as well but because of its immediate and permanent benefit to our political and commercial future, now of all times most desirable, must be my excuse for a rapid review of the principal facts revealed by the "Story of Panama"—one of the most interesting and valuable documents ever given to the public. In doing this I should at the outset remind the Senate that the most important lesson taught us by the Spanish War, and particularly by the voyage of the Oregon from San Francisco to Cuba, was the imperious necessity of a shorter route between the oceans, to secure which a canal across Nicaragua or the Isthmus should be constructed and owned by the Government. Preliminary but exhaustive investigations theretofore made had demonstrated the superiority of the Nicaragua route, to which both the great political parties unequivocally committed themselves in their platforms of 1896.

Fifty years earlier, and immediately following our acquisition of California, access to which was then possible around the Horn, our Government negotiated a treaty with New Granada to be "religiously observed" while in force. It was made on our initiative in 1846. By the terms of article 35 we secured free transit of goods and passengers across the Isthmus, together with freedom of all Granadan ports on both its coasts. This immensely valuable concession was guaranteed to us by the Granadan Government, not only as to existing modes of communication but as to any and all others to be thereafter constructed by or under its authority. In consideration of the grant of these generous privileges the United States covenanted with New Granada for the perpetuation of its sovereignty over the Isthmus in the following language:

> In order to secure to themselves the tranquil and constant enjoyment of these advantages, and for the favors they have acquired by the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of this treaty, the United States guarantees positively and efficaciously to New Granada by the present stipulation the perfect neutrality of the before-mentioned Isthmus, with the view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed in any time while this treaty exists; and in consequence the United States also guarantees, in the same manner, the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada has and possesses over the said territory.

Because of the disturbed conditions sometimes prevailing in that region, the treaty also provided that if one or more of the nationals of either country should infringe any of its articles, they should be held personally responsible therefor, so that the friendship between the nations should not be thereby disturbed, each party engaging in no way to protect the offender or sanction the violation.

Within a few months after the ratification of the treaty gold was discovered in California, and the rush of emigrants to the western coast began. The Panama Co. was speedily organized in America, and New Granada gave it a monopoly of the Isthmus transit. The great influx of travel over the road developed troubles between travelers and natives, requiring an additional treaty, which, however, expressly declared that it in no respect affected the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus. In 1862, the Republic of New Granada changed its name to the United States of Colombia.

On several occasions between the making of the treaty and the year 1902 our Government was required to define its duties under section 35. I shall not burden the RECORD with these definitions. Their substance was well expressed by Secretary Seward in 1865, who said:

> The purpose of the stipulation was to guarantee the Isthmus against seizures or invasion by a foreign power only. It could not have been contemplated that we would ever become a party to any civil war in that country by defending the Isthmus against another party.

In 1867 Colombia conceded to the Panama Railroad Co. the use and possession of its railroad for 99 years for a royalty of $250,000 per annum. But 36 years of this time had expired in 1903. The remainder of the term should have yielded a total of $16,500,000 to the Colombian treasury. Moreover, the road at the end of that time would become the property of the Republic.

In 1869, and again in 1870, at our request, Colombia entered into diplomatic relations with us for the construction of an Isthmian Canal. Each time a treaty was negotiated, extremely liberal in its terms, which Colombia ratified, but which we abandoned. Under these covenants she gave us everything we could have asked for, retaining only her political sovereignty. Of course we had not advanced to the point of asking for that. But the continental railroad companies, one of them owning the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., were even then powerful enough to prevent the ratification of these treaties. Not until eight years thereafter did she execute the Salgar-Wyse contract, afterwards acquired by the Panama Canal Co., under which de Lesseps made his disastrous effort to dig the channel. The new company was organized upon the ruins of the old one in October, 1894, the latter having acquired control of the Panama Railroad Co. in 1888, of which one William Nelson Cromwell became counsel and director in 1893, and special counsel for the New Panama Canal Co. in January, 1896. The baleful activities of this man seem to have actually shaped our governmental policy toward Colombia after the assassination of President McKinley. They began prior to Mr. McKinley's first inauguration, for he appeared in Washington with the meeting of Congress in December, 1896, following the presidential election. He urged and soon succeeded in inducing Colombia in the interests of the Panama company to call the attention of the American Government to the advantages of the Isthmian over the Nicaraguan route. He then set about defeating all Nicaraguan legislation and, as a matter of course, organized a lobby and a competent press bureau to support his efforts and spread the Panama gospel among the people.

But President McKinley was proof against the new propaganda. In his message of December, 1897, he urged the building of the Nicaraguan Canal under American control. The Morgan bill for that route passed the Senate in January following by 48 to 6. The Senate afterwards attached the Morgan bill to the rivers and harbors bill by a vote of 50 to 3. But Mr. Cromwell was able to defeat both in the House by the substitution of a measure providing for a new Panama Commission, which soon reported in favor of Nicaragua, but afterwards, by the direction of President Roosevelt, reversed its conclusions and recommended the Isthmian route.

In 1900 largely through the influence of Senator Hanna, the Republican national convention reversed its earlier attitude favoring Nicaragua and declared for "an Isthmian canal."

Mr. Roosevelt became President in September, 1901. He at once made an announcement of his official policy, among the items of which was the building of the Nicaragua Canal. In January following the House passed the Hepburn bill for Nicaragua by a vote of 309 to 2, shortly after which Mr. Roosevelt committed himself to the Isthmian route.

The Panama Co. concession would, in 1904, expire by limitation. It could not be assigned without the consent of Colombia. It was offered to the United States through Mr. Cromwell for $40,000,000; but without Colombia's permission the offer was worthless; and so Mr. Cromwell busied himself trying to secure her consent. That Government through its minister, demanded $20,000,000 from the company for its consent, conditioned upon the adoption of the Isthmian route "without affecting the integrity of its territory or its national sovereignty." In view of her equity in the railroad and the value of her consent to the transfer that sum was not unreasonable.

Shortly afterwards, Colombia forbade the transfer of the canal company without first complying with her terms. It may be well to state here that Colombia owned shares of the face value of 5,000,000 francs in the company.

In 1902 Mr. Cromwell wrote a report for the minority of the Senate Canal Committee favoring the Panama route. Senator Hanna, being its chairman, the report bore his name, copies of which Mr. Cromwell scattered over the country. This report opposed the Hepburn and favored the Spooner bill. The latter provided, in substance, that should the title of the company be approved and a satisfactory treaty be concluded with Colombia within a reasonable time the Panama route should be selected; otherwise, in default of either of these conditions, the Nicaragua route should be adopted. The Spooner bill was finally passed and approved by the President June 28, 1902. Mr. Cromwell then devoted himself to securing a fulfillment of the two conditions.

Meanwhile a small insurrection occurred in Panama. Contrary to precedent, and in disregard of the treaty of 1846, and with knowledge of the fact that the officers of the Panama Railroad Co. were notoriously aiding the revolutionists by moving their munitions and refusing transportation to the established government, the President, without saying "by your leave," landed American marines, who virtually disarmed the fighting forces on both sides, thus clearly expressing his contempt for our treaty obligations with Colombia. As a consequence the Colombian minister, Mr. Concha, refused to negotiate at all with our Government for a treaty so long as our troops, in violation of the sovereignty of his country, remained upon her soil without her consent. Pressed by his Government to do so because of Mr. Roosevelt's demand for a speedy agreement, he finally consented, provided the first negotiations were limited to the question of sovereignty. By the President's direction Mr. Hay, on November 28, 1902, consented to this, notwithstanding which Mr. Roosevelt, in his message of January 4, 1904, declared that Colombia's subsequent refusal to ratify the treaty because it involved the relinquishment of her sovereignty was "an afterthought."

Inasmuch as the marines continued to occupy the Isthmus, Minister Concha abruptly resigned his place, which was taken by Dr. Herran as chargé d'affaires, with whom Mr. Cromwell at once sought to establish confidential relations. Eight days after assuming his new duties Dr. Herran sent his Government this ominous warning:

> Besides this deferred ultimatum, another danger threatens us. Mr. Shelby M. Cullom, Senator from Illinois and chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, maintains that in case Colombia does not lend itself to a satisfactory agreement the Government of the United States can come to an understanding with the canal company direct, passing over the head of Colombia and expropriating part of our territory, justifying this on the ground of universal public utility, and leaving the compensation due to Colombia to be decided later. President Roosevelt is a determined partisan of the Panama route, and in view of his impetuous and violent disposition it is to be feared that the scheme of Senator Cullom is not distasteful to him.

That, I think, is the ultima ratio of the doctrine of eminent domain. That it was not "distasteful to him" is revealed by himself in his message 18 months later, for he there said:

My intention was to consult Congress as to whether under such circumstances it would not be proper to announce that the canal was to be dug forthwith; that we would give the terms we had offered, and no others; and that if such terms were not agreed to we would enter into an agreement with Panama direct, or take what other steps were needful in order to begin the enterprise.

The first intimation of Mr. Roosevelt's intention to ignore the rights of Colombia, disregard our treaty obligations with her, and proceed as "the mandatory of civilization" to take the Canal Zone if Colombia declined to ratify a treaty of Mr. Cromwell's making, thus came from the lips of Senator Cullom. He doubtless spoke by Mr. Roosevelt's inspiration.

On the day following Dr. Herran's message to his Government Senator Morgan introduced a motion requesting the President to conclude negotiations with Nicaragua under the requirements of the Spooner law, no treaty having been concluded with Colombia. Mr. Cromwell defeated the motion, but it spurred him to greater effort for an agreement for the treaty. He persuaded Herran that action by Colombia was imperative, as the State Department would present an ultimatum on January 5. It did not come quite so soon, although Mr. Hay, on December 31, wrote Mr. Herran that "it is absolutely necessary that I report to the President regarding the condition of our negotiations." January 3, 1903, Herran cabled his Government that the final offer of the American Government to Colombia was $10,000,000 cash, with an annuity of $100,000 after nine years, and an equitable increase of it after the completion of the canal.

These terms were not more palatable to Colombia than those affecting her sovereignty. Pressure was therefore brought against Herran personally by Cromwell and officially by Secretary Hay. On January 22 the latter addressed the following letter to him:

DEAR MR. HERRAN: I am commanded by the President to say to you that the reasonable time that the statute accords for the conclusion of negotiations with Colombia for the excavation of a canal of the isthmus has expired, and he has authorized me to sign with you the treaty of which I had the honor to give you a draft, with the modification that the sum of $100,000 fixed therein as the annual payment be increased to $250,000. I am not authorized to consider or discuss any change.

Apart from the dictatorial character of this note the obvious inference the Colombian minister would draw from it would be that if Colombia should persist in its refusal to accept the President's terms, the latter would, under the statute, abandon Panama, and negotiate with Nicaragua for a canal concession. But Mr. Herran had reason to know that although this was the alternative of the statute, it was not the President's intention, as Senator Cullom had plainly intimated. He therefore yielded to pressure and signed the treaty at once. Two days later he was instructed by his Government not to sign it. His name has been execrated in Colombia ever since.

The treaty was afterwards ratified by the American Senate, although Colombia promptly brought suit to enjoin the canal company from transferring its concession; whereupon the State Department lent its powerful aid to Mr. Cromwell for the protection of his client. April 7, 1903, Mr. Hay cabled the American minister at Bogota:

Referring to the requests of Colombia to the canal and railroad companies for appointment of agents to negotiate cancellation of present concessions, etc., if the subject arises, inform the Colombia Government that the treaty covers entire matter, and any change would be in violation of the Spooner law.

This instruction, unfounded in fact and in law, was an additional affront to the intelligence and the dignity of Colombia. She was then concerned about her contract with the canal company, a quarrel over which we had no more control than Colombia had over our treaty stipulations with Great Britain. We can well imagine how America would receive a similar communication from England, France, or Germany. Yet Mr. Roosevelt had no compunctions about instructing Colombia that she could not amend a treaty which he had dictated. He did this more than once, and Colombia did what any high-spirited people would have done under such circumstances. She pitched his treaty out of her window. Yet she assigned good reasons for her action, which should have been accepted as conclusive.

Events now moved rapidly. In May the American minister to Colombia came home. He reported to Mr. Cromwell at New York before reporting to Secretary Hay at Washington. If Mr. Cromwell is to be credited, he collaborated with Mr. Hay in writing instructions to our minister at Bogota from this time on.

Referring to Colombia's insistence that the canal company make satisfactory adjustment of her claims as a condition of her consent to transfer, Mr. Hay wrote that—such action would be inconsistent with the agreements already made between this Government and the canal company, with the act of June 28, 1902, under the authority of which the treaty was made, and with the express terms of the treaty itself.

He also wrote that—before entering upon any dealings with the new Panama company the present treaty with Colombia was negotiated and signed.

This assertion is not sustained by the facts. At the same time, it can not be reconciled with the further assertion, which Mr. Roosevelt subsequently repeated, that Colombia had initiated our treaty negotiations for the canal.

From the hour that Dr. Herran informed his Government that he had signed the treaty, public opinion in Colombia was strongly against its ratification, since it had been virtually written by the attorney for the canal company in its own interest, and transgressed the sovereignty of the Republic by clauses which cleverly undermined that which was designed to safeguard it. As early as May, 1903, our minister at Bogota informed Secretary Hay that it would be rejected by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Cromwell thereupon suggested to Mr. Hay that our Government deliver its ultimatum to Colombia. He acted in harmony with Mr. Cromwell's views, and on June 9 instructed our minister to say verbally to the Colombian minister of foreign affairs that—if Colombia should now reject the treaty, or unduly delay its ratification, the friendly understanding between the two countries would be so seriously compromised that action might be taken by the Congress next winter which every friend of Colombia might regret.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. To this gratuitous indignity the foreign minister replied with spirit but with moderation. He reminded Mr. Hay of the narrow margin by which our Senate had ratified the treaty and added that if it had been rejected it would not have diminished the right of Colombia. Referring to the rumored purpose of Mr. Roosevelt to seize Panama if the treaty were rejected, the minister very properly said that—

The Colombian Government has derived the correct conclusion that the only result that can affect adversely the interests of this nation, if their Congress should reject the project of the treaty, is that the Government of the United States will cease negotiations and adopt the Nicaraguan route.

Mr. Cromwell gave contemporaneous assurance to Dr. Herran that Colombia would lose Panama if she did not ratify the treaty, which Herran promptly communicated to Bogota. On June 13 Mr. Cromwell conferred with President Roosevelt, and on the same day, through his press agent, informed the New York World that the President was determined to have the Panama route, that should the treaty be rejected the State of Panama would secede, the President would promptly recognize the new Republic and make a treaty with it which would give our Government the equivalent of absolute sovereignty over the Canal Zone. The World published the news on the following morning and again on July 31. On July 22 our minister, by instructions from Washington, demanded of the Colombian minister the ratification of the treaty without any change whatever. On this occasion he declared that his Government would regard any modification of the treaty as a breach of faith by Colombia and might greatly complicate the friendly relations hitherto existing between the two countries. How any self-respecting nation after this deliberate affront could have done otherwise than reject the treaty passes my comprehension.

The reply of Dr. Rico on August 11 to the American minister's remarkable demand is a model of dignified remonstrance. It is too long to be quoted here, but it reminded him of the right of independent nations to accept, modify, or reject treaties without pressure or dictation, of the fact that the American Senate had frequently done so, particularly with the Hay-Pauncefote treaties, without in any wise disturbing international relations.

The Colombian Senate declared that it could not without violating the national constitution have ratified the treaty; that document forbade the enactment of laws or the ratification of treaties impairing or affecting the national sovereignty. Our Government was fully informed of this and of Colombia's announcement that its constitution would be so amended as to permit the adoption of the treaty when made satisfactory to her Government. But she refused to be coerced, and on August 12 her Senate rejected the treaty by a unanimous vote. For this exercise of her undoubted right the President of the United States charged her with attempted blackmail. His conduct from the commencement to the close of the episode fortunately has no parallel in the diplomatic history of the United States.

The charge of blackmail is without justification. She did demand from the company a consideration for consenting to the transfer of their property and she was entitled to it. She could secure it only by making it a condition precedent to her ratification of the treaty. In her place we would have been far more exacting, and, because of our strength, far more successful. Colombia has lost a province and with it the canal by her conduct, but she has maintained her national dignity and honor, however great the sacrifice. This should have inspired our tribute of applause. But we ravished her instead, although both the Colombian foreign minister and the American minister at Bogota gave Mr. Hay to fully understand that the disapproval of the treaty was due to the problem of diminished sovereignty, the failure of the canal company to arrange for the transfer of its concessions, and the ultimatum of Mr. Cromwell, communicated through the medium of the State Department, and that the Colombian congress would provide by law for continuing and finishing negotiations for the canal.

Preliminaries for the Panama rebellion began before the treaty was rejected. Capt. James R. Beers, freight agent and port captain for the western terminus of the Panama Railroad, went to New York to confer with Mr. Cromwell regarding it. During his absence Senator Arango sounded a few influential citizens of Panama. In June, Capt. Humphrey, of the Twenty-second, and Lieut. Murphy, of the Seventeenth Infantry, were sent as military intelligences through Venezuela and northern Colombia. In his message to Congress President Roosevelt says that they stopped in Panama on their return in September, and "had no thought of going to Panama when they were sent to South America." Yet they very carefully examined the whole country from Colon to Panama, and furnished the President with minute information comprising every detail essential to an intelligent military campaign on the Isthmus, the best positions for artillery to command Panama and Colon, and the number of mules needed for transport, and which could be procured in inland villages. Did these officers act upon their own initiative? Who is credulous enough to assert it?

About the time the treaty was rejected, Mr. Roosevelt sent for and conferred with Senator Cullom. The next morning the New York Herald quoted Senator Cullom as saying, "We might make another treaty, not with Colombia, but with Panama." Very soon afterwards the Colombian Government instructed Dr. Herran that the Senate, desiring to maintain cordial relations with the United States, had named a commission of three Senators to harmonize legal and natural interests, and our desire to dig the canal. This was communicated to Secretary Hay. The Secretary answered on August 29 that the President was bound by the Isthmian Canal statute, by whose provisions he was given a reasonable time to arrange a satisfactory treaty with Colombia, failing which, "he will then proceed to carry into effect the alternative of the statute." What a pity that he did not do so. And what a greater pity that meanwhile preparations were making under his very nose for a burlesque Isthmian insurrection, to which he must have shut his eyes, for otherwise he would have seen them, and filled his ears with cotton, for otherwise he would have heard them.

Beers returned to Panama with Mr. Cromwell's code book and instructions. While absent, Arango, attorney for the Panama Railroad Co., formed the nucleus of the revolutionary conspiracy. It consisted of himself, Dr. Amador, the company's physician; Mr. Prescott, the company's assistant superintendent; d'Obario, the two Arias, Boyd, Arosemena, and Espinosa. Amador went to New York, ostensibly to see an ostensibly sick son, but actually to secure funds and arms for the revolution. Secret codes for communication to and from Amador were devised before his departure. A fellow passenger was one Duque, an editor of the Isthmus. Cromwell proposed to Duque that if he would furnish $100,000 to finance the scheme, he, Cromwell, would furnish the security and make Duque the first president of the Republic. He also made an appointment for Duque with Secretary Hay, to whom he gave Duque a note of introduction.

Duque saw Mr. Hay the next day. During the conference Duque reported that Mr. Hay said that the "United States would build the canal, that it did not purpose that Colombia should stand in the way," and that should the revolutionists occupy Colon and Panama they could depend on the United States to prohibit Colombia's landing troops to attack them and disturb the "free and uninterrupted transit" which our Government was bound by treaty with Colombia to maintain. He also says that Mr. Hay requested him to remain and confer with the President on his return, which he was unable to do.

Duque was not one of the conspirators, else he would not have informed Dr. Herran of the plot, who promptly informed his Government. Mr. Cromwell also gave Dr. Amador a cordial reception. At the same time he took care to cover his own tracks lest the revolution fail and his company come to grief. He shortly afterwards went to Paris.

Enter now upon the stage one Philippe Bunau-Varilla, a Frenchman, engineer and penitentiary shareholder of the New Panama Canal Co., who arrived in New York September 23. Further on I shall refer to his book, which he has recently published. Amador conferred with him at once. Bunau-Varilla promised needed financial support, and undertook to arrange with the American Government for the presence of warships to protect the revolutionists against Colombia. On October 7 Mr. Cromwell called on Mr. Roosevelt, and then said to the Herald correspondent that "the Panama Canal will be built by the United States." Three days after Mr. Roosevelt wrote to Dr. Albert Shaw that he would be delighted if Panama were an independent State, or made itself so at that moment, but he could not say so publicly, as it would instigate a revolt.

Bunau-Varilla and Amador made one or two trips to Washington prior to October 15. On that day the Navy Department ordered Admiral Glass, commanding the Pacific Squadron, to proceed about the 22d instant "on an exercise cruise to Acapulco." This is one of the dispatches which Mr. Roosevelt did not transmit to Congress. On October 16 the President received in person the reports of Capt. Humphrey and Lieut. Murphy. The very next day Capt. Cloman and Capt. Haan were assigned as military attachés to the American Legation at Bogota. On the same day Bunau-Varilla gave Amador his final instructions; told him to sail on October 20, and pull off the revolution on November 3.

Just here it is appropriate to quote from a letter from Amador to his "dear little son," written on the 18th. He says: "The reason for your coming was to meet Bunau-Varilla, to whom I have spoken of you. He said that if all turns out well you shall have a good place in the medical commission, which is the first that will begin work; that my name is in Hay's office, and that certainly nothing will be refused you. The plan seems to me to be good. A portion of the Isthmus will declare itself independent, and that portion the United States will not allow any Colombian forces to attack. An assembly is called, and this given authority to a minister to be appointed by the new governor in order to make a treaty without need of ratification by that assembly. The treaty being approved by both parties, the new Republic remains under the protection of the United States, and to it are added the other districts of the Isthmus which do not already form part of the new Republic, and these also remain under the protection of the United States. The movement will be delayed a few days. We want to have here the minister who is going to be named, so that once the movement is made, he can be appointed by cable and take up the treaty. In 30 days everything will be concluded." The plan outlined by this letter worked to a nicety.

On October 19 Admiral Glass was advised to send the Boston ahead of the squadron to Acapulco, and that Acapulco was her ostensible destination only. The Dixie was also ordered to embark a battalion and be ready to sail from League Island on the 23d.

Amador reached the Isthmus October 23 with a flag for the new Republic, designed and made by Madam Bunau-Varilla, and a declaration of independence prepared in New York. He at once conferred with his small band of associates. The few Colombian troops on the Isthmus and their commander were subsidized. Those who remained incorruptible were sent away on the pretext of an invasion from Nicaragua.

The news of this alleged invasion becoming public, Colombia dispatched a force to the Isthmus to confront it, much to the consternation of the conspirators, whose only military strength consisted of about 400 firemen at Panama. They refused to proceed unless Amador could obtain definite assurance that American warships would be sent at once to the Isthmus. Thereupon, and on October 29, Amador cabled in cipher to Bunau-Varilla the following:

> We have news of the arrival of the Colombian forces on the Atlantic side within five days. They are more than 200 strong. Urge warships Colon.

Upon its receipt Bunau-Varilla sped to Washington. He went to the State Department to urge that vessels be sent at once. As a result, the Secretary of the Navy, on October 30, cabled

Commander Hubbard, of the Nashville, then at Kingston, to proceed at once to Colon, and telegraph in cipher the situation after consulting with the United States consul. Also to keep his destination secret, and cable in cipher his departure from Kingston. This is another dispatch which Mr. Roosevelt failed to transmit to Congress in his response to resolutions calling for all information concerning the Panama revolution. On the same day Bunau-Varilla cabled Amador:

Thirty-six hours Atlantic; 48 hours Pacific.

Its receipt heartened the conspirators, who then determined to proceed. Meanwhile, Colombia ordered Gov. Obaldia to send the gunboat Padilla, then at Panama, to fetch Government troops from Buenventura. But the railroad company refused coal to the gunboat.

Mr. President, I have here a book recently published by Doubleday, Page & Co. entitled "The Great Adventure of Panama," by Philippe Bunau-Varilla. The title is somewhat misleading. It should be "The Great Adventurer of Panama." It contains a highly imaginative and almost entirely false account of the history of the Panama Canal, of the insurrection in Panama, of the recognition of the Republic of Panama, and the subsequent treaty which was made with that Government. I have just called the attention of the Senate to a telegram which this man sent to Amador informing him that vessels of the United States—warships—would be on one side of the Isthmus in 36 hours and upon the other side in 48 hours. This man in his book declares that when he heard from Amador he came to Washington, and meeting a former minister from Colombia, and that minister asking if he had had any news from the department, by an inspiration more than human, this individual at once interpreted that as meaning that gunboats had been dispatched, and rushed back to New York and cabled the message to which I have referred.

This is all of a piece with every statement or with practically every statement made by this man whose book seems to have been written for the purpose of absolving all else and all others from any responsibility and of arrogating to himself, as a superman, all credit and responsibility for the events which culminated in the establishment of the Panama Republic. It is worthy of the man. This international reprobate was the prime cause of the disgrace and humiliation of de Lesseps; he was a fraudulent contractor with the company, a man whose career in connection with the French Panama Canal enterprise is paralleled only by the disclosures that have recently been made by the New York State committee in the trust and combination developments of the building interests and unions in that city.

On November 2 the Navy Department, by the President's order, cabled the commanders of the Dixie, the Nashville, the Marblehead, and the Boston, the first two to proceed with all possible dispatch to Colon, and the last two to Panama, to prevent the landing of any armed force; that a Government force was reported approaching the Isthmus in vessels. The commanders of the Marblehead and Boston were further ordered to occupy the line of the railroad if interruptions were threatened by armed force; to prevent landing of any armed force, either Government or insurgent, at any point within 50 miles of Panama, and to occupy Ancon Hill with artillery if doubtful of the intention of the armed force.

The message to the commander of the Dixie also ordered him to "Send copy of instructions to senior officer present at Panama upon arrival of Boston." What these instructions were has never been revealed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How did those proceedings, the orders to the commanders of these vessels and the actual occurrences, correspond with the telegram sent by Bunau-Varilla that American vessels would be on the Atlantic side in 36 hours and on the Pacific side in 48 hours?

Mr. THOMAS. The correspondence was nearly perfect. The vessels arrived almost identically upon the lapse of the time which was cabled by Mr. Bunau-Varilla to Señor Amador.

On November 1 Prescott was ordered by Col. Shaler, superintendent of the Panama Railroad, to go over to Panama and "wait until something turns up." On the evening of the 2d the Nashville was sighted from Colon. Shaler at once wired the fact to Prescott, and wrote him two letters, in one of which he says:

Have just wired you that the Nashville has been sighted. This, I presume, settles the question.

Mind you, this was prior to any act of insurrection, or, in fact, to any overt act whatever, overt or otherwise.

The letters also instructed Shaler to secure such written communications from Amador as would "free us from liability in case there is a failure," and that was done. When the Nashville reached Colon, Capt. Hubbard went ashore and reported everything quiet. The same night the Colombian gunboat Cartagena was sighted. She carried 500 picked troops, commanded by Gens. Tovar and Amaya. Not having received the Secretary's cable, Hubbard did not prevent their landing. In his report he said:

Inasmuch as the independent party had not acted, and the Government of Colombia was at that time in undisputed control of Panama, I did not feel in the absence of instructions that I was justified in preventing the landing of these troops, and at 8.30 they were disembarked.

But the officials of the Panama Railroad rose to the emergency. When Tovar demanded transportation for himself and troops across the Isthmus, the general and his officers were taken to Panama and assured that his troops would follow at once. Shortly after their arrival the officers were imprisoned, while the troops were detained in Colon. On the 3d Hubbard cabled Washington:

Receipt of your telegram is acknowledged. Prior to receipt this morning about 400 men were landed here by Government of Colombia. No revolution has been declared on the Isthmus, and no disturbances. Railway has declined to transport these troops except by request of Governor of Panama. Request has not been made. It is possible that movement may be made to-night to declare independence, in which case I will——

Here the dispatch was mutilated. The public will never know its ending, although it may easily surmise that Hubbard said he would "carry out his instructions," and prevent by force, if necessary, any interference with the revolutionists. But why was the dispatch mutilated? Mr. President, the reason must have been overwhelming. The bluff old sea captain gave his superiors full assurance that he would execute his orders when the anticipated occasion required it. Mr. Roosevelt could not pose as "the mandatory of civilization" while the archives of the Navy Department sheltered an official record of the sordid and disgraceful conspiracy against Colombia, which he welcomed and made effective by turning the guns of the great Republic upon a helpless and friendly neighbor. The cause which suppresses or destroys testimony stands self-convicted. The arrival of the Cartagena with Government troops and the need of circumventing their commanders and rendering them ineffectual disarranged the revolutionary program, which was to culminate on the 3d; and Washington waited for news. As the day waned administration impatience waxed. It finally passed restraint. The State Department cabled our vice consul general at Panama:

Uprising in Isthmus reported. Keep department promptly and fully informed.

The consul promptly answered:

No uprising yet. Reported will be in the night. Situation is critical.

And it so turned out. A very few hours later the consul cabled the State Department that—

Uprising occurred to-night, 6; no bloodshed. Army and navy officials taken prisoners. Government will be organized to-night, consisting three consuls; also cabinet. Soldiers changed. Suppose same movement will be effected in Colon. Order prevails so far. Situation serious; 400 soldiers landed to-day.

BARRANQUILLA.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that this Government many times previously had sent gunboats and soldiers to protect the Panama Railroad against insurrections?

Mr. THOMAS. They had several times used troops to protect and secure the free transit of the Isthmus; they never before sent a force to Panama to interfere with the troops of the Government of Colombia, and always declared—there are plenty of communications from the State Department upon the subject—in their construction of the treaty of 1846 that they could not interfere under the terms of the treaty between the Government and an insurrection, except as might be necessary to secure free transit across the Isthmus, and our Government's action therefore was either at the instance or by the request of Colombia. Now, does the Senator think that that was the purpose of this particular expedition?

Mr. KELLOGG. I certainly do.

Mr. THOMAS. Notwithstanding the fact that when the orders were given there was no insurrection whatever; notwithstanding the fact that if an insurrection were contemplated and these preparations were made against it, then the Government of the United States must have known of the reason and of the contemplated insurrection, and, therefore, must have been in some degree privy to it. Mr. President, this interference in the domestic affairs of a Republic, the guarantee of whose sovereignty we had assumed by a treaty, then many years old and always respected, can be explained only upon one theory, toward which every fact and every action irrevocably points, and that is to wrest by force the Isthmus of Panama from Colombia because she had seen fit to reject this treaty, and then to deal with a Government which we ourselves had created, and by that means secure the immensely valuable canal concession.

On receipt of this information, the Washington authorities wired the consul general that its cable of the previous day to Capt. Hubbard, of the Nashville, might not have been delivered. He was therefore instructed to wire the Nashville:

In the interests of peace, make every effort to prevent Government troops at Colon from proceeding to Panama. The transit of the Isthmus must be kept open and order maintained.

Certainly no such message was ever before transmitted by the Government of the United States to any subordinate commander of one of its vessels. A similar cable was sent to the consul at Colon. Transit was kept open, but not for Colombian troops. We thus prevented Colombia, with whom we were at peace, and whose sovereignty over the Isthmus we had guaranteed, from using her own troops on her own soil to suppress the rebellion of a bare handful of her own people.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In that connection, I should like to call the Senator's attention to some facts that were developed on the Isthmus, I think in 1904 or in 1905, in reference to the landing of Colombian troops at Colon.

A man by the name of Melendez was governor of Colon at that time, and a very wealthy man. The committee took the evidence there of this gentleman and others from which it was satisfied—and I have never before heard it disputed—that Melendez and other citizens of Panama purchased the commander of the Colombian ship, whose name was Huerta, a one-armed Indian, who was in command of the ship and soldiers, at, as I remember, $150,000, $100,000 of which he took, $50,000 was paid to the troops, and they sailed away—I did not suppose there was any doubt about it—but that the Colombian troops were not landed because the people of Panama, who saw, as they thought, the visions of a canal vanishing, purchased, through blood money, the supposed loyalty of the Colombian commander, Huerta. He was afterwards, too, I might add, as perhaps the Senator knows, made commander in chief of the Panaman forces, then tried to get up an insurrection among them, and demanded the resignation of Amador and Arias and some other officer of Panama; and our minister, then Mr. Barrett, was in personal touch with Amador, and persuaded him that he could not surrender and yield the Government over to the Indian, Huerta.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the facts, I think, are somewhat different from the statement of the Senator.

At the time of this insurrection a small force of soldiers of the Colombian Government were upon the Isthmus. They were under the command of Huerta, who was a soldier and not a sailor. As a preliminary to this insurrection this man Huerta was corrupted, together with a considerable proportion of his troops. The portion remaining loyal were then sent north upon a manufactured report that soldiers from Nicaragua were about to land upon Colombian soil. After the conspiracy had been accomplished, Huerta received a very considerable sum of money for himself and his soldiers. He is said to have himself received $30,000 in cash; and, like all traitors, after the money was gone he did become, or attempt to become, an agency of further disturbance, and was settled with quite summarily, and largely because of the fact that the United States at that time was upon the Isthmus and was powerfully supporting the new Republic of Panama.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire what difference it makes whether this man was corrupted—whether we have any better title if it was procured by fraud than if it was procured by force?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the point I wished to make, if the Senator will permit me, was that he was corrupted by the Panamans themselves, the people who were interested there, notably Melendez, governor of Colon. It is a historical fact, I think, that Huerta, after he was made commander in chief of the Panaman forces and after he had betrayed his country, Colombia, then, as I said, endeavored to incite an insurrection in Panama, and the United States did nothing to encourage him in it but simply stated to Amador that we were there, and that Mr. Huerta could not take charge of the Panaman Government and operate it in behalf of a revolution; and Huerta took the money that he had received for the betrayal of his country, went inland somewhere in Panama, and purchased an estate, where at last accounts, so far as I know, he was living in his ignominy.

Mr. THOMAS. The money which was used for these corrupting purposes came from Bunau-Varilla, and was doubtless intended for that among other objects. I might say, however, that the troops which he commanded—and that seems to be the important point in it—were not those which were afterwards landed, and whose landing was permitted by Capt. Hubbard, who at that time had not received the orders which were subsequently transmitted to him.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does not the fact remain undisputed that whether some of the soldiers had been corrupted or not, and whether a commander had been induced to become a traitor or not, Colombia was by the force of the United States prevented from sending her troops in to punish the bribe givers, the bribe takers, the revolutionists, and the traitors alike? Is not that a fact?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator has well stated it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suppose that is the point in controversy.

Mr. THOMAS. Meanwhile, the conspirators having formally arrested the governor, who was openly sympathetic, went to the Cathedral Plaza, appointed a provisional junta of three, and proclaimed the independence of Panama. The junta then signed a manifesto. It was their New York declaration of independence.

While these ceremonies were in progress the Colombian gunboat Bogota shelled the city, to which the batteries on the sea wall replied. The only casualties were the slaughter of a Chinaman and a donkey. No other fighting occurred.

The manifesto having been read, one Demetrio Brid cabled President Roosevelt that "The municipality of Panama is now, 10 p. m., holding a solemn session and joins in the movement of separation of the Isthmus of Panama from the rest of Colombia. It hopes for recognition of our cause by your Government." Inasmuch as this "solemn session" was the only separation movement then under way, and of which the entire Isthmus, the city of Colon excepted, was profoundly ignorant, Señor Brid's cable is not without the suggestion of humor.

On the 4th the consul at Panama wired Secretary Hay that he had notified the Nashville and that troops would not be moved. He also referred to the Bogota's bombardment, and said that it threatened to repeat its action. Commander Hubbard also cabled that a provisional government had been established, with no organized opposition, and that he had prohibited transportation of Colombian troops across the Isthmus. He had a hot verbal encounter with their commander, Col. Torres, who very naturally resented the trick of the railroad managers whereby Gen. Tovar had on the previous day been persuaded to precede his command across the Isthmus and was then imprisoned. He threatened swift reprisals, but yielded very sensibly to the guns of the Nashville. Hubbard landed a force of his own marines at Colon and cleared his decks for action, whereupon the Cartagena took to her heels and fled to Colombia.

On the morning of the 4th Dr. Amador addressed the subsidized Colombian battalion commanded by Huertas. He said:

We have carried through our splendid work. The world is astounded at our heroism. President Roosevelt has made good, for there, you know, are the cruisers which defend us and prevent any action by Colombia.

The events of November 4 culminated in a cable to Secretary Hay from the junta, which I quote in full:

We take the liberty of bringing to the knowledge of your Government that on yesterday afternoon, in consequence of a popular and spontaneous movement of the people of this city, the independence of the Isthmus was proclaimed; and the Republic of Panama being instituted, its provisional government organizes an executive board consisting of ourselves, who are assured of the military strength necessary to carry out our determinations.

A cable to Amador from Bunau-Varilla crossed this one, which urged Amador to try to get hold of Colon, but if he could not, then to hold firm for a few days, that ships would remain on both sides and he would give guaranty immediately. The Boston and Marblehead reached Panama on the 7th. The Dixie arrived with her battalion of marines on the 5th. On that day Arango, one of the junta, expressed his acknowledgments to the officers of the Panama Railroad in the following letter:

Allow me to address these lines to you in Spanish to truly express my sentiments toward you. To you, in great measure, the public owes its salvation from the horrors of bloody strife, to you, our constant and valorous coworker; also to brave Col. Shaler and our determined friend, Capt. Beers.

These officials were under the direct control of Mr. Cromwell. They must have acted under his orders. He did not hesitate to utilize their control of the railway, built by the consent of Colombia upon her own soil, to tear her asunder. Corporate rapacity here reached its high-water mark.

On November 6 the Republic was formally proclaimed in Colon. Its flag was hoisted by Maj. William M. Black, of the United States Army, in full uniform.

Certainly no previous expedition had ever gone to the extent not only of recognizing the insurrection but of recognizing it in the person of a United States officer, who had conferred upon him the honor of raising the first flag of the Republic of Panama.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, how many hours intervened between the alleged insurrection and the time of this occurrence?

Mr. THOMAS. I will come to that later. It was quite appropriate, for this officer symbolized the Government whose aid and activity made the revolution possible. But it served as well to advertise to the world the shameless overthrow of Colombian sovereignty over the Isthmus by a President whose oath bound him to respect treaties made under the authority of the United States, which are declared by the Constitution to be the "supreme law of the land." The junta at once cabled Secretary Hay that—

Colon and all the towns of the Isthmus have adhered to the declaration of independence proclaimed in this city. The authority of the Republic of Panama is obeyed throughout its territory.

But the interior of the Isthmus had not then heard of the insurrection. Moreover, a dispatch from the Navy Department, which Mr. Roosevelt also withheld from the Congress, from one of the naval commanders states how he afterwards went with officials of the Government to persuade a portion of the Isthmus to recognize the junta.

Before Colon had proclaimed the Republic, and while the insurrection was still confined to the town of Panama, the junta on November 5 cabled Secretary Hay that it had—Appointed Señor Phillipe Bunau-Varilla confidential agent of the Republic of Panama near your Government, and Dr. Francisco V. de la Espriella minister of foreign affairs.

On November 6 Consul Ehrman confirmed this cable. Within an hour of its receipt Secretary Hay cabled Mr. Ehrman that—

The people of Panama have by an apparently unanimous movement dissolved their political connections with the Republic of Colombia and resumed their independence. When you are satisfied that a de facto government, republican in form, and without substantial opposition from its own people, has been established in the State of Panama, you will enter into relations with it as the reasonable government of the Territory and look to it for all due action to protect the persons and property of the citizens of the United States and to keep open the Isthmian transit in accordance with the obligations of existing treaties governing the relations of the United States to that Territory.

The crowning act of this political tragedy is found in a cable of Secretary Hay to our minister at Bogota on the same day. It reads:

The people of the Isthmus, having by an apparently unanimous movement dissolved their political connections with the Republic of Colombia, and resumed their independence, and having adopted a government of their own, republican in form, with which the Government of the United States has entered into relations, the President of the United States, in accordance with the ties of friendship which have so long and so happily existed between the respective nations, most earnestly commends to the Governments of Colombia and Panama the peaceful and equitable settlement of all questions at issue between them. He holds that he is bound, not merely by treaty obligations but by the interests of civilization, to see that the peaceful traffic of the world across the Isthmus of Panama shall not longer be disturbed by constant succession of unnecessary and wasteful civil wars.

The comment of Mr. Leander T. Chamberlain is here more appropriate—

Thus at 12.51 midday, November 6, 1903, the President recognized the new nation of Panama—from November 2 of the 50-mile order, four days; from 7.10 p. m. of November 4, when announcement came that a proclamation of independence had been issued by the insurgents, 1 day 17 hours and 41 minutes. Beyond peradventure civilized diplomacy affords no analogy of that recognition.

The mortal insolence of this message to Bogota is equaled by its mendacity. Beyond its reference to the friendly relations theretofore existing between the two nations it is a misrecital of the facts. The only "relations" Mr. Hay had entered into with Panama was his cable of the same date to Mr. Ehrman, and that permitted the latter to enter them when satisfied that a government "republican in form had been established." Yet no government whatever had been established save the self-appointment of a junta in Panama City, which assumed and usurped all the powers of a government. Such was the message through which our Government informed Colombia that her territorial integrity had been outraged and advising her to negotiate her differences with her subjects of the day before.

The Secretary's reference to civil wars upon the Isthmus was equally at fault. Since our treaty of 1846, 57 years before, transit was partially interrupted for a total period of 164 days and upon few occasions. And we have seen what the "unanimous" movement was. In his subsequent message to Congress, Mr. Roosevelt said the Isthmus had "risen as one man," and Senator Carmack very aptly retorted that the one man was Mr. Roosevelt himself.

On this eventful day the junta cabled their appointment of Bunau-Varilla as envoy extraordinary. The next morning this French "señor," in a flamboyant letter to Mr. Hay, formally announced his appointment. His "credentials," which had been prepared beforehand in New York or Washington, were promptly accepted, and through him the canal treaty was at once negotiated. Mr. Cromwell received his $40,000,000, and as the junta made him Panama's fiscal agent, he also received for investment the $10,000,000 stipulated as its compensation by the treaty.

The job was finished. Mr. Roosevelt acquired the right of way for the canal from a band of filibusters by bartering for it the honor of the Nation.

Not quite finished. For nearly four months afterwards he patrolled the waters of the Isthmus with our gunboats, and at one time invaded the soil of Colombia south of the Panama boundary in the search for possible invaders of his precious Republic.

When Secretary Hay, on November 7, officially announced the President's recognition of the new Republic, he said:

The action of the President is not only in strict accordance with the principles of justice and equity, and in line with events precedent of all public policy, but it was the only course he could have taken in compliance with our treaty rights and obligations.

And Mr. Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, cast this bouquet at his own feet:

The United States has many honorable chapters in its history, but no more honorable chapter than that which tells of the way in which the right to dig the Panama Canal was secured.

This is a libel upon American history.

This original and only "mandatory of civilization" has also said of the transaction that "we did harm to no one, save as harm is done to a bandit by a policeman who deprives him of his chance to blackmail." But our policeman President was the protector of the bandit and purchased the fruits of his crime. It is far more manly to rob a man of his property than to hire another to do so, and then secure the property from the thief.

The London Graphic very pertinently said at the time:

We regret exceedingly that President Roosevelt has allowed the fair name of his administration to be smirched by a transaction so utterly at variance with the most elementary principles of public law and international morality. We can not conceive a more lamentable outrage upon the public conscience of the civilized world.

Mr. Roosevelt has on more than one occasion since his retirement from the White House been candid enough to admit his duplicity in the theft of Panama. On March 23, 1911, he said:

I am interested in the Panama Canal because I started it. If I had followed traditional conservative methods, I should have submitted a dignified State paper of probably 200 pages to the Congress, and the debate would have been going on yet. But I took the Canal Zone and let Congress debate, and while the debate goes on the Canal does also.

On January 24 last he expressed himself in similar fashion.

Since Mr. Roosevelt's death Mr. Abbott has published a number of articles entitled "New facts about Theodore Roosevelt," and among other things in the August, 1919, number of World's Work he publishes in facsimile an interview "concerning the personal relations of President Taft and Mr. Roosevelt never before published." This interview was sent to Mr. Roosevelt after it was written, and that gentleman made certain comments in writing upon its margin before returning it. Referring to that part of this interview which credited Mr. Roosevelt with being responsible for Mr. Taft's nomination, Mr. Roosevelt wrote:

But it is so. I could not have nominated an extreme progressive or extreme conservative, but I could by a turn of the hand have thrown the nomination to either Taft or Hughes. The only way to prevent my own nomination was for me entirely to champion and to force the nomination of some one else; I chose Taft rather than Hughes, and I still think I was wise.

I am reading that to emphasize the positiveness of the ex-President's statement, which is nothing if not positive. But his next note, written on the same margin, reads thus:

The mere force of events had made me strike absolutely my own note by October, 1902—

instead of that of McKinley—

when I settled the coal strike and started the trust-control campaign. In 1903 I took Panama.

There it is in his own writing; not "the Canal Zone," but "Panama." If that testimony, supplied by one of the lamented President's closest friends and greatest admirers, does not confirm every fact and every incident of this story, then I am at a loss to know what construction can be placed upon it. There is nothing dubious or ambiguous about this statement nor is credit given to anybody else. "I took Panama in 1903." To say that this statement should be taken in conjunction with modifying circumstances is to say that the notation upon this interview was not as fair and as square as the statements and the positions of Mr. Roosevelt are claimed to be by his friends, and particularly by his posthumous admirers. It furnishes, in my judgment, all that is needed, if anything more be necessary, to demonstrate the unquestioned fact that this so-called insurrection had its inception immediately after or just before the rejection of the treaty by Colombia, not by the direction or the initiative, but certainly with the tacit connivance, and subsequently with the support, of the administration.

It is interesting to note that when in 1915 Mr. Roosevelt, after commending them, denounced the President because he did not sever relations with Germany when the latter invaded Belgium, Gen. Von Bernhardi was searching history for precedents justifying that outrage. He found but one and eagerly seized it. He said to us, "Your seizure of Panama was only justifiable on the ground that the future interests of the American people are higher and greater than the abstract principles of international law." And Baron von Hengelmuller, formerly Austrian ambassador to the United States, also "finds in all the annals of the nations no such glorious justification of what Germany did to Belgium as is to be had in the brief and simple record of what Roosevelt did to Panama." At last his conduct has been properly classified. He did not overrun Colombia's territory and slaughter her defenseless citizens, because he met with no resistance. Had Colombia drawn the sword the outrages of Belgium might have found their prototype upon the Isthmus.

Mr. President, this episode of our history is humiliating from every angle. But its sordid side is its worst one. For Mr. Roosevelt lent his great influence as President and enlisted the armed power of his country to William Nelson Cromwell that he, Cromwell, might secure $40,000,000 for his client. He could not do it while Colombia barred his path with her just demands. He could remove her only by robbing her of her domain and of her investments in his company. To accomplish his canal program Mr. Roosevelt shaped the policy of his Cabinet and mobilized the Navy for the undoing of Colombia. At the behest of Cromwell and Bunau-Varilla he divided one nation and inflicted an indelible reproach upon the good name of another, that a private corporation might reach the Treasury of the United States. Surely this was not essential to any end, however important.

A treaty is a solemn convention between independent nations, each acting for itself and in its own interest. But the treaty between the United States and Panama was a farce and made to shelter a crime. Panama's junta, selected at midnight by less than 12 conspirators, were the creatures of Cromwell. Bunau-Varilla, their French coadjutor, was made their envoy extraordinary, by telegraph, as previously agreed, for no other purpose than to negotiate the treaty.

Mr. President, when this subject was first before the American people former Senator Carmack, of Tennessee, took occasion to investigate the record of the man Bunau-Varilla, which I shall not at this time read, but there may be those who hereafter will be interested in ascertaining something of the record and antecedents of this adventurer. They will find what I have been unable to discover has been contradicted in volume 38, part 2, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and in the same volume, part 3, on pages 1770 and 2300, respectively, a full account of the antecedents and career of the man. I will, however, read a short extract from page 1770:

> Bunau-Varilla, now minister from the State of Panama, but a citizen of France, was one of the earliest and most active supporters of this conspiracy against the integrity of Colombia. This much we know. This man was connected with the old Panama Canal Co., and the official records of his own country, including the report of the minister of justice, show that he was one of the worst of the crew whose thieving operations bankrupted that concern, brought gray hairs of De Lesseps in shame and sorrow to the grave, and covered the French Government itself with odium and disgrace. I shall not cumber the record with quotations from official French records, but they are as I have said.
> These extracts have already been published in the newspapers, and their authenticity, so far as I know, is undenied. I presume that no man here will deny that authenticity. This man is also connected with the new company, a penniless concern, organized simply to sell the wreckage and débris of the old company to the United States for as many millions as it could get, and, incidentally, to gamble in its own stocks This company was to get $40,000,000 by the ratification of the treaty with Colombia, and not a dollar if that treaty should fail. As the time fixed by law for the ratification of the treaty began to approach, with every prospect of its being defeated, the stocks of this company rapidly declined. Then it was that Bunau-Varilla left France and came to the United States.
> He at once entered into relations with certain disaffected persons in Panama to bring about an insurrection in that Province. The charge is made in a reputable newspaper that Bunau-Varilla agreed to furnish money, and did furnish money, through his stock-jobbing French syndicate, to promote this insurrection by the bribery of Colombian officers and soldiers. The very amounts of money sent by him to the conspirators in Panama are given, the very dates on which it was sent and received, and the names of the banking corporations through which it was paid.
> And this is not all nor the worst. Bunau-Varilla engaged with these conspirators to bring the Government of the United States to the support of their conspiracy. This statement is not based upon rumors nor the anonymous reports of a yellow newspaper. It is based upon the admissions of the conspirators themselves and upon the authority of a gentleman of the highest character and standing, Mr. Merrill A. Teague, a staff correspondent of leading Republican newspapers. His statements have been published broadcast, in the very organs of this administration, and no man has denied them.

At length in the subsequent volume the same Senator details the incidents which I think fully justify the conclusions which I have just read.

Bunau-Varilla was a shareholder in and agent of the company, while the treaty itself was prepared by Cromwell in advance of the revolution. This was the combination which the President of the United States welcomed to his council table to contract for a canal zone. The traveler from Jerusalem to Jericho fell among people of the Cromwellian stripe. But a good Samaritan afterwards crossed his way and gave him aid and comfort. No such good fortune attended Colombia. Roosevelt "took the zone"; Varilla sailed back to France, where he cashed in to the company; and Cromwell—what should be said of him—the archplotter of his time, the manipulator of legislation, the adviser of home and foreign ministers, the designer of successful revolutions, the master of intrigue, the betrayer of his country's honor among the nations? Macaulay turned aside from more congenial tasks to review the career of Barère and "gibbet the carrion" upon an "eminence of infamy." Charles II permitted his harlots to barter with Louis XIV for England's prestige, and Benedict Arnold plotted with his country's enemies for the undoing of his own. The inexorable judgment of history has long since assigned to these their appropriate places in her records of infamy. Her verdict of Cromwell will be made when time shall have crystallized the story of Panama into the stratum of history. And we may be sure it will be as just as it will be inexorable.

Mr. President, for 17 years Colombia, conscious of her weakness and jealous of her integrity, has knocked at our doors and asked for reparation. She has been a supplicant for simple justice. She has asked for arbitration and reminded us more than once that we are its most earnest advocate. President Taft, conscious of her injuries, negotiated the outlines of a treaty designed to meet her claims.

President Wilson took up the good work, and long ago laid a treaty before us for ratification, differing but slightly from that approved by his distinguished predecessor. It accepted the Panama revolution as an accomplished fact. It made due acknowledgment of Colombia's rights and of our injustice to her. It substituted a payment of $25,000,000 in partial reimbursement of the stupendous losses she incurred through the Cromwell insurrection.

That treaty encountered the vociferous denunciation of Mr. Roosevelt, who shrank from the imputation which its ratification would impose upon him. He would have had this great and magnanimous people refrain from acknowledging his error as their Chief Magistrate by pointing to the completed canal as his vindication. That treaty died upon our calendar, and is succeeded by one which merely makes indemnity. Unfortunately it is all that we can do, and I therefore support it.

Mr. President, we should not be deterred by this or by any other consideration from compliance with the requirements of the national conscience. We preach the doctrine of right as against the doctrine of might. We denounce the German disregard of treaties and of international justice, yet we alone have supplied her with a precedent. In democracy's cause we challenged Germany to the ordeal of battle and sounded a trumpet call to all the democracies of the world. Our cause was that of all Republics. South America knows this well. She thrilled to the sublimity of our purpose, yet she hesitates to open her arms to us. Her people point to Colombia in silent but eloquent inquiry. We know too well what that inquiry is. We can not answer as we would like to, but as we must, for true democracy is founded upon justice. Between justice and our offense against Colombia there can be reconciliation only through national atonement. Between right and the offense there can be no adjustment save reparation. Until these things are done our championship of small nations and weak peoples are as the sounds of tinkling cymbals. When we shall have squared our actions to our sentiments and purged our record from the damning reproach of Cromwellian diplomacy, Latin America will grasp our extended hand, and with responsive good will Pan America will then assume the material proportions of an enduring structure. Our political and economic relations will be close, cordial, and profitable. The Monroe doctrine, reincarnated by the baptism of our blood and sacrifice, has been set upon eternal foundations. When we do justice to Colombia it will appeal to Latin America as never before and be welcomed as the perpetual guaranty of its immunity and independence.

UMI

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate I shall at some future time discuss the Panama treaty; but I can not sit in the Senate of the United States and listen to reflections upon the character and statesmanship of Theodore Roosevelt without expressing my protest.

The Panama Canal, the history of its acquisition and construction, is an open book, which has been discussed in the Congress and investigated by committees. I believe Mr. Roosevelt's action is supported by the judgment and the voice of the American people and of the civilized world. Not only that, but John Hay, a great Secretary of State, and Elihu Root following him, wrote the history of Panama and sustained the action of President Roosevelt. So did Secretary KNOX in the Cabinet of Mr. Taft.

Mr. Roosevelt is quoted as saying, "I took Panama." Did he ever say he took it from Colombia unjustly or in any manner except, according to the principles of international law, in his right to recognize any country declaring its independence? Does the Senator say that our treaties guaranteed Colombia against revolution? If he does, he was contradicted by every Secretary of State from Mr. Seward to the present time. Does he say that the revolution was an exceptional one? If he does, I answer him that there were 50 revolutions in almost as many years in Colombia.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator point out anything in our treaty obligations which authorizes the United States to prevent the landing of Colombian troops when Colombia sought to suppress an insurrection in her own territory?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I can. I refer to our obligation to protect the route across Panama, which we had done many times before, and that is what we did at that time. We owed it not only to ourselves but to the nations of the world and to our treaty rights to protect that route across Panama.

I am not, however, going to discuss the merits of the treaty at this time. It has been done, as I said, by distinguished Secretaries of State, by Mr. Roosevelt, and by historians of admitted ability. In my judgment, it is one of the great acts of a great President in a great era of American history. I shall take occasion, when the treaty comes before the Senate, or previously, with permission of the Senate, to discuss it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will, before my term of office expires, discuss this very important proposition, for it is not settled and will never be settled until the United States shall ratify some sort of a treaty with Colombia.

I know that in these days Mr. Roosevelt is sacrosanct. Indeed, those who were most frequently engaged in cricitizing and condemning Mr. Roosevelt's courses and policies and politics seem now among the loudest not only in defending his memory but in resenting any statement or expression which seems to reflect upon him. I do not, of course, in that statement include the Senator from Minnesota, because I know that he has at all times been a close and constant and faithful friend and supporter of Mr. Roosevelt, but if anything were more conspicuous than another during the late campaign it was that Mr. Roosevelt, formerly a liability, has by his death become the chief asset of the Republican Party.

I have never said of or to Mr. Roosevelt while living anything that I would not feel and do not feel it my duty to say now. I have always given him credit for many things, for great ability, for a good record, interspersed in many places, however, by acts and policies and opinions and statements to which I could not lend my approval.

I preceded my discussion—and I am sorry that the Senator did not hear it—with an assurance from Mr. Roosevelt himself that whatever could be said with truth and propriety should be said without regard to the man or his condition. I know this will be an active question before the next Congress, if not before this one. The results of the care and investigation which I have sought to give to this subject I have thought fit to lay before the Senate before I retired from it, thinking and hoping that it may be of some consequence, possibly of some benefit, in the discussion which will precede final action upon this treaty.

Now, Mr. President, just a word regarding the treaty of 1846. I think the Senator will find down to 1901 great difficulty in discovering any expression of opinion or any statement made by our Secretaries of State and others in authority which in the remotest degree justify the existence of a right of the United States under that treaty to interfere with Colombia to hinder or preventing her efforts from suppressing insurrection. That is not essential to free transit of the Isthmus, else the treaty would not have provided, as I think it does provide, that Colombia shall herself have the right of transit for just such crises as confronted her in 1903. The Senator will have great difficulty, examine and investigate as he will the fifty-odd insurrections to which he refers, in finding anything that approaches a vaudeville insurrection like this, following upon the heels of a rejected treaty and culminating in the dismemberment of a friendly Republic. And if the Senator can successfully maintain the proposition that under our treaty guarantee to Colombia of her sovereignty over the Isthmus we can find warrant for depriving her of it, or even of recognizing its transfer to another, I shall cheerfully acknowledge him as the most accomplished dialectician and the most competent statesman in the long list of America's distinguished sons.

SETTLEMENT OF WAR LOANS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on Thursday, December 23, I made some remarks in this body relative to the securing of long-time bonds of foreign Governments to which we loaned money under acts of Congress passed in 1917 and 1918 and collection of interest due and past due on such loans. In the Washington Post of December 30, 1920, in an article by the Associated Press, it is stated that the Secretary of the Treasury is now planning an exchange of the obligations due from Great Britain into long-time bonds, as required by the acts referred to, and that the British Government is sending a London official to confer with Secretary Houston in reference to said loans.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the article from the Washington Post.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The article referred to is as follows:

PLAN BRITISH REFUND—LONDON OFFICIAL COMING SOON TO CONFER WITH HOUSTON—DEBT IS NOW $4,196,000,000—MODERATE SINKING FUND WITH EARLY FIRST PAYMENT, UNITED STATES WISH—LONG-TIME BONDS IN EXCHANGE FOR DEMAND NOTES VIRTUALLY AGREED TO—DETAILS, SUCH AS INTEREST, YET TO BE FIXED—NEGOTIATIONS UNDER WAY, TOO, WITH OTHER OF ALLIES OWING AMERICA MONEY.

[By the Associated Press.]

A representative of the British treasury will reach this country soon, Secretary Houston said yesterday, to continue in Washington the discussion of the exchange into long-time obligations of the demand notes of the British Government held by the United States.

The British debt at this time is $4,196,000,000. Under the Liberty bond act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to effect the exchange at a rate of interest not less than that borne by the demand instrument, Secretary Houston said.

PERMITTED BY LIBERTY ACT.

"The Victory Liberty loan act," said Mr. Houston, "provides that obligations of foreign Governments acquired by virtue of the provisions of the first Liberty bond act or through the conversion of short-time notes acquired under that act shall mature not later than June 15, 1947, and that all others shall mature not later than October 15, 1938. I am of the opinion that, if they so desire, the respective foreign Governments should be given the benefit of the full period thus permitted. The long-time obligations should, I believe, contain a provision for a moderate sinking fund, the first payment on which should be made at a reasonably early date."

Outlining the general policy for the exchange of demand obligations to long-time obligations, the Secretary said the United States should be given the right to use obligations held by it in settlement of war claims against the United States.

Long-time bonds, he said, should provide for accelerating the payment of all deferred interest whenever the currency of the Government in question over the foreign exchange reaches a price approximating the gold import point, and while the exchange remains not lower than that figure, and that if this should happen before the deferred-interest period has expired, no further interest should be deferred.

WITH EACH ALLY SEPARATELY.

Discussions with the British representative, Secretary Houston said, will be confined to the exchange of the obligations of that Government, as it is the policy of this country to deal separately with each of the allied nations to whom loans have been made.

Discussions carried on in Europe with the other nations indebted to the United States, the Secretary said, have not reached a stage so advanced as those with the British Government. The British negotiations, he said, had progressed to the point of a general understanding, but the details remain to be worked out and will be taken up with the British treasury official here in Washington. The questions of interest rates and of the forms of the various long-time bonds which may be adopted are yet to be decided, the Secretary intimated.

WILL REGULATE GOLD EXPORTS.

"The obligations should contain suitable provision for their conversion into bonds of small denominations or for their payment, at option of the obligator, in lieu of such conversion," Secretary Houston said. "To prevent or curtail gold exports from the United States they should contain an agreement by the debtor Government to offer demand drafts payable in its currency at a figure to be fixed, substantially the gold export point, and to apply the proceeds to deferred interest and then to principal, current interest to be adjusted accordingly. Sinking-fund payments should be provided to be made in gold coin of the United States or in the currency of the debtor Government at the par of exchange, if the holder shall so request."

Actual exchange of the securities will not be made at the coming conference here, the Secretary said, adding that the documents of the agreement would probably be drawn up for presentation to each of the contracting Governments before the transfer of the securities is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Secretary of the Treasury upon acting in the matter. I feel sure that he will act promptly, not only in reference to the British loan but in respect to all other loans. His authority is ample, as is shown by the acts of Congress, and his powers are plain and full. I am not sure that he is authorized by the act referred to to offset indebtedness that may be due from our Government to England. However, that would be for him and the legal department of the Government to determine. He can do nothing except what the act authorizes.

I want, also, to congratulate the British Government upon taking steps to meet its obligations. In view of her power and prestige and splendid record, I could not see why the matter had been delayed. I hope I may soon have the pleasure of congratulating our other allies on their prompt settlement of their loans.

I sincerely trust that the conferences between our Government officials and the officials of foreign Governments to which we have made loans will be expedited, so that the whole matter may be settled during this administration. It ought not to be one of the matters left open. It would be a reflection upon a Democratic administration that it ought not to bear. I wish, again, to congratulate Secretary Houston, and to express the hope that these matters now started will be settled with all possible dispatch.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

[Mr. STANLEY addressed the Senate. After having spoken with interruptions for about an hour, he yielded the floor for the day.]

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 4, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O love ineffable, from whose substance proceedeth life, its environments and splendid opportunities. We would worship Thee in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship Him. Home, society, government, and brotherly love wait on us for righteousness, truth, mercy, and justice, that Thy kindgom may come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven, through the spiritual gifts of Christ which is life eternal. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 31, 1920, was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of H. R. 7619, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 227. Extending the time within which the special joint committee appointed to investigate the advisability of establishing certain naval, aviation, and submarine bases in the United States is required to make its report to Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. To-day being unanimous-consent day, the Clerk will call the roll of committees.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. That question the Chair thinks has not been decided. The rule says that on this day the Chair shall order the Clerk to call the roll of committees to consider bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Whether a motion to take up a privileged bill like this is in order has not been decided.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Unanimous Consent Calendar be dispensed with to-day.

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know when it will be in order to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GOOD. We have some of these large appropriations ready, and I think before long there will be a day or two when matters of this kind can be taken up.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to say that these bills are not factious, but if they are not soon got over to the other end of the Capitol it will be difficult to get action at this session. I have particularly in mind a flood control bill that is very urgent.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that there are some meritorious and urgent bills that ought to be taken up, but it seems to me that when we have a large appropriation bill for consideration, it ought to be proceeded with. There will be ample time during the session to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not want to antagonize the committee, but it seems to me that we ought to give consideration to the small matters, because it is not going to take very long to consider them.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not object to the request of the gentleman from Iowa. I think within a reasonable length of time we can reach the Unanimous Consent Calendar, upon which I know there are some meritorious and urgent matters, and have them disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Now that the Speaker has conformed to the rule by directing the Clerk to call the Unanimous Consent Calendar, would it not be in order for the gentleman from Iowa to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. That is just what the Chair stated he thought had not been decided.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the Chair will not make any ruling until it can be thoroughly considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not.

Mr. STEENERSON. In view of what the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Wyoming have said, that there might be an opportunity soon for the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object for to-day, if it should become the rule and practice of the House to dispense with the calling of bills upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar, all Members of the House might as well kiss Washington good-by except the members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman recollects when the rule was adopted?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I recall that the practice under the rule ever since has been that the calling of committees under the rule was obligatory and highly privileged. Members can, by objecting, very quickly dispose of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. This rule was adopted under very peculiar conditions, and I think if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was here he could relate some circumstances about it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I drew the rule myself.

Mr. GARNER. It gave us the only right we have to take up bills by unanimous consent, and instead of having to go to the Speaker and ask permission to get unanimous consent to consider the bill. I think it would be unfortunate if the Speaker should hold that a majority of the House could take away that right and privilege which exists now and force the membership of the House to go to the Speaker as they did 8 or 10 years ago. While I have no objection to doing away with the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day, I should strongly object to a policy being adopted by which the majority can go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and do away with the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARD. Has the gentleman indicated any time when the Unanimous Consent Calendar can be taken up?

Mr. GOOD. The situation is this. There are now pending before the Committee on Appropriations such tremendous demands for deficiencies—more than $200,000,000 for the Navy—all told, more than $450,000,000 for deficiency appropriations. Now, these estimates are not quite ready to commence hearings upon. The bill will be prepared so that we can commence hearings next Wednesday morning. I am making this request in order that the sundry civil bill may be out of the way so that we can commence hearings on the deficiencies. I hope that no one will object; this is simply a request for to-day.

Mr. GARD. My inquiry was whether or not there has been a day agreed upon to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GOOD. No, there has not; but I think there will be no difficulty in selecting some time when ample opportunity will be given to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman's request now is only to set aside the Unanimous Consent Calendar for to-day?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is all.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right further to object, and I shall not object, because I appreciate the fact that we ought to go on with these appropriation bills, I rise merely to suggest this: The Speaker seemed to indicate that this question had not been decided. If the parliamentary clerk will look up the matter, I think he will find that while Mr. Speaker CLARK did not render any formal decision, yet, in an informal way, when the matter came up in some such way as this has come up to-day, he did say that it would require a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote, and that unanimous-consent day could not be set aside by a majority vote. I think the clerk will find at least two occasions where that occurred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. That we dispense with the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. Has it the right of way?

The SPEAKER. That is the question.

Mr. CANNON. I was not in the room at the time the request was made, but is this a request to go on with the Private Calendar to-day?

Mr. GARNER. No; this is unanimous-consent day.

The SPEAKER. This is a request to go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill to-day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue in effect the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, not to exceed an aggregate of $50,000 at any one station, $300,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revert to page 2, lines 8 to 14, for the purpose of offering an amendment. There was a great deal of confusion at the time of the reading, and I did not realize that the Clerk had passed that item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object. If the gentleman wants to make a statement in regard to it, I have no objection to his doing that.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Why not let us return to the item and I shall offer the amendment I have in mind and discuss it. I was discussing the matter with a member of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee] at the time the Clerk passed it and did not realize what he was reading. If the gentleman desires to make the point of order against it, or oppose the amendment I offer, it will be within his power to do so.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the item referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Remodeling, etc., public buildings: For remodeling, enlarging, and extending completed and occupied public buildings, including any necessary and incidental additions to or changes in mechanical equipment thereof so as to provide or make available additional space in emergent cases, not to exceed an aggregate of $25,000 at ony one building, $380,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUPRÉ: Page 2, line 13, strike out the figurer "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$50,000."

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, as the committee has observed, there are practically no appropriations such as are usually carried in this bill for repairs to public buildings. I understand the exigencies that confront the committee at this time and have no criticism to make of them for omitting specific appropriations. There is, however, this lump-sum appropriation that in a previous bill was carried to the amount of $330,000, which is now raised to $380,000, but only $25,000 can be devoted to any one public building. It seems to me bad policy upon the part of Congress to limit the Treasury Department or the Office of the Supervising Architect to a particular amount that may be expended in any one of these emergent repairs to our public buildings. I really think that the limitation should be omitted altogether. The Treasury Department realizes that this amount is intended to cover all public buildings throughout the whole country, where an emergency arises, and it is not to be supposed that that department will undertake to spend the whole sum on any special or preferred building, but there are occasions that will arise when it will be hampering to the department to be limited to this particular sum. Take an emergency that must be met, where the department asks for bids, for instance. We will say that it finds it will cost from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars to do the work properly. But, no; it can not accept such bids, because of the limitation by Congress of $25,000 upon the amount that can be expended on any one particular building. If the gentleman from Iowa would prefer, I would offer an amendment to strike out the entire limitation, but it strikes me that by raising the amount that may be expended on any particular building to $50,000, at least a large part of the objection to this narrowing, arbitrary limitation would be removed. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think it was three years ago that the committee decided that instead of attempting to pass on all of these necessary alterations and changes about a year and a half in advance, that the Treasury Department should have a lump sum out of which necessary alterations might be made in certain post offices where the work was growing and where the need for additional facilities could not be anticipated. This year there were a great many things that came before the committee. The number of post offices and public buildings is quite large and the investment represents a tremendous sum. We have increased the lump sum $50,000 over the current law, so that the Secretary of the Treasury has discretion to determine where some change shall be made in order to permit the Post Office Department to properly function. If any criticism is to be made with regard to what we have done it is that we have increased the amount of the limitation. For the current year it is only $20,000. We have increased it to $25,000. Personally I do not believe the Secretary of the Treasury ought to expend more than $20,000 out of this lump sum on any one public building in making those changes and alterations, but now the gentleman from Louisiana wants to have it arranged so that it would be possible for some one who is on better terms with the Secretary of the Treasury than some other man to get a post office rebuilt.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not suppose I shall be that gentleman in the next administration.

Mr. GOOD. That is what I am unalterably opposed to. There happens to be in this case an estimate before the committee to do some remodeling in the gentleman's district, and it happens that the amount estimated is just $50,000, what the gentleman has named in his amendment——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Oh, no; it was $100,000.

Mr. GOOD. This amendment is offered to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to do what the committee thought he should not be permitted to do. It seems to me that the limitation placed in the bill is liberal now, and if we should do anything with it we should reduce it back to the $20,000 carried in the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The foregoing work under "Marine hospitals" and "Quarantine stations" shall be performed under the supervision and direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask to be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salamanca, N. Y., ground rent: For annual ground rent of the Federal building site at Salamanca, N. Y., on account of Indian leases, due and payable on February 19 of each year, in advance, to the treasurer of the Seneca Nation of Indians, beginning February 19, 1915, and expiring February 19, 1991, $7.50.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if that is the correct date in line 21—"1991"?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it is a long-time lease; it is an unexpired lease.

Mr. HASTINGS. A 70-year lease?

Mr. GOOD. It is a long-time lease, a 99-year lease.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thought perhaps it might be a mistake.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is a long-time lease.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, when employed, $2,086,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of large denominations than those that may be canceled or retired except in so far as such printing may be necessary in executing the requirements of the act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 5, change the word "large" to read "larger."

Mr. GOOD. It is a typographical error.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical and hospital services: For medical, surgical, and hospital services, medical examinations, funeral expenses, traveling expenses, and supplies, and not exceeding $100,000 for library books, magazines, and papers, for beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, including court costs and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, $33,000,000. This appropriation shall be disbursed by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and such portion thereof as may be necessary shall be allotted from time to time to the Public Health Service, the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the War and Navy Departments, and transferred to their credit for disbursement by them for the purposes set forth in this paragraph. The allotments to the said board of managers shall also include such sums as may be necessary to alter, improve, or provide facilities in the several branches under its jurisdiction so as to furnish adequate accommodations for such beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance as may be committed to its care.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to strike out, in lines 20 and 21, the figures "$33,000,000" and substitute in lieu thereof the figures "$46,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, lines 20 and 21, strike out the figures "$33,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$46,000,000."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with regret, because I recognize the proper anxiety of the Committee on Appropriations and the House to keep expenditures down to the lowest possible figure. But neither the United States nor the Congress wants to save money at the expense of the disabled soldier. The bill carries an item of $33,000,000 for hospitals for disabled soldiers. The current law carries $46,000,000, just the same amount that is proposed in my amendment. The estimate asked for by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the United States Public Health Service for this purpose aggregate $50,000,000. Why this amount was reduced I have not been able to ascertain, although I have read the testimony very carefully. There is not a scintilla of evidence to justify the reduction of this appropriation from the $46,000,000 carried in the existing law to the $33,000,000 recommended in this bill. If the number of patients were to be reduced during the ensuing fiscal year there might be some justification for reducing the appropriations to care for those patients. Here are the facts on that point: There are about 20,000 war risk patients now being cared for in the hospitals of the Government. The undisputed testimony before the Committee on Appropriations is that by October 1 of this year there will be 30,000 war risk patients in the institutions of the United States. This means an increase of about 50 per cent as early as next October, when the new fiscal year will be only three months under way. The testimony goes on to indicate that the peak of the hospital load will not have been reached before 1927, and may not be reached until 1929. In other words, the patients to be cared for under this item are increasing every day, and will certainly be increasing for several years to come. In the face of that undoubted fact this appropriation is decreased some 35 per cent. I can not understand why that action was taken unless it was on the theory that in this present fiscal year certain items of repairs and alterations have been necessary and are now necessary that will not continue essential through the coming fiscal year; but the fact is that repairs and alterations will be just as necessary in the ensuing fiscal year as they have been in the past.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement of the gentleman that the peak of the hospital treatment will not be reached until 1927 or 1929 is a rather interesting statement. Will the gentleman indicate why that state of facts exist?

Mr. ROGERS. There are three great classes of soldier patients who are now being cared for in the hospitals of the United States. There are, first, the medical and surgical cases; second, the tubercular patients; and third, the neuro-psychiatric patients. The medical and surgical class has about reached its peak now, but the other two classes are still mounting month by month. The testimony before the Committee on Appropriations from public-health experts was to the effect that the increase will continue from seven to nine years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the largest proportion exist among those who are mentally disabled rather than the other two classes?

Mr. ROGERS. The disabilities of patients at present under hospital care are about as follows: Seven thousand nine hundred suffer from tuberculosis, 5,200 from neuro-psychiatric diseases, and 6,800 are general medical and surgical cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that I may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. The proportion is not very different?

Mr. ROGERS. No; roughly speaking, the three major classes are about equal in number.

If it could be made to appear that the task of altering and modifying the existing structures so as to make them suitable for hospitals has now been accomplished, that would probably be a reason for reducing the appropriation as suggested by the Committee on Appropriations. But in the details of expenditures submitted to the Committee on Appropriations it is shown that about two and a half million dollars are contemplated for repairs and alterations during the coming year. That is to come out of the total expenditure asked for of $50,000,000, and out of the sum of $46,000,000 which I propose. I think that the mistake that the Committee on Appropriations made results from the method that they employed in making their calculation. The Committee on Appropriations estimated that it cost $3 a day, or about $1,100 a year, for the subsistence of each patient in a United States hospital. Then the committee assumed that on October 1 next there would be 30,000 hospital patients. Then they multiplied the two together and got a total of $33,000,000, which is carried in the bill. But, as the hearings show conclusively, hospital subsistence is only one of many purposes to which this appropriation is applied. We all know, for example, that the Public Health Service maintains regional offices all over the United States. Those regional offices cost a good deal of money. But the Committee on Appropriations has not allotted a single cent for the maintenance of those offices when it recommends $33,000,000 as a total for this item.

Gentlemen of the committee, we are taking care of disabled soldiers here. The country and the Congress do not want to economize on the disabled soldier. I submit to the House that if we scale down this appropriation $17,000,000 without any evidence that a cent of it can surely be saved—or more than $4,000,000 at the very most—we shall be in a ridiculous position before the country. We shall have the soldier organizations, and the soldiers themselves, and the friends of soldiers, coming to us and asking what we are thinking of when we are doing this thing. And I believe their complaint will be justified. Our Government experts have told us that their task is going to take so much money—$50,000,000. And without the slightest success in disputing the testimony or its accuracy, this committee recommends a reduction of $17,000,000. We shall be in a ridiculous position, gentlemen, if we accept the action of the Committee on Appropriations, which, in my judgment, was based upon complete misapprehension of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there is no misapprehension of facts on where the committee acts. Members of the Committee on Appropriations do not get nervous every time some one who happened to be in the late war raises a cry in the press or otherwise. We have been too nervous in the past. This year we found we had appropriated $37,000,000 more for compensation for the soldiers than we will spend during the fiscal year. To that extent we made a mistake and appropriated more money than the department can possibly pay out. And so, too, when it came to appropriating money for rehabilitation, the Congress wanted to give all that was necessary to give, and yet the officers in charge of that service come before the committee and say that we appropriated $10,500,000 more than they could possibly spend during the year. Congress wants to do fairly by these soldiers, wants to do liberally by them, but it does not want to take out of the Treasury of the United States by a large appropriation enough money to set a higher standard for inefficiency and for waste in the Department of Public Health. If the gentleman will closely examine all the provisions of the bill he will find out just what we have done and why we did it. It is true the Public Health Service asked for more money, but they estimated they would have 30,000 of these men next year. That is 10,000 more than they have at present; yes—more than 10,000 in addition to the present number in the hospitals of the Government.

Now, at another place in the bill we have taken care of between 4,000 and 5,000 of these men, and made the appropriations for them because they are in the institutions cared for by appropriations of Congress under the items for the Soldiers' Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. Since the last appropriation bill was enacted the managers of the soldiers' homes went to the Rockefeller Institute and said, "We want the latest, the last word, in tubercular treatment," and the Rockefeller Institute sent one of the best scientists, the best-informed man available on tuberculosis, and that man helped the board to make the plan for a modern soldiers' home for these tubercular patients. They took the home down at Johnson City, Tenn., and they decided they would have to increase the floor space of the porches, for under modern treatment it was necessary to have as much floor space out of doors as there was floor space inside. And so modern concrete porches were built of fireproof construction, and other improvements were made, at a cost of less than $400,000. They now have a hospital there for 1,000 men and they have the best doctors that money can hire. And we have provided in this bill, not in this appropriation but in another appropriation, for all the money that they estimate they can spend. And the board of managers say that by using only the very best cuts of beef for these soldiers, not buying the cheaper cuts, and by providing the very best of everything, they will be able to give the very best treatment and the very best food for these soldiers at a cost of $2.20 per day per man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Upon $46,000,000 the estimated cost per man would have been $4.20 under the Public Health treatment, instead of $2.20 under the superior treatment that they are receiving in the soldiers' homes. We have made arrangements for more than 5,000 of these 30,000 men, and if the appropriation for them is not large enough Congress is going to be in continuous session and another appropriation can be made. The appropriation should be, not to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, but to the soldiers' homes and to hospitals where the men are assigned, just as all of these appropriations are made—so much for each home, so much for subsistence, so much for hospital, so much for household, and so on—but at present that is impossible. Possibly after the men are placed in homes this can be done. The Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes has managed these institutions in a model way, and I am sure it is the intention of Congress to give all the money that is necessary to properly care for the soldiers.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What is the necessity for maintaining separate medical organizations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Public Health Service? Why is it that they can not be merged under one head, as one medical organization, to look after the entire thing, and save the expense of two separate organizations?

Mr. GOOD. That is what the Public Health Service, I assume, wants, and maybe it is the thing that will some time be done, but under the law these soldiers are the beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. You might as well ask the question as to why was it necessary before, with regard to the Civil War pensioners, to have examiners and physicians to examine them under the Commissioner of Pensions. It was to prevent fraud. It was to prevent persons from encroaching upon the Government. And these soldiers are not different from other soldiers.

One of them was discharged the other day after having recovered from the effects of two operations. He was receiving $120 per month compensation because of his disability. He went to the hospital and had the operations performed, and they were successfully performed, and after they were performed he was pronounced to be cured and absolutely well. He stated that he was well. But when he went out into the world again and found that he could not make more than $80 a month, or about that, he came back and knocked at the doors of the Public Health Service and appealed to the War Risk Insurance, claiming that he was a sick man. What he really wanted was his $120 per month compensation.

You will have those problems to deal with, but you must deal with them in a firm manner, and that is perhaps one of the reasons why there should be a medical corps that will be able to determine at all times the question of whether a man shall receive the payment out of the Federal Treasury to the extent he is entitled to payment if actually disabled, and as long as you have lodged that function with respect to the soldiers of this war in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, you must then give that bureau a medical staff to determine the question, just as you gave the Commissioner of Pensions a medical staff to determine such questions arising under his jurisdiction. This medical staff is from the Public Health Service.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. Would the gentleman explain to the committee why, if $46,000,000 was the right amount for a maximum of 20,000 patients, $33,000,000 is the right amount for a maximum of 30,000?

Mr. GOOD. I know the gentleman is interested in this matter very deeply, and frankly I do not believe they will have 30,000 patients. The committee did not believe so. The bureau officials have made many mistakes before in regard to their estimates. Forty-six million dollars was more than enough this year to take care of all of them. This year, the first year under the new arrangement, the Director of War Risk allotted to the board of managers large sums for changes in buildings. For this coming year we are making the appropriation direct to the board of managers for the care of all soldiers there. Last year it was necessary for the director to allot something like $4,000,000 to remodel these soldiers' homes. That has been done, and that will not be necessary next year.

I know that the gentleman does not want us to make the mistake we did before in our desire to do all that is necessary because there is a demand for more and a statement that we were not doing enough for rehabilitation. We gave for the present year $10,500,000 more than it was necessary to give, according to their own statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the reason why I asked the question a while ago was that I had an instance called to my attention where a soldier had applied for compensation, and the application was held up for months in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance because of some alleged failure to act in the Public Health Department. I do not know what arrangement they have about transferring cases from the medical department of the Public Health Service to the Bureau of War Risk, or vice versa, or just what cases are handled by each. I know that the medical department of the Bureau of War Risk gave as their only excuse for leaving this claim pigeonholed for many months the statement that the Public Health Service had not acted upon some particular phase of the claim. I do not know what particular claims they refer to one division or to the other, but I can see no reasonable ground for maintaining two separate departments.

I can not see any good reason why the same medical organization that operates for the Public Health Service could not operate also for the Bureau of War Risk and attend to all the cases and do it more expeditiously than it is being done by referring them back and forth between the two different departments.

Mr. GOOD. That is an administrative matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as the field work is concerned, that is what is done now. The Bureau of Public Health Service make all these examinations, and their examinations are reported to the medical department of the War Risk Insurance. If the bureau had a separate corps of physicians there would be a duplication of the work, whereas now they utilize the service of the Public Health examiners all over the United States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I ask the gentleman whether there are no Bureau of War Risk examiners anywhere outside of Washington?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think not. The Public Health Service maintains its examiners in various districts throughout the country. Local examiners of the Public Health Service make the examinations and report from district headquarters to Washington, and in that way there is a saving of duplication which would occur if it were arranged otherwise.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What is the use of having it go to both departments when it comes to Washington?

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the district reports go to the chief medical adviser as to compensation, but there are other matters frequently arising in hospitals which are under the Public Health Service, where they make reports to the Chief of the Public Health Service instead of to the War Risk Bureau.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman's statement carries out my proposition that there should not be two separate services, because if they can utilize one service out in the field more expeditiously than by having two organizations, I see no reason why the reports could not come from the Public Health Service direct from the field and be disposed of here in Washington by the one bureau head. This would enable claims to be passed upon much more expeditiously.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the gentleman what is the origin of his idea that they ever did anything expeditiously in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance? [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. I was suffering from the same kind of complaint that the gentleman from Arkansas seems to be laboring under. But I am opposed to delay. That is not the only instance where soldiers have been delayed in receiving their compensation by virtue of the red tape that is gone through with here in Washington. Now, to maintain out in the field, where the actual examination is had, a corps of examiners under the Public Health Service, through which they make an examination, and have that come to one department here, and then have it sent to another department in Washington, is absurdly foolish, for according to the gentleman from Kentucky the Public Health Service conducts these examinations in the field, where the principal work, after all, is done, and the rest is simply done by a reviewing board. There can be no sensible or sane reason why the claim should not go direct to the headquarters of the organization that conducts the examination and there have the work finally disposed of. I am making this suggestion in the hope that this matter may be simplified in the interest of the unfortunate ex-service men who suffer during these almost interminable delays.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD: Page 19, after line 8, insert: "The allotments made by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to the Public Health Service for the care of beneficiaries of that bureau by the said service shall also be available for expenditure by the Public Health Service on that account for necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service and clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation, and travel, and maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. The Public Health Service made an estimate for this entire service. They made it on a new plan, altogether different from the present law. We rejected that plan. We propose to follow the plan of this year, so if possible to set up a little competition, if you please, between the Public Health Service and these other hospitals where these men are given their treatment. Now, the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk, which has just been read, is current law. That is the provision that was put in last year in order to make the plan workable, but by some oversight in rejecting the plan submitted by the Public Health Service the plan that Congress formulated last year in that respect was also omitted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It was not in this place in the bill.

Mr. GOOD. No; it was in another place in the bill, but it ties right in with this proposition and should be inserted here. It is the same thing that they marked out.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does this amendment mean that this allotment shall be available for the general purpose of the Public Health Service?

Mr. GOOD. No; only for the treatment of cases turned over to the Public Health Service by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The thought was this, that the law placed these men in charge of the War Risk Bureau, and Congress took the position that if one bureau had charge of these men that same bureau should have the appropriation that would follow them when they were sent to a given hospital, so that there could be no controversy or conflict about having the men sent to a hospital and no money sent there to pay for their care and keep.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The language does not limit it to the beneficiaries of the War Risk Insurance. However, if that has been the construction heretofore we may be safe in assuming that they will follow it.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it does limit them to war-risk patients.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the formal motion to strike out the paragraph. I do so for the purpose of again calling the attention of the House to the fact that for every ex-service man the Bureau of War Risk Insurance still keeps three separate files, one file on one floor of that big building that is supposed to relate to any insurance rights he may have; another file on another floor of that big building that is supposed to relate to any compensation rights that he has; and still a third file on another floor of that big building that is supposed to relate to allotments and allowances that members of his family may have an interest in as beneficiaries. If one of your constituents should write a letter to the War Risk Insurance Bureau about any right they may have with reference to an ex-service man you can not tell to save your life, and the War Risk Insurance Bureau can not tell, where to find that letter unless they go onto those three separate floors and make a search of those three separate files, requiring the attention and services of numerous employees in that department. I have called the attention of the director to that fact time and again. I have called the attention of the heads of his various sections to that fact time and again. I have made the suggestion to them that if they would have one complete file that contained every single letter and document coming to that office relating to any particular ex-service man, then they could tell in a few minutes where to find it, and they could find it; but now it takes them a whole day sometimes to search out one letter that has come into their files. A good woman sent them a check back. It was not for the amount that was due her. She sent her check back and asked them to please correct it. She heard nothing from them for three months. Her payments stopped when they had been regular theretofore. I went down there to look the matter up and they could not find the letter and could not find the return check until with my help they had searched for half a day. You can imagine just exactly what that means to this Government. If they would readjust their system on a business basis and have just one file instead of three, they could do away with two-thirds of the space that they now occupy in that bureau. In other words, there would be available for other departments in other businesses of this Government two-thirds of the space in that great building, which would save much money in rentals now paid, and then the people could expect some reasonable definite action on their business within a reasonable time when they send communications to that department. Why they do not change their slow processes down there I can not understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman will recall that under the law these three branches of the War Risk Insurance are entirely separate.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but they all relate to one ex-soldier.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but they are under different heads and different chiefs. Does the gentleman think it would be more efficient to have a conglomeration of all these claims, that are based on three different articles of law, at one place, than to have them systematically separated?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I do, for this reason: They are all under one director. When you had some business with a soldier's file you could know exactly where to find the documents and correspondence; but when a letter comes in there relating to insurance it is just as likely to be filed in the compensation department or some other department as it is in the insurance section.

Mr. BARKLEY. That might result from incompetence on the part of the file clerk, but it does not militate against separating the various kind of information.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: Suppose you had business relating to the service of a soldier that might affect all three branches. You must then go down there and require the services of several clerks on one floor for one file, spend time hunting for that, then on another floor with other clerks, and then on a third floor in another section, when you could do it in one-third of the time and with the services of one-third less employees if you had this all in one file in one place. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I object, Mr. Chairman, as I want to oppose the amendment. I do this to ask the chairman what is the unexpended balance of the appropriation for compensation for the fiscal year ending 1921?

Mr. GOOD. The estimate of the director was to the effect that on June 30 there would be a balance of $37,000,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it well to have that go in the RECORD, because there are always claims that we are not appropriating a sufficient amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other crimes committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, and for the enforcement of section 18 of the War Finance Corporation act; hire and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and the members of his immediate family and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $400,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts": Provided further, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation greater than that allowed by law, except not exceeding three persons, who may be paid not exceeding $12 per day.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 22, after the word "act," strike out the words "hire and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it has been intimated from time to time by the leaders of the House, especially the majority chairmen of committees, when discussing these appropriation bills, that they were going to stop the practice of furnishing limousines and other fine passenger automobiles to the various heads of the departments and bureaus in Washington. Just go down town at night and watch the street and you will see a lot of automobiles with United States insignia on them going up and down the street. We ought to stop it. We ought to stop paying two, three, four, five, and six thousand dollars sometimes for an automobile for private use; we ought to stop the expense of maintenance; we ought to stop the expense of employing flunkeys to drive them——

A MEMBER. Chauffeurs.

Mr. BLANTON. When a Government official has got to have some one paid by the Government to drive him around the driver ceases to be a chauffeur and becomes a flunkey. I think we ought to stop it. The distinguished gentleman from Missouri, ex-Speaker of this House, CHAMP CLARK, sometimes rides in a street car. It does not belittle him to ride in a street car. Some of the distinguished leaders of the other side of the aisle ride in the street cars sometimes, and when they do not want to ride in a street car they ride in their own automobiles, paid for with their own money, and they also pay for the gasoline and the chauffeur to drive him. Why should we continue to furnish department heads and bureau heads with free limousines, free gasoline, free upkeep, free chauffeurs to drive them and the members of their family around Washington. I think we ought to stop it. If we are going to wipe out this $3,000,000,000 deficit staring us in the face, we might as well begin with the little items, because it is the small items that make up the big items in the expense of the Government. I know these fellows come and put up a big, strong song and dance that they must have these things; they are all hail fellows well met. The chairman smiles and says we ought to stop this, and that is as far as he gets and it again goes into the bill. This is an upkeep that we ought to stop; it is an overhead in a small way, but in the aggregate with other such expenses makes up a big overhead and we ought to stop it. I want to ask the chairman if he is not willing to stop it. Is he afraid of the bureau chiefs and the heads of departments if he takes away from them the automobile and the limousine service?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the item the gentleman from Texas refers to has been carried in the appropriation bill for a number of years. This year the department asked for authority to buy a new automobile. We did not give that authority. The facts are that the Pierce Arrow Co. furnishes one car that carries the secret-service men when the President is out riding in his car, to follow the President's car, and I think that has been the practice for some time. The Pierce Arrow people furnish the car for $500 a year and replace it with another car. We did not give them authority to buy a new car and only a small amount of this money is used for that purpose. I do not believe in expenditures along the line which the gentleman from Texas has referred to, but I do not believe that in this appropriation there is any great abuse.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How much of this money is to be used for the purchase of an automobile?

Mr. GOOD. None at all; we did not give them any authority to purchase.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I thought I caught from the reading of the amendment that purchase of an automobile was authorized.

Mr. GOOD. No; the gentleman moves to strike out the words "hire and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary."

Mr. BLANTON. That item with the others I am moving to strike out takes in all the expense, operation, upkeep, chauffeurs, and everything else for 236 passenger automobiles this one service operates.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield, my recollection is that this appropriation was used only for the purpose of hiring an automobile which carried the secret-service agents who go with the President from place to place.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and when there is a call for a secret-service man he has to go immediately, and if he did not have this car he would have to hire one.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is certainly no abuse of this appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, how would it be possible for the secret-service men to guard the President, who rides in an automobile operated by the Government, if the secret-service men had to walk?

Mr. GOOD. They would have to be stationed along the road, and you would have to have a pretty good-sized army.

Mr. KNUTSON. And how much would it cost to guard the road?

Mr. BLANTON. How much did it cost to guard Theodore Roosevelt and other distinguished Presidents of the United States preceding him? The gentleman can not make us believe that this relates to only one automobile; the whole appropriation might be expended by authority of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 2371. An act for the relief of Kathryn Walker; and

S. 390. An act for the relief of Peter McKay.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. FRANCE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments and for the disposition of useless papers in the Civil Service Commission."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of marine hospitals, including subsistence and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $625,000: Provided, That there may be admitted into said hospitals for study persons with infectious or other diseases affecting the public health, and not to exceed 10 cases in any one hospital at one time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the proviso?

Mr. GOOD. That is not a new provision. It is a provision that has been carried for a long time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, it is a provision that has been carried for a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, but it is subject to a point of order. It is legislation, and if legislation is needed let it be brought in in a proper way.

Mr. GOOD. This was asked for by the Public Health Service.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That may be very true.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I do not care to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for beneficiaries (other than war-risk insurance patients) of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of motor trucks and passenger motor vehicles, court costs and other expenses incident to proceedings heretofore or hereafter taken for commitment of mentally incompetent persons to hospitals for the care and treatment of the insane, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $4,080,000: Provided, That of this sum not exceeding $80,000 may be used for the maintenance of home for lepers, including transportation of lepers, maintenance, care, and treatment of patients, and pay and maintenance of necessary officers and employees.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 25, line 8, after the word "trucks," strike out the words "and passenger motor vehicles."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman understands that would strike out ambulances.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; not at all. Mr. Chairman, I am going to get to that point if the chairman of the committee will just give me a little time. Under this item, this blanket appropriation, which is a part of the policy of our distinguished friends on the Republican side of the aisle, amounting to $4,080,000, this department is given carte blanche to spend just as much of that sum as it wants to for maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles. When that matter was up before the committee the chairman used this language, on page 356 of the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. You are also asking for the purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor trucks and passenger motor vehicles.

Later he said:

The CHAIRMAN. If you had this authority, every surgeon, acting surgeon, and prospective surgeon would demand a limousine from Dr. Cumming, and he would have to explain why he could not take out of this appropriation of $5,000,000 the small sum of $5,000 to buy a nice car. This would give him the authority to do it, and the question would be put up to him to do it.

Then later this occurred:

Dr. FOX. We will not need any motor trucks.
The CHAIRMAN. What do you want to buy?
Dr. FOX. We need these for personal transportation. We need motor cars. We are not getting any from the Army now, except a few wrecks.
The CHAIRMAN. Then, you do not want any motor trucks?
Dr. FOX. No, sir.

Later, on page 359 we have a report, required to be inserted in the hearing by Dr. Cumming, which shows that they are operating 15 passenger cars in Washington at this time which they term "touring cars"—not ambulances, but touring cars. They operate 159 ambulances besides in the Public Health Service. This is not a car furnished for the secret-service men to ride around in to guard the President. These are 15 private cars used here by various surgeons in that department for their private cars. In coming to my office this morning I had to ride a considerable distance behind one of these fine limousines bought and maintained by the Government that brought one of these petty surgeons down to his office, which is right across the street from the House Office Building. I could not pass him because his car was going too fast. I was therefore forced to note the magnificence of that fine limousine, with that petty surgeon sitting on the back seat, reared back, a Government employee driving him, paid for by the Government. There is no mention made of any limousines here. They are called touring cars. And this department has 236 such passenger cars besides its 159 ambulances. I saw that limousine with my own eyes, and it had the insignia of the United States Government printed on it, and if they are using limousines why do they not say so? The chairman can not get around this proposition by saying it is for secret-service men guarding the President of the United States. It is just a question of continuing this policy of furnishing fine automobiles for heads of various departments and their assistants to ride around here in the Nation's Capital. If they want to ride in automobiles, let them buy them themselves, as we have to do, and if they do not want to buy them, let them ride on the street cars, as do many of the distinguished Members of Congress sometimes, and pay their 8-cent fare.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why not have them walk?

Mr. BLANTON. It is up to the chairman and his party which has adopted this policy.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; the gentleman's party has not adopted any such policy.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is continuing it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has gotten back from Marion, the distinguished leader of the majority [Mr. MONDELL] has gotten back from Marion, and when the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] and others get back, they may have some light on economy to go by in this House, and they may then see fit, after they come froni consultations at Marion, to take away these limousines furnished by the Government to these high-salaried Government heads.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In reply to the chairman of the committee to his observation that it does not apply to the party in power, I want to say as one Republican that I think it does apply to the party in power, because we are in power, and the bill ought to be so drawn, in my judgment, as to limit the use of limousines.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman wants to be practical. This appropriation takes care of every Public Health hospital. We do not say in all of these appropriations that so many gallons of gasoline for this car shall be bought and so many gallons of gasoline for that truck at this hospital, but here is big service, and in all of these appropriations for years past——

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to permit me to have a little of my own five minutes. My point is this, and I make it in good faith and as a good Republican and as a citizen of the United States: There ought to be some limitation in this bill somewhere whereby public money should not be used in this way by these people who are engaged in public service any more than that the Government should furnish an automobile for every clerk and every Member of Congress. It is a scandal, and everybody knows it. The chairman of the committee ought to be competent, and he is competent enough to prevent that thing from being continued as it has been carried on. I would like to ask in my five minutes of time how much money in the aggregate is appropriated this year for the Public Health Service as contrasted with last year?

Mr. GOOD. Last year the appropriation for this purpose was $4,000,000, and this year $4,080,000, for services other than the care of war risk patients—$80,000 extra.

Mr. LAYTON. All I want to say is that you have a proposition here that started from small beginnings, a quarantine service. It has grown to such an extent that you have 2,300 doctors on the pay rolls of the United States, at a salary of $2,000 each a year, who are practicing in competition with men and women of the United States who are engaged in private practice. Where is this Public Health Service going to stop? That is the point I want to make.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I can remember the furor that arose on a great many different occasions about the use of automobiles. The House at one time was disposed, in the interest of the farmer who raised horses, to forbid any Government official having an automobile. Think of it! Put down the horses! Now, since the farmers all own automobiles themselves, and a larger number in proportion to anyone else, it has become the custom for people to ride in automobiles, and a few years ago Congress or Members of Congress, unduly excited because they had seen some Government official riding in an automobile when the Member of Congress either did not have the money or was too stingy to own one—Congress started out to pass a law forbidding any appropriation made by Congress to be expended in the purchase or operation of an automobile. That is still the law, having this provision in it, that if Congress in an appropriation should specifically authorize the operation of an automobile, then it might be done, but without that express authorization no money could be so expended. Why, the automobile is as much a necessity to-day for convenience and the transaction of business as the street car is in a big city. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] owns an automobile and runs it himself.

Mr. BLANTON. And I do not object to other people owning and running them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; but the gentleman paid for it out of public money——

Mr. BLANTON. No; I paid for it out of my own money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; which he has drawn out of the Public Treasury. [Laughter.] He did not have an automobile until he became a Member of Congress——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I did for years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not in Washington?

Mr. BLANTON. I had one long before I ever dreamed of coming to Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman may have had a flivver, but not an automobile.

Mr. BLANTON. I had a Stevens Duryea, I will say to my friend.

Mr. LAYTON. I think the gentleman from Illinois is not exactly logical about the matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Logic has nothing to do with it. The gentleman from Delaware and the gentleman from Texas have only shown prejudice and not logic.

Mr. LAYTON. That is all right, but if the gentleman will allow me to show the logic. The gentleman assumes he buys an automobile out of public money, whereas he buys it out of his salary. What the gentleman from Texas wants is for the other man to buy it out of his salary.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I want.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If he drew the pay the gentleman from Texas does, he would be happy to do it——

Mr. BLANTON. Some of the bureau chiefs, department heads, draw $12,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; they do not. Some of the experts employed by this administration may draw $12,000, I do not know; but not authorized in an appropriation or by law. There are a good many lawless things going on now which have grown up as a part of procedure of the war. Let us hope that many of them will be done away with after the 4th of March.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said that no officer is drawing $12,000——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I did not say any officer. I said no head of bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I think——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I used language technically, carefully, and the gentleman ought to follow my example.

Mr. BLANTON. I am trying to do so. Did not the gentleman vote to increase the number of commissioners on the Interstate Commerce Commission to 11 and to increase their salaries to $12,000 each?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What has that got to do with this question?

Mr. BLANTON. Twelve thousand dollars each; they now draw——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, they are not heads of bureaus. Any tyro, anybody, any clerk to a Member of Congress, except the gentleman from Texas, knows that the Interstate Commerce Commission are not heads of bureaus.

Mr. BLANTON. I spoke of department heads.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I use language carefully. Now, what is the proposition here? The gentleman proposes to forbid the use of passenger-carrying automobiles in the Public Health Service. The first one to complain when some patient from the gentleman's district is compelled to walk or ride in a street car, the first one to complain would be the gentleman from Texas, and a proper complaint he would make. That there may be abuses of discretion at times, I do not know, but the gentleman's amendment is to cut the heart out of the service to meet what I believe to be an imaginary abuse.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON), there were—ayes 1, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, trachoma, influenza, or infantile paralysis, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $500,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that it is proposed to increase the epidemic appropriation from $355,000, which was the present law, to $500,000 for the next year. There is one reason which I can readily understand: There may be an epidemic following the recent election. [Laughter.] But what is this money for, may I ask, and how much is being used now for imaginary or real epidemics?

Mr. GOOD. The expenditure this year has largely been in southern ports. The bubonic plague has broken out in New Orleans and two or three other Gulf or southern cities, and it was necessary to commence to carry on a very extensive work there to exterminate rats. That has cost a great deal of money, and my recollection is that they have expended for this year the most of their appropriation and will come in for a deficiency because of that fact.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, it may be if there has been an epidemic or threatened epidemic in these ports, I was not familiar with that fact, but I can see that is a very good work, but while they are spending so much money in killing off rats the number of rats seems to be increasing everywhere.

A year or so ago, maybe longer, we included influenza in this item. Of course, influenza is always present. Any bureau of the Government can always find ways of spending money for influenza. Is there any necessity for carrying that provision in this item so as to encourage them to spend money?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman they had a separate item for influenza, and we struck that out and put that word in here, so that if the influenza epidemic should break out again it could not be said that Congress had not made some provision for the investigation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, it is inevitable, I suppose, where we ever make an appropriation for a possibility, so as to guard against what might happen in the future, they immediately seize that money to establish a current work and continue it forever.

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And if the emergency arises they never have that money for the emergency. I get tired of this abuse of power on the part of many of the Government officials, but which I think is perfectly natural. They are pressed to spend the money. I am not criticizing them.

Mr. GOOD. They asked for $200,000 as a separate appropriation for influenza. We struck that out and put in the word here so as to give them authority.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The word was in here before.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; in the law but not in the estimate. They asked to have it stricken out of this paragraph, but to insert a new paragraph with an appropriation of $200,000 for influenza alone. We refused that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rural sanitation: For special studies of and demonstration work in rural sanitation, including personal services and including not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $50,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for demonstration work in rural sanitation in any community unless the State, county, or municipality in which the community is located agrees to pay one-half the expense of such demonstration work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall not propose an amendment to increase the amount of appropriation for rural sanitation, and I suppose under existing conditions I probably would not vote for one. And yet it almost made me heartsick at times to think of the enormous sums of money absolutely expended, as it seems to me, with an Army too big and a Navy too great, and then refusing to spend a little money where it would make people healthier, happier, and wiser. The Government appropriates millions of dollars to bring men into the Army, millions of dollars for any kind of a naval craft, and then much more to support the personnel of that craft than it would cost to spread light throughout many sections of the country about sanitation and health. I do not think it is the duty of the General Government to regulate the affairs of all the individuals in the country, but when I know the good that has been done not merely by the Government but by organizations outside and the good that might be done in a direction like this it makes me wonder if we will ever wake up and have sense enough to save money where it is not needed to be expended and expended where it will do real good.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I agree very fully with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said. I just wanted to call the attention of the chairman to this proviso, "that no part of the appropriation shall be available for demonstration work," and so forth, except upon a 50–50 basis.

Mr. GOOD. That is current law.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; that is current law, and I very seriously doubt the wisdom of it. The Federal Public Health Service, in my opinion, is thoroughly justifiable. It is a Federal activity that has done great good. It is economy to do the things that are done by the Public Health Service. It is very much more sensible to have a bureau here make investigations and secure information for all the States than it would be to undertake to have 48 separate ones doing the work in the States. I believe they ought to get information on the various subjects relating to the public health, for the treatment of pellagra, typhus, and for rural sanitation, and so forth. Having gotten that information, I think the Public Health Service ought to make it available to the State boards of health, so that they may use it, telling them "here is our experience; here is the result of our investigations carried on everywhere. We give the information, and the State board can use it if it wants to do so." We put it on the 50–50 basis. What is the result? We have the example before us a little further on in this bill. We appropriated money under this Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, I think it is called. The condition was that this money would be available to the States on the 50–50 basis. Part of that money has been wisely expended, I think, especially that under the direction of the State boards of health, because they have an organization in the States already, and they can administer that fund wisely—that part that was alloted to the Public Health Service. The legislatures come along and they make an appropriation.

Say a State is to receive $20,000 for its allotment, the legislature makes an appropriation of $20,000 to match that, but they put the proviso in there that it is to match the Federal appropriation. Now, Congress some day, as we are doing to-day, will find out or conclude that it will not appropriate any more funds. The money appropriated by the States is then not available, because it has been made contingent upon an appropriation by Congress. And the whole service fails. That is exactly what is going to happen under the activities heretofore authorized. As I understand, a certain amount of the $1,000,000 appropriated under the subtitle "Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board" was to be expended under the direction of the State boards of health on a 50-50 basis. The legislature makes an appropriation to match the allotment of $25,000 or $40,000 or $50,000, or whatever it happens to be. Many of them, so far as I am advised, so worded their appropriation that it is not available unless they get the Government's 50 per cent. The legislatures adjourn, and do not meet for two years, and the appropriation by Congress goes out on a point of order, or it is not the judgment of Congress that the appropriation shall continue——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So that wise and very useful activity, beneficial and helpful, fails utterly, but, in my opinion, never would have failed but for the fact that we put in this 50-50 provision to start with.

If we gave the States the information, they would have made their appropriations without condition if they wanted to and permitted the work to go on. But when we held up this fifty-fifty bait they grabbed it, and they so framed their appropriations as to make them available only in connection with the Government's 50 per cent.

I just wanted to call the attention of the chairman to that. I think it is a mistake for the Government to offer to make these fifty-fifty appropriations. I think that money ought to be turned over to the Public Health Service for some further investigation. There are many investigations that they can make, and we should hold no bait up to the States to tempt them, but should furnish the information which the Public Health Service can get much more economically than the State boards could. They have done very valuable work. Get the information and give it to the States, and if any States do not care to use it, they are the ones that will suffer.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT. I will ask the gentleman if there is not this further vice inherent in this system, to wit, that it not only baits the States but it tends to coerce the States? If, for instance, my State does not see fit to make an allotment equal to that made by the Government, the citizens of my State will continue to pay their portion of the Federal taxation. In other words, in order to get the benefit of the Federal fund, for which they are taxed, they must turn around and tax themselves again through their State agency in order to get any part of it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. I think it is a mistake. I do not think the Federal Government ought to undertake actually to do the work, either alone or in cooperation with the States. I think it should make the investigations and give the States the benefit of them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman believe the farm demonstration work on the 50-50 basis is a mistake?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No. From my observation it is a success.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is not this almost identically the same thing, except that it is a health demonstration?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I did not have this rural demonstration work in mind when I spoke, but I think as a general proposition the Public Health Service ought simply to get the information.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What the gentleman has in mind is the Mississippi River. [Laughter.] But still he is making his observation on an item in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would be delighted if the Federal Government would give my district 50-50 on the Mississippi River; but that has no relation to this subject.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am sure the gentleman would not consider cooperation by the State with the Federal Government in building highways as a failure?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would not want to swear to that, but my observations relate solely to the activities of the Public Health Service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This appropriation carries $50,000, which, in my judgment, is entirely too little for this work that is being done under this particular head by the Public Health Service.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. You ought to strike out that proviso.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that $50,000 will do very little work along that line. The appropriation is made for the purpose of educating and encouraging the various communities to do this work rather than by way of contributing to the real work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would vote to make it $100,000. I think the proviso represents an erroneous policy.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman would not get very far with $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 27, line 17, after the word "propelled," strike out the word "passenger-carrying."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, usually the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is very fair, but he has been here so long and has had his own way so long that none of his colleagues over there would ever dare to oppose him in anything, and he sometimes gets out of patience with some of the younger men on this side of the aisle when they take issue with him. He would have the country and the Congress believe from his statement a moment ago that by my amendment I would take away the service of the ambulances that take care of the injured soldiers. The gentleman is too well informed to have that idea himself, because he knows everything that is going on in this House; he knows everything that is in the hearings, and he knows everything that is in the reports before the bills come on the floor.

I want to call the attention of my colleagues to what he already knows. On page 359 of the hearings appears Dr. Cumming's report showing that there are eight busses in this service, to which my amendment did not apply, and I made no objection to their use. There are 112 motor cycles in this service, maintained and cared for by the Government, to which my amendment did not apply and to which I made no objection. There are 341 motor trucks in this service, operated and maintained and carried on by the Government at its expense. My amendment did not apply to them, and I made no objection to them.

Now as to the ambulances, there are 159 ambulances already in this service, to which my amendment did not apply, and the gentleman from Illinois in his extreme wisdom knew it. I made no objection to them, and my amendment did not apply to them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, I yield. If the gentleman wants to apologize, I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was just going to convict the gentleman of lack of knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is the report of Gen. Cumming on page 359 of the hearings from which I am reading.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment struck out the operation.

Mr. BLANTON. Of passenger vehicles only, not the trucks or ambulances.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. An ambulance is not a truck, an autotruck. An ambulance is a passenger-carrying vehicle, and this provided for the operation of them, and the gentleman is proposing to stop the operation of them. That is the effect of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I think if the gentleman will look into the matter he will find out that the only thing I objected to is the passenger part of it, the part that refers to these handsome limousines which carry these department heads around all over the United States.

Now, as to the passenger-carrying vehicles, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this service is already operating 236 passenger-carrying vehicles. In other words, they call them touring cars, but if you will go over on the other side of the Public Health Service Building across from the House Office Building you will see that some of these touring cars mean handsome limousines. They are all I am objecting to; and I take it that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whose wisdom and judgment I follow here day after day in most cases, would have been with me on this subject if it had not been for the fact that in about 60 days his friends will come into many of these offices, and they will all want handsome limousines to ride around in, and these limousines can be converted from Democratic into Republican limousines by just the change of officials. I take it that is one of the reasons that animates my distinguished friend in making light of my amendment, even going so far as to intimate that before I came to Congress I was so poor that I had to ride in a flivver. I do ride in flivvers lots of times. I am not ashamed to ride in a flivver. I think the Henry Ford flivver was a godsend to humanity, because the poor people of the country have been able to ride in automobiles the same as the rich because of what he has done. My friend from Illinois should not hit me too hard. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, of course it is not possible for any of us always to judge what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has in his mind, though he very freely expresses his opinions, and I listen to him with great deference.

I am compelled to judge of a legislative proposition by the proposition itself and not by what somebody imagines it to be. The gentleman from Texas complains because the House did not agree to an amendment which he offered. His amendment proposed to prevent the maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles in the Public Health Service. That would have prevented the maintenance or operation of ambulances, because they are passenger-carrying vehicles. That would have stopped the purchase of a single quart or gallon of gasoline or the maintenance of anything to do with those ambulances. I can not believe that the gentleman from Texas seriously expected the House to take that position. Now, if he had wanted to offer an amendment covering something else, he has a great deal of ability, and why did he not offer his amendment covering the thing that he wanted to cover instead of offering an amendment to cover something which he admits he did not want to cover?

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas refers to what may happen after the 4th of March. None of these gentlemen, in or out, now or in prospective, are likely to be friends of mine; but I hope that the next administration will be at least less wasteful, less extravagant in all branches of the Government than the present administration is admitted by everybody to be. The one thing in this country, all over the land, which made Mr. Wilson the most hated man the United States has seen in years was the gross, wasteful extravagance of the officials of the present administration. Probably the President is not chargeable with the responsibility for that, but that is what made the people North and South turn and end this orgy of extravagance. If this side of the House is wise in its day and generation it will heed the warning and will stop the extravagant appropriations, and if the new President does not help to run an economical administration he will never be returned to the White House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

For expenses made necessary by the act entitled "An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts," approved May 17, 1910, including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission, $10,000: Provided, That expenditures for subsistence shall not be restricted by the limitations of existing law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso beginning in line 15, page 29.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. Not if the gentleman from Illinois makes it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE.

For expenses of the Council of National Defense; for the employment of a director, secretary, chief clerk, and other expert, clerical, and other assistance; equipment and supplies, including law books, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; subsistence and travel; and printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, $75,000: Provided, That no salary shall be paid to any officer or employee of the council in excess of $6,000 per annum.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on that paragraph, and I move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not move to strike out a paragraph on which he has reserved a point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. All right; I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. JONES of Texas. My point of order is that the appropriation is not authorized by existing law, and is an attempt to pass new legislation not so authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I apprehend the gentleman does not want to have the whole paragraph stricken out. I suggest to him that he make his point of order on the proviso.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I make my point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. What is the point of order?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The point of order I make is that the appropriation is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. GOOD. That the Council of National Defense is not authorized by existing law?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is not, as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The Council of National Defense was established in 1916 as a permanent institution of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It was tacked onto the military appropriation bill of 1916, if I understand correctly.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but it is made a permanent thing. I will give the gentleman the reference in just a minute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The appropriation is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I make the further point of order that the paragraph is out of order because of the proviso.

Mr. GOOD. The proviso is a limitation. Without the proviso they could pay $12,000 or $15,000. This is simply a limitation on the power of the commission to pay salaries. That is certainly not subject to a point of order. Now, Mr. Chairman, the act of August 29, 1916, provides that a Council of National Defense is hereby established for the coordination of industry and resources and national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The duties of the council are specifically provided.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order, and I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph beginning on line 18, page 29, and ending on line 2, page 30.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an absolutely useless appropriation. I believe that the Council of National Defense did some fine work at the time it was organized, and I believe it was an essential and necessary organization during the war, but if anyone can give me a sane and intelligent reason why it should be maintained, they can give me more than the Secretary of War was able to give when he appeared before the committee at its hearings.

At the time the Council of National Defense was organized its purpose was to make a survey of the fortifications and defenses of this country, to correlate the facts essential to a national and efficient organization; it did that work and did it well. All the other wartime legislation, practically, has been abolished by this Congress, and since the work of the Council of National Defense has been completed—and according to the Secretary of War's own words it has been completed—it seems to me this appropriation is no longer necessary. Why should the taxpayers of this country be further burdened by an appropriation to carry on a work that has been finished? Moreover, if it carries out the work that the Secretary of War says he wants carried out by virtue of the added appropriation, it will lap over the work done by other departments and which should be done by other departments.

I would like for every Member of the House to read in the hearings the statement of the Secretary of War. I have often admired the clear way in which he stated a proposition. I have admired the cogent manner in which he could present a proposition or advocate a policy, but I have read that statement of his four or five times, and if it has any clarity or any specific purpose it is more than I can understand. Let me read you only a part of it. The Secretary says:

> My own notion about the directorship of the council is it ought to be a man of a large imaginative and generalizing mind—

I concede that it would take a good deal of imagination to find a reason for continuing the Council of National Defense—> * * * and that it ought not to be a man who would be especially interested in details or in statistics or things of that sort, but a man who would be brooding over and extracting the lessons from our experience upon the general subject of the correlation of the national resources.

The Council of National Defense is composed of the heads of departments, different Cabinet officers who meet together. They maintain their separate organizations; they have certain duties to perform. This House has passed a budget bill, and one of the purposes of a budget system is to have one single head who gets up a survey of things, brings them down to one point, where we can have intelligent appropriations. Now, if you are going to have, as suggested by the Secretary of War, some one to coordinate and correlate some of these things—and we have heard very much lately about correlation and coordination—we will have to have somebody to coordinate and correlate the coordination in this Government.

What is the purpose of the Council of National Defense? All of the essentials of its contemplated work for the future can be done by other organizations and departments of this Government. In fact, they are now being so done. Why perpetuate a duplication of activities?

Mr. BUTLER. Who is the Director of the Council of National Defense?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The hearings do not disclose.

Mr. BLACK. There is no director; there is an assistant director, Mr. Ellsworth.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The council is composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Do the hearings disclose what service has been performed by the Council of National Defense?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The hearings disclose that the Council of National Defense during the war and prior to the war—the act was passed in 1916—did certain things with reference to getting information and with reference to finding out what was necessary in order to put the country in a proper condition for national defense. I think it did some very good work at that time, and I am not making any assault on it. But the Secretary of War says now that he wants to continue the work along different lines. He says that great lessons ought to be learned from the war. He says there are things that can be filed away, and it would take all the Members of Congress a year to file them away. He says that there are millions of useless papers and that we ought to have somebody to brood over these things with an imaginative mind. I believe that the action of this Congress should be such as to lead the American people to believe that we are getting down to brass tacks and that we intend to appropriate for those things in the maintenance of this Government that are absolutely necessary and to do away with the useless extravagance of every kind and character. I submit that there is no reason at all for maintaining a separate lot of clerks in Washington under a man with an imaginative mind who can draw some lessons from our experience in the late war. If there is anything practical that the citizenship of this country can obtain from this organization which this legislation seeks to make a permanent thing of, it is more than I am able to understand.

Somehow, somewhere, we must cut down appropriations. Economy must be the motto from this hour.

You can take the statement of the Secretary of War, which covers two pages, and you will find that I am absolutely correct in my analysis, and here it is disclosed that there are already $49,000 available for the Council of National Defense. If you adopt this amendment striking out the paragraph, the Council of National Defense would still have $49,000 of the old appropriation available with which to wind up its work, enough to last until June 1, with the present organization. I submit that if they are now given notice that we do not propose to maintain an imaginative organization, that they can wind up their work and let the American people draw their own lessons from the war, it will be far better, and they can do it with a good deal less brooding than this contemplated director will do. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for just a moment in support of my colleague's amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman's permission, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I take the same view of this situation that my colleague [Mr. JONES of Texas] does—that this organization of the Council of National Defense served a very useful purpose during the war, but that to continue it now would only serve to duplicate work and investigation which is being performed in other branches of the Government service. I have here their last annual report, and among the things that they give an account of doing is the gathering of information regarding our leather resources. Without taking time to read the hearings before the Appropriations Committee in detail, I would state that Mr. Ellsworth, the acting director, stated in the written statement which he filed with the committee that at the present time the Department of Agriculture is gathering certain leather statistics and that the Department of Commerce is gathering other leather statistics that have to do with industries, and that the Council for National Defense wants to take the information gathered by these two and other departments of the Government and coordinate it and have all of these statistics together in one department, so that in case of war or emergency the whole of such facts could be laid before the President.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In a moment. When I read that statement of Mr. Ellsworth I happened to recall that at the last session of Congress we passed a bill that was brought up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] which required the gathering of leather statistics by the Census Bureau.

When we had the bill up I remember that I called his attention to the fact that the Agricultural Department was gathering certain statistics and that the Department of Commerce was gathering certain other statistics, and I wanted to know of him if that was not sufficient. He replied no, that we did not have complete statistics as to leather, and, therefore, that we ought to pass the bill and require the Census Bureau to gather them, and we did. The bill went over to the Senate, and the Senate passed the bill and it is now a law. Here is the purpose of the bill as stated in its caption:

> Authorizing and directing the Director of the Census to collect and publish monthly statistics concerning hides, skins, and leather.

That is now the law, and I presume the Department of the Census is now gathering data as to the production of leather, skins, and hides and their consumption, and all about them; and yet here we have the Council for National Defense giving as one of the reasons for continuing its activities for another year the fact that they will make a study of the hide situation. What is the trouble now? We have entirely too many Government departments and bureaus doing substantially the same kind of work.

Also they say to the committee, "If you will continue us, we have 43 employees, and in addition to studying the hide and leather situation we will study the question of the transportation of the country." I will submit, fellow Members, that we have the great Interstate Commerce Commission, with its large force of employees and facilities for gathering information, daily studying and dealing with this whole question of transportation, and I dare say that there is scarcely any angle of the transportation question that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not giving diligent attention to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. May I suggest to the gentleman this fact, for whatever it may be worth, that the Council of National Defense will study these questions with particular reference to their military aspects, whereas the gathering of statistics in regard to hides, for instance, will be for industrial purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will gladly yield one minute of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. I just want to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and say that I do not understand the council is making a study of the transportation subject with a view of assembling information for military purposes. I notice in the hearings that it was brought out in respect to transportation that the War Department is making a study of military transportation from its standpoint, and Mr. Ellsworth stated that it was the purpose of the Council of National Defense to study about the transportation of commodities and things of that sort. He stated the matter this way in the hearings:

Mr. ELLSWORTH. The War Department survey is as to the requirements of the War Department. They are not making a study of the other loads which the railroads have to carry. In time of war you have not only to consider the transportation of troops and artillery but you have to consider the transportation of fuel and food for the people—

And so forth.

Of course I think all statistics of this kind are available at all times in the offices of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and there would be no need for the Council of National Defense to gather them.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Council of National Defense did the real constructive work during the war that may be expected of it in time of peace. It was created just before the outbreak of the war, and the work that it performed during the war was not really the work authorized by the law for the council to do. It is proposed under the law that there shall be seven commissioners, as I recall, who shall serve without compensation, who shall be skilled along certain lines, and those men are supposed to gather certain information necessary for the War Department and the Navy Department. It is known to men who have studied this question that the Navy Department, for example, goes out and pursues a line of investigation to get certain facts. That costs a good deal of money. Then the War Department sends out officials to get exactly the same facts, but nowhere is there a clearing house in the Government so that the information gathered by the Navy Department is available for the officers of the War Department, or the information gathered by the War Department available for the officers of the Navy Department. It is true they ask for a lot of things in the hearings, but if the gentleman will go back to the hearings a year ago he will find that then we went into the question of the real merits of the Council of National Defense, and it occurred to the committee then, without division, and while we wanted to cut off every single activity of the Government that was not producing nearly 100 cents for every dollar expended, yet that here was an agency that ought to result in real economy, and it was the opinion of the committee that they ought not to expend anything next year in an investigation of the hide industry or to make many proposed investigations, and we reduced the estimate of $225,000 to $75,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. In reading the hearings I notice that notwithstanding we gave an appropriation of $75,000 for last year, Mr. Ellsworth states that they are going to come in a few days and ask for a deficiency appropriation of $50,000. Are we going to stand for that?

Mr. GOOD. No. In a general way, when we give them an appropriation for a given year for service of this kind, they must get along with their appropriation, and as soon as the departments of the Government find that the next Congress or this Congress will enforce the deficiency law wherever it can, you will find some of these departments living within their appropriations. Of course, some of these departments are violating the antideficiency law, and we can not prevent that. To prevent that is the function of another department.

But I do think that it would be a waste of money; it would be shortsighted economy not to carry the Council of National Defense for a couple of years, because since the war they have only been cleaning up the matters that transpired during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, strictly speaking, the announcement was made and there was no one on his feet asking for a division, but the Chair thinks the committee is entitled to a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION.

Salaries: Three commissioners, at $4,000 each; secretary, $3,000; attorney, $4,000; chief statistician, $3,500; chief of accounts, $2,500; assistant chief of accounts, $1,600; accountant, $2,250; claim examiners—chief $2,250, assistant $2,000, assistant $1,800, five assistants at $1,600 each; special agents—two at $1,800 each, two at $1,600 each; clerks—7 of class three, 12 of class two, 27 of class one, 3 at $1,000 each; chief telephone operator, $1,000; messenger, $840; experts and temporary assistants in the District of Columbia and elsewhere to be paid at a rate not exceeding $8 per day, and temporary clerks, stenographers, or typists in the District of Columbia, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $100 per month, $10,000; in all, $124,940.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this bureau calls for a great many accountants, typists, and stenographers. How far has the work of the Committee on Appropriations gone in making investigation as to the necessity of employing the many clerks and typists mentioned in the various bureaus and commissions?

Mr. GOOD. Well, the examinations were necessarily ex parte, and officers representing the commission came before the committee and we attempted to determine whether a bureau or department could get along with less clerks, whether they are fairly efficient and all that. They usually come and plead that they have not sufficient cerks; that their clerks are efficient; and that they want more clerks and more pay.

Mr. WATSON. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that a stenographer was in my office and stated that her average day's work was writing four letters a day. Does the committee think that is sufficient energy displayed for eight hours' work?

Mr. GOOD. Who is that?

Mr. WATSON. A clerk in one of the departments. Also, another complained because there is not enough work to do and he was idle part of the time. It is all very well to save millions here and millions there, but it seems to me we ought to make an investigation and endeavor to create a spirit of economy in the various departments.

Mr. GOOD. So far as this item is concerned, I will say to the gentleman, in 1917 there was $550,000 paid out as compensation to employees who were injured. During the present year they have an appropriation of $2,654,000. Now, that work has been growing, and during the past year or two we have not given them any increased force, and in this bill, as I recall, we do not give them any increase of force at all, so far as stenographers and clerks are concerned. The amount to be expended next year for the compensation fund can be reduced somewhat from the amount carried in the bill. But the gentleman must know that that is a purely administrative thing. Whether or not a department has too many clerks, whether or not heads of bureaus violate the spirit of the law with regard to the use of automobiles and things of that kind, are all purely administrative.

Every effort that you may make to safeguard the Treasury, if the administrative head is inefficient, if he is wasteful, if he wants to violate the spirit of the law, is a failure if the administrative official is not efficient. It is impossible to enact a statute that will make a good official out of a poor one. It is an administrative matter, and I believe if in some of these departments we can get good administrative officials we can discharge many of these clerks. Take this very commission. The president of the commission is mad because the two other commissioners have ruled against him, and now he goes to the office of the commission only about once a month to draw his salary, and he does nothing. He has taken, as I recall, $200 or $300 of transportation script, which he has failed to return; and how in the name of common sense can the Congress right that wrong? The President's attention was called to it in a letter dated July 12 of last year stating that the commission was not functioning, but the President being sick nothing was done. Until the President acts we will only drift. Now, they may have too many clerks; I do not know. And so I say in other departments of the Government there is no way by which Members of Congress can tell just how many clerks are necessary to do a certain thing. What is needed is administrative efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Employees' compensation fund: For the payment of compensation provided by "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, including medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies provided by section 9, and the transportation and burial expenses provided by sections 9 and 11, $2,200,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 19, change "$2,200,000" to read "$2,000,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, that was the intention of the committee, but by an oversight the reduction was not made, but in the course of the hearings they say they can get along next year with $2,000,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I notice this item is to remain available until expended. There may have been some reason for that at one time or another, but this is for the current use of money?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, does not the gentleman from Iowa know that it is a bad policy to make current appropriations available until expended?

Mr. GOOD. I think as a general rule it is not wise and there is no very good reason for it here. In fact there is no real reason for a commission to administer a law like this. One officer could administer as well as the commission, but here is a law that fixes the exact amount, and I have no objections as far as I am personally concerned to those words going out.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, by striking out, in line 19, page 31, the language "to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will offer mine after the other amendment is agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 31, line 19, after the figures "$2,200,000" strike out "to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, funeral and other incidental expenses (including transportation of remains) of deceased trainees of the board; printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office; law books, books of reference, and periodicals; $65,000,000, together with the unexpended balances of the appropriations for this purpose for the fiscal years 1920 and 1921, of which sums not exceeding $5,000 may be expended for rent of quarters in the District of Columbia if space is not provided by the Public Buildings Commission: Provided, That the salary limitations placed upon the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 19, 1919, modified as provided by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 5, 1920, shall apply to the appropriation herein made.

Mr. FESS and Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FESS: Page 32, line 8, after the figures "1921," insert the following: "of which sum not exceeding $500,000 may be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education as a revolving fund for the purpose of making loans and advancements to persons commencing or undergoing training under the vocational rehabilitation act, such loans or advancements to bear no interest and to be repaid in such installments as may be determined by the Federal board by proper deductions from the monthly maintenance and support allowance allowed by said act as amended."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I shall not make it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the committee to this item, which I will concede is subject to a point of order if the point of order is made, but I think the committee would like to have it put in. In the administration of the rehabilitation work there were many applicants for rehabilitation that were entirely without funds, and therefore had to rely upon some outside help to get them started, since the Government could pay nothing until the service was rendered. We did not provide for it in the original rehabilitation act because we did not foresee that situation. There was a provision, however, in the rehabilitation act to allow the board to receive donations or loans, a matter that some of us thought was more or less questionable at the time, and yet which proved to be of very great importance later on. We found in the administration of the act that a great number of disabled men could not enter because of a lack of funds. Under this provision of the law permitting the board to accept loans or donations the Order of Elks took up this work and loaned to the board $200,000 to be used for this particular purpose. At one time they made an outright donation. Later on they found that the administration was of great importance. Therefore they proceeded with loans, and when we had this investigation of the work of the board the head of the Elks appeared there under solicitation and made a very remarkably important statement of the work of the Elks in connection with this work. He stated that the records at the time, on February 28 of the year 1919, showed there were approximately 26,000 boys in training. He showed there had been 22,574 separate cases in which these boys had received financial assistance from the Elks' fund. The total amount loaned up to the time was $404,340.80, of which amount up to that time had been repaid $268,587.64.

The need of this would come about in this way. A boy would need clothing, or he did not have the ready money, and would have to borrow it or else depend upon charity, or else be deprived of the training for the first month. Therefore the Elks' fund was offered to bridge him over. There were other cases where other things were needed that would shut the boys out. The representative of the Elks' fund stated that the Order of Elks did not care to continue this unless the Congress did not see fit to come in and satisfy the needs. He stated, as many other members of the committee stated, that that item had been overlooked. No one had foreseen it. Congress did not want to be put in the position that some outside order would have to be called upon to supply in form of loans a certain amount of money to make effective the administration of this particular law. The Order of Elks has withdrawn its further support. The board has no fund except what is appropriated regularly. This appropriation that this item carries is sufficient—$65,000,000, as stated by the chairman of the committee. I think there is no question about that. But we ask that you direct $500,000 of that money to be used as a revolving fund, out of which they can loan or advance, with the understanding that it is to be returned whenever they can pay it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I would like one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Our past experience is not discomforting. It has been returned. I said that this, of course, is subject to a point or order. If it is made, it can not be resisted; it will have to go out, but I seriously hope this feature will be allowed to remain in the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it intended that this money shall be loaned only to those who take training, so that the payment shall be made out of the subsequent compensation to them?

Mr. FESS. Yes; it is limited to those who take training.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. When this matter was presented the committee was advised that out of the Elks' fund there had been altogether about 22,000 loans made, and loans had been made to something like 12,000 of the soldiers that were taking this training. The committee called the attention to those at the head of this organization to the fact that there was no authority of law for the provision which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has submitted in his amendment. And the Committee on Appropriations has scrupulously avoided the placing of new legislation upon this bill when that could be avoided and the Treasury protected. Some legislation has been necessary, as heretofore, in the administration of the appropriation, but further than that we have not attempted to enlarge upon the legislative scope of the bill. Now, the committee was also advised that the Order of Elks would withdraw the support at once. They felt that they had other need for their funds.

An officer came to the committee, and we labored with him, and we said to him that we understood this matter was to be presented to the legislative committee; that possibly there would be some legislation; that there ought to be no change at least until the beginning of the next year. With that understanding I supposed that the matter would either be taken up by the Committee on Education or would be offered here; and personally, while it is subject to a point of order, I do not intend to make it, because I assume that committee has taken the matter up and done what the Committee on Appropriations did not do, and that is, to go into the merits of the case, to see whether or not the loans of this kind are for the best interests of the men and of the Government. I personally do not care to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. FESS. The committee did make an investigation of that kind and wants it to be continued.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to have any extensive knowledge on this subject, but I think an item to loan money to an individual without security in the form of national funds, no matter who the individual is, which goes through Congress as a matter of course and without consideration, would have a tendency to be rather disastrous to the National Treasury. It may be that after careful consideration of the subject we ought to engage in such an enterprise, but I can imagine nothing more wasteful or extravagant than to start in on such a course, which is demanded by every poor man in the country——

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In just a second. I did not interrupt the gentleman. That the Government should loan him money without security. Most of them say, "If I had security, I could get it anyway." I admit that we owe a greater debt to the men who served in the Army and Navy than to those who stayed at home.

Now I yield to my friend.

Mr. FESS. I agree entirely with the gentleman in that statement, that it is an awfully bad policy. The only protection that we have here is that the Government pays this boy a certain amount per month and we can take the money from the payment. Therefore it is a security. You see the Government pays him for his subsistence a hundred dollars a month, and if married $120 a month.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the Government is paying him the money which he has to turn back, he does not need a loan.

Mr. FESS. He does not get it until he starts in.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He never will get all of it. The moment you commence it, it will be used here as an illustration, and you will hear it every day. Every poor farmer in the country—I will not say every one, because some of them have too much sense—and every poor laborer wants to borrow money out of the Treasury; everywhere in the world the man who has not got anything wants to borrow money without security. It may be that we ought to do it, but we ought not to do it without consideration. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] knows about this matter. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says he knows about the matter.

Mr. GOOD. No; that is not quite what I said.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Elks know about the matter. The Members of this House do not know about the matter. Let it be brought up in an orderly way, where the Members can give consideration to the merits of the proposition, and, if they want, let them differentiate it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, instead of this being a loan to the boys, it is really an advance to them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All I know about it is that it is denominated a loan without interest.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. That is an improper designation. It is advanced to the boys, because our Government is slow in getting to them the money that is due them. This is an advance to keep them living until they get their money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order on the amendment. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FESS. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct attention to lines 7 and 8. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to ask the gentleman how much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation referred to there will be at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. Ten million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the amount covered by this bill is the estimate; and if not, how much deficiency there is likely to be?

Mr. GOOD. It is almost the estimate, with the unexpended balance. The amount estimated was $78,000,000, and they figure now that there will be an unexpended balance of $10,500,000, leaving about $67,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman thinks it unlikely that there will be any deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. I should rather judge so, because they overestimated it by $10,500,000 last year, and we have given them within three million of what they estimated.

Mr. HASTINGS. How much did we give them last year?

Mr. GOOD. Forty-six million dollars.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa, What does he think about the efficiency of this vocational board, anyhow?

Mr. GOOD. When the committee that had to do with the subject went into the question of the efficiency of this organization the Committee on Appropriations retired from that field of activity and gave no further consideration to the question of efficiency. I have regarded the work done by this board as a great work. I have felt at times that it was not measuring up to the full measure of responsibility which Congress placed on it; that it was in a way wasteful; that its methods were not practical; and I think my opinion in that respect has been partly, at least, sustained by the findings of the Committee on Education, that did investigate the workings of the board.

Mr. RAYBURN. Just how long does he think the Treasury will be able to stand the strain of these fellows in charge of this bureau if they are allowed all the money they ask and are allowed to spend it in the way they want to spend it and keep up the system of appearing to want to make a showing more in numbers of men treated in that bureau than in the kind of treatment that the men get?

Mr. GOOD. I am afraid this whole system is going to come to its test if we should have a period of unemployment, because then a great number of ex-soldiers will want to take training; a great many that will not be strictly entitled to training will want to take it because of the compensation allowed.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will they not do that if the invitation is constantly held out to them by a bureau that wants to make a showing simply in numbers instead of in the character of work done?

Mr. GOOD. That may be true; but after all, I believe this is one of the best works that the Government can engage in, to rehabilitate these men.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; if the work were done as Congress intended it to be done; but I do not think anybody will contend for a moment that this vocational board is doing its work in the way that Congress intended it to do it.

Mr. GOOD. That may be so.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the work of the Federal Power Commission as authorized by law, including not exceeding $500 for books of reference and periodicals, $100,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. SNELL. I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to this Federal Power Commission. As I understand, this is the commission created under the water power act passed last year.

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Just what is this commission doing at the present time?

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will allow me, I can answer that question.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who perhaps has kept more closely in touch with the work of this commission than I have.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Power Commission was organized shortly after the enactment of the water power bill. It is composed of the Secretary of War, Secretary of Agriculture, and Secretary of the Interior. They have established a personnel within the limits of the appropriation, which is only $100,000. Since they have been organized there have been 134 applications for water-power development in the United States, aggregating possibly 10,000,000 horsepower. The trouble is that with the small personnel allowed under the small appropriation they are not able to make the preliminary surveys and thus expedite the construction of water-power plants. We have a bill before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce upon which a hearing will be had possibly this week, the purpose of which is to try and meet that situation.

Mr. SNELL. What I had in mind was to find out how much they intended to expend, and how large an organization would be necessary in order for them to supervise and carry out the provisions of the act properly.

Mr. ESCH. When we passed the original act we thought they might get along by having transferred to them the engineering personnel of the three departments, but we have found in actual experience that the engineering forces of those three departments are so much taken up with their own work that they can give little or no attention to the water-power commission.

Mr. SNELL. I noticed in reading the hearings that that was the condition which was stated to exist, but I supposed that we had plenty of engineers in connection with the War Department who could make the necessary preliminary estimates to be presented to this commission.

Mr. ESCH. We have not. One engineer officer has been detailed to act with the water-power commission.

Mr. SNELL. I take it from the hearings that they think it necessary to have a personnel costing perhaps half a million dollars a year to do this work.

Mr. ESCH. Very likely, but the gentleman must remember that under the water power act we authorized the commission to make charges for the development of water power, and that will develop a fund which will meet this expense.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman thinks that eventually we will get enough return to meet that?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman thinks it is necessary to have so large a personnel?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; and unless it is created soon, all water-power development will be deferred.

Mr. SNELL. But we are not going to get the help out of the departments that we expected we would get?

Mr. ESCH. No; we are not.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I wanted to find out. Of course, I want the commission to be able to do the work required, but am sorry it will be necessary to spend quite so much money for additional engineers, and so forth, when we have so many now in the Government employ.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 32, at the end of line 24, insert: "Provided further, That no portion of this appropriation shall be available for any expense connected with the leasing for private use of any water-power facilities in any national park."

Mr. GOOD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I think the attention of all of us has been called to the situation with reference to the leasing of water power in the national parks. I believe quite inadvertently on the part of most of us the water-power bill was allowed to pass containing provisions which render it possible for water power in the national parks to be commercialized. At the present time the only thing which prevents such a course of action is the position taken by the Water Power Commission, who have declared it, as I understand, to be their purpose not to permit the leasing or development of water power in the national parks for private uses. However, there is a widespread apprehension that the mere announcement of a policy by the present Water Power Commission is not a sufficient guaranty against the possibility of such use of water power in the national parks.

In addition to that, we all know that there are bills pending here which appear constantly upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, to which vigilant objections must be made in order to prevent their consideration and whose direct purpose is to authorize the use of the water power in the national parks for commercial purposes. I think the apprehension which is felt so extensively throughout the country would be allayed by the adoption of this amendment, establishing the policy that the Congress does not intend that the natural resources in the national parks shall be commercialized for private use.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I notice the gentleman uses the word "private." Does he want to include municipal uses?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Suppose some city or village or municipality wanted to have a lease of water power or wanted to get water-power privileges, is the gentleman's amendment broad enough to cover that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it is. I think that, as far as the National Government is concerned, use for a municipality would be a private use.

Mr. MADDEN. There is a provision in the law that exempts municipalities from the payment of fees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; but I think this amendment would prevent the use of water power in national parks by a municipality as well as by individuals and private corporations.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The question would be whether the municipal use would be a public use or private use. That would be a question of construction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If there is any doubt about it, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the words "for private use."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment so that it will read as follows: Page 32, line 24, after the word "commission," insert "Provided further, That no portion of this appropriation shall be available for any expense connected with the leasing of any water-power facilities in any national park."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it the purpose of my colleague to prevent the development of any water power that might happen to exist in the national parks?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Exactly; not only to prevent developing it but to prevent leasing it, so that the parks may not be commercialized for that purpose. I will say this, that if representatives of the National Government find it necessary to develop some power for their own use within the park, that would not come within the amendment, but any development of any water power in any national park to be utilized and extended outside of the park would come within the prohibition.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman's object is to prevent the utilization of water power that may exist in national parks that could be used for the benefit of a citizen of this country who might make use of it, and to preserve the park for the benefit of those who may go there to see the park?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My object is to have the national parks maintained for their natural scenery.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to modify his amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding to it the words "and national monuments."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For five commissioners, at $10,000 each; secretary, $5,000; in all, $55,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, this provides for the salary of five commissioners at $10,000 each. In my efforts a moment ago to try to get Congress to cease the policy of giving high-salaried Government employees hundreds of automobiles and maintaining them at Government expense all over the United States, unfortunately I referred to them as department heads and bureau chiefs. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, in playing upon words, tried to draw a legal distinction between tweedledum and tweedledee and called attention to the fact that there were no bureau chiefs drawing such high salaries.

The people of the United States think of the high-salaried officers of the United States Government and of the department heads as heads of bureaus, regardless of what bureaus mean to the Members of Congress. We know that there are 10 departments of Government, and at the head of each is a Secretary, a member of the Cabinet, drawing a salary of $12,000 a year. That was the point I was making when the distinguished gentleman from Illinois intimated that if the employees of the Government drew as much salary as the gentleman from Texas, to wit, $7,500 a year, they could buy their own automobiles, and yet the very point I was making was that many of the ones who are furnished automobiles are drawing more than a Member of Congress—the heads of our 10 departments are drawing $12,000 apiece. I did not have opportunity then, but I tried to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that in this very bill he was seeking to renew the salaries of various individuals at high figures which he, by his vote, had caused to be fixed at high figures.

Now, I want to call attention to some of these high salaries in this bill. Five commissioners of the Federal Trade Commission, at $10,000 a year each. Eleven members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, at $12,000 a year each. Nine members of the Railroad Labor Board, at $10,000 a year each. Seven members of the Shipping Board, at $12,000 a year each. Six members of the Tariff Commission, at $7,500 a year each.

I do this only to prevent the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois from absolutely squelching me in the RECORD, for when the gentleman from Illinois jumps on a man on the floor the man usually had better take his medicine and sit down. I am not so timid as some of my colleagues, for I will answer the distinguished gentleman, although I do it at a great disadvantage.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas is the last man in the House whom I would seek to squelch or whom I desire to keep still. I think he is a valuable man in the House in talking and working, although sometimes I think he talks too much. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Having gotten the record straight, I will take the gentleman's advice and quit. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory, and construction of additional buildings necessary in connection therewith; maintenance and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; and purchase, maintenance, and operation of one passenger-carrying motor cycle; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for clerical, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, shall not exceed $50,000; in all, $260,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I do not know whether it is provided for by law or not. I do not know when this was named the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory. That probably may be a very good name.

Mr. GOOD. It is authorized by the naval act for the year 1916. It is a permanent authorization.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. For what? For a national advisory committee? But I take it not for all of the purposes named in this paragraph—certainly not all of them. Outside of that I would like to ask a question. I know this is said to be scientific work, and I would like the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] for a moment. Here is the proposition: We have now an aeronautical service in the Navy, an aeronautical service in the Army, an aeronautical service in the Post Office Department, and a proposition for an aeronautical service under the Smithsonian Institution, or wherever it is to be—under a special permit. I suppose all of these services do some good, and yet there is no one who does not know there might be some combination between these different services, but instead of having a combination we have a tendency to separate and spread out still more. These are not the only ones who are doing this work. Why can not this be stopped? The war is not going on, and while the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] may later report upon this subject, I should think he would now have enough information to know that it is not necessary to have four branches of the Government working at the same thing.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I have information enough to tell the gentleman that through the kindness of the President in losing the resolution for reorganization, this thing can be stopped, and that the purpose of the resolution was to appoint a committee to ascertain wherein these foolishly expensive duplications consisted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What does the gentleman mean by the President "losing" the resolution?

Mr. REAVIS. The press had it that the resolution for reorganization became a law because the President "lost" it, until after the 10 days had expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I thought the gentleman meant that the resolution had been really lost. If it is a press story, then it ought not to be taken seriously. The President allowed the gentleman to function, and that is the most thankful thing that the gentleman can find in any of the President's recent actions.

Mr. REAVIS. The President has not allowed the gentleman to function, because he has no particular desire to do so; but the President has doubtless allowed the commission to function, which I hope will bring something before the Congress that will answer the gentleman's question about why these duplications can not stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Nebraska in his investigation, which covers all branches of the Government service, will probably not find any in the thousands of services investigated to which he will be able to give as much needed attention as he can to these four plain cases right now.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I will state to the gentleman that with reference to the duplication of these various services on aeronautics, three of them have already been to me to assure me of the utter necessity of each particular service being continued, and not being done away with.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the fourth one is in this bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Probably they have not yet had time to reach me.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, undoubtedly they have a good friend somewhere.

Mr. REAVIS. But they are on their way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether there is any hope of ever stopping any of the duplications, but I make the point of order anyway.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is a good place to stop it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order on the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point?

Mr. GOOD. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That it is not authorized by law. Of course, there are special things in the paragraph that are subject to a point of order, but I will not take them up separately.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the naval appropriation act, approved March 3, 1915, contains the following provision:

An advisory committee for aeronautics is hereby established, and the President is authorized to appoint not to exceed 12 members, to consist of two members from the War Department, from the office in charge of military aeronautics; two members from the Navy Department, from the office in charge of naval aeronautics; a representative each of the Smithsonian Institution, of the United States Weather Bureau, and of the United States Bureau of Standards; together with not more than five additional persons who shall be acquainted with the needs of aeronautical science, either civil or military, or skilled in aeronautical engineering or its allied sciences: Provided, That the members of the advisory committee for aeronautics, as such, shall serve without compensation: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the advisory committee for aeronautics to supervise and direct the scientific study of the problems of flight, with a view to their practical solution, and to determine the problems which should be experimentally attacked, and to discuss their solution and their application to practical questions. In the event of a laboratory or laboratories, either in whole or in part, being placed under the direction of the committee, the committee may direct and conduct research and experiment in aeronautics in such laboratory or laboratories: And provided further, That rules and regulations for the conduct of the work of the committee shall be formulated by the committee and approved by the President.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose a great deal of money—more money was wasted during the war with regard to aeroplanes and aeronautics than anything else. The Committee on Appropriations listened very patiently to the scientific men who came before it; men who are giving their time, without one cent of compensation, like Dr. Ames, of the Johns Hopkins University, and men of his character; men whose standing in the scientific world can not be questioned, and they impressed the committee with the fact that they are attempting at least to solve the big military as well as civil question with regard to aeronautics. And scientific problem with regard to aeronautics, whether the plane is to be used for carrying mail or in the Army or the Navy, is to be studied there and there only. That scientific problem, it was intended, should be solved here. I think it was the purpose of the Naval Committee in so reporting this bill so that duplication of this kind of work could be avoided, and I commend the committee for its work in providing for this establishment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I recall the act of Congress distinctly, and we supposed this service would end. We understand that the same sort of service is being performed in the Navy Department now under an appropriation made directly in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. Well, it certainly ought not to be. The service was provided here and provided at the commission's expense. The gentleman knows men like Dr. Ames are performing this service without any compensation at all. They have a field down here—Langley Field. There is a change in this respect, but if it is objectionable we will take that part out.

Mr. BUTLER. If an appropriation is to be made in this bill for that service, if I have anything to do with the naval appropriation bill, I certainly would see it was taken out.

Mr. GOOD. Here are men like Dr. Walcott, who receive no compensation at all; men like Dr. Stratton, of the Bureau of Standards, who receives no compensation for that work, and they say it is desirable work and work that ought to be done. Certainly we ought to know something about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I thought I was discussing the point of order. I am discussing the proposition——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is discussing the merits of the paragraph, but the Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Iowa if there has been any amendment to the act to which he referred in the beginning of his remarks when he was discussing a point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know of any. I will say to the Chair that there may be some legislation in this paragraph, but if there is objection to changing the name of the field to the Langley Field—that is the place where the laboratory is located and there is a large field there that was established in memory of Prof. Langley—that may be legislation. I will say to the gentleman that I am just advised that the President has changed the name of the field, and this amendment is in conformity with the Executive order which changes the name of the field, and therefore it would not be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the act referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, and he finds there is a paragraph in the act referred to by the gentleman which reads as follows:

That the sum of $5,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for five years is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for experimental work and investigation undertaken by the committee, clerical expenses and supplies, necessary expenses of the members of the committee in going to and returning from and while attending meetings of the committee: Provided, That an annual report to Congress shall be submitted to the President, including an itemized account of expenses.

The Chair also notes that the paragraph in the bill carries language for the construction of additional buildings necessary in connection with the equipment, maintenance, and operation of the aeronautical laboratory. In the view of the Chair that language of the paragraph goes beyond the authorization of the law and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Will the Chair indulge me for a minute? I would like to amend the provision, because I think there is no provision in the bill that will save more money than this provision here; and I would like to know in what respect the Chair rules the paragraph is legislation. Because the paragraph the Chair has read did make provision for five years, it seems to me it can not be reasoned from that fact that at the conclusion of the five years the appropriation should then remain at $5,000. Does it not fix a permanent agency? Here is a permanent agency, and for the first five years only was there a limitation on the expenditure, but no limitation after that. I will ask the Chair if the building down there of one large wind tunnel with quite extensive apparatus for making scientific investigations in regard to aeronautics is not permanent. Last year we appropriated $200,000 for that purpose, which was to carry on that work, and the position we have taken was that that was only limited for the first five years. Now, if the Chair will indulge me, I would like to ask the Chair if that is the provision, the limitation of $5,000, to which he refers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that one of the provisions which does not conform to existing law is an authorization with reference to the construction of an additional building in connection with the maintenance and operation of the laboratory, and the Chair is not prepared to state that because an authorization limits an appropriation to a certain sum each year for a stated definite term that at the expiration of that period there is continued an authorization for appropriating money beyond that fixed in the limitation. It might well have been that the intention that this work was to continue for five years required a further authorization for its continuance beyond that period.

Mr. GOOD. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the first paragraph of the law itself provided that if there were a laboratory or laboratory place there that the money should be available for their operation. Here is the laboratory, and they have already constructed a wind tunnel. The law provides that in the event such laboratory or laboratories are there in whole or in part it should be placed under the direction of the committee and they were directed to conduct research and experiments in aeronautics in such laboratory or laboratories.

The CHAIRMAN. But that language would not seem to authorize the construction of laboratories above the amount appropriated. In the Chair's opinion it says that if the laboratories are placed, they are placed there under the direction of the committee. Certainly, the gentleman will not contend that that is broad enough language to authorize the construction of additional laboratories.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the Chair allow me to suggest?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The laboratories were to be constructed under the direction of the War Department and direction of the Navy Department. I would like to ask if we have not extensive laboratories——

Mr. GOOD. Where have they got a 6-foot wind tunnel in the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They have one at Dayton, Ohio.

Mr. GOOD. No; they have not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They have wind caves.

I do not know the size of it. They have all the facilities for demonstration——

Mr. GOOD. They have facilities——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. At Dayton, Ohio.

Mr. GOOD. No; they have not all the facilities for demonstration at Dayton, Ohio, or anywhere else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for administrative purposes, the payment of claims arising from the cancellation of contracts, damage charges and miscellaneous adjustments, maintenance and operation of vessels, the completion of vessels now under construction, and for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920, shall be paid from the following sources: (a) The amount on hand July 1, 1921; (b) the amount received during the fiscal year 1922 from the operation of ships; and (c) not to exceed $55,000,000 from deferred payments on ships sold prior to the approval of this act, from plant and material sold during the fiscal year 1922, and from ships sold during the fiscal year 1922: Provided, That after the approval of this act no contract shall be entered into or work undertaken for the construction of any additional vessels for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I make the point of order against the language on page 39, lines 23 and 24; on page 40, lines 1 and 2; and in line 22, page 39.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order on the language indicated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I could not understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the language.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The language contained on page 39, beginning with lines 23 and 24, and on page 40, lines 1 and 2, and line 3, to the figures "1922," and also in line 22, page 39, beginning after the word "sources."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order upon the language contained in the paragraph, beginning with line 22, "the amount on hand July 1, 1921," down to and including the figures "1922," page 40, line 3.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A point of order was also made on the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make a point of order on the whole paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. It is subject to a point of order. I concede it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No contracts for ship construction to be entered into shall provide that the compensation of the contractor shall be the cost of construction plus a percentage thereof for profit, or plus a fixed fee for profit.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to inquire if it would not be highly proper to strike out the last four paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand the paragraph just now, to which a point of order was made, was made on the ground that it changes existing law, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] conceded that the point of order was good. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa just how far he intended to go as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations under the present rules of the House in the matter of bringing in legislation on appropriation bills?

Mr. GOOD. The provision that is carried in the bill was similar to the provision now in existing law, placed in there with the intention to compel the Shipping Board to sell the ships as Congress had directed them to do. So far as the chairman is concerned—I can not speak for the committee—I am willing to go to almost any length to compel the Shipping Board, which is an agency of the Government, to do what Congress has many times directed it should do.

Mr. GARNER. I have no quarrel with the gentleman as to the merits of his proposition. What I am trying to get at, and what I think the House is entitled to know, is how far the Appropriations Committee, as now constituted under the rules, is going to undertake to invade the rules of this House?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As far as the Appropriations Committee always has while the gentleman from Texas has graced the floor of the House.

Mr. GARNER. I did not ask the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman was foxy. He was trying to put a gentleman in the hole. He can not put me in a hole.

Mr. GARNER. I can not put the gentleman from Illinois in a hole. I will admit that. I am trying to get information so that the House can understand just how far this committee, which I helped to create, is going toward continuing a policy of bringing in legislation on appropriation bills?

Mr. GOOD. I am sorry I can not speak for the committee.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say to the gentleman as one who helped to create that committee and believes in that policy, and believes it would redound to the economy in the conduct of the business of the House, if your committee is going to usurp the powers of other committees of the House I am in favor of going back to the old rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CALDWELL. I make a point of order against the paragraph. It is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the paragraph has been read, debate has been had upon it, and it is too late to make the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the funds of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1922 if suitable space is provided for the said corporation by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. It is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this language in the bill seems to be in the nature of a limitation upon the use of funds.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the Chair please, if the Chair will hear me, under the Holman rule there must be a tendency to reduce the amount to be expended. Under this there is no tendency of that kind but an increase.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Chair will notice this is not a limitation upon the appropriation at all. A limitation upon the appropriation is in order. This is not a limitation upon the appropriation. There is no appropriation. It is a limitation upon funds the Shipping Board has. I think it ought to be in the bill. I do not suppose it makes a cent's worth of difference one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands corrected. It refers to an appropriation other than that contained in the bill, and therefore it is merely legislation, and not a limitation on the appropriation bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the funds made available in this act for the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, or publication of any bulletins, newspapers, magazines, or periodicals, or for services in connection with same, not including preparation and printing of reports or documents authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 17 to 22, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 40, line 17, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 17 and ending with line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Museum, $534,120.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I call attention to the total. While it is not important, the total here is incorrect. The total for the National Museum should be "$415,120." Whoever made the computation included in the total the Astrophysical Observatory. That is on page 42, line 14, the total.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; my attention was called to that by a letter. It should be "$415,120."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; the same as it is now.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move, on line 14, page 42, to strike out "$534,120" and insert "$415,120."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: On page 42, line 14, strike out "$534,120" and insert "$415,120."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission, including purchase and exchange of labor-saving devices, the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, and periodicals as may be necessary, as authorized under Title VII of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, $300,000.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DENISON. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee, if he is able to do so, to tell us how much has been appropriated by Congress for the use of the Tariff Commission?

Mr. GOOD. One million four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. DENISON. Since its creation?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; since the creation of this Tariff Commission.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. There was some appropriation for a former Tariff Commission, which was abolished, and since the creation of this present Tariff Commission the appropriations have amounted to $1,400,000.

Mr. DENISON. Can the chairman give the House the benefit of his information as to what work the commission is accomplishing, and whether it is turning any output that may be of any benefit to the country?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. The commission, as I understand, during the past year has made a great many studies with regard to numerous questions upon which a tariff is based, preparatory to the work of helping the Committee on Ways and Means, so far as its investigations are concerned. The commission is not permitted under the law to make recommendations with regard to tariffs, or any matter of that kind. Its only function is to ascertain the facts and report the facts. They have made studies on a great many articles and a great many subjects, both here and abroad; and my recollection is that there were something like 40 or 50 pamphlets printed during the year, giving the results of those investigations. They asked for $500,000, but under the law they are limited to $300,000, which is the amount they have had every year since the creation of the commission save one.

Mr. DENISON. You do not mean that this commission came in and wanted $200,000 more than was authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. They have asked for $200,000 more than was authorized by law for several years.

Mr. DENISON. What is the salary of the commissioners?

Mr. GOOD. Each member of the commission under the law receives a salary of $7,500, and the secretary to the commission receives a salary of $5,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will say that the commission has now almost finished a report on practically every paragraph contained in the present tariff law, and with reference to every article that might be subject to a tariff, for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means and for the use of Members of the House. I mention that particularly at this time, for the use of such Members of the House as desire at this time to study up the tariff question in advance and prepare themselves on the various sections of a tariff measure which will doubtless be taken up in the summer.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman thinks these investigations will be of real service to the committee in the preparation of a new tariff bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes. These investigations have been of great service to the committee. We could not do without them unless we had some force of our own in the committee to make the investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] a question, if I may be permitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] how is this matter published or distributed that is printed by the Tariff Commission? How is it obtained? I understand it is at the service of the Committee on Ways and Means. Is it at the service of the average Member of Congress, and if so, how is it obtained?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These reports are printed separately, something like the reports made with reference to tungsten, and with reference to laboratory glass, and other matters that came up at the last session of Congress in the House. They are printed in the form of pamphlets.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How are they obtained?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman can obtain them of the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a fact that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FORDNEY] introduced a resolution authorizing the publication of several thousand copies of the various pamphlets from the Tariff Commission?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct, and the printing of these documents is now carried on as a part of the printing of the Ways and Means Committee, because I understand the Tariff Commission claim that they have exhausted the funds that they have for the purpose of printing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The reason of my inquiry was this: I thought obviously they would send these reports of their scientific findings to the several Members of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think that would be advisable as a blanket proposition, because a great many Members would not care to go through them, and it would be a great deal of work for Members to do so; but probably each Member has some particular item as to which he would like information. If so, he can obtain a report on the particular subject in which he is interested by applying to the clerk of the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the law does not the commission make a report to the President on these matters, and is not that what the law requires?

Mr. GARNER. No; the law requires them, when directed, to make reports to the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate may have them directly by requesting them, but does not the law require them as a matter of course to make their reports to the President? Sometimes their reports are transmitted to Congress. I occasionally get one through the document room.

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to the gentleman from Virginia and other members of the committee that they will recall probably that this item was opposed by some of the Members of the House two years ago and even a year ago. That opposition seems to have faded away. It may arise again after the information given by the Tariff Commission to the next Congress, or it may not. If this commission fulfills its mission as the Members of the House who created it hope it will, I imagine they will give it all the money that it may need to continue its work. It largely depends upon its activities, and what the House may approve within the next six months.

Mr. GARRETT rose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the reports of the Tariff Commission are satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I am sure they will not be satisfactory to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. I move to strike out the last two words, in order to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, not the suggestion he has just made.

Section 703 provides that—

The commission shall put at the disposal of the President of the United States, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance of the Senate, whenever requested, all information at its command.

There does not seem to be anything in the act which requires it to report to anybody in particular.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was under the impression that there was a provision in the act requiring them to report to the President. I think they make an annual report.

Mr. GARRETT. That may be. I have read the provisions of the statute.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I think the commission have made a practice of attempting to distribute their reports by sending letters to Congressmen asking them whether they desired a particular report. I think every Member of Congress will recall receiving such letters.

Mr. GARRETT. I know that has been done in some cases.

Mr. GOOD. If gentlemen want to clear this matter up, the law provides that the duties of the commission shall be—among other things—

And, in general, to investigate the operation of customs laws, including their relation to the Federal revenues, their effect upon the industries and labor of the country, and to submit reports of its investigations as hereafter provided.

Mr. GARNER. "Hereafter provided" means when they are called upon by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, the Finance Committee of the Senate, or the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and installation of fire escapes, $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct a typographical error in the spelling of the word "escapes," in line 12, page 45.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance reservations, civilian schools: For the maintenance and operation of schools for children on ordnance reservations, $28,500.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 46, after line 8, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Nitrate plant. For continuing construction of locks, dams, power house, and appurtenances authorized by the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, $10,000,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] wanted to make it, and I only reserve it in the momentary absence of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Pending that I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this amendment be postponed until we reach the end of line 8, page 166. That is the end of the bill, excepting the Panama Canal and a few other items. There are many Members who want to be present when this matter comes up.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am informed by one or two Members who are very anxious to vote on this proposition that they are likely to leave within the next day or two.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if I understood the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]——

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Iowa made any request?

Mr. GOOD. I asked unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee be postponed until we reach the item "Panama Canal," at the end of line 8, on page 166.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee be postponed until after line 8, page 166, is reached. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

Mr. QUIN. I object.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee? I understand from the gentleman from Wyoming that the veto message of the President, as to the war-finance legislation, will be voted on immediately after the reading of the Journal tomorrow morning. If that is true, this is a very important matter, and I imagine that every Member of the House would like to be present, and I suggest that this be taken up immediately after the veto message is disposed of and that we vote upon it.

Mr. GOOD. If we can not postpone it to the end of the bill I think we had better go to the mat now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman make his point of order that it may be settled now.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I have agreed with certain Members of the House that there shall be pretty liberal debate on this amendment, and that it will take at least two hours, and it would come in immediately after the disposition of the veto message anyway.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have investigated this matter as thoroughly as I could in the time I have had at my disposal, and while my purpose was to urge the point of order to the amendment, I have satisfied myself that it is within the rule and is not subject to a point of order. Therefore, I shall not press the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa how long he expects to run this evening?

Mr. GOOD. I thought we ought to run until about 6 o'clock.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. GOOD. We ought to begin the new year right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I take it that there is going to be more or less extended discussion on this amendment. If we are not to conclude it this evening, it seems to me that it might be possible, if the entire committee is willing, to put it off until to-morrow after the disposition of the veto message and then consider and dispose of it.

Mr. GOOD. How much time does the gentleman feel will be required on that side of the House in favor of the amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have had a number speak to me, but I am not able to answer the question. It has been suggested that we have an hour and a half on a side.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to two hours, one-half to those speaking in favor of the amendment and one-half to those opposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by those in favor of the amendment and one-half by those opposed. Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. To save time, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The gentleman from Tennessee has two minutes remaining of his five minutes on the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this proposition was discussed quite fully under general debate. The amendment which I have offered seeks to provide the funds necessary to continue the work now in progress on this dam at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River. I do not know that there is anything I can add to what I said at that time in support of this amendment.

Under section 124 of the national defense act the President of the United States was authorized to select a site and to construct a nitrate plant for the purpose of manufacturing explosives and fertilizer and other useful products, and also to select a site to begin the construction of dams, locks, power house, and other appurtenances necessary in his judgment for the operation of the plant.

Under that authority a commission was appointed, consisting of several members of the Cabinet and others who made an investigation of all sites available for the purposes indicated and reported to the President of the United States, and he selected a site at Muscle Shoals, near Florence, Ala., for a nitrate plant. The plant was commenced and has now been completed. More than $70,000,000 was expended in the construction of plant No. 2, and nearly $15,000,000 was expended in the construction of plant No. 1. A steam-power plant was also erected in connection with the plants.

Acting also under that authority the President in February, 1918, ordered that a dam be constructed, and he has allotted from the national-defense fund $17,000,000 for commencing the construction of that dam. Twelve million dollars of that sum has been expended up to the present time, and those in charge of it state that by June 1 of next year the remaining $5,000,000 will have been expended, and unless Congress makes a further appropriation the work on the dam must stop at that time.

They have there now an organization of more than 4,000 laborers employed. Very large sums have been spent in work necessary as a preliminary to the construction of such a large dam—in preparing the hillsides on either side of the river, laying necessary trackage, placing a number of cofferdams, constructing a temporary bridge, providing temporary shelter for the large force of men employed, and other preliminary work necessary in so great an undertaking. The dam is now 30 per cent completed. Col. Hugh L. Cooper, consulting engineer, in charge of the work, and Gen. Taylor state that if the work is stopped it will involve a loss of more than $4,000,000. In addition to that, the Government will run the risk of losing all the money that has been expended in the way of cofferdams and other property belonging to the Government which is necessary to construct the dam if a flood should occur.

It is inconceivable to me that Congress intends to abandon this work. Everybody agrees that the Government should maintain the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals as a war emergency, because you gentlemen all know that when this war broke out we were absolutely dependent on Chilean nitrates for the manufacture of explosives. We were in a precarious situation, because if anything had happened to cut off the base of our supplies, or anything had happened to interfere with the shipment of these supplies on the high seas we would have been in a very unfortunate situation so far as the war was concerned.

The act which was passed in 1916, the national defense act, recognized that the interest and safety of our Government depended on maintaining that plant in time of peace, and it was therefore provided that this plant should be constructed not only with a view of providing explosives but with a view of manufacturing fertilizer and other useful products, if the Government should deem it necessary and proper to do so. If you do not make this appropriation and construct the dam, you can not run that plant in peace times. Everyone is agreed that steam power is too expensive, and that you must have the cheaper water power if you expect to manufacture nitrates for commercial purposes. The result will be, if you stop this work on June 1 or sooner, by failing to make this appropriation, the Government will have a large investment there of $85,000,000 which you expect to be maintained as a war emergency, lying idle, depreciating both as to its machinery and its buildings and requiring a large and expensive guard force to protect it, and in addition you will be denying to the farmers of this country the cheaper fertilizer which they expect to receive as a result of the operation of that plant. I take it that every one of you gentlemen when you reached your office this morning found on your desk a copy of the letter which I hold in my hand, which is signed by Gray Silver, the Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation; Charles Lyman, secretary of the National Board of Farm Organization; and R. F. Bower, legislative agent, National Farmers' Union. What do they say? I will read it:

THE NATIONAL FARMERS' ORGANIZATIONS DESIRE TO CALL YOUR ATTENTION TO THEIR CONCLUSIONS ON THE MUSCLE SHOALS PROJECT.

In deciding upon the item for $10,000,000 to continue the work at the Muscle Shoals Dam, which has been debated before the House, you will determine the success or failure of the whole Muscle Shoals nitrate project as to its ability to furnish the farmer with cheaper fertilizer, and thus the consumer with cheaper food.

This is a clear-cut issue between the American producer and the American consumer jointly, on the one hand, and the great commercial interests on the other hand. In every instance where this project has been investigated by competent authorities it has proved to be unassailable, both from an engineering standpoint and from that of its economic return to the country as a whole.

As an illustration of its ability to stand criticism we wish to quote from the report returned to us from Prof. Stevenson, of Iowa:

"* * * Therefore farmers, farm organizations, and all those interested in securing cheaper foodstuffs should be interested in the passage of the Wadsworth-Kahn bill. The opposition of the fertilizer manufacturers and distributors to the bill is certainly not justified on the basis of the facts involved."

Similar reports have been returned to us from Illinois, New Jersey, and Virginia.

Our conclusions have been reached after careful investigation and study and were presented to each Member of the House with a request for their consideration in May of last year. They are contained in the farmers' presentation before the Senate Agricultural Committee on the Wadsworth bill, now the unfinished business before the Senate.

These conclusions are summed up as follows:

1. Nitrate plant No. 2, operating with cheap water power, can produce nitrogen compounds cheaper than any other source from which we now receive them.

2. This result can not be secured without the water power being made available.

3. With these cheaper nitrogen compounds increased amounts of food and clothing can be produced on the American farm without corresponding additional cost.

4. Government activity to increase crop production and safeguard fertility is a proper one and has official precedent in the irrigation projects.

The facts on which our conclusions are based have never been successfully contradicted, and the bitter opposition of the combined private interests to be affected demonstrate to us the correctness of our position, and this present definite attack upon the completion of the water power shows us how necessary the water power is to carry out our program.

In voting on this item for the continuation of the work at the Muscle Shoals Dam no Member of the Congress of the United States has ever had a better opportunity to register his position as between the interest of the consuming and producing public and the monopolistic interests that have in the past dominated the field of fertilizer manufacture.

While the issue may seem to you to be clouded, to us it is crystal clear and we ask you to trust to our judgment and give us support by your vote.

GRAY SILVER,
Washington Representative American Farm Bureau Federation.
CHAS. A. LYMAN,
Secretary National Board of Farm Organizations.
R. F. BOWER,
Legislative Agent National Farmers' Union.

Gentlemen, this is a clean-cut issue as to whether or not you are going to respond to the demand of the entire farming interests of the United States or going to yield to the demand of the Fertilizer Trust and refuse to complete this dam and give to the farmers that opportunity to secure cheaper fertilizer for the production of their products, which they are asking. [Applause.]

I have received many letters on the subject. I wish to read just one, as a sample to show how the farmers regard this proposition. It comes from a prominent citizen of Nashville:

NASHVILLE, TENN., December 31, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BYRNS: I am part owner in a 320-acre farm in Tennessee River Valley. It requires fertilizer yearly or production is limited.

We have all been looking forward to the power development of Muscle Shoals to produce nitrates at a price we can afford.

Fight for the money to complete the work and never give up. Been too much spent now to stop. It would be criminal.

Yours, truly,

L. G. WALDROP.

It was stated the other day in the general debate that the people of Tennessee are greatly interested in this matter. The people of Tennessee to a unit are interested in this matter, and why? Not only because the farming interests are interested in it, but because the Tennessee River touches the richest section in the whole United States in so far as mineral resources are concerned, and the construction of this dam will remove the chief obstacle to navigation on the river.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we have coal, we have iron ore, we have zinc, we have copper, we have marble, and other minerals in Tennessee that can reach the market and enrich this country if the river is made navigable from above Knoxville to its mouth.

I do not as a general proposition favor the Government entering into competition in business with its citizens. I have had occasion to say so many times. But this is a different proposition. It means the salvaging of the immense investment of the United States. It means the maintenance of this plant as a war emergency and its operation during peace times, saving maintenance cost to the Government, and increasing production on the farm, benefiting not only the farmers but the consuming classes in the cities.

I want to say to the Republican Members of this House, you are in the majority and the responsibility will rest upon you, and you alone, if this proposition is defeated. The State of Tennessee in the last election, over my protest, it is true, for the first time since the Civil War gave recognition to the Republican Party. I want to ask you gentlemen whether or not in voting down this proposition and denying this great boon to the farmer and to the entire section, this is going to be your answer to the recognition which the State of Tennessee gave you in the last election? [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I may say that never in my experience have I before heard on this floor an appeal to vote for a proposition of this kind on the ground that a State will cast its electoral vote for President HARDING. That is the argument just offered. It only indicates how far removed from fairness in discussion has been this statement and others that have been made on the floor in favor of the Muscle Shoals proposition.

Mr. Chairman, on December 22, 1920, we voted here for an agricultural project—the emergency tariff bill to protect farmers. Many Members on both sides voted for it, but where was the gentleman from Tennessee who has just spoken at that time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee rose.

Mr. FREAR. He was paired with Mr. GOOD against it. A gentleman who has led in the fight for the Muscle Shoals $10,000,000 amendment now proposed, Mr. GARRETT, voted against that bill to aid farmers, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. ALMON, who has plead for this amendment, he, too, voted against it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman say that I was paired against it? The gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman was paired with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, certainly; I was paired with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. FREAR. There was only one gentleman from Alabama who voted for that emergency agricultural tariff bill, Mr. STEAGALL, and that was a fair issue with the farmers' emergency tariff bill. If I am not correct, I ask to be corrected by gentlemen present. The question now comes on this Muscle Shoals proposition, and its supporters have been bringing all kinds of arguments of farmers' interests, sectionalism, and pressure of every kind to force this thing through Congress.

What is this proposal, Mr. Chairman? Originally the River and Harbor Committee were persuaded, in 1914, to bring in a bill for $18,750,000 to put through a project down there in Alabama for water power, at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River. We took that up on the floor of the House and voted it out of the bill, although reported unanimously by the committee, and we beat it fairly. Then it came in a different form the next year in the military bill. It was brought in the House by a unanimous report of the Military Committee, this time for nitrates, with a $20,000,000 joker proposal for Muscle Shoals water power. We exposed it again and beat it, in spite of the unanimous recommendation by the Military Affairs Committee. The proposal next went to the Agricultural Committee, this time for fertilizer. First, it was for water power, then for the benefit of nitrates; and, lastly, for fertilizer. Then the Secretary of War and President resurrected it for "war purposes," in time of war. I do not know how much money has been spent there since 1917 by the administration, but I understand it is all the way upward of $120,000,000, while $60,000,000 more are asked to be put in, which will run it eventually to two hundred millions or over for this Tennessee-Alabama water power.

It is now demanded of Congress that we must take this wasteful proposal and continue it because we have put so much Government money in it. Mr. Chairman, $100,000,000 is a great deal of money to waste at Muscle Shoals, but we put over a billion dollars in air craft and got nothing in the shape of fighting craft. It was an awful chapter of public waste, amid many other wasteful war activities, but we wiped the slate and called it off.

We wasted hundreds of millions of dollars in Shipping Board projects. We might as well wipe that off the slate. Now, in the case of the Muscle Shoals project in Alabama the President of the United States, under the wide powers conferred on him during the war by law, has put over a hundred million in this Tennessee River project. Let us wipe that off the map in like manner, unless we know what policy is going to be pursued in respect to the manufacture of air nitrates by the Government. The gentleman from Tennessee says his friends in that State voted the Republican ticket, against his protest. This he confesses, much to his and, I believe, their credit. Was it not with the hope down in Tennessee that the party on this side of the aisle, my Republican brethren, would discontinue wasteful expenditures which have been so notorious during the past eight years? If that be true, and I believe the average Tennessee voter is against waste and extravagance, then here is a $10,000,000 Muscle Shoals proposition you propose to saddle right on them in this bill for the taxpayers of the country to shoulder, without knowing what policy the country is going to pursue with this project. I admit the money is in there, a hundred million, largely wasted we are told. We could not stop it during the war; our hands were tied because of the war and power exercised by the administration, but now we do know the situation, and we act with due notice that this $10,000,000 amendment is only throwing open the floodgates for the future. Determine the policy of this Government on the proposal to throw away sixty or eighty million dollars more before you spend one cent more money on this project. What are you getting? We heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] discuss this matter the other day at length when he showed it is impossible for the Government to carry this project through economically.

He was followed by Mr. JEFFERIS, also on the war investigating committee. They took over 3,000 pages of record evidence, disclosing the awful waste and in an effort to determine whether or not this was a good proposition for the Government to continue. Their judgment is that it is not, decidedly not. The gentleman who just spoke and for whom I have the highest respect, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], declared, as I understood, that there was no one to question but what this would be a proper project for the Government to continue. Yet the other day man after man arose in his place and dissipated that idea, protesting against the project, because they believed this is both wasteful and useless. Although I believe it is money thrown away, I will not say junk the proposition until we decide what we are to do with it. I know that lobbyists year after year sat up in the gallery day after day when the bill came up in some form with the Muscle Shoals project in, and they got it only by the action of the administration as a proposed war measure. I do not know what influence was brought to bear upon the President. It was in time of war and it might have been thought a proper thing to do in war to try and make some effort, however wasteful, to manufacture air nitrates. It was shown the other day that in the by-products of coal a more economical manufacture of nitrates could be had at small expense.

That was discussed by my friend from Illinois, Mr. GRAHAM, who said there is no question but what that was the wise thing to do if we were going to undertake a speedy effort to get nitrates. The question of sectionalism has been raised by my friend from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT. He says his friends so regard opposition to this amendment. We have given a hundred million dollars for the lower Mississippi River for an insignificant water traffic. That assuredly was not sectionalism. We have given over $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 for the Tennessee River in Government appropriations, and they have practically no waterway traffic to-day An analysis of the reports so shows. Millions upon millions have been given to the Warrior River down in Alabama, with little result, and yet there is talk now of sectionalism because of opposition to this $200,000,000 wasteful war project. Why, no more generous treatment could have been had. There is no sectionalism, except that the section named is always demanding more money. Now, you say that having this money invested, let us finish it. That is no investment. It is largely money thrown away. The people of the country will hold the party on this side of the aisle responsible for their action on this $10,000,000 amendment, and let me urge as strongly as I can that we stop this extravagance before we get in deeper. There is no question of sectionalism, nor of investment, nor of any benefit to farmers. There is a matter of heavy taxes to be paid, and judgment must be exercised before we spend more money on Muscle Shoals after having sunk already $100,000,000 in this Tennessee River proposition.

How much are you going to put in? Two hundred million dollars? What are you going to get then? Not one man in Congress knows. You have not any experience to base it upon. It means a continual waste of the taxpayers' money.

My friends, that is all I have to say. I do not care to discuss it further. We should have a policy and have it determined, not from the viewpoint of these people who want something down on the Tennessee River, but we should begin fundamentally to do things right in a business way, to do things because they are going to be profitable to the Government, and not sit here day after day fighting over an automobile or a clerkship, or some little insignificant expenditure, and then swallowing a wasteful, useless proposal continued by an annual expense of $10,000,000 and have nothing at the end except experience.

Our professions of public economy will be judged by our acts and not by lip service.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I submit a request? I think it would be to the best interests of everybody if we knew about when the vote on this amendment would come to-morrow. Men are asking me, those in favor and those opposed, how much debate will be had to-morrow. I can not tell them. I want, so far as I am concerned, to give ample opportunity to discuss it. It is a big item. I am going to ask that one hour and a half be allowed to-morrow on this amendment and all amendments thereto, one-half of the time to be divided among those in favor of the amendment and one-half by those opposed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why will not the gentleman agree to stay here until 10 or 11 o'clock to-night and finish this matter and expedite the business?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that nobody would want to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this item be limited to one hour and a half, one-half of the time to be consumed——

Mr. GOOD. The request was for one hour and a half to-morrow. We will run some time yet this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that debate to-morrow be limited to one hour and a half on this amendment and all amendments thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENSON. With the provision that time is to be equally divided between those in favor and those opposed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time to be equally divided between those in favor of the proposition and those opposed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the last gentleman who spoke said this was a war measure and that it had been injected into legislation purely as a war proposition. I want to call the attention of the House, particularly of the new Members of the House, to the fact that this proposition originated in the Sixty-fourth Congress before the United States went into the war, and that it has been continually and consistently fought by the little Army and little Navy men on that side even during the war period, and, notwithstanding this opposition, this proposition has had sufficient merit that its proponents have been able to defend it on all occasions. Now, I remember very distinguished Members of this House, and particularly those on that side of the aisle, who during the year 1917 derided the Democrats in this House because they had not prepared this country in the time of peace for its defense.

I notice with a feeling of regret that the very men who had those criticisms in their mouths every day of that Congress are here to-day criticizing the Democrats of this House because we have too much preparedness now, and the opposition on that side of the House comes from those people who are opposed to the United States being in a condition to defend itself against all comers at all times.

How are you going to fight a war unless you have ammunition to fight it with? And how are you going to have ammunition unless you have the nitrate with which to make it? Somebody says you can make it from coal. And yet, during the war, when our great coal plants were being used and developed for this purpose, only a very small percentage of the nitrate that went into our ammunition came from the coal production.

Who is it in this House that is always criticizing this proposition, saying that there is a lobby here promoted and paid by a certain power company that is in favor of it? Have you heard anybody in this House retaliate by referring those gentlemen to the fact that there is a very large interest in America that is opposed to this proposition because their assets and their affairs are tied up in the importation of Chilean nitrates, and that with the right kind of a factory here in the United States those people would not have the monopoly that they now enjoy? Who has been in favor of this proposition that has ever tried to raise any issue of that kind? Not one. No improper motive has been suggested by this side of the House to any person who has opposed this proposition. The merit of the Muscle Shoals proposition is good enough to stand on its own feet. It is good enough to stand in the light of day; it is good enough——

Mr. FREAR. In fairness, I want to say that was in a past day, when Mr. Washburn and others always sat up here in the gallery; not during the consideration of the present bill. I want that understood.

Mr. CALDWELL. I want the gentleman to understand that I cast no reflection on him or his motives, because I know they are of the highest. I will say, gentlemen, that there are men in this House who will live to rue the day that they opposed the preparation of this country against its possible enemies.

Has any one of you recently taken stock of the military affairs of the world or its economic necessities to determine whether or not America has anything to take consideration of? Do you know who has the largest army, and who has the smallest, according to its population? Do you know who has the largest commerce and the biggest carrying trade? Have you examined into the history of the world and found out what was the cause of all the wars we have had in the past, and determined whether or not America was fast walking into that situation where all the world must necessarily either bow to her commercial power or fight her? Do you know that even to-day there are treaties extant between the great naval powers of the world which almost in terms—if not in words themselves—provide that they shall join their forces, even against the United States? And I say to you that if the two greatest navies in the world next to the great Navy of America are combined against us, it will no longer be possible for you to carry in merchant shipping the necessary nitrates from the Chilean ports to the United States to defend ourselves.

The nitrate importers are against this measure, the producers of nitrate from coal are against this measure, the Anglomaniacs are against this measure, and the pacifists and false economy howlers of this House are their easy dupes.

When America went to war in 1917, I contemplated with horror our utter helplessness once we lost control of the sea, either by reason of the U-boat or Zeppelin. I am leaving public life and returning to the private practice of my profession. There is no politics in this vote on my part. I vote for this proposition because I love my country and I do not want her ever to be in the helpless condition she was in in 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, the select committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is chairman, raised to investigate war expenditures, has turned its attention to the activities of the War Department in relation to the production of nitrogen, an essential element in the manufacture of explosives.

The hearings of the committee cover fifteen hundred printed pages and deal with every phase of the subject. The volume embracing these hearings constitutes a very distinct and most valuable contribution to the literature, affording information as to the nitrate industry throughout the world.

The investigation has served to expose to public view, by laying bare the inner facts, the methods adopted in procuring the authorization of the appropriation and the selection of a site for a plant to take nitrogen from the air.

The Muscle Shoals project, it is now apparent, was originally a "pork-barrel" proposition. Exigency of war was the excuse for entering upon the vast scheme of river improvement and expenditure of public money. The committee has found that the Government has expended for construction upon its nitrate program $116,194,974.37 and produced no nitrate prior to the armistice and contributed nothing thereby toward the winning of the war.

One hundred millions of the sum I have mentioned were spent on the Tennessee River at or near Muscle Shoals. In order to proceed with the construction of what is known as the Wilson Dam, designed to afford water power for the plant, gentlemen are now asking for an appropriation of $10,000,000. It is conceded that if this appropriation were made that many more millions would be required to complete the project.

The record will disclose that there are in Chile vast quantities of sodium nitrate, easily transportable to this country either to the Pacific coast or by way of the canal to the Atlantic seaboard, and, furthermore, that our coal by-products plants are producing a very great quantity of ammonium sulphate, convertible into nitrate, but in the main this was a scheme to secure to promoters hydroelectric power at Government expense. Had this not been so, the advice of experts and the findings of boards that Muscle Shoals was not the place for such a plant would not have been ignored, and the opinion of the President, acting at the behest of politicians, substituted. The construction of the plant reveals the same old methods that obtained at Nitro, W. Va., and elsewhere. Waste and incompetence, if not graft and crime, characterized these vast expenditures of the people's money. One hundred and sixteen millions, the amount expended, as graphically shown by the chairman, would have been more than sufficient to have constructed a great paved public highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. While the people were working and stinting, straining and saving, in order to invest in Liberty bonds, we find that the Government agents, like drunken sailors, were spending that money with a lavish hand, as, for example, in building sumptuous clubhouses for the officers, one of these clubhouses, at plant No. 2, costing $360,000. The scheme was not so much to extract from the air nitrogen as it was to put life into the river project, which had been turned down by almost every Congress for the past 20 years. This vast expenditure of moneys was based upon a comparatively obscure and innocent-looking phrase to be found in the fortifications act—page 2580, committee hearings:

> For purchase, manufacture, and test of munitions for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, the machinery necessary for its manufacture, and necessary facilities.

The Secretary of War, in his testimony before the committee, justified his action by insisting that the statute I have quoted, by a little "twisting," was a sufficient warrant for the course pursued. His precise language I quote, as follows:

> So that if you twist that section around and get it to read less legislatively but more intelligently, I think it authorizes the department to spend this money to manufacture munitions for field cannon and to make necessary experiments to do that and to buy the necessary machinery and the necessary facilities.

My observation, here in Washington, is that it is frequently the case that those seeking to secure favorable action of Congress upon a given matter find it to their advantage to somewhat camouflage their object by insisting that their scheme comprehends the accomplishment of some worthy end. A celebrated French woman once had occasion to say, "Oh, Liberty, what crimes have been committed in thy name." In these latter days legislative crimes have been committed in the name of "winning the war," and of "assisting the soldier," and of "helping out the farmer." "Helping out" is about the right expression, for my experience teaches me that the farmer, suffering from ill-advised spokesmen in and out of Congress, is "helped out" more often than he is helped in. A few days ago there was an agitation here for the restoration to action of the Federal War Trade Board upon the ground that this "would help the farmer," when, as a matter of fact, if it shall help anybody, it will help the copper, iron, lumber, or other producer just as much, if not more, than it will the farmer. But I have digressed.

The old promotion scheme, known as the Muscle Shoals project, having by legislative action, administrative interpretation, and political pull, paraded through the war under the guise of patriotism, is now masquerading under the pretext of rendering service to the farmer. The backers of Muscle Shoals say that if Congress will give them money enough they will take nitrogen from the air and that such nitrogen will be useful in the manufacture of fertilizer for the farmer.

Mr. Chairman, the great source of supply of ammonium sulphate for the people of the United States and of the world is coal. Ammonium sulphate, convertible into nitrate, is a by-product of coal. Ammonium sulphate is the essential element in fertilizer and in explosives. The corn and cotton plant when fed upon it are given growth and strength. When compounded with other ingredients, its chemical action becomes a terrible force for the propulsion of a projectile, from a great gun, through miles of space. Coal, therefore, is a sufficient source for nitrates necessary for use in times of peace as in time of war.

UMI

Mr. Chairman, I have now arrived at the point in my argument where I propose to consider, somewhat in detail, the subject of "By-products of coal." The great majority of our people but little, or only vaguely, appreciate the composition of a lump of coal, its analysis, derivatives, and their uses.

Mr. Wightman D. Roberts, editor of the West Virginia Mining News, in an article of recent date published in that journal, says:

* * * * * * *

In fact, by-product coke ovens were not taken seriously by the steel industry until 1906, when the United States Steel Corporation appointed a committee of well-known engineers and works managers to investigate the manufacture of by-products coke for blast furnace use.

The committee, after months of the most thorough investigation of the principal by-product coke plants in the United States and Europe, finally selected from the European field the Koppers Cross regenerative oven. On the basis of this selection a plant of 280 Koppers ovens was built at Joliet, Ill., and put into operation in 1908.

The effect of this committee's work has been far-reaching. Its approval brought about the large development of the by-product coke industry in the United States and the consequent conservation of one of our most valuable natural resources. The furnace results procured with the coke from these ovens caused blast-furnace managers quite generally to reverse their former position on by-product coke, and it is now universally conceded that better furnace operation with higher iron production and lower coke consumption can be secured by the use of by-product coke than with beehive coke. * * *

The by-product recovery plant serves to clean the gas and to recover from it as by-products tar, ammonia, and benzols. The ammonia may be recovered either in the form of ammonia liquor or as ammonium sulphate.

The ammonium sulphate formed in the saturator is pumped into drain tables and then dried by means of centrifugal driers. After being dried, the salt is carried to a storage pile, from which it is delivered for shipment. Ammonium sulphate has many industrial uses, but its most important use is as a nitrogen carrying fertilizer.

To enumerate the various uses of coal tar would require a volume in itself.

Mr. Chairman, it is therefore clear that it has not been so many years since the coke made in this country was manufactured in what is known as the beehive oven. The coal was put into the oven and burned, and all of the volatile matter and essential oils were destroyed or went up into the air. Within the past 15 years a great change has been wrought in respect to the manufacture of coke. There have been introduced and installed in various parts of the United States plants dealing with the by-products of coal. These great plants have grown and developed until they are producing articles that are numbered not only by the hundreds but by the thousands. That great industry has expanded until during the year 1919 over half of the coke produced in the United States was made in by-product ovens.

One of the products of these ovens is ammonium sulphate, and in the year 1919—we do not have the statistics of 1920—over 500,000 tons of ammonium sulphate was produced in by-product ovens. It is a great and growing industry, and it is believed by competent authority that within the next 10 years we shall see the disappearance of all of the old beehive ovens and the coke manufactured in by-product plants located around the great cities, where the gas may be extracted and distributed through pipes to the people; where the tar may be made that goes to pave our highways; where the medicines may be made, the ingredients of our drugs, and so forth; where the paints and colors may be made for the use of the people.

This great industry, now in its infancy, needs to be fostered and developed in a broad way. As I understand it, the plant in Alabama is only estimated to produce about 80,000 tons of sulphate, and it can not produce that, at least the water power can not, because there must be installed an auxiliary steam plant to augment the hydraulic power in order even to get the comparatively insignificant amount of 100,000 tons, as estimated by some gentlemen, and 80,000 tons as estimated by others, of ammonium sulphate.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I yield to the gentleman, with pleasure.

Mr. ALMON. The statement there in the hearing about 80,000 tons of ammonia sulphate to be produced there is for a certain number of units. The capacity is 110,000 tons of nitrate and about twice that amount of sulphate of ammonia.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The facts brought out before my committee show that the plant in full operation, according to the Glasgow plan, would produce about 83,000 tons; that is all.

Mr. ALMON. But other units of the same plant would be used for the manufacture of other things.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The evidence shows that the plant would produce that much ammonium nitrate.

Mr. ALMON. If other parts of plants were used for the manufacture of ammonia sulphate, the amount produced would be 200,000 tons.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The specifications of the plant call for only 83,000 tons of ammonia sulphate.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. We can get all the chemicals we need for the manufacture of powder from the by-products plant. We can get all the chemicals we need for the manufacture of fertilizer from the by-products plant. Therefore I see no necessity of creating a great capitalized concern that will never pay operating expenses, much less interest on the investment, and which will serve to retard the progress of by-product development and constitute a great burden upon the taxpayer.

From coal tar come wonderful cosmetics which add to the softness, smoothness, color, and consequent beauty of the skin of our lady's face and hands, and the most delightful perfumery to lend its exquisite fragrance to her dainty and delicious personality. The delicate aroma of her soap is from the oil of mirbane—nitrobenzene. One of her perfumes, catalogued as "coumarine," "has the scent of new-mown hay."

It will thus be seen that the derivatives of coal, in so perfecting the beauty, purity, and charm of woman, make for domestic happiness in this, that it gives unto the femme covert of advancing years the power of holding in leash the ravages of old Father Time and by rendering herself beautiful and attractive to her husband and to all others as well.

Mr. Chairman, I have before me a chart published by the Solvay Collieries Co., of which Mr. A. B. Rawn is the general manager, of Huntington, W. Va., in the form of a tree springing out of a bed of coal. The figure, bowl, limbs, and twigs, by proper designations, admirably represent the by-products of the coal. I am under obligations for the use of this chart in the study of the proposition with which I am attempting to deal.

DYES.

Of the coal-tar products used for painting and coloring we may mention blue, green, black, indigo, malichite-green, Bismark-brown (used for dyeing leather), yellow, orange, red, violet, mauve (used in English postage stamps), and others, there being over 500 shades. These dyes are useful alike to the great painter, who delineates the landscape or the human form upon canvas, and to the little boy and girl who color their Easter eggs. They serve the dyers of cotton, woolen, linen, and silk fabrics, no less than the workman who paints the exterior or decorates the interior of the habitations of man. We should build up the dyeing industry of the United States.

MEDICINES AND DRUGS.

Of medicines and drugs we find aspirin, salol, salicylic acid, phenol, oil of wintergreen, antipyrin, acetanilid, phenacetin, and many others. We, therefore, see that coal comes to persons sick and suffering, and soothes their pain, remedies their ills, and helps to restore them to health and happiness.

PITCH.

Pitch used for paving our streets and public highways, for roofing, insulation, concreting, and general water-proofing purposes. Coal, in producing pitch, proves itself to be the friend of both the home builder and the road builder, doing service alike to those who live in the city and those who dwell in the country, furnishing as a facility for transportation good roads for the farmer as also for the man living in the village or the city.

COKE AND GAS.

Metallurgical coke for furnace, foundry, and smelting purposes. The production and manufacture of iron and steel, of copper, zinc, and lead, and the smelting of gold and silver ores, depends upon coke, the chief by-product of coal. Domestic coke, coke breeze, briquets, and so forth, for fuel purposes, and gas for domestic and general uses.

GRAPHITE.

Graphite for lead pencils and to lubricate the journals of railroad cars and the bearings of machinery.

LAMPBLACK.

Lampblack for writing and printer's ink, the blacking and polish for shoes, harness, and many other purposes.

ANTISEPTICS.

Also antiseptics, including carbolic acid, cresol, phenol, and so forth.

CLEANSING.

For cleansing purposes there are to be found naphthalene and benzol.

FLAVORS.

For flavoring purposes, saccharine, also useful as a drug, being substituted for sugar in the case of patients afflicted with certain ailments.

PRESERVATIVES.

As preservatives, creosote for railroad ties and fence posts, and benzoic acid for foodstuffs.

Also chemicals for use in hair tonics and in the art of photography.

Anhydrous ammonia for ice making and refrigeration generally. How could we get along without ice? If we had no ice, of what use would be our refrigerators? What would we do for ice cream?

To these may be added varnish, sulphur, paint thinners, denaturants, solvents, shingle stains, disinfectants (formaldehyde); also insecticides for use of orchardists (in spraying fruit trees); cattle and sheep growers in dipping their animals; truckers (in destroying predatory pests); for the householder, as a poison for rats, bedbugs, and other vermin.

EXPLOSIVES.

The coal-tar products of greatest importance as raw materials in the explosive industry are benzine, toluene, naphthalene, and phenol (carbolic acid). From these come picric acid (also employed in surgical dressings for burns and wounds) and trinitrotoluene (T. N. T.), an explosive of powerful and deadly energy.

FOR MOTOR ENGINES.

Benzol is finding an increased use as motor fuel in the place of gasoline, for an authority says it is capable of producing 20 per cent more mileage per gallon than gasoline.

There is being extracted from natural gas about 1 gallon of gasoline for every 1,000 cubic feet of gas. Natural gas is rapidly approaching exhaustion and nature does not reelaborate it. Wherefore the world must look to benzol or other products of coal for its source of motive power for motor-driven land, sea, and air vehicles.

To catalogue all of the derivatives of coal tar thus far discovered—and chemists tell us that the subject is still in its infancy and will be developed to almost undreamed-of proportions—would require a volume.

The specific uses and purposes of the coal-tar derivatives now being produced are almost beyond imagination. Coal, therefore, is the great friend of man, contributing to him in matters of light, heat, power, color, medicine, locomotion, manufactories, lubricants, germicides, cleansing agents, preservatives, photography, cosmetics, perfumery, denaturants, solvents, refrigeration, self-defense, food, raiment, and shelter. For what one other product of the earth do we owe the Creator so great a debt of gratitude as we do for His bountiful gift of coal? Coal is perhaps America's greatest material asset. It is the factor that will render her preeminent in the affairs of the world, for she holds 52 per cent of the coal supply of the world.

Mr. O. P. Austin, statistician of the National City Bank of New York, says:

On this question of world's supply of coal it is well enough to say that expert estimates of the world's stock of existing coal, the "reserve," so called, while probably familiar to the readers of the West Virginia Mining News, are worth repetition in this general survey of future possibilities. The World Geological Congress held in Canada just prior to the war put the United States coal "reserve," or stock remaining underground, at 3,839,000,000,000 tons, or 52 per cent of the world's total; Canada, 1,234,000,000,000 tons, or 17 per cent of the total; China 996,000,000,000 tons, or 14 per cent of the total; and Great Britain, which formerly led the world as a coal exporter, only 190,000,000,000 tons, or less than 3 per cent of the world's total.

These statistics would leave 14 per cent to the nations other than those mentioned. In my State alone—West Virginia—according to Dr. I. C. White, the celebrated geologist, there exists from sixty to seventy-five billions of tons of merchantable, recoverable coal, a volume equal to one-third of the supply of Great Britain. But according to Mr. C. E. Krebs, geologist and mining engineer, of Charleston, W. Va., the State has a further supply of one hundred billions of tons in thin veins, not estimated by Dr. White, making the ultimate recoverable coal supply almost equal to that of Great Britain. In this particular I direct your attention to the fact that in Belgium coal 15 inches thick is shafted for to a depth of 1,200 feet.

It is proper at this juncture to note, Mr. Chairman, that all coal is not adapted to by-product treatment. The principal supply of by-product coal in this country is found in four States, which, in order of the volume of their supply, are Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Virginia. These States have an almost inexhaustible supply of coal fit for by-products use. By-product coals are those that have from 25 to 34 per cent of volatile matter and are low in sulphur and ash.

In West Virginia the seams adapted to by-products use are the War Eagle, Little Eagle, Eagle, Pond Creek, Powelton, Pocahontas, Alma, Cedar Grove, Chilton, and the No. 2 Gas.

Dr. Chester G. Gilbert, curator of mineral technology, National Museum (in Bulletin 102, pt. 1), in contrasting the advantages of the by-products oven over the beehive, tells us, at page 12:

More definitely expressed, the contrast means a saving of around 200 pounds of coke, about 5,000 cubic feet of gas, some 15 gallons of tar, and the ammonia in 20 pounds of ammonium sulphate along with 2 gallons of benzol for every ton of coal coked.

And further, in relation to the industry, he says, at page 13:

* * * a storehouse affording essentials in agriculture, pharmacy, photography, textiles, disinfection, explosives, refrigeration, painting, paving, waterproofing, wood preservation, and an ever-widening circle of more specific requirements touching every aspect of human life. The magnitude of the contrast is precisely the measure of coal product potentiality.

Coal product manufacture, with its elaboration of complex irrelationships calling for coordination of development along scores of directions at once highly specialized and widely diversified, represents the most advanced order of industrial evolution thus far attained.

Mr. Chairman, I have before me five statistical tables which, by the permission of the committee, I will insert in the RECORD. Table I, covering the years 1910 to 1919, inclusive, indicates the coal used for coke manufacture in the United States. This table is of the highest value in showing the departure from the beehive to the by-product oven. For example, in 1910 there were used for coking 63,088,327 tons of coal, of which 53,559,285 tons—more than 80 per cent—were used in beehive, and 9,529,042—less than 20 per cent—in the by-products ovens, whereas, according to the estimates for 1919, there were used for coking 66,747,216 tons of coal, of which 31,051,716 tons—about 45 per cent—were used in the beehive and 35,695,500—or about 55 per cent—in the by-products process. Wherefore, we may be reasonably safe in predicting that by the end of the next decade the beehive oven will have become a thing of the past.

Table II illustrates the yield of coke and other fundamental by-products of coal.

Table III shows the tonnage of ammonium sulphate used in fertilizers in this country during certain years.

Table IV shows the production in the United States of ammonium sulphate for years 1901 to 1919, inclusive.

Table V shows the imports of Chilean nitrates for the years 1901 to 1908, both inclusive.

In view of the fact that the gentlemen demanding the vast appropriation for Muscle Shoals with lusty voices are proclaiming that this is all in the interest of the farmer, the tables have an important bearing; for example, they indicate that there were used in 1919 for fertilizer only 190,000 tons of sulphate, whereas the by-products plants produced during the same year 500,000 tons of sulphate, more than double the quantity needed for fertilizer. In addition thereto the Government had on hand, and I presume still holds, over 500,000 tons of Chilean nitrates for such use as the interests of the people may require.

Mr. Chairman, I insist that the interest of the farmer as regards a proper source for an adequate supply of fertilizer, the interest of the Government in the production of explosives, and the interests of the whole American people in very many ways, especially as regards the conservation of our natural resources, will, each and all, be promoted by permitting the coal by-products process to continue its course and to reach its normal development unhindered by governmental restraints and barriers. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the opposition to this amendment comes in a peculiar way. After all the talk the other day about being friends of the farmer, gentlemen on the other side came forward with a bill to rob the farmer under the pretense that they were going to protect him, and some gentlemen on the Democratic side fell into that trap. Now, at the first opportunity that you gentlemen have to demonstrate that you propose to be of some assistance to the farmers of this country you turn a deaf ear and kill the proposition in the committee.

I happen to know something about this legislation because it came through the Military Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, and after having been defeated three times before that committee, and after being defeated on the floor of the House, it went over to the Senate and was there put into the bill. In the meantime the legislative representative of the farmers had caused word to be sent here from some of the agricultural districts of the United States, and fires had been built under certain gentlemen sufficiently so that they were caused to vote for the proposition, and a majority of them did vote for it and enacted it into law. After that, acting on the best expert advice in the United States, this plant was located down at Muscle Shoals, Ala., for two purposes; to make powder in the event of war; and, secondarily, for commercial fertilizers for the farmers of this country. Although we were at war and needed nitrates for powder certain gentlemen on this floor who are still Members of the House fought the proposition at every stage, and some are fighting it to-day. Now, what is the real reason for that? The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] told you the reason. It happens that this plant will come in competition with some men who have money invested in coke plants and chemical works and fertilizer factories. The reason they are fighting it is because they know it will be a competitor in producing fertilizer for commercial purposes, to place on the lands of this country to help produce food and raiment for the people.

Every man who has any judgment at all knows that Muscle Shoals, Ala., far from the danger of invasion from the sea, away yonder in the mountains, is a safe place to have this splendid plant to produce nitrates to protect this country in time of war. But, laying that aside and coming now to peace times, about $100,000,000 have been expended, great plants have been erected, and with the dam across the river unfinished, a simple appropriation of about $10,000,000 is asked in this bill to continue that work, and it is estimated that the total cost to complete it will be perhaps $35,000,000 more. Then this splendid plant, with $100,000,000 already expended upon it, will stand as an asset of this country to make fertilizer in competition with the private companies that the gentleman from West Virginia seems so anxious about. Why, some gentlemen say that they can not produce these things at Muscle Shoals at an economical price. Yet the men who seem to represent the gentlemen engaged in the manufacture of this fertilizer for commercial purposes are on this floor fighting it. If the friends of the farmer throughout the United States desire that this plant shall be completed and the fertilizer placed on the market, why should those object to it who say that it can not be manufactured at a price that the farmers can pay? After all this waste which you have gone through, after all the extravagance you have stood for, after all the extravagance you are still standing for, now you talk about economy to keep the farmers from having some fertilizer. This method drags the fertilizer down out of the atmosphere and places it on the fields of this country to produce food for the people to eat and cotton for them to wear and sugar to sweeten their coffee. Yet gentlemen oppose it on the pretext that it is not economy to complete it.

Would it be economy to allow $100,00,000 to go to waste; would it be economy to let that dam, one-third completed, go to ruin? Can any man who has any business intelligence conclude by any process of ratiocination that it would be better to allow this enormous and valuable investment to go to destruction? For what? No excuse has been given up to this hour why that plant could not be a success and why it would be an economy to throw away $100,000,000 that is already invested there when there is staring us in the face the fact that throughout the United States the agricultural classes are crying for cheaper fertilizer.

Some gentleman said that we could get all the fertilizer we needed from the Chilean plains. Do they know that there never was a supply so great that it could not be exhausted? Do they know that while that great field has been opened the farmer has been paying very high prices for fertilizer? Do they know that the nitrates that the Government brought in during the war is all that saved the farmers of the country? Yet with all that experience in the past before them, gentlemen are here against the completion of this splendid plant that they know will make fertilizer for all the United States.

Now, this plant is not in my State, and I have no selfish motive in advocating it. I know that the plant will afford fertilizer that will go out all over every State in the Union. I know that the farmers of the United States have been exploited by the fertilizer producers of the United States, and that exploitation will be continued unless there is some kind of competition. I know that what the Government proposes here will be a most beneficial competition to the farmers. And yet some gentlemen object to it because they do not want the Government to help do anything. Why, you have turned the Government Treasury over to a lot of different things in the United States. You turned it over to the railroads. You gentlemen passed a railroad bill where you guaranteed the dividends for a certain length of time to stockholders of these roads. You made Government guarantees to banks; and yet when we come with this twofold purpose to help the farmers, ask that the improvement be continued, gentlemen object. Gentlemen, I think this amendment ought to be adopted and the nitrate plant completed and fertilizer furnished at cost to the farmers of the United States. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if we knew anything about what we were going to get as a result of the expenditure of I know not how many millions more on this plant, I might be in favor of it. But there never was a proposition brought to this House as to which Members knew less about what the final result might be than the one that is now proposed.

There are many processes for the manufacture of nitrate from the air or of obtaining nitrate compounds. Of all the processes that have been proposed the cyanamid process is the most expensive. Of all the processes that require a great deal of power the cyanamid process requires the most power, and of all that require expensive machinery to carry it out the cyanamid process requires the most expensive machinery in the obtaining of nitrates from the air. I am speaking now of the cost of the plant, not of the ultimate product. What that would cost I do not claim to know, and I do not think anyone can properly estimate what it would be at Muscle Shoals.

An extremely simple and comparatively inexpensive process was invented by Prof. Boscher and offered to the Government without any expense whatever as far as royalties are concerned. So far as the cyanamid process is concerned, if any gentleman has stated what the royalty will be, I do not know of it. All I know is that the royalties will have to be paid to the concern pushing this process, the concern that is back of the propaganda that has been going on.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I can say to the gentleman, if I may be allowed, that the royalties will amount to something over a million dollars. I can further state to the gentleman in this respect that the concern to which it will go is not back of the effort to bring this about, but, on the contrary, is bitterly opposed to it.

Mr. ALMON. I will state that there is a stipulated price of $5 a ton royalty up until June, 1921, but after that it is to be a subject of arbitration and they expect it to be very much less, depending on the amount.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Here is $5 per ton to start with. Then there will be a large amount of calcium carbide used. In the process air is compressed and cooled until it liquifies. Then the nitrogen is boiled off at 194° C. But then you only have nitrogen gas, and we can not use it in that form. The next operation in the process is to pass the gas over pulverized and heated calcium carbide in a retort. The gas is absorbed by the carbide, forming calcium cyanamid, from which the process gets its name. Calcium cyanamid can be used in making fertilizer, or ammonium sulphate, which is better, can be made from it. But calcium carbide is expensive. How expensive those who use it to make acetylene gas well know. How fertilizer can be manufactured cheaply by any process that requires its use in the way described is more than I can imagine.

As the plant is expected to turn out 110,000 tons a year of ammonium sulphate, $5 per ton would amount to over half a million dollars a year. The claim that the owners of the patent are not working to get this measure through is incredible to me. No one else wants their patents. As I was about to remark, Prof. Boscher invented a simple process of obtaining nitrate. It was not to obtain nitrate from the air, because that would require immense power and expensive material. His process required neither great power nor expensive materials. The Government did make a small appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the experiment with reference to his process, but it never got far enough to complete any of the operations under this process, which, I think, was to be carried on at Virginia. The end of the war ended that also. So far as the cyanamid process is concerned, it is an experiment, and an experiment that has been discarded practically by those that have had the most experience. Germany tried it, and instead of using it used the Haber process, a simpler process, one which requires far less power. It is said that Germany has not the power that we have and could not obtain it as cheaply. But when you commence to talk about power, only about 3 per cent of the power is finally transmitted into nitrate under the cyanamid process.

Of course, all processes making nitrates from the air require a great amount of power. We need none to make ammonium sulphate from the by-products of coke ovens, when this style is used. We ought to encourage the building of this kind of ovens in order to save the tar and other by-products so necessary in the dye industry and also useful for making explosives. We need these ovens far more both in war and in peace than we need this plant at Muscle Shoals. But private initiative will furnish us the coke ovens, all the ammonium sulphate, the material for dyes, if we do not put the Government in competition by the expenditure of $20,000,000.

The other processes which might be used in this country have all of the advantages that they would have in Germany, because they do not require so much power and consequently would be less expensive. Power costs money, whether in this country or in Germany, and extensive experiments with the use of coal and water have failed to show that water power after all is really so much cheaper than coal, except in some very favored localities where the water power can be very cheaply obtained. Muscle Shoals is not such a place.

What do we know about this plant? Have any definite figures been given to prove how much ammonium sulphate would cost when manufactured by this plant? None. The figures given are merely estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. All of that information is in the hearings of the Senate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have read that.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman stated with reference to the cyanamid processes not being good, and I would state that there were 14 cyanamid processes in operation before the war commenced in 1914, and now about 35 in operation in different countries, and Germany to-day is producing about 135,000 tons a year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Germany is producing several times that amount by the Bader process. It really never has been produced in Germany in a commercial way unless the factory was manufacturing more of something else than ammonium sulphate, when the cyanamid process was used. My understanding is that Germony has used waste gas from other products to obtain power for this process, and thus obtained cheap power. All figures given are merely war capacity. I repeat that no gentleman knows and no one has attempted to give the figures as to what this would cost the Government. The figures that we have are merely estimates.

No board of engineers has considered and deliberated on the various processes for making nitrates either from the air or obtaining them by some other process to determine which is the better, which is the more economic, and which is the best suited to our use. Individual engineers, it is true, have given their opinion with reference to these particular processes and as to what could be done, and it is said they could manufacture nitrates or ammonia sulphate, I suppose, the substance ordinarily used for fertilizer, for one-half the price at which it was sold when it was at the high price which it brought during the war. Suppose that to be true, still we can obtain our ammonium sulphate much cheaper than by that method, and we can obtain it in abundance from the products of the coke ovens, which we have not yet half developed, and by which we could obtain far more sulphate than we could from the air.

Mr. FESS. What is the amount that we now produce from the coke ovens?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] gave the figures. I think about 500,000 tons.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That was the figure for last year.

Mr. FESS. Is that anywhere near the maximum of our ability to produce?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not near the maximum of our ability, not one-half, if use could be found for it.

Mr. ALMON. I would state to the gentleman that heretofore the price for nitrate of sodium or Chilean nitrate has been the same as a general rule as for the ammonium sulphate, for the nitrogen contents. There has been a uniformity of price between the by-products of the coke ovens and the Chilean nitrates. There has been no competition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There will be other competition. I received a letter from a concern this morning stating that they are manufacturing nitrates by the arc process, and have invested already three-fourths of a million dollars in their plants. The letter was addressed to me, evidently in ignorance of what is going on at this time, because what they wanted to know was whether there was likely to be tariff on the cheaper German products which have been recently dumped at New York at low price. This concern said that they would be able to manufacture all that would be demanded in this country, and yet we propose to put the Government into competition with these private concerns to manufacture this substance.

If ammonium nitrate could be in fact cheaply made, as gentlemen claim, there would be no trouble in finding a corporation that would buy the plant as its stands and pay a round sum for it. Instead it is conceded that nobody would give a copper cent for it except to junk it, nor would anyone lease it when completed, rent free, to make ammonium nitrate.

Mr. Chairman, this whole proposition is the most unbusinesslike of any I ever saw submitted to Congress; it is simply a continuation of the wasteful methods used during the war by the present administration, and I am utterly opposed to it. The plant is not needed either in war or peace.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on present business conditions. I desire to include therein the inaugural address of Gov. Miller, of New York, a very able address on financial and governmental problems, free from partisanship and political discussion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, in every field of our social and economic life there are signs of unrest, discontent, and uncertainty. Business prospects appear unfavorable; falling prices, decreasing wages, and increasing unemployment continue; industry hesitates and enterprise falters, pending the adjustment of conditions incident to the transition period through which the Nation is passing. We are in the process of change from a period of extravagance and inflation to a period of economy and retrenchment. How long it will be before normal conditions again prevail no one can say, but it is evident that the prevalent opinion on the part of economists and experienced business men indicates that improvement will come with the passing of the winter, and that the advance once established will be continual from that time onward.

These times of stress and doubt call for steady heads and courageous hearts; for patience and steadfastness; and for an abiding faith in the perpetuity of our institutions, the stability of law, and the ability of achievement of the American Nation. This is the hour for the optimist; for the man of vision; for the man with confidence and determination; for the man who is unafraid; for the man who can read in the future the majestic sweep forward of his country. Standing on the threshhold of a new year, the faith of America is undiminished and her spirit is undaunted. The Nation faces the to-morrows with supreme confidence that the period of travail will be passed in safety and that the future offers an assurance of peace, prosperity, and a return to normal conditions.

On Saturday last the Hon. Nathan L. Miller was inaugurated governor of the State of New York. His address was such an able document and so replete with sound political and economic wisdom that I feel a wide opportunity should be given for its perusal. I have therefore asked that it be inserted in the RECORD.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOV. NATHAN L. MILLER, OF NEW YORK.

In taking up the reins of the government I have a profound sense of responsibility and a genuine feeling of personal limitation. The problem of government has grown so complex, the questions presented are so varied and multitudinous, time and human capacity are so limited, that one would cease effort for despair of achievement did he not take note of the slow stages of human progress.

NECESSITY OF SAVING.

We have reached a time in the affairs of government when it is necessary to pause and take stock. We have passed through an era of spending; we are now confronted with the economic necessity of saving. The dollar has been so cheap that there has been little thought of denying any want, public or private, and our wants have grown by what they fed on until we have reached a stage of spending whose very extravagance will help to effect its cure. The State has embarked on new activities and undertaken new functions to satisfy almost every demand vociferous enough to appear popular, and to apply theoretical cures to almost every ill capable of arousing emotion or appealing to sentiment, and in my judgment the State has wandered far afield from the true function of government.

We all agree that the purpose of government is to secure the greatest happiness of the greatest number. We differ only as to how that can best be done. I belong to the school which holds that human happiness depends upon human progress, which the State can best promote by affording free play and maintaining fair play of individual effort of initiative. The publicists of the day are numerous who appear to think that progress consists in changing fundamental concepts.

TRUTH DOES NOT CHANGE.

Truth does not change. Error alone is variable. A principle of government if sound to-day will remain sound until human nature changes. It is only the application of the principle that needs to be varied to fit the changing conditions of society. But too many of our political philosophers, as it seems to me, in their eagerness to keep on the crest of so-called progressive thought, confuse the principle with its application.

I was surprised recently to read from the pen of a prominent publicist that principles grounded in the very bedrock foundation of our institutions had been proven unsound and discarded everywhere else in the world but in America. The truth is that they have never been really tested anywhere else in the world but in America, and I am proud to proclaim the belief that the Constitution of the United States is still the greatest charter of human liberty ever struck off by "the brain and pen of man."

Our very humanitarianism leads us to try experiments at the expense of those whom we wish to serve, for it must be remembered that the mistakes of government and the extravagance of government bear heaviest upon the least able. Those who are now unfortunately seeking employment must appreciate the truth that they pay for burdensome taxation which withdraws capital from industry and restricts the means of employment.

PERIOD OF FEWER LAWS.

We have passed through a period of legislative activity. I hope we are entering upon a period of fewer laws and better observance of the law.

Disorder, extravagance, and waste inevitably attend a rapid extension of government activities. The world is now facing the task of reestablishing order, and our first concern should be to establish order and to restore economy in the public administration.

To that task of State government I promise to devote myself, and I invite the cooperation of the legislature, the heads of departments, and all civil employees of the State, and the support of the public. With that cooperation and support we shall succeed. Without it little can be done.

I may have occasion to criticize methods, but they are usually a product of the times, and criticism of them does not necessarily involve personal reflection. Indeed, in demanding order and economy I am merely voicing what is already so vocal in the land that the public official is deaf indeed who does not heed it.

HEW TO THE LINE.

We have got to hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may. The business of the State has grown to such huge proportions that there is little room for sentiment and no place whatever for favoritism, personal or political, in the ordering of it.

By that I do not mean that party considerations are to be ignored. The Republican Party has been charged with undivided responsibility for the conduct of the State government, and we, who for the time being are intrusted with the duties of government, can serve our party efficiently only by efficient service to all the people of the State. We are necessarily a government of parties, and the two-party system is best suited to our institutions. It is therefore in the public interest to strengthen party organization, to make it responsive to the public needs, and to promote order in the conduct of its affairs.

RESPONSIBLE TO PUBLIC.

But when we cross the threshold of public office our responsibility is to the public, not to the party, and we have a right to demand party support in the discharge of that responsibility, while we in turn respect the true functions of party organization, through which alone that support can be made effective.

We who enter upon the discharge of official duty to-day are on trial. Our party is on trial. The task is heavy. The responsibility is great, because undivided. We shall be judged solely by results—by success or failure. On behalf of the legislature, the coordinate branch of government, as well as on behalf of my associates and myself in the administrative branch, I feel that I can promise the people that we shall at least try to serve them.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate and message of the President of the United States, which were read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 3, 1921.

The President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, the joint resolution S. J. Res. 212, "Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes," with his objections thereto, the Senate proceeded, in conformity with the Constitution, to reconsider the same, and has

Resolved, That the joint resolution do pass, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

Attest:

GEORGE A. SANDERSON,
Secretary.

To the Senate of the United States:

I am returning, without my signature, Senate joint resolution 212:

Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

The joint resolution directs the revival of the activities of the War Finance Corporation. This corporation is a governmental agency. Its capital stock is owned entirely by the United States. It was created during hostilities for war purposes. The temporary powers which it is now proposed to revive were conferred in March, 1919, to assist, if necessary, in the financing of exports. The general powers of the corporation expire six months after the termination of the war, and the special powers with respect to the financing of exports expire one year after the termination of the war. While we are technically still in a state of war, it unquestionably was presumed, when this added power was granted, that peace would have been formally proclaimed before this time and that the limitation of one year would have expired.

In May, 1920, in view of the fact that export trade had not been interrupted but had greatly expanded, and that exports were being privately financed in large volumes, the War Finance Corporation, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and with my approval, suspended the making of advances.

This resolution was passed by the Congress apparently in view of the recent sudden and considerable fall in prices, especially of agricultural commodities, with the thought that some European countries to which certain products were customarily shipped before the war might again be enabled to resume their importation and that larger masses of domestic exports to European countries generally might be stimulated, with the resulting enhancement of domestic prices. I am in full sympathy with every sound proposal to promote foreign trade along sound business lines. I am not convinced that the method proposed is wise, that the benefits, if any, would offset the evils which would result, or that the same or larger advantages can not be secured without resort to Government intervention. On the contrary, I apprehend that the resumption of the corporation's activities at this time would exert no beneficial influence on the situation in which improvement is sought, would raise false hopes among the very people who would expect most, and would be hurtful to the natural and orderly processes of business and finance.

Large Government credits were extended during the war to certain European governments associated with us in the struggle. These ceased several months after the armistice, except for commitments already made. They should not now be resumed, either directly or indirectly. The recent Brussels conference, composed of experts from many European countries and from other nations, itself expressed the opinion that further credits should not be accorded directly by governments. I do not believe that they should be accorded indirectly.

Exports of domestic products have not declined since the armistice. On the contrary, they have greatly increased. From an aggregate value before the war of less than two and one-half billions of dollars, and of about six billions the last year of hostilities, they rose in the calendar year 1919 to more than $7,900,000,000, and this figure will probably be exceeded for the last calendar year. For the first eleven months of the last calendar year we exported more than seven and one-half billion dollars' worth of domestic merchandise. These have been largely privately financed. The difficulty in the way of still larger exports does not seem to lie so much in the lack of financial ability here as in Europe's lack of means to make payment. Her productive energies and the services which she renders have not yet reached a point where they balance the value of commodities taken from this Nation, and her ability to furnish for additional exports securities which business men would feel justified in taking is restricted. The experts of the Brussels conference reported that "one of the chief obstacles to the granting of credits is the absence in borrowing countries of sufficient securities for ultimate repayment." Until this obstacle is removed it is difficult to see how materially larger exports to Europe are to be made even if exporters, aided or unaided by Government finance, stand ready to do their part. It is remarkable that Europe is able to make an effective demand for as large a volume of our goods as she is making. It is gratifying evidence of her recovery and progress toward full production and sounder financial conditions.

Under the law, if the activities of the corporation were resumed, no direct advances could be made to producers and, if they could be, they would not accomplish the objects in view. They would not create demand for our products. They could be made only to exporters or to banks engaged in financing exports, and if they did in some measure stimulate exports they would probably not have the effect apparently most desired of substantially increasing those of agricultural commodities. Already, with the larger volume of exports which Europe is taking from us, she is exercising her option of taking a smaller volume of some of our principal agricultural products, such as meats, presumably because she herself has become more largely self-sufficient, or is again providing herself with supplies from distant countries which, with the opening up of shipping since the armistice, have once more found their place in the markets of the world.

It is highly probable that the most immediate and conspicuous effect of the resumption of the corporation's activities would be an effort on the part of exporters to shift the financing of their operations from ordinary commercial channels to the Government. This would be unfortunate. It would continue the Government as an active factor in ordinary business operations. If activities of any considerable magnitude resulted, they would necessitate the imposition of additional taxes or further borrowing, either through the War Finance Corporation or by the Treasury. In either case new burdens would be laid upon all the people. Further borrowing would in all likelihood tap the very sources which might otherwise be available for private operations or which the Treasury is now compelled to reach to meet current obligations of the Government. There is no question that the borrowing of the Government should be limited to the minimum requirements, and that the Government should not be called upon further to finance private business at public expense. To the extent that Europe is able to furnish additional securities, private financial institutions here will doubtless find means of giving the necessary accommodation. The way has been opened for added legitimate efforts to promote foreign trade. Financial agencies in aid of exports, privately financed, have already been planned to operate under the act approved December 24, 1919, authorizing the organization of banking corporations to do foreign banking business. One corporation has been organized in the South and a second of large scope is in course of development. These agencies may be expected to act as promptly and as liberally and helpfully as sound business conditions will permit. Through reliance on such enterprises, rather than through Government intervention, may we expect to secure a return to stable business relations. For many months there has been a demand that war agencies should be abolished and that there should be less Government interference with business. I have sympathized with this view, and believe that it is applicable to foreign trade as well as to domestic business. I am of the opinion that now, more than two years after the armistice, the Nation should resume its usual business methods and return to its reliance on the initiative, intelligence, and ability of its business leaders and financial institutions.

We shall not witness an immediate satisfactory adjustment of domestic and international trade relations. The burdens of war are not lifted when the fighting ceases. One sad thing about war is that it leaves behind it a legacy of economic ills and of suffering from which there is no escape. Conditions, however, are improving both here and abroad. The difficulties with which we are now confronted are of small consequence in comparison with those which we have met and overcome. Fuller restoration awaits the adoption of constructive measures of large consequence: the secure establishment of a just peace in the world; the cessation of fighting everywhere; the more complete resumption in Europe of the normal courses of industry, the return of her people to sounder fiscal and banking policies, and the breaking down within her borders of harmful restrictions.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
3 January, 1921.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. DREWRY, for one week, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. HICKS, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BELL, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. PARK, for Tuesday, January 4, 1921, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, and with the understanding that the President's veto message shall be the first matter considered to-morrow, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 4, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 235) prohibiting the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from obstructing the parks, reservations, streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. NEW:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 236) directing the Secretary of War to cease enlisting men in the Regular Army of the United States until the number of enlisted men shall not exceed 175,000; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14198) to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production; and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $13,000 for buildings, equipment and machinery, etc., at the Duluth (Minn.) station of the Bureau of Fisheries, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—SCHUYLER C. MORGAN.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 2642, 66th Cong., 1st sess.) granting a pension to Schuyler C. Morgan be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECRUITING FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. DIAL. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 418) was read, as follows:

Whereas during the year 1920 there were recruited into the Army of the United States 162,484 men, into the Navy 76,342, and into the Marine Corps 14,156, a total of 252,992; and

Whereas the army of occupation, now stationed in Germany, now numbers 500 officers and 15,000 men; and

Whereas the cost of securing and maintaining such enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps and recruits for the Army is a heavy burden upon the taxpayers of this country; and

Whereas the enlistment now is much greater than the appropriations; and

Whereas a very large deficit already exists; and

Whereas the people of the country are overburdened with taxation; and

Whereas it behooves the Congress to dispose of the services of any unnecessary officials and employees and to curtail expenses in every manner consistent with efficiency; and

Whereas many of those now being taken into the different branches of the military service of the United States are drawn from the farms, causing thereby a serious lack of help and creating much trouble by their absence at a time when all available farm help is necessary in order to produce our crops that we may raise more of the necessities of life at home: Therefore be it

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution all enlistments or recruiting for any and all branches of the military service of the United States shall immediately cease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over for one day.

INAUGURAL EXPENSES.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Joint Inaugural Committee to introduce a joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 237) to enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 4, 1921, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States, March 4, 1921, in accordance with such program as may be adopted by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, appointed under a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, including the pay for extra police, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I think I ought to state to the Senate that the amount arrived at here is after a thorough investigation of the cost and after having adopted a program of procedure that complies literally with the precedents of the past. Four years ago the appropriation was $35,000, or so much thereof as might be found to be necessary. We have allowed an additional $15,000 to cover the increased cost of material, the increased cost of labor, and the increased cost of the wages of such extra policemen and watchmen as may be necessary for the function. The committee hopes and feels that perhaps it can perform its duties well within the limit prescribed, but believes that it is not asking an undue amount to have intrusted to its discretion an additional $15,000 over and above what was appropriated for the last inauguration.

I may state for the benefit of the Senate that this has nothing whatever to do with the civic functions which may be incident to the inauguration. The Congress of the United States for over 100 years has taken upon itself the conduct of the actual installation of the President of the United States into office. It has nothing to do with the civic parade or the erection of stands or the giving of balls or anything of that nature. This is to cover the expense incident to the inauguration proper. After the oath of office is administered the President elect will be turned over to the civic authorities, and all expenses incident to and relating to it are to be borne by them or from some other separate fund.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not hear the reading of the entire joint resolution. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the expenses mentioned in it includes the transportation expenses, for instance, of different branches of the military service that may be brought here?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. It has nothing to do with that?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. The main item of expense is for the construction of the great stand in front of the Capitol that will seat as many people as have been heretofore seated there. The fact is, we are not increasing the size of the stand at all; it is to be just the same size that it was at the last inauguration four years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. Does it include the turning over of any building of the Government for the so-called inaugural ball, or anything of that kind?

Mr. KNOX. Not at all; it has nothing whatever to do with any ceremonies after the actual administration of the oath of office to the President elect.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that when I called attention to this matter some days ago, suggesting that some amount ought to be fixed for this purpose, I had no intention of criticizing the committee or suggesting that the committee would not act as economically as it could. As I understand the pending resolution, it covers but one item, and that is the erection of the stand here at the Capitol to provide for seating the audience. It does not cover the item with reference to bringing the cadets from the Military Academy or of the midshipmen from the Naval Academy. There is already an estimate of $37,000 for bringing the cadets here, which has been sent in by the Secretary of War. I presume the cost of bringing the midshipmen to Washington may be estimated as being twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars; and the proposition to turn over the Pension Building for inaugural purposes, it is estimated, will cost, when there are taken into consideration the delay in the service, the interruption of public business, the moving out and moving in, something like $200,000. So the joint resolution covers but a single item, while we see some $300,000 in view which must inevitably follow if we start the program. If we could confine the entire expenditure to $50,000, it would be a different matter, but we shall not be able to do that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether a great portion of the expense to which he has just referred will not be liquidated by the inaugural committee, which is composed of citizens of Washington?

Mr. BORAH. No part of it will be, I think.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, what becomes of the fund which the newspapers say that committee is raising by subscription?

Mr. BORAH. It is finally returned to those who raise it.

Mr. THOMAS. They secure reimbursement through the levy upon visitors?

Mr. BORAH. I understand that they try to protect themselves by proper methods, but nevertheless in a business way; but no part of the expenses to which I have called attention, as I understand, are to be taken care of by the citizens. The expenses which I have mentioned will be taken care of out of the public funds, as they always have been. A great many other additional expenses also will be incurred which will be taken care of out of the public funds.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the newspapers are to be credited at all, a veritable army of men and women, who propose to serve their country, if possible, under the new administration, is about to invade Washington. Does not the Senator think it would be a good idea to levy a toll of about $5 a head upon these gentlemen and ladies, and by that means to safeguard the Treasury?

Mr. NORRIS. That will be levied all right.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. NEW. In order that there may be a full understanding on the part of the Senate in regard to this matter, I desire to say that I have been informed by the local committee having the inauguration celebration in charge that there will be additional appropriations asked for amounting to something like $60,000. That will include the cost of all extra police, of whom there must, of course, be a large number at that time.

Mr. BORAH. The pending resolution refers to extra police.

Mr. KNOX. Those are only the additional Capitol police, and have nothing to do with the matter to which the Senator from Indiana refers.

Mr. NEW. The police of whom I speak are to be in addition to the police force of the District. Of course, a large number of extra police will be required to handle the crowds which will be here on that occasion. Then, it will also be necessary to erect comfort stations, information booths, and things of that kind; and while I do not know the exact amount that will be asked for in order to cover those items, I think it will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $60,000. That will be in addition to the amount which is carried by the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BORAH. Then, we have the $50,000, the $60,000, the $37,000 for the cadets, the $25,000 for the midshipmen, and $200,000 for the Pension Office. Mr. President, that is a good beginning for an administration which is pledged, or you might say consecrated, to economy.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Idaho must not omit from those expenses the cost of bringing to Washington various branches of the Army to participate in the inaugural parade, which will cost several hundred thousand dollars more.

Mr. BORAH. I have a list of 10 governors who are going to bring the State militia here, which, it is estimated, will cost $100,000 in each instance.

I anticipate, Mr. President, that out of the public funds, the Federal funds and the State funds—which are all paid by the same citizens after all—there will be a million dollars expended upon the inauguration under the present program.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, for the protection of the American public and to put all citizens of the United States attending the inauguration ceremonies on a footing of equality I have introduced a resolution, which has been referred this morning to the Committee on the District of Columbia, prohibiting the District Commissioners from allowing the streets and sidewalks and parks of the city to be encumbered with platforms and stands, in order that there may be no opportunity afforded those desiring to erect such structures to speculate upon the public. We who have been here for years know that the citizens of the District form themselves into committees, secure control and possession of the public streets and sidewalks of the city, erect platforms and stands, and sell the seating space thus provided at speculative prices to the American public attending the inauguration. Nor is that the worst of it, for the tickets frequently pass into the hands of speculators, as in the case of theater tickets in some of our cities, and are sold to the public at exorbitant advances over the original prices.

We all know that the people who occupy seats in the stands which are erected constitute only a small portion of the public. The remainder of the people have to stand behind the structures erected and are unable to see the parade as well as those occupying the seats, notwithstanding the fact that those who stand constitute the bulk of the people who come here. I wish an investigation could be made to ascertain what profits the speculators to whom I refer made at the last inaugural ceremony upon the sale of space in the stands and platforms in the city. I trust that the District Committee, of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is a member, will put a stop to this species of speculation, to the end that the American people who come to attend the inaugural ceremonies may be placed on a footing of equality, without being bled by ticket and other speculators in Washington.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are not many American people who can afford to come at this time, owing to railroad rates and other conditions, so that the number from outside the immediate vicinity of Washington will not be large.

We have all served here with Senator HARDING, and we know that his severest critic would not charge Senator HARDING with being fond of ostentation and display. I have not a particle of doubt, if he could be consulted and could be permitted to have his way about it, that the inaugural ceremonies would be conducted along very simple and dignified lines and in accordance with the conditions which are now confronting the country.

Mr. President, I should never have said a word about this matter if the condition of affairs in which we find ourselves had been an ordinary one, but we have $24,000,000,000 of indebtedness, we have $4,000,000,000 of current expenses, and we have $2,000,000,000 of deficit staring us in the face. The business men of the country, even those who are supposed to be men of competency, are greatly disturbed as to how they shall continue to meet the burdens which must be imposed upon them by the Government. The mere $50,000 or $100,000 or $300,000 or the $1,000,000 which we may appropriate is not alone the objection, but it is the psychology of the public mind in regard to these matters. They expect something, and, regardless of party, they feel that those who represent them here ought to take into consideration the conditions at home.

I have before me a statement, coming out of Marion, which is interesting to me in view of the discussion of this matter. It says:

> The plans for the HARDING inauguration, as outlined here to-day, contemplate the most dazzling celebration in the memory of the present generation. Senator HARDING, it is said, was originally in favor of a severely simple inaugural ceremony—

And I have no doubt at all that that is true—> but has been prevailed upon to accept a program which he was assured would bring the greatest amount of pleasure to the greatest number of people.

I am interested to know whence the influence comes that prevailed upon the President elect to depart from his idea of a simple and dignified inauguration to that of the most dazzling display "within the memory of the present generation" and one designed to serve the pleasure of the greatest number of people.

Mr. President, I am going to vote against the joint resolution which has been reported. I will vote against it because I know that if we set the pace that which will follow in connection with the inauguration will involve an expenditure of a million dollars to be paid out of public funds. I venture to say that when it is over the items for the inauguration presented here, together with the items which will come out of the State treasuries of the different States, will aggregate a million dollars. I look upon it as almost a crime; there is no defense for it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I regret very much that in presenting one proposition my distinguished friend from Idaho has seen fit to discuss another and entirely different one. The committee of which I have the honor to be chairman was created by the Houses of Congress, and it was instructed to take proceedings necessary to conduct the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States. When we were instructed to take the necessary steps we had but one lamp to guide our feet, and that was to find out what were the customary steps. I have taken the trouble since I discovered that there was likely to be some opposition to the passing of the necessary appropriation to run back as far as 1817, and I have found that from that date down to this the Congress of the United States, of its own volition and without any logical relation thereto, has taken upon itself the inauguration of the various Presidents.

The President of the United States needs to do but one thing in order to be able to discharge the functions of that high office, and that is to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution. He could send out from his hotel room—if that is where he will lodge before induction into office—for a notary public and, perhaps for 50 cents, subscribe the oath which clothes him with all the powers.

I had the honor to be connected at one time with the simplest inauguration that has ever transpired, and that was after the death of the lamented McKinley, when the Cabinet were discussing great ceremonies to be held in the city of Washington for the inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt. Upon my calling attention to the provisions of the Constitution and showing that the devolution of office had been automatic, and that all that was required was to take the oath, they followed my advice and the oath was administered in a private house at no cost whatever.

But, Mr. President, Congress has taken this step, and this committee, in obedience to the mandate received from Congress, has proceeded to do the usual thing. We are not building a stand seats upon which are to be sold to the public at an extravagant or at any other price. We are building a stand that will accommodate 10,000 people, who will be seated there without charge upon the invitation of the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives. It is decent and appropriate, in a great ceremony of this kind, that a number—not all of the American people, because all of the American people could not assemble, and only an infinitesimal percentage of the American people could witness the ceremony under the most favorable circumstances—but that at least 10,000 of the American people, a number that the grounds of the Capitol will accommodate, may, without money and without price, at the invitation of the Congress of the United States, which has taken charge of the ceremony, witness that ceremony. In order that the thing may be done decently and in order expensive engraved invitations and tickets have to be circulated in order to convey the wishes of Congressmen to their constituents or to their friends. An adequate number of policemen have to be employed in order to protect the crowds that may assemble around the Capitol. Provision must be made for the members of the press, so that that portion of the public who can not witness the ceremony may read accurate accounts of it. And, indeed, Mr. President, we have studied simplicity even to the degree that we have shorn the incoming President of some of the prerogatives and privileges that have in the past attached to that ceremony.

Why, I read from a description of the ceremony of 1861 that after Mr. Lincoln had delivered his inaugural address, and Chief Justice Taney had administered the oath, Mr. Lincoln turned and kissed the 34 young ladies representing the 34 States. We provide nothing of that kind for Mr. HARDING. [Laughter.]

I hope, Senators, that you will stand by your committee that has endeavored to carry out your mandate; and I hope that this particular proposition will not be involved with anything pertaining to the civic ceremonies or anything pertaining to any ostentation or display, if you may choose to call it so, which may follow the inauguration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I find myself very much in sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. It seems to me that now, when the whole world is staggering under debt, and there is suffering and distress everywhere, when our own people are complaining about taxes, and properly so, many of them unescapable as the necessary consequences of a world upheaval and the greatest war in all history, we ought to endeavor to hold down these expenditures out of the Public Treasury to the very last limit.

This is no time, Mr. President, to indulge in these extravagant parades and demonstrations and celebrations, costing the people an enormous sum, approaching, as the Senator from Idaho has said, in this instance, before we are through with it, a million dollars.

It is all right for the people of Washington, the merchants, the street car companies, the taxicab companies, the hotels, and that sort of thing, to raise a fund. The more people they can have here, and the longer they can keep them, the better for them. It is perfectly proper, and a manifestation to some extent of public spirit—I do not mean to say it is entirely selfish—for them to arrange to entertain the people who come here, and take care of them, even though they get back what they contribute to that end. But it is a different proposition to go into the pockets of the taxpayers of the country at large and ask them to pay this enormous sum of money for this inauguration.

The Senator from Idaho has said, and I quite concur with him, that he does not believe that Senator HARDING himself wants this proposed tremendous demonstration. It is a bad example to set to the country. We have been talking here on this floor for some time, and in the press and elsewhere, about waste and saturnalia of extravagance, and rather scolding the people for their lack of thrift. We claim that the high cost of living and a good many of our troubles have been due to the extravagance that prevailed in 1919 and previous years. Now, the Government undertakes to set an example of unparalleled extravagance at the very opening of a new administration. It seems to me unthinkable.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] refers to past history. Let me at this moment call attention to an administration that was ideal, that accomplished great results, that was perhaps the most historic and important in many respects in the lifetime of the Republic; and let me admonish that we now, under existing circumstances and in view of conditions prevailing here and throughout the world, hark back as far as we can to Jeffersonian simplicity.

I hold in my hand a work which is very interesting and instructive, by a distinguished Member of this body, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]—a series of lectures delivered by him at Columbia University on "Thomas Jefferson, his permanent influence on American institutions," and I beg to read just a few extracts from these lectures.

At page 228 he says:

> Earlier in his life, when about to take his seat as Vice President, Jefferson had illustrated his dislike of public scenes. He wrote to Senator Tazewell, of Virginia, saying that he had heard that on the former elections of President and Vice President "gentlemen of considerable office were sent to notify the parties chosen," and expressed the hope that in his case "the Senate would adopt that form of notification which would always be least troublesome and most certain," the post office.

On page 230 he says:

> The Republicans were more rejoiced at Jefferson's abolition of pomp, ceremonies, parade, and cavalcades than they were in consequence of many other more important things. The Federalists viewed what they called "a Jacobin wreck" with alarm and despair. Little things that seem to us now, with the glamor of the past about them, interesting, if not beautiful, meant more then than they would mean now and would have grown by now to mean more than they did then. Adams, unfortunately, did not see what Jefferson did, that George Washington constituted a whole class by himself.
> In a chapter headed "Jeffersonian simplicity," evidently put in quotation marks with a view of ridiculing the subject matter and Jefferson, Curtis opens: "The inauguration of Jefferson as President of the United States was attended with as much pomp and ceremony as the conditions would permit." I submit that this is beneath the dignity of history. If the statement had been true, it would not have made much difference; but it is not true. Jefferson carefully eschewed all pomp and ceremony and did it for a purpose—the purpose of demolishing the "frénésie quasi monarchique." He walked from his boarding house, which was on New Jersey Avenue north and not far from the Capitol, and a few friends, among them some Senators and Representatives, accompanied him to the Senate Room to be sworn in. It is idle to say that he could not have ridden in his own coach, sent up from Monticello, or in any sort of a state coach he might have fancied to have built. It is equally idle to say that he could not have had a thousand men on horseback if he had wanted them.
> Curtis very properly exposes the story of Jefferson's going to the Capitol on horseback and "tying his horse to the fence." This was not true for three reasons: First, because the distance was too short to make it necessary to have his horse; and, secondly, because, from the best information I can get, there was no fence there at that time; and, third, because a good horseman—and Jefferson was about the best—would not hitch his horse to a fence if he could find a swinging limb or even a hitching post under a shed.
> After Jefferson had taken the oath he went back to his boarding house, taking his old seat, and declining amid laughing protest to go to the head of the table. He stayed there several days before he went to Monticello. He rode meantime freely and unattended around Washington. Afterwards, when President, if he wanted to see a Senator or a Member of Congress, he rode up to the Capitol and saw him, hitching his horse under one of the construction sheds on the uncompleted House wing side of the Capitol; hence, perhaps by confusion, the horse was given him at the inauguration.
> Jeffersonian simplicity was a real thing and not a thing to put in quotation marks.
> His "democratic simplicity," as Curtis calls it, was not "affectation," as he stigmatizes it. Jefferson was trying to teach a useful lesson to officeholders in a Republic—to show that a plain man who was elected President had nothing to do except to go on being just what he had been—a plain man—a man "for a' that." It was the very contrary of affectation. He saw no reason why he should "affect" something new to him and therefore unnatural, just because he had been elected President. The people hadn't sent him to Washington to "put on airs."
> Unfortunately, these troublesome, expensive inaugural processions that Jefferson thought to do away with have gradually come back to plague us. It is to be hoped that some strong, wise man on being elected President will do away with them. They do no good and result generally in several deaths from pneumonia caused by exposure to the weather. They are, at best, an "idle, foolish parade"—a weak imitation of "coronation" proceedings—resulting in nothing of any benefit to anybody except a temporary increase of revenues to Washington hotels and boarding houses and saloon keepers and street cars.
> Jefferson did not want the image of a President impressed on the coinage. He did not want birthdays celebrated, and never would permit his own to be celebrated where he could help it.
> He seemed to be afraid of the effects of hero worship of any description. It is the great danger of democracy. It will remain so until the end of time. Men ought to be taught more and more to reverence laws and institutions and less and less to reverence offices and men.

I shall quote from page 122 of Merwin's Thomas Jefferson:

"The ascendancy of Jefferson and the Republican Party produced a great change in the Government and in national feeling; but it was a change the most important part of which was intangible, and is therefore hard to describe. It was such a change as takes place in the career of an individual when he shakes off some controlling force and sets up in life for himself. The common people felt an independence, a pride, an elan which sent a thrill of vigor through every department of industry and adventure.

"The simplicity of the forms which President Jefferson adopted were a symbol to the national imagination of the change which had taken place. * * *"

Now, for substantial results of Jeffersonian simplicity in the public business. There must be, to use the words of his inaugural address, "a wise and frugal Government." It behooved him first, then, to simplify our bookkeeping and to unmystify our finances, to render all plain of comprehension to the people. It was their right, because it was their money. Let us, then, instruct our Secretary of the Treasury.

The outcome of Jeffersonian simplicity, the results following the putting into operation of his plans and ideas throughout his administration, are indicated in the summary at the conclusion of that chapter, so admirably expressed by the author of this book, to wit (p. 242):

Meanwhile his administration had paid off thirty-three millions of the public debt, which had been somewhat increasing before he came in; it had reduced taxes very much; it had reduced patronage, thereby simplifying the Government a great deal, and had added to the national domain the vast area of the Louisiana Territory and put down Burr's conspiracy without war or bloodshed so adeptly that the Federalists were beginning to deny that there ever had been a conspiracy at all; it had laid the foundations for the future successful contention for the possession of the Oregon country; it had benefited its own commerce and that of the civilized world by putting down the Barbary powers; it had kept the peace amid untold difficulties and with unspeakable benefit; it had captured the common sense and imagination of the country; it had destroyed quasi monarchial forms, ceremonials, cavalcadings, and "demnition nonsense" generally; it had given a practical illustration of the fact that government can be carried on successfully without tying to itself the monied or any other special interest, and that it could be carried on by those who regarded it as a public trust; he had given practical demonstration of the fact that a democracy is not irresponsible or dangerous and that restraints upon freedom of speech and of the press are not necessary to make a government strong; he had put the example of George Washington in declining a third term upon a basis of reason and general principle, destined to appeal for all time to the American people, and although his embargo policy had pressed hard upon the navigating States the pressure had been no harder nor the dissatisfaction any greater than war would have brought in its train, as was afterwards demonstrated.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator from Florida be good enough to bring Jeffersonian simplicity down to date by reading the expense account of Mr. Wilson in Paris?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not that expense account at hand; but it has nothing in the world to do with this situation here. We are discussing the inauguration of a President. That was an occasion when the affairs of the whole world were being adjusted around the table at Versailles—1,700,000,000 people were involved in it—the economic conditions and questions of vital significance arising throughout the unsettled world were being considered and adjusted and, of course, considering the people involved and the questions which arose, necessitating a sitting of six months 3,000 miles from home and the number of men required, and the force of assistants needed in dealing with those problems we ought to expect the expenses would be necessarily large. Here it is a question of a few hours, when the President is to be inaugurated, and the wheels of the Republic go on moving just the same whether you spend a million dollars in display or whether you spend a hundred dollars to bring the incoming President to the Capitol and administer the oath.

I am not in favor of any parsimony or any picayunish affair. I am in favor of a dignified, proper inauguration; but I am opposed to taxing the people of this country in order that we may have an extravagant display and an unnecessary demonstration.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this discussion has gone very far afield. Congress has done at this session what it has done every four years for a hundred years. It has provided a committee to take steps to provide for the inauguration of the President of the United States, one of the greatest events in this country. We have nothing to do with, and have never considered, the question of a ball in the Pension Building; we do not intend to deal with a parade, or seats, or anything of the kind, because those things are out of our jurisdiction. All we have done is to estimate the actual cost of providing for seats in front of the Capitol, for the invitations to be sent out to the friends of Senators, and also to provide the necessary policemen here in front of the Capitol on that day. That is the only question before us.

Mr. BORAH. May I suggest to the Senator that that is not the only question before us, if I may be permitted to say so. Nobody desires to criticize the committee; nobody has sought to criticize the committee. Congress is responsible for whatever takes place, and we know that the moment we start this program we will follow it up item by item, expense by expense, until it will reach the sums I have suggested.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I join with the Senator in some of the things he has said, in stopping expense when it is unnecessary; but this is a necessary expense, and Congress has already acted in appointing this committee and putting this responsibility upon us. We have estimated for a simple inauguration, just as has taken place for a hundred years, and we ask the necessary funds to pay for it. That is the only question raised by this joint resolution.

As to the other questions raised, that will be a matter for the consideration of Congress, and this committee will have nothing in the world to do with it; each Senator can vote hereafter as he desires upon these great questions of appropriating money for bringing here the midshipmen or bringing the West Pointers or having a parade or erecting seats on the sidewalks or in parks. This is simply to pay the necessary expenses of inaugurating the President at the Capitol, right here, and that is all there is in it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I believe in the exercise of economy in the affairs of Government. I wish we might return to the example of Thomas Jefferson. I wished that about eight years ago, but I saw no evidence of it. I wished it about four years ago, but I was not impressed with the fact that the spirit of Thomas Jefferson was hovering over the inaugural ceremony. I did not then hear on this side of the Chamber any protest against building a stand in front of the Capitol on which some citizens could sit and from which the President could deliver his address. It seems to me that the Jeffersonian eruption appears on the skins of some Democrats only when they are in the minority. We vote away $150,000,000, we put it into the hands of one man, we tell him to expend it in Europe for the benefit of starving people, and we sit quiescent while with unblushing effrontery the same gentleman in substance tells us that he expended—I have not the exact figures, but I think something like $40,000,000—of that money for the support of Poland and the Polish army while engaged in a war we never authorized, with a nation with which we were in a condition of profound peace, as far as the action of the Congress was concerned, and Congress is the only body authorized to declare war.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to say that the report shows that forty million of the hundred million dollars we appropriated to feed the children of Europe went to the Polish army?

Mr. REED. I think it is approximately that amount which it is said went to Poland. I will not undertake to state the figures accurately; but it was a very large sum, and I shall be glad to get the figures and put them into the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a question as to the exact figures, but that it went for the support of the Polish army.

Mr. REED. The statement of Mr. Hoover in substance was that it was necessary to expend the money to sustain Poland to keep the Polish army which was in the field supplied.

Mr. BORAH. That is the same thing.

Mr. REED. Whether it was turned over to the commander in chief, or whether it was used to feed the civil population in order to relieve the strain upon the Polish Government, so that the army could be kept in the field, deponent sayeth not. It seems that nobody takes the trouble to find out. I have the papers on my desk in my office, and I shall be glad to send and get them. I did not intend to mention the matter to-day. I intended to hereafter refer to it. I have not brought the data with me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not want to interrupt the Senator at this time, but I wish he would give us the exact reference as early as he can do so.

Mr. REED. I think there will be no dispute about it when we get at it. If I am mistaken, I will retract everything I have said, and do it as publicly as I have made the statement.

Now, we are talking about Jeffersonian simplicity with the Republican Party——

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator leaves the Polish reference, may I ask him if he has been able to secure the report in full upon this expenditure?

Mr. REED. I have on my desk a number of documents which I asked my clerk to get for me, and he reported to me orally the substance of them as he interpreted them. As I said, I did not suppose there was any question about the matter, or I would not have mentioned it. I shall be glad to give the Senate the benefit of what information I have as soon as I can take an hour to go through the documents.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Do the documents disclose a complete account of the expenditures?

Mr. REED. I do not think they do. They disclose the gross amount. There is one report which discloses the gross amounts which went to different countries. It does not disclose the individuals to whom it went, but there was some testimony taken before a committee of the House which was exceedingly illuminating, I think.

Mr. President, I have wandered afield from the question. If we are ever to inaugurate Jeffersonian simplicity, it seems a little hard that we should expect the Republican Party to undertake the job. That party has never been celebrated for following the examples of Thomas Jefferson. They have followed a different leader and a different idea.

Before I leave the floor I want to exonerate President Lincoln from the charge that Lincoln was extravagant when he kissed 34 young ladies representing 34 States.

Mr. KNOX. It was not a charge; it was a privilege.

Mr. REED. It must be conceded that Lincoln could do that without suspicion; and I take it he did it without offense or expense, and that the girls were "willin'." [Laughter.]

I am heartily in favor of simplicity, but I do not think we need pause at the platform to be erected in front of this Capitol. There is more in example than we often think, and the trappings of royalty ought to have no place in this Republic. Yet we have witnessed year after year a growing disposition to ape the habits of kings.

A great many years ago there was abandoned the habit of the President addressing the two Houses of Congress in person. A message was sent to these bodies. There was no attempt at parade. There was no effort to exercise the dominance of personality. There were no speeches from the throne and nothing that imitated speeches from the throne. The President, in obedience to the Constitution, laid before Congress his message as to the state of the country.

Congressmen were regarded as the representatives directly of the people. The offices they held were regarded as positions of great dignity, not because of the persons who occupied them, but because the individual, whoever he might be, was the representative of a great people, armed and clothed with authority to speak for them and in their name with reference to the important matters consigned to their keeping.

It was recognized that Congress was the real source of all legislative action and that no Executive had the right to go further than merely to suggest by his messages the matters to be considered and the course of conduct which in the opinion of the Executive ought to be followed. There was no attempt to concentrate power in the hands of the executive department. Senators used to refer to themselves then as ambassadors from sovereign States. It would be difficult to imagine one of the Senators of the old days trekking about the White House grounds and being denied admission to the White House by uniformed policemen. It would be difficult to imagine one of the Senators of the old days, who represented great States, who were not proud themselves, but were always considerate of the great people they represented—it would be difficult to imagine one of those Senators cooling his heels at a department, waiting to see a third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, or tenth assistant secretary of some kind to graciously grant him an audience.

It is now also difficult to recall the days when a State was a sovereignty that had yielded to the Federal Government only certain specific powers and had retained to itself all other powers of government. It was difficult a few years ago to conceive of the possibility that a treaty should be declared to be the supreme law of the land and to override the rights of States always reserved to them, always held by them under principles of the common law, upon the ground that the Senate and the Executive had not been expressly prohibited from assuming the particular power in question.

A new principle of constitutional law was written in the so-called migratory bird case which absolutely nullified the language of the Constitution, which declares that "all powers not therein granted are reserved to the States and to the peoples thereof." It is difficult for us to bring ourselves back to this old ground.

There is nothing the Republican administration can do that will more endear it to the people of the United States and entitle it to their respect than to turn back the clock of time and reinaugurate some of the old policies, customs, and philosophies of the past.

But, Mr. President, I am going to vote for this "stand." I am going to do it because the item we have under consideration only concerns the putting of a platform in front of the Capitol and furnishing seats to people in order that they may witness the ceremony. If I had been called upon in advance for an opinion, as a friend of the President elect, I would have suggested to him that he refuse all ceremonials of every kind. But the proceedings have taken this course, the committee has been appointed, and it has followed the precedents, and to refuse now to allow it money would seem to me like an unnecessary unkindness and possibly a reflection upon the President elect.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think it would be a reflection upon the President elect. I think he would be very glad to have the matters settled.

Mr. REED. If Senator HARDING will say that he desires to have no ceremony whatever then, of course, I shall be very glad indeed to accord with that suggestion, but I do not think he has taken that position.

The bringing here of cadets from West Point and midshipmen from Annapolis is another question.

We furnish the police at the Capitol. What is the estimated expense for additional police of the Capitol? There must, of course, be proper police protection.

Mr. KNOX. It is impossible to make any estimate of it. The vast crowds that will be in and about the Capitol on that day will have to be protected, and the Capitol itself will have to be looked after with much more care than usual, and that takes a very large force. I suppose the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who had charge of the last inauguration, can perhaps give a better estimate than I can.

Mr. OVERMAN. We authorized the Superintendent of the Capitol to employ the necessary force to take care of the Capitol Grounds and the Capitol itself and to protect the crowds. He paid them $3 a day. It is impossible to get competent men now to serve in that capacity for $3 a day. His policy was to bring in men from other cities who were familiar with the criminal element. How many men he employed I do not know, but I know he employed a great many to look after the situation. They were selected and employed by the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Woods.

Mr. REED. That comes out of the $50,000 proposed to be appropriated?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. That is all I have to say on the subject. With regard to the question of expenditures of money in Poland, I shall be glad within the next day or two to lay before the Senate facts which have been given me. I prefer doing it in that way, although I have my papers here now. But I do not want to undertake to speak from a memorandum which I have not had the opportunity to carefully consider.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think we have had demonstrated to us the power and the force of precedent. Because Congress has always in the past appropriated large sums of money for inaugural ceremonies, it is now given as a reason why we should do the same this year. I concede that precedent ought to have its proper weight. I believe it is a sufficient reason for the committee to act as they evidently have done. So when I oppose the resolution in its present form, I do not want to be understood as in any way reflecting upon the committee which has brought in the resolution; but, Mr. President, with all the power and force of precedent, and with the respect that we ought to pay to it, we ought to consider the condition of the country at the present time before we blindly follow precedent.

We are confronted now with the promises of economy which have been made by the incoming administration; we are confronted with the demands that are made upon Congress by all classes of citizens, regardless of party, for economy in governmental affairs. We have all, on both sides of the Chamber, pledged ourselves that we would do the best we could to bring about economy and cut out every appropriation that is not necessary. We are confronted with a proposition of raising taxes with which to meet the interest on our bonded indebtedness and to provide for the running expenses of the Government; a proposition that, from whatever angle we may view it, is one of the most difficult that has ever been presented to a Congress in the history of this country. We are taxing our ingenuity in order to find new articles to tax in order to bring in revenue; and intimately connected with the question of taxation and revenue is expenditure. If we can strike out an appropriation, if we can save an expenditure anywhere, we are relieving the burden of taxation to that extent when we have to reach that question and provide for it.

I believe that the present condition of the country demands that every useless expenditure of money should be avoided. This is one which it is conceded can be avoided to a great extent. I know that as appropriations go $50,000 is a small amount of money, and were this the only appropriation involved I should not take the time of the Senate to object to it, but it is merely the opening wedge. If we pass this resolution, it, in turn, will be cited as a precedent for other resolutions of expenditure which must follow.

It has been said, and I think truly, that a large number of American people have become extravagant in the last two or three years. Extravagance, Mr. President, is a disease; it is like the "flu"; it is contagious. That there has been an era of extravagance amongst all classes of people no one who has studied the subject will for a moment deny. In my humble opinion, that extravagance on the part of the people came about from following the precedent established by the Government of the United States. Every investigation that has been made into public expenditures has disclosed that our officials had been spending money as though money were simply leaves on trees and we had unlimited forests. Reference has been made by others to the expenditures made by the President in Paris, and I myself have heretofore referred to the same matter. I think the danger arising from that transaction lies not so much in the amount of money which the President spent as in the precedent that he established in spending it like a drunken sailor.

Now, we are confronted with a proposition that because at other inaugural ceremonies and because in other directions money has been uselessly expended we should not stop at providing money for the approaching inaugural ceremonies in accordance with the history of the past. If that is to be the rule, Mr. President, there will be no stopping place. Somewhere, at some place, somebody must call a halt; and while this item is comparatively small, it seems to me, to a great extent, such a useless one that this ought to be the proper place to begin.

It is said that even when Lincoln was inaugurated there was extravagance; and to fortify that assertion the claim is made that Lincoln kissed 34 girls on that occasion. Nobody, however, has claimed that the Government had to pay for that osculatory process; the taxpayers were not burdened by it. Nobody will deny the same privilege to President-elect HARDING, if he can find the girls who are willing—and I presume he can—so long as it is not charged up to the taxpayers of the country and they do not have to pay for it.

Mr. President, coming down now to this particular appropriation, it is conceded, I believe, that the bulk of it practically is going to be used to erect on the east side of the Capitol a stand that will have a seating capacity of 10,000; and it is understood, I think, that the seats on the stand shall be given free to the friends of Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate. If there is anything in the economy plea, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives ought not to provide from public funds money to pay for the erection of a stand the seating capacity of which is to be used by their friends who come here. Such a stand, Mr. President, will not seat one-tenth part of the people who come here; it will only seat those who are enabled, through one method or another, to get accommodations from Members of Congress. If Senators will harken back to times of the past when that great platform has been erected in front of the Capitol, they will recall that it was used for less than an hour, and that not one person in one thousand who sat in those seats heard a dozen words of the President's inaugural address. The same will be true this time. It will be found that half of the seats will be vacant before the President is midway in his address; that people will not be sitting in the seats, but will be standing up in groups talking and visiting with each other.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator from Nebraska would not refer to that matter unless he thought it important; so I will correct him by stating that, without any cost to the Government of the United States at all, on this occasion there will be installed a modern amplifier, which will enable everyone to hear all that the President says.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to hear that. That is not provided for in this appropriation, is it?

Mr. KNOX. No; the telephone company has offered to install it without cost.

Mr. NORRIS. If it be true, Mr. President, that we are going to have a new plan, and by some new system of telephoning the President may be heard over a 10-acre lot, then we shall not need any seats. Instead of 10,000 people hearing the President, there could be 100,000, who would stand for 30 minutes or 45 minutes or even an hour while the President is delivering his inaugural address; and by the use of that new method we could accommodate many more people without seats than we could with them.

Mr. President, I remember particularly the first inauguration of President Wilson, when a great platform constructed in front of the Capitol—I think it was almost a thousand feet in length, reaching nearly from one end of the building to the other—was filled with people to begin with, while out in front, held back by the police, were thousands and thousands of people standing up. The platform from which the President delivered his inaugural address was facing that standing multitude. Those in the seats are behind the President, and even those close to him can not hear him unless he turns around. It is absolutely absurd to think for a moment that the people who are going to occupy the seats on the platform are going to hear the inaugural address. It never has been done and it will not be done on the 4th of next March unless the new invention to which the Senator from Pennsylvania has referred is able to accomplish what is claimed for it, and in that event the space occupied by the stand can just as well be used for standing room, so that ten times as many people may hear as would hear if the seats were there for them to occupy if they wanted to occupy them. If the stand is constructed, many will not occupy the seats, but will be standing on top of the seats. I am not blaming those who do that because I have been in that crowd myself, and I know that however anxious one may be to hear, he can not hear because of the conversation going on around him. It is natural, too, that there should be conversation, because only an occasional word can be caught by those in the stand, so that most of the people leave their seats before the President has concluded his address. If the people want to hear the President's inaugural address—and I hope they will want to hear him, as I think we will—for the little time that it is going to take they will be glad and willing to stand up, especially when by that means more can be accommodated and more can hear.

Mr. President, I realize that on the occasion of the inaugural ceremonies it will be necessary to provide for some extra police, and I want to expend whatever money may be necessary to protect the people who come here. I realize that other expenses are going to be necessary, but if a stand is going to be built—and it is conceded it will be one of the main items of expense under the proposed appropriation—space for the President to speak, it seems to me, is all that is necessary and all that ought to be provided for. If we do not stop somewhere now, we are going to see, in addition to what the Senator from Idaho has enumerated, thousands of soldiers brought here from all parts of the United States, with cannon and guns and equipment—we all know how the parade is constituted—and all that expense will have to be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

Without enumerating the expense involved in bringing the cadets from the Military Academy and the midshipmen from the Naval Academy to Washington, without enumerating the expense to which it will be necessary for the States to go to bring their troops and others here to take part in the parade, with bands, and so forth, there will be detachments, battalions, and regiments of the Regular Army carried in special trains across the country at enormous expense, to be fed and provided for in Washington at additional great expense, and then they must all be returned at still further expense. Furthermore, we are going to see the demand made a little later on that the Pension Office, or some similar building, shall be turned over to the inaugural committee. The cry is going to be made that there will be no expense attached to the use of such building, but we will have to pay the expense of taking out the furniture and storing it while it is removed from the building, the expense of putting it back, and the salaries of all the clerks of the bureau while they are unable to perform their work during the time when the building is turned over to the inaugural committee.

This is only the beginning. If Congress should take some action now to limit inaugural expenditures, for instance, to render it impossible to go to the great expense of constructing this useless pavilion for 10,000 people, on which they may sit for a few minutes, it would have an effect on every other branch of the Government.

Mr. President, I wish to appeal to the Senate that if we are going to have economy, somebody, somewhere, at some place, must begin. Let us begin now to practice economy in connection with a proposed expenditure that everyone knows is useless.

I am not going to object to the consideration of the joint resolution, although I understand unanimous consent for its consideration has not been given, but when it is formally before the Senate for consideration I hope an opportunity will be afforded us to offer amendments. I wish, when the proper time comes, to offer an amendment to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment.

Yesterday I had on my desk a resolution which I drew limiting the amount to $10,000. At the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who desired to itemize the probable expenditures, I deferred its introduction. After talking with people here in Washington who knew something about the situation, I thought that $10,000 would cover the expenses for policemen, and so forth, and that, as the Senator from Nebraska said, the erection of this stand was wholly unnecessary and of very little benefit. But even with the amount which is included in the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I should not have objected any further if it had not been, as I say, that it is simply the beginning of the expenditure.

I have gone to some trouble about this matter with those who have known something of inaugurals and those who are in a position to estimate the probable expense of this inaugural, and I know what it is going to cost the Public Treasury, either the Federal Treasury or the State treasuries, to a reasonable certainty. As I said a moment ago, it will cost the taxpayers of the country a million dollars. I know that that will be an embarrassment to President-elect HARDING, and nobody is his friend who undertakes to impose it upon him. I know that it will be a distinct embarrassment to the Republican Party, and no one is its friend who undertakes to impose any such program upon it in the beginning of its administration.

If the Senator from Pennsylvania will undertake to join with us in curtailing all future expenditures in regard to this program, and if those who are going to support this program here to-day will join with us in cutting out and curtailing the other expenditures which will naturally come along, I shall have no criticism whatever and no objection to the measure; but if we are going to the full expenditure as it is calculated by those who have the matter in charge, we shall pursue a most unjust and indefensible course.

I have upon my desk this morning a letter from a committee which is appealing for funds to feed the dying children of Europe. The letter states that $10 will save the life of a child. I also clipped from a newspaper day before yesterday a statement to the effect that in one of our large cities there are 110,000 children of school age who are being kept out of school because they have not the clothes nor the food to permit them to be sent. I presume that is characteristic of a great many other communities in the United States at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. What community is that?

Mr. BORAH. I can advise the Senator. It is estimated that a million men are out of employment in this country, and a very distinguished leader of this body—a man who has been absent for some time, but who undoubtedly has been giving great attention to this situation—said that in his opinion there will be 4,000,000 men out of employment by the 1st of March. For us to spend money in this way under those conditions is to indicate to the country that we are wholly unmindful of the situation which confronts us, which is the most discouraging and demoralizing thing that the community can get into its mind—that its representatives here are not in sympathy with the situation as it actually exists in this country.

I therefore want to urge in all sincerity upon those who feel that by reason of the fact that certain obligations have been undertaken they must vote for this joint resolution that they join with us in opposing any further expenditures in regard to this inaugural. I believe that it is our duty to do it, and so far as I am concerned I shall continue to urge it during the time that the preparations are going on.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize the great force with which many things have been said in opposition to extravagant expenditures. There is no expenditure that can be made by the Congress of the United States which could not be very well made for some other legitimate and proper purpose. The same thing may be said of the present appropriation. I have no brief to speak for my distinguished colleague who after March 4 is to be my President; but my belief is that if he were to consult his own wishes alone he would prefer to take the oath of office quietly and proceed to the business of the hour.

But it is not President-elect HARDING alone whose wishes must be considered. This is an event in the lives of one hundred and six millions of people. It comes only once in four years, and my judgment is that the people of the United States want these inaugural ceremonies to be conducted with simplicity, but at the same time with proper dignity.

I am not unmindful of the fact that in the short life of this Nation three of our Presidents have been shot down, and no Member of the Senate would forgive himself if some untoward act should befall our President elect on March 4 next. That will indicate the necessity for proper and complete police protection. Of course, we can have the President go down to a livery stable and be sworn in, or to a garage; but is there anyone who wants that done?

Mr. BORAH. And nobody has suggested it.

Mr. POMERENE. No; no one has suggested it.

I think we can perhaps remember, with some advantage to ourselves in coming to a conclusion, what occurs in every family in the land. When some event occurs in the family that is of special interest to it or to some member of the family—as, for instance, a wedding—some interest is naturally taken in it; it is attended with some ceremony. The family indulges itself just a little bit further than it would on ordinary occasions.

It may be, when we are considering the erection of a platform, that we are perhaps making it a little bit too pretentious. I do not know about that; but I have never heard of any objection being made to the carrying out of these ceremonies in keeping with the proper dignity of the Nation.

The chairman of this committee has presented here a joint resolution calling for $50,000. That is a goodly sum, considered from my standpoint. I recognize that every time an appropriation is made some one says something about how little it is going to cost each individual. There is a good deal of force in it, but at the same time I am not sure that is the proper way in which to determine this particular question.

This $50,000, if appropriated, is going to cost each man, woman, and child in this country less than one-half of 1 mill. I confess I am out of harmony with some of the propositions that have been made looking to other festivities with which the Congress of the United States has nothing whatsoever to do, but I do not think we are going far afield when we limit the expenditures of the Congress of the United States so far as they relate to the ceremonies here in the Capitol to $50,000. I do not think that is going too far, and I expect to support the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the joint resolution before the Senate or is the matter pending on a request to take it up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. While the Chair did not formally announce that there was no objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution, the Chair thinks it is before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Then will the Senator from Washington permit me to make a motion now, in order that it may be pending when a vote is about to be taken?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I move to strike out "$50,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I trust that the committee which has reported the resolution will not take it as any reflection upon them that Senators should oppose the joint resolution. They have simply done their duty. The Senate passed a resolution a short time ago, and it went to the House, providing for a joint committee to look after the inauguration of the President elect. That was very proper. Pursuant to that resolution the committee has brought in this resolution for the consideration of the Senate. It has discharged its duty. It now becomes the duty of the Senate to discharge its duty with reference to this resolution, and I do not desire that anything I should say or any action I should take shall be taken by the committee or any member of it as any reflection.

Mr. President, I am in general accord with practically everything that has been said in opposition to this resolution. One appropriation bill has come over from the House of Representatives and is now under consideration in the Committee on Appropriations. That bill is one to take care of the needs of the District of Columbia. We have been having hearings for many days of the representatives of the different departmental activities of the District urging the needs of the District. We find that appropriations have been cut to the bone for activities considered absolutely essential to the well-being and the happiness of the people of the District.

It has been urged upon us that the schools of the District need more money. I think they do. I think the school facilities of the District of Columbia are really a disgrace to a Nation of a hundred and ten million people and the wealth of this country. I do not think there is a school system—in the Western States, at any rate—but is far superior to the system here in the District of Columbia, not only in school facilities, but in many other respects. If there is anything in which the Capital of the Nation ought to be a model to the other parts of the country it seems to me it should be in its school system; yet we are lagging far behind. It is said that we can not get the necessary facilities, because the appropriations required would be too great.

Then I think that in the District of Columbia we are more backward in the care of feeble-minded children than in any other section of the country. We have urged upon the committee the imperative necessity of additional facilities to take care of these unfortunates. Yet the committee is hewing down appropriations for purposes like that to a point where, in my judgment, the service will not be anything like it ought to be. Many other lines of governmental activities of that character, which imperatively need greater appropriations, are being cut down in the interest of economy.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if we are going to economize and insist upon economy in directions like these, we should also insist upon reasonable economy in matters like this now before the Senate. I recognize that this appropriation relates only to the situation here at the Capitol, and that it is necessary that we should have ample police protection upon inauguration day. I do not know how much extra it ought to take for that, but I think we could take care of the situation here, outside of the police, at a far less expense than that proposed in this joint resolution. I think $10,000, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] would be ample to provide an adequate stand to do what I think ought to be done here.

In 1889 I was one of the humble spectators who came from the country to view the inauguration. I had no Senator or Representative as a friend of mine to extend me an invitation to the stand which was erected in front of the Capitol, but I stood out in the crowd in front of the President who was being inaugurated, with the water from somebody else's umbrella running down my back, and I venture to say, Mr. President, that I heard more of that inaugural address than I have heard of the five inaugural addresses which have taken place since 1901, every one of which I have had the honor to attend in quite a different capacity from that in which I attended the one in 1889, and when I had a splendid seat in the inaugural stand.

You can not hear there, because the President who is being inaugurated does not speak to the people in that stand. As the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said, he talks to the people who are in front of him, people who are standing up, who have no seats. They are the ones who hear. I venture to say that these seats in this stand would be prized very little were it not for the fact that it gives a rather advantageous place from which to view the great parade which is expected to be a part of these inaugural ceremonies. It is a useless expense to provide so many seats.

I want the President elect to be inaugurated with befitting dignity. I may be entirely wrong, but it seems to me that it would be fitting if provision were made upon the stand from which the President is to speak for the Members of the House and the Senate, for the retiring President and his Cabinet, for the members of the Supreme Court of the United States, and for the diplomatic representatives of the different countries, and then leave the rest of the space for the public to get as near to the President who is being inaugurated as possible, and for as many of them to hear as is possible. I think that would be a fitting and dignified ceremony. A stand of that sort could be constructed properly for ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and probably less. So, Mr. President, I am going to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Then I think we should take into account another matter with which everybody is familiar—the uncertainties of the weather on the 4th of March. I remember 12 years ago when the seats on the grandstand were not desirable at all, when the snow was falling and the wind was blowing, and everybody was seeking to remain indoors rather than out. I hope it will not be that way this year; but nobody can tell. We could guard a little bit against that with a much smaller stand. We could put a covering upon it to protect the dignitaries who surround the President who is being inaugurated without any very great expense. We might save a good many valuable lives in that way. I know one year when a very prominent Representative of the United States, of very long service, attended the inauguration and went home and died from exposure. I venture to say there have been many others whose death could be traced directly to exposure on these occasions.

So I think, Mr. President, we can at very much less expense than $50,000 not only inaugurate the President in a very fitting and dignified way, but we can show to the people of the country that those of us who professed so much abhorrence of the extravagance of this administration, and promised them that we would devote our administration to economy are setting an example at the very outset of the administration which will be a very splendid one, not only from the governmental standpoint, but from a personal standpoint.

Mr. President, I wish there was some way we could advise the people of the District of Columbia who are preparing for this inaugural occasion as to what attitude we are going to take with reference to it, and how far we are going to facilitate or interfere with what they think ought to be done. I do not know how we could do it, but I am going to say that, so far as I am concerned, I am going to do everything I can to discourage extravagant preparations for it. I am going to support the idea that was presented by the Senator from Minnesota this morning, that our streets will not be blocked or filled with grandstands with my consent.

Another thing that has just come to my mind. Twelve years ago, when we had a foot of snow over the Capital and throughout the country, and when it was still snowing and blowing on inauguration day, there were thousands of soldiers in this city, National Guard and others, who had no place that was suitable for people to sleep. They ought not to have been exposed to weather of that kind. They should not be brought here to be subjected to such conditions again and to stand for hours in the cold and snow simply to make a show.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, can the Senator from his recollection give the Senate the number of soldiers who lost their lives from exposure to the weather on that occasion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not.

Mr. NORRIS. I have heard it stated several times, but I have forgotten the number. Quite a number of soldiers died on account of that exposure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not remember that I have ever seen any figures in that regard, but from our common knowledge of things we know that there must have been a great many.

Then, Mr. President, it is difficult to get a place to sleep in this city now, especially at a reasonable rate. How will it be if we attract a hundred or hundred and fifty thousand people here? Thousands of them will walk the streets all night. Those who are able to pay the exorbitant charges which will be asked will probably do so, and have comfortable places to stay; but there will be thousands and thousands of people of this country who come in here who will have no place to sleep and will sit around in chairs or on benches or more likely walk the streets all night.

Mr. President, I hope that this will not be made a great Roman triumphal parade. I want to see the President elect inaugurated in a dignified way, consistent with the simplicity of a hundred million American people who boast of their free institutions, of their form of Government, and I think this Congress can well set the example and do whatever it can properly do to limit and restrict not only these initial expenses but to set its face against additional expenditures we are going to be asked to meet.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KNOX. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard
Ball	Gore	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Md.
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harris	New	Smoot
Calder	Harrison	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Heflin	Nugent	Stanley
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Dial	Kellogg	Page	Thomas
Dillingham	Kendrick	Phipps	Underwood
Edge	Kenyon	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Elkins	Knox	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lenroot	Reed	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would the Senator object to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business that we may finish the consideration of the joint resolution which has been before the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is going to be a vote on the joint resolution, I can see no objection to that course. If, however, the debate is to go on, I think the unfinished business should not be laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator would not object to laying it aside for a few minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not if we are going to get a vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that I shall oppose laying aside the unfinished business. I wish to consider the question of offering an additional amendment to the joint resolution, and, therefore, I ask that it may go over until to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House having proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) entitled "Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes," returned to the Senate by the President of the United States, with his objections thereto, and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives, with the message of the President returning the joint resolution:

Resolved, That the joint resolution do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) extending the time within which the special joint committee appointed to investigate the advisability of establishing certain naval, aviation, and submarine bases in the United States is required to make its report to Congress, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

Monday, January 3, 1921.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, it will be interesting when, perhaps, some future and ingenious historian shall elaborate the theory that democracy in its last analysis owes quite as much to a few drams of saltpeter and an ounce of lead as to all the wisdom and eloquence of poets, writers, and philosophers.

The utilization of the explosive power of nitrogen gas in the middle of the thirteenth century destroyed the feudal system, with the class distinctions that had marked it since the days of the Roman knights by making the panoplied rider and his horse the same size as the yeoman who had discarded his crossbow for a blunderbuss or a flintlock rifle.

About 35 years ago black powder, which had been used as the only explosive since the thirteenth century, was superseded by the discovery that nitric acid applied to cellulose or purified cotton, to toluol, or other like substances, would produce an explosive of infinitely greater destructiveness than the old munition of past centuries. From the time of the use of smokeless powder, T. N. T., and other like explosives the retort and the crucible have become quite as much a part of the wise preparation for war as the production of guns or the building of battleships or provision for coast defense.

The secret of the successful prosecution of the next war may be found in the laboratory of the chemist rather than in the calculations of the strategist. With the discovery of explosives of tremendous power the use of nitrogen as an essential of war has advanced and increased literally by leaps and bounds. In one month in 1918 the English and French engaged in the World War consumed over two and one-half times the number of rounds of artillery ammunition consumed by the Union forces during the entire war, a ratio of consumption of 120 to 1.

During the year 1918 we were consuming inorganic nitrogen in the United States at the rate of some 420,000 tons, and of this over 60 per cent was for strictly military purposes and over 75 per cent was imported in the form of sodium nitrate from far-away Chile.

The necessity for an ample supply of nitrogen has become a sine qua non to every hope of security or preparedness or success in any future war in which the United States may become engaged.

In the now celebrated Glasgow report to the Secretary of War, Arthur Glasgow, who has investigated this question in Europe and America and was the head of a commission selected for that purpose by the Secretary of War, states:

BRIGHTON HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., October 27, 1919.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR:
Washington.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: 1. With the return of our military and agricultural commissions from Europe, our investigations have at last reached conclusions which can now be interpreted into definite recommendations regarding the disposition of

UNITED STATES NITRATE PLANT NO. 2 AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

A convincing feature of these recommendations is that each and every line of investigation, however distinct and whatever the predisposition of investigators, has led invariably to the same conclusions.

2. The war has demonstrated beyond dispute that no nation is safe which is dependent upon a foreign supply of nitrogen. National security demands an adequate domestic supply of high explosives, the consumption of which in modern warfare has been found vastly to surpass all expectations. The cause of the Allies was in constant jeopardy because of the necessity of importing nitrates from Chile. It does not need Lord Fisher's recent articles regarding the future of submarine warfare to demonstrate the uncertainty of importing military supplies; but, while the fundamental requirement of national defense demands self-sufficiency in explosives, this necessity places the United States in a position of some comparative advantages, because only nations able to provide an adequate supply of fixed nitrogen can wage successful war against the United States.

The capture of atmospheric nitrogen in efficiently utilizable form is a new and undeveloped art. Unless the United States nitrate plants now completing are brought into continuously developing service they and their products are likely to be obsolescent and useless in the strenuous competition of future warfare. The only way to secure that these plants shall be always immediately available for most efficient military service and for most efficient and economical extension in case of need is to operate them continuously, whether in peace or war. Fortunately, from this point of view, nitrogen is as essential in peace as in war. It is as necessary to preserve life as to destroy life, and is the most expensive component of standard fertilizers. (Hearings, p. 83.)

In discussing the dangers incident to a lack of nitrogen, Mr. Baruch stated that—

If at this time—

During the last war—

Germany or the Germans had grasped their opportunity and bought this nitrate through a period of a year or six months, it would be most horrible to contemplate what would have happened, because the whole world was depending on one place to get its nitrates; and if the Germans had seized this opportunity and bought this nitrate, or bought the officinas and shut down the production, there would not have been sufficient propellants for us to have fought the war with, because there was no other reasonable situation that could have been developed and action taken in time.

Maj. Gen. Clarence Williams, Chief of Ordnance of the War Department, speaking along the same line, says:

We are, of course, greatly concerned with nitrogen, because of its exceeding military importance, and one can easily picture the importance of it by thinking of what Germany would have been without the process of fixing nitrogen from the air, which they already had established. Germany could not have carried on the war for six months except for her preparation in that regard.

In the early days of the use in the United States of inorganic nitrogen for explosives, fertilizers, and chemicals we were practically 100 per cent dependent upon importations from one country or another, but especially from Chile. In 1916, although we had gradually increased the production of fixed nitrogen mainly through the construction of by-product coke ovens, we were still some 75 to 80 per cent dependent upon importation.

Ernest Kilburn Scott, one of the greatest engineers of the world, says, speaking of this very question:

Of course, one line that I have been taking all along is that you have got to have that Muscle Shoals plant for national defense; you have got to have a factory for making nitrogen from air so that in the next war, if it comes, you will not have to depend upon Chile nitrate.

UNPREPAREDNESS FOR WORLD WAR.

It is appalling that in the face of the enormous expense to which this Government was put in the preparation of arms and armament, in the construction of ships and guns and airplanes and torpedo-boat destroyers, and all that sort of thing, we were totally without an adequate supply of ammunition and without any available means of obtaining it; and had communication with far-away Chile been interrupted, the whole costly plan essential to our national defense would have proven utterly abortive.

The great plant at Muscle Shoals was constructed under the supervision of Frank S. Washburn, the head of the American Cyanamid Co. of the United States. Speaking of our unpreparedness at the time of our entrance into the late war, he says:

The War Industries Board and the Ordnance Department appealed to the American Cyanamid Co. in September, 1917, six months substantially after we had entered the war, to provide them with an escape from a situation which they assured me could only be provided for by a willingness of the staff of the American Cyanamid Co., in effect, to absolutely subscribe themselves to this governmental effort.

The whole Government of the United States was helpless and forced to look to the head of a subsidiary company of an international trust to provide this Government with the one most essential element for the prosecution of a successful war—

They had found, as other nations had found in this war, that it was impossible to provide explosives under the artillery program that had become a necessity in carrying out the type of war that was being waged and to secure those explosives from anything like the ordinary sources. There was a particular kind of material which must be had in enormous quantities, and there was only one source, and that was from the atmosphere, from which it could be secured, and there was only one organization in the United States that knew the first thing about fixation of atmospheric nitrogen. Outside of the staff of the American Cyanamid Co. there was no one who knew anything about it except what they could take out of literature as to secret processes, and all such literature, broadly speaking, was three years old in its development anyway.

When you consider this utter unpreparedness in the production of this basis of all explosives—propellants and bursting charges—in the light of the preparedness of other countries against a like contingency it is positively criminal to risk a like happening in case of future war.

The nitrogen from coke ovens and gas works and from organic substances, such as tankage, cotton-seed meal, being totally inadequate to supply this demand, it became absolutely necessary that this country should take immediate steps to secure these essential supplies of nitrogen.

The construction of this plant became absolutely necessary. This great work was undertaken with ardor, wisdom, and celerity.

Says the Secretary of War:

During the war we spent approximately $85,000,000 in building two nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals. Plant No. 1, the smaller of the two, is known as the Haber process plant, and the larger of the two, or No. 2 plant, upon which something over $70,000,000 has been spent, is known as the "cyanamid-process plant."

These plants were constructed. The Haber plant did not prove successful.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I wanted to get the Senator's figures with regard to the cost of the two plants. How much has been spent on both?

Mr. STANLEY. Eighty-five millions.

Mr. KENYON. On both plants?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KENYON. And how much is required to complete them?

Mr. STANLEY. They are complete and in operation.

Mr. KENYON. I did not so understand the testimony we had the other day. It was to the effect that they are far from complete.

Mr. STANLEY. These plants are making cyanamid now. They propose to make sulphate of ammonia, which will require an additional appropriation for the improved fertilizer; but the plants are complete for the purposes for which they were constructed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is correct, and yet there is a further word to say.

Plant No. 1 was an experimental plant, an attempt to follow the Haber process without the information with which to follow it. It has not been a successful plant. Plant No. 2 is absolutely complete so far as making nitrate of ammonia is concerned, which is the process that is used for powder; but if the cyanamid that is made in that plant is to be pursued to a point where it will make sulphate of ammonia, then it requires an expenditure of a few million dollars more in the way of adapting it to the production of fertilizer from the present completed plant, where it makes nitrate of ammonia, ready to make powder.

Mr. KENYON. How many millions more does the Senator understand it will require?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This bill does not ask for any appropriation, but it proposes to sell a certain amount of Chilean nitrate, which it was estimated at the time the amendment was offered would produce twelve and a half million dollars, which, it is said by the experts who prepared it, will be a sufficient sum of money to build and inaugurate that portion of the plant which would be used for fertilizers, at the same time leaving a working capital.

Mr. KENYON. So it will be $12,500,000 in addition to what has been expended?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The $12,500,000 would include the working capital.

Mr. KENYON. And has about $116,000,000 been expended?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not on these two plants. I have seen various estimates, but I think the statement the Senator has just read is substantially correct—that $85,000,000 has been expended on the two nitrate plants. Of course, that does not include the money which has been spent on the dam at Muscle Shoals. That is a different proposition. My remark applies only to the nitrate plants.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an observation in connection with something the Senator from Alabama just said?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Alabama said that this bill provides for the sale of some of the Government's Chilean nitrates, so that the sum of $12,500,000 can be raised in that way without having a direct appropriation from the Federal Treasury. It is fair to say in that connection that when the committee had this bill under consideration the Chief of Ordnance and the Secretary of War told us that the War Department had in storage 300,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, which they thought was the necessary amount to keep in reserve in time of peace, but that 150,000 tons of that could be sold, and that that would bring approximately $12,500,000. The Chief of Ordnance thought that that might well be sold, provided the plant was to go into operation, and the year following the plant through its production could replace the 150,000 tons; but it is well for us to remember that since that testimony was given the market price of Chilean nitrate has fallen from $83 a ton to $52 a ton, so that if we are to get $12,500,000 by the sale of some of our reserve Chilean nitrate we shall have to sell 240,000 tons instead of 150,000 tons, and we shall have only 60,000 tons left as a reserve for the Army. So the amendment adopted by the committee has been made absolutely valueless, due to the change in market conditions in Chilean nitrate.

Mr. STANLEY. That is predicated upon the idea that the estimate of $12,500,000 for the installation of this plant, and other things included, would make it as costly as ever. The estimate was based upon the same conditions as the price of Chilean nitrates was based upon.

In addition to that this Government will be put to an expense in buildings and in warehouses of over $2,000,000 for the care of this enormous quantity of nitrates. If this nitrate is turned over to commercial users, we will save in the neighborhood of $2,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not the testimony.

Mr. STANLEY. The hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs abundantly showed it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee was informed that it was the set policy of the War Department to have at least 300,000 tons on hand; that they would be willing to let 150,000 be sold in one year if they had the assurance that the Muscle Shoals plant would replace it the next year, and still keep in storage 300,000 tons, storehouse expense and everything to continue. Nothing is to be saved there in warehousing and storage.

Mr. STANLEY. I will reach that point further on in the argument. The experts who appeared before the committee were not under that impression, and if I am not mistaken—and I have the record here—the Secretary of War stated that this enormous reserve of 300,000 tons of Chilean nitrate is based upon the idea of an inadequate supply in this country, and it stands to reason that if 300,000 tons will supply us with munitions now, with a plant in perfect condition, and producing, as this plant can produce, over 200,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia, which would be 40,000 tons of nitrogen for war purposes, this reserve would necessarily be only half as great.

If we have to import 300,000 tons of Chilean nitrate now we do it in order to get about 50,000 tons of nitrogen, and if we have the 40,000 tons of nitrogen available no such reserve is necessary. I think it is so stated in the hearings, and if it is not, it follows as a matter of course.

For that reason I am perfectly convinced that it is a legitimate saving. In addition to that, when this plant is a going concern it is estimated by the greatest engineers in the world and by those engineers of the Army who have given it careful study, that the net earnings of this plant will approximate $3,000,000 a year, and that can be taken from that $12,500,000.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator understand that the testimony of the experts of the War Department was that it would be necessary at all times to keep 300,000 tons on hand in case the Muscle Shoals project were completed?

Mr. STANLEY. I have such profound respect for the thorough knowledge of this subject by the chairman of the committee that I hesitate to differ with him, but I did not gather from a study of the hearings any such conclusion, and I do not think it is warranted by the statements of the witnesses before the committee. But I assume his conclusions and mine are reached alike from a study of the hearings before the Agricultural Committee, and I will insert the statements made by the Secretary of War, Dr. Lamb, Mr. Glasgow, and others in the RECORD, and they speak for themselves.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, I simply want to state what I understood to be the situation.

If the Government of the United States completes these projects there will be no necessity for the keeping of the 300,000 tons referred to by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The necessity of keeping such a large supply on hand simply comes from the fact that we must purchase all of our nitrates at the present time from foreign countries—all of them, I say—from Chile, and it is for that reason, and for that reason only, that such a large supply as 300,000 tons is required. I do not believe, at least, I do not wish to be understood as stating, that it was the testimony of the experts of the War Department that 300,000 tons would be required to be kept in storage in case these plants were completed. We know that it would not be necessary if these plants were completed, and the 60,000 tons the Senator referred to would be an abundant supply to be kept on hand at one time if we were in a position to go on and manufacture, as we will do when the plants have been completed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator from North Dakota that the capacity of the plants is only to be 200,000 tons a year? This country can not rely completely upon one plant, whose capacity is 200,000 tons, with which to fight a war, when it has been shown by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] that many hundred thousands of tons are needed in war. We have to have a reserve, in addition to a turn-out capacity.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not want to take the time of the Senator unnecessarily——

Mr. STANLEY. That is all right. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator take the time.

Mr. GRONNA. But again, in order to correct what I think is a mistaken idea, 200,000 tons of cyanamid does not mean 200,000 tons of Chilean nitrate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not anywhere near. That is worse yet.

Mr. GRONNA. No; I do not think it is worse yet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the high explosive standpoint it is.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the Senator is absolutely mistaken. If we had 60,000 tons of Chilean nitrates on hand it would be ample at one time, providing we had these plants completed and could go on and manufacture our own materials. We would then be able to have a sufficient quantity on hand, because we would be constantly manufacturing explosives, and we would be more certain of keeping a supply; we would be certain of having an ample supply if we were to make our own explosives, although the supply may be somewhat limited at any one plant, as the Senator says. But the Senator knows that while we are only manufacturing under the cyanamid process at present, there is water power at Muscle Shoals sufficient to manufacture not only with that process but with the arc process and with the Haber process, giving us an abundant supply. No one knows how much we can manufacture if that project is completed, and I do not think the Senator from New York will disagree with me on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no limit, Mr. President, to that process. The cyanamid process is out of date now, and we have this $7,000,000 invested in it.

CYANAMID PROCESS NOT OBSOLETE.

Mr. STANLEY. The statement has been repeatedly made in the House that the cyanamid process is out of date. I think the statement is not warranted when we take into consideration the efficiency of the cyanamid plants and the action of other Governments. If it is out of date, it has gone out of date since the signing of the armistice. There are about 46 or 48 plants in the world to-day. According to the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, outside of the United States there was only one plant using the Haber process in the world in efficient operation.

France, immediately after the beginning of the late war, with every opportunity to adopt any plan she chose, installed nine plants using the cyanamid process. Of the 46 or 48 plants in the world, 35 are cyanamid plants. The only reason that Germany ever attempted to use the Haber process was on account of her lack of water power. Her necessities, not the excellence of the plant, required it. Every expert who testified before the committee presided over by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] dwelt upon the intricacy, the delicacy, the complications, the multitudinous difficulties and failures that had followed the use of this process everywhere. The trouble was that Germany had no water power, and she was bound to perfect this intricate process, and she was the only country in the world then, and she is the only country in the world now, which has the technical skill, the trained experts, the chemists, and the engineers to do what Dr. Lamb stated is the most intricate and difficult engineering problem in the world, the operation of the great Haber process at Oppenau in Germany. No other country would attempt it, and Germany would not have attempted it but for the fact that she has no water power.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Are the experts of the War Department unanimous in the belief that the cyanamid process is the better of the two?

Mr. STANLEY. There was no question about it. My knowledge of the subject goes to this extent, that at the time we went into this work the War Department could not build a fixation plant any more than the Senator from Ohio could build a watch, and there was but one company in this country extracting nitrogen from the air, and that was the company using this cyanamid process, and we secured the services of this cyanamid company in building the plant.

Mr. POMERENE. I asked the question not in a contentious spirit, but for the purpose of eliciting information.

Mr. STANLEY. I understand. That is my information.

Mr. POMERENE. I know that there was a good deal of dissatisfaction during the period of the war because we did not hurry up these nitrate plants, and one of the reasons for the delay was the difficulty the War Department had in determining whether we should have the cyanamid process or the Haber process, and whether they had come to a very definite conclusion or not in that behalf I did not know, except as I would infer from the fact that the cyanamid process was adopted or was expected to be adopted.

Mr. STANLEY. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that he could not have put into operation any plan, I presume, without the assistance of private concerns which understood this process.

Germany has the Haber processes installed. She has 7 plants in which the cyanamid process is installed. Austria has 2, France has 9, Norway and Sweden have 3, Italy has 5, Switzerland has 3, Canada has 1, Japan has 4, the United States has 1, making 35.

There are eight plants using the arc process—in France 2, in Norway and Sweden 2, in Italy 1, in Canada 1, and in the United States 1. There is only one Haber process in successful operation in the world, and that is in Germany; and the Germans boast that this operation is so intricate and requires such technical skill that they told the American commissioners when they were over there that they were perfectly willing to allow the French to come in there, have their formulas, and inspect their machinery, and take the plant over, and they said there were not experts enough in France to learn how to run them in years. It is described as operating like a watch. Any part of this machine is highly corrosive to steel, likely to explode the containers at various times, which operate, as I understand, under a pressure of 1,500 pounds to the square inch. Even if it were a question now as to whether we should install the Haber process or the cyanamid process, I believe the latter is the better. But that, as has been pointed out by the experts, is not the question. We have both processes there. We have the Haber process, or a modification of it, and we have the cyanamid process.

This plant is complete. It is larger than this Capitol—one building 1,000 feet long and 100 feet wide, constructed at a cost of over $60,000,000, and said, according to the testimony of experts, to be the finest plant of the kind on the face of the earth. I wish to call attention to the character of the plant.

Arthur Glasgow, after a review of plants and their construction the world over, said:

> This will realize the utmost peace-time advantages of the war investment of $70,000,000 in United States nitrate plant No. 2, and of the current investment of $18,000,000 in hydroelectric and navigation development; while, at the same time, it will promote national security by making this plant always the most advanced example of the art—supplying current military requirements, and a model for efficient multiplication in case of need.

Dr. Lamb, director of the Fixed Nitrogen Research Laboratory, Nitrate Division, Ordnance Department, United States Army, and certainly capable of judging, said:

We have got the best plant in the world. We did not see a better plant anywhere in Germany, or elsewhere, than this one of our own. On the other hand, the other processes, which will compete with this process, are pretty nearly unknown to us. The Germans got their information on these processes more or less as a matter of necessity, as has been pointed out, but they are now making full use of the advantage which they have gained.

Gen. Pershing, in a letter to the Secretary of War, dated March 29, 1920, speaking of this plant, said:

In the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant the Government has a permanent installation which is of the greatest importance. In another war a plant assuring a domestic supply of nitrogen might well be a decisive factor in maintaining our security. It is understood that this plant can be utilized in peace for the commercial manufacture of nitrogen products and that such use would return a reasonable profit on the investment represented by the plant, while maintaining it constantly available for military purposes. * * *

Now, Mr. President, I am not only convinced that the Secretary of War was wise in his selection of the plant, but I am thoroughly convinced that if we were to do it over again it would be wise to select the same process. In the language of Col. Joyes Dr. Lamb said:

The cyanamid process has been growing in many countries for 15 years or so, and the apparatus and procedure have been so long studied that they are well established, and revolutionary changes are not probable.

While the Haber process, as Dr. Lamb has well described it—must be worked on a very large scale, due to its very complicated nature and elaborate apparatus, and to the fact that it must be tuned up and has to run like a watch to operate successfully. Even at the time we were there they told us that the various units, the various parts of the plant, required practice; they had to get going for a week or two weeks before the whole plant got into operation, so as to get everything running at the right rate, and then they all started.

PLANT SHOULD NOT BE SALVAGED OR PLACED IN "STAND-BY" CONDITION.

Three courses are left open to us with reference to the disposition of this great plant at Muscle Shoals. We must salvage it, junk it, or put it in a stand-by condition, or operate it. The choice strikes me as being so manifest that it is hardly necessary to argue it. The statement should be sufficient.

The technical and scientific apparatus at this great laboratory would be comparatively worthless if it were salvaged. To paint the parts, guard this great property, and leave it in idleness for approaching obsolescence would cost $500,000 a year. To that must be added the loss of the profit incident to its operation, estimated by Col. Joyes and others at approximately $3,000,000 a year. So that to put the plant in a stand-by condition would entail a total loss to the Government of not less than $3,500,000 a year.

In speaking of the courses left open to the Government, Secretary Baker said:

If I may continue as I was going, there are three possibilities: One is the disassembling and salvaging of the plants, and because of the loss involved that is quite out of the question. The second is to put the plants in stand-by condition, paint its corridible parts, and let it stand there idle and do nothing with the plant until another emergency arise, if any does arise, and keep as an emergency reliance of the Government. That, of course, is a tremendously expensive thing to do, because we would get no interest at all upon the $85,000,000 invested, and it is not unlikely that by the time another emergency would arise it would require us to resort to plants using processes developed in the future by other people and so changed as to make those we have an obsolete or obsolescent reliance.

So that the third course which I am going to suggest and the course which I recommend, and upon which this bill is based, seems to be the only practicable one, and that is to operate the plant with such slight additions to its machinery as to make its products more readily available as fertilizer, and by the process of continuous operation and the development of processes it may be possible in the operation to keep it constantly up to date, making it increasingly useful for the purposes of agriculture and for fertilizers, and keeping it constantly ready for any emergency of war, so that the Government may have a reliance for its explosive needs.

* * * * * * *

Senator KENDRICK. I would like to ask you a question or two here, Mr. Secretary. There is one which it seems to me is of extreme importance in connection with the operation of this plant. As I understand it, the primary purpose that the Government wishes to serve in operating this plant is to perpetuate it and to have it ready and available in case of an emergency?

Secretary BAKER. Yes, sir.

Senator KENDRICK. With that idea in view, will it not be almost necessary to have the plant operated, as against having it stand idle?

Secretary BAKER. For three reasons, Senator: In the first place, it will cost us about $400,000 a year to take care of it standing idle, with all the guarding and the rest of it. That would be perfectly wasted. In the second place, if we operate that plant, this being a new art and in process of development, when you come to rely upon it in a war emergency it will be up to date.

Senator KENDRICK. And is not that the fundamental reason?

Secretary BAKER. It is the fundamental reason for this bill, to continue the development process, both in the interests of agriculture and for military purposes.

The third reason is that no matter how much we may safeguard it from rain, etc., the deterioration is such that if you were to go in and unlock the doors after four or five years and try to use it in an emergency, you will find it not worth operating.

* * * That is true of every machine, from the sewing machine your wife uses to the largest industrial machine in the world. If you lock it up and leave it, it goes to pieces.

This plant was constructed under the supervision of the president of the cyanamid company, Mr. Washburn. He is qualified to speak of the industrial and commercial advantages and disadvantages incident to the obsolescence and the neglect of the plant. It must be remembered that in case of war we not only need the plant, which would disintegrate by disuse, but we need the skilled operators, we need the skilled chemists, we need the men who understand this difficult process. If the plant is painted and closed, the great force there now ready to operate it would be scattered, and when it is needed months and perhaps years will be required to reassemble an experienced personnel.

In discussing that question in 1916 Mr. Washburn said:

The staff that would steadily be employed in this plant would be 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the number that would be required in the event of war for its full operation. Chemical plants of this kind require a trained body of men, and in the event of war threatening the country we should have the almost insuperable difficulty of training from green hands substantially 90 per cent of the requisite directing and working force. It is fairly a matter of grave doubt whether, under the unsettled conditions and excitement of approaching war, and the exigent demands on everyone connected with the Army and the Navy, such a plant could be placed in full stride in less than a year. It may be conceivable that a plant of this sort could be maintained in idleness without such degree of deterioration as to render it useless, but it is highly improbable that it would be so maintained, and a country which should rely for its powder supply upon practically the indefinite maintenance in working order of an idle plant composed of highly delicate and complicated appliances would be taking a most extraordinary risk which if it could be avoided would be wholly unwarranted. A minor objection would be the cost of maintaining such a plant in readiness for operation, its upkeep, and the interest on the idle capital.

I will insert in the RECORD, with the consent of the Senate, a statement of Dr. Arthur Lamb, director of the Fixed Nitrogen Research Laboratory, on the same subject of the necessity of keeping the plant in an up-to-date condition, together with a description of the manner in which Germany maintains like plants, even after the signing of the armistice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF DR. ARTHUR B. LAMB, DIRECTOR OF THE FIXED NITROGEN RESEARCH LABORATORY, NITRATE DIVISION, ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT, UNITED STATES ARMY.

THE NECESSITY OF GOVERNMENTAL RESEARCH ON NITROGEN FIXATION.

Other representatives of the Nitrate Division have demonstrated that the Government should operate the splendid plants at Muscle Shoals for the sake of the abundant supply of nitrogenous fertilizer which they will provide. Still other representatives have shown that these plants should be operated so that they may be maintained in a state of instant readiness and efficiency and so afford that military security which was the chief motive for their erection. It is my special purpose to demonstrate that the Government should operate the plants so that we may acquire promptly in this country knowledge of and experience with the important industry of nitrogen fixation.

Such knowledge and experience is of the utmost importance. You will concede, gentlemen, that we must be able to compete successfully with foreign countries in this essential industry, at least in our home markets. In peace times we can not afford to pay more than they do for the fertilizer on which the productivity of our land depends; in war times we can not with safety rely on foreign supplies for the chief ingredient of our explosives. If we are to compete successfully we must not only understand the chemistry of the processes but we must have experience in their operation.

Moreover, the science of nitrogen fixation is still in its infancy: it has problems which are difficult and numerous. There must be extensive research by the chemists in the laboratory. The products which they produce must be tested by agricultural experts on a convincing scale, and the methods of manufacture developed in the laboratory must be translated by the engineer into large-scale operation. Irrespective of whether the Muscle Shoals plants are to be operated or not, these investigations should be supported actively and aggressively by the Government; but evidently they would be greatly facilitated and simplified if carried on in connection with the Government operation of the Muscle Shoals plants.

In conclusion, I do not know that I can do anything better than to tell you how the Germans have faced this problem and what attitude they have taken toward it. The Oppau plant—that is, the Haber plant—was constructed about 1913, and it had an output of approximately seven or eight thousand tons a year. Then, as the war sentiment grew, the plant was greatly increased. They had operated this process at that time for some years, and they already had a plant of a size comparable to your own plant at Sheffield; and yet when they designed the building for their new enlarged plant, the one that is now working, the largest and most expensive building that they constructed—it cost 3,000,000 marks even at that time to build—was the research laboratory. It is 300 feet long, 100 feet wide, and five stories high. When we were there in the summer of 1919, this last summer, when everything was over and the plant was shut down, they still had 75 chemists working in that building on research problems, while during the war we were told that they had 250 chemists working all the time on research problems, not including the control chemists, who were housed elsewhere in the plant. So that is the scale on which Germany continued her studies at a time when she had already solved the problem and was engaged in large-scale operations. So we must not forget that in facing this matter we have got a good deal of study and investigation before us if we are going to hold our own.

NEED FOR IN TIME OF PEACE.

Mr. STANLEY. This plant is not only needed in case of war, but it is absolutely essential to the production of fertilizer in time of peace. During the hearings before the committee the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, Dr. Whitney, said:

I want to say, Senator KENDRICK, that the Department of Agriculture, as I have attempted to show you, is vitally interested not only in the method but in the operation of a plant of this kind. It comes right into and supplies a need which we have felt in the Department of Agriculture must be supplied, and we would look with great and grave concern upon any proposition to keep idle any plant that could help in the development of American agriculture, to keep it idle just because it happened to belong to the Government.

THE BEST PLACE.

The War Department was wise not only in the selection of the process but in the selection of the place. The Secretary of War has stated that after a thorough investigation of commanding and available sites for the construction of this great water power he found Muscle Shoals the most available.

I know that at one time—

Said Secretary Baker—

Mr. Washburn was quite extensively interested in the power developments there. During this war I had occasion to survey the power situation in the United States. I surveyed that around Niagara Falls, in the Northeast, the Middle Atlantic, the South Atlantic, and some of the Western sections of the country. The power shortage in this country now is very large, and large in every section of the country, so that those companies which by foresight and activity have installed hydroelectric plants anywhere or large central generating stations have practically a monopoly situation in their field of operation. And I am frank to say that the Muscle Shoals dam, to me, is the greatest opportunity that I know of for the Government, in a fair, nonconfiscatory way to control a monopoly situation of the sources of power upon which the industries of the country depend.

It is located in the one place where the essentials of plant fertilizers can be most readily assembled. I know of no other spot on this continent where the three things essential to a complete fertilizer can be found within a radius of 150 miles, namely, phosphoric acid, potash, and nitrogen. If we are to maintain such a plant in competition with other plants making fertilizer and operate it at a profit its location near the natural resources enumerated is essential. Dr. Lamb says:

The compound of ammonia and phosphoric acid, ammonium phosphate, or "ammo-phos," as it is called commercially, has very desirable qualifications. It is many times as concentrated as ordinary commercial mixed fertilizer. This means that the freight charges upon it will be very much less, and since freight charges are a limiting factor in the fertilizer supply for many parts of the country, it means a much wider utilization of fertilizer, and an increased production of food.

Not only is this ammonium phosphate a nearly ideal fertilizer, but it is ideally suited for manufacture at the Muscle Shoals plants. In the first place, the cheap electric energy required for the electric furnaces is directly available; and, in the second place, there are rich deposits of high percentage phosphate rock within 100 miles of the plants.

Finally, to cap the climax, there are extensive deposits of potash-bearing feldspars in Georgia, also quite near the Muscle Shoals plants. Potash is the third of the three important ingredients of a complete fertilizer. It is possible by electric-furnace treatment to volatilize the potash from these materials, and it is not at all improbable that by a suitable combination of this procedure with the electric-furnace method for the manufacture of phosphoric acid, both potash and phosphate could be obtained, and when combined with the ammonia from the lime-nitrogen would constitute a complete fertilizer, containing all three of the necessary plant foods.

The above research possibilities all have to do with the utilization of the lime-nitrogen. There are also important possibilities for improvements in the actual process of manufacturing this substance.

There has been some question, Mr. President, about the probability of operating this plant at a profit. The experts who have investigated the question thoroughly are all convinced that we can produce a ton of sulphate of ammonia or a ton of cyanamid at much less than the essential cost of the mining and importation of a ton of Chilean nitrates. If that can be done, the question is settled, because there are no other sources of nitrogen in this country worth mentioning except the by-products of coke ovens and organic matter. The supply of organic nitrogen is now practically exhausted, as I shall show further on; the use of tankage and cottonseed meal is out of the question; and if we can produce cyanamid or sulphate of ammonia at less than the cost of importing it, the success of this project is assured.

Mr. George J. Roberts, who investigated this question thoroughly, states that after the construction of the dam—

If it is used in conjunction with the nitrogen-fixation plant No. 2, the annual profit to the Government from this combined operation is $2,900,050, and so employed will absorb all the electric power of this first installation.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

Mr. Arthur Glasgow, following his exhaustive investigation of this question, in his recommendations to the Secretary of War, and referred to by Mr. Roberts in his statement, says:

We propose to maintain and continually enhance the military value of United States nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, while substituting its peace-time output for imported nitrogen compounds on terms highly beneficial to American agriculture. This will be accomplished not only without additional cost to the United States, but while earning interest on about one-half of the total war cost of this plant and accessories.

The consideration of the Muscle Shoals plant covers three progressive stages:

First, the period prior to June 1, 1921. During this period we have to pay an operating fee to Air Nitrates Corporation equivalent to $5 per short ton of ammonium nitrate produced (say, $2.48 per ton of dry cyanamid), and, in addition, a royalty of $2.53 to American Cyanamid Co. and a royalty of 57 cents to Air Reduction Co. per ton of dry cyanamid produced.

Secondly, the period from June 1, 1921, until the completion of the hydroelectric power development. During this interim the operating fee is no longer payable, and the royalty payable to the American Cyanamid Co. (nominally about $6.33 per ton of dry cyanamid, or 26 per cent more than the combined operating fee and royalty previously payable) is subject to arbitration. Inasmuch, however, as royalty is measured by superearning power, it seems certain that little if any royalty would be assessed for the use of a process which does not pay Government bond interest upon the reproduction value of the essential plant required.

Thirdly, the continuing period of cheap water power subsequent to the completion of the hydroelectric development. During this future period we shall have not only the relief from royalty due to arbitration, but the more positive relief due to expiration of patents. It is to be noted that Air Reduction Co.'s royalty of 57 cents per ton of dry cyanamid is payable until January 13, 1931.

To ascertain the financial results of the general plan of operation outlined above, we must figure in terms of ammonium sulphate, that being a readily salable commodity of well standardized value. The prewar price of ammonium sulphate was about $60 per ton; it is our best judgment that the postwar prices will average over $70 per ton. (See pl. 17.) Sulphate of ammonia contains about 20.6 per cent and dry cyanamid about 21.1 per cent of nitrogen; whereas ammonium nitrate contains nearly 35 per cent, or more than double the nitrogen content of sodium nitrate from Chile. Moreover, cyanamid contains over 60 per cent of lime, which is a valuable fertilizer in many soils. On the basis of nitrogen content alone, with sulphate of ammonia selling at $70 per ton, hydrated and oiled cyanamid (containing 19.2 per cent of nitrogen) would be worth $65 and ammonium nitrate would be worth $117.50.

17. For any useful conclusion regarding the future financial possibilities of the plant we must look to the permanent water-power costs subsequent to, say, January 1, 1923.

Taking the "inclusive water-power costs," given in paragraph 14 above, and reducing the selling prices of cyanamid, ammonium sulphate, and ammonium nitrate, respectively, to $37.50, $65, and $90 per ton, we have the following balance sheet, with eight furnaces, or 80 per cent of the capacity of the plant, in operation:

	Tons per annum.	Cost.	Per ton sale.	Profit.	Total profit.
Cyanamid	49,000	$27.00	$37.50	$10.50	$514,500.00
Nitrate	22,000	75.35	90.00	14.65	322,300.00
Sulphate	86,000	48.20	65.00	16.80	1,444,800.00
Annual profit for 8 furnaces (80 per cent)					2,281,630.00
Balance sheet when whole plant is in operation:
Cyanamid	73,500	27.00	37.50	10.50	771,750.00
Nitrate	22,000	75.35	90.00	14.65	322,300.00
Annual profit for 10 furnaces (100 per cent)					2,900,050.00

This $2,900,050 is 5 per cent interest on $58,000,000; while ammonium sulphate at $65 per ton (instead of $70) still costs 6¼ per cent more, per unit of nitrogen, than cyanamid at $37.50 per ton, and 21¼ per cent more than ammonium nitrate at $90 per ton (pp. 89, 90, 91, 92).

Mr. Washburn, to whom I have referred, and who operated the plant at Muscle Shoals, estimates that that plant can produce a ton of cyanamid material containing the same amount of nitrogen found in the Chilean nitrates, for about one-third of the market price of the Chilean nitrates, or $17 a ton. That he states is the result of 16 years of development. I ask to insert a portion of his statement in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

What has been obtained, economically speaking, is this: That the factory cost under most favorable conditions, those which are not only theoretically obtainable, but actually obtainable in some parts of the world, everything, including overhead and superintendence and all that sort of thing inside the factory, but not including interest on the investment, for producing nitrogen, comparable to the nitrogen that is in the Chilean nitrate, is about one-third of the ordinary market price of the Chilean nitrate.

Senator SMITH. You mean to say that the factory cost is about a third of the selling cost?

Mr. WASHBURN. Of the selling cost of Chilean nitrate.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you put that in figures, giving the price in ordinary times.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am talking of Chilean nitrate at the rather low figure of $2.40 to $2.60 per unit of ammonia, which is the unit that is employed universally in agriculture, equal to 20 pounds of ammonia; and the cost in a well-placed, well-conducted cyanamid factory is 80 to 90 cents a unit.

Senator SMITH. Expressed in tons, it would be about $50 a ton for the Chilean nitrate?

Mr. WASHBURN. About $50 a ton, and for a ton of cyanamid material having the same amount of nitrogen it would be about one-third of $50, or, say, $17.

That is the result, one might say, broadly speaking, of 16 years of development (p. 472).

Mr. STANLEY. Secretary Baker states:

Then they will have to sell their Chilean nitrate at $27 while we are getting for our cyanamid $37.50, and as I have been informed by one of the big firms who own the mines in Chile that it can not be brought into this country under $40 without any profit to them on their investment (p. 11).

I will further state that there is no question that the production of cyanamid at $27 a ton will preclude the danger of competition from Chilean nitrates.

As to the profit to be derived, I quote further from Mr. Roberts, as follows:

I do not feel any hesitancy in saying that we have made liberal estimates. We have our estimates, which we will present to you in the greatest detail, so far as that goes. We also have got here in our sulphate ammonia $16.80 profit to go on, and we certainly will be self-sustaining in any condition I can conceive of.

There is no doubt in my mind, sir, at all that this plant can more than carry itself. I feel no hesitancy in saying that. I certainly expect it to make $3,000,000 a year (p. 23).

In a letter to me from Mr. Frank B. Davis, clerk to the Secretary of War, he sets forth the cost of producing cyanamid and Chilean nitrates in 1912 at $1.36 per hundredweight. The London Statist of June, 1920, gives the figure at approximately $2.16 per hundredweight. Commerce Reports, dated Washington, D. C., October 15, being the consular and trade reports issued by the Department of Commerce, refer to the sale of Chilean nitrates for 1920 as follows:

Nitrate production for the balance of 1920 has been successfully sold by the Association of Nitrate Producers, and fair sales for early 1921 shipments have also been made. No announcements of very recent large sales have been made. The price of nitrate is now about 17 shillings (shilling=$0.243 at normal exchange) per quintal of 101.4 pounds.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator if he intends to conclude his speech to-night, or would he prefer that an adjournment be had at this time and go on with his remarks the first thing to-morrow?

Mr. STANLEY. I should like to proceed for about five minutes in order to get through with the particular branch of the subject I am now discussing and then to have the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. G. J. Roberts, of the Ordnance Department, a skilled engineer, who has given this subject exhaustive study, makes this statement as to the cost of production:

Now, after the water power is developed—when we have water power developed the cost of the cyanamid is $27 a ton; but the cost of the sulphate $48.20 a ton, $21.20 difference (pp. 58 and 59).

If the great plant at Muscle Shoals will deteriorate by disuse, as it will; if the Government will lose interest upon $85,000,000 expended by it; if the personnel of skilled chemists and engineers so essential to the operation of the plant will be disbanded and scattered; if it will take a year, at least, in case of war to put this plant in a going condition; if it can be operated at a profit of $3,500,000, or more than 4 per cent on the cost of its construction, it strikes me as the sheerest piece of folly, of mismanagement, even if there be no other motive and no higher purpose than the profitable use of the apparatus, to lock the doors of this great laboratory.

As it is, the national security involved would justify us in keeping this plant in operation even at a loss.

When I resume this subject again I shall take up the next phase of the question, namely, the peace-time needs of a plant of this character. Nitrogen can preserve life as well as destroy it. It is as necessary to the prosperity of the agriculturist in time of peace as to the success of the Army in time of war.

[At this point Mr. STANLEY yielded the floor for the day.]

Tuesday, January 4, 1921.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, on yesterday I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Government had expended $85,000,000 in the erection of two plants for the purpose of extracting nitrogen from the air to be used in time of war for munitions and in time of peace for the making of fertilizer.

The Muscle Shoals plant is at this time in a completed state. It is perhaps the greatest and the finest apparatus of its kind in the world for the making of cyanamid and of fertilizer. The question now arises whether the plant shall be salvaged, being of no further use for the making of munitions, shall be put in a stand-by condition, or shall be operated.

To put the plant in a stand-by condition would deprive us of the profits on the making of fertilizer, estimated by those who know best at about $3,000,000, and would entail an expense of not less than $400,000 a year for guarding and the like, with the result that if left in that stand-by condition the personnel of skilled operatives who are now in charge of it would be scattered and in 5 or 10 years, it is estimated by the Secretary of War, the plant itself would become more or less impaired by disuse, obsolete and worthless.

I discussed at some length yesterday, and shall not repeat to-day, the necessity for the maintenance of the plant as a provision for supplying without delay an absolutely necessary amount of nitrogen for the furnishing of fertilizer in time of peace. As a war measure, its operation is necessary, without regard to the cost of operation and without regard to the profits derived from the manufacture of sulphate of ammonia. If the plant were necessarily operated at a loss, and at a great loss, the necessities for the use of nitrogen for the purpose of explosives in time of war, the difficulty in obtaining them from foreign ports, the peril to which the country would necessarily be exposed by lack of an adequate supply of fixed nitrogen, that loss would be justified. However, the plant is as necessary, in my opinion, and it is as wise to operate it for its uses in time of peace as to maintain it in a going condition on account of the necessities of war.

BY-PRODUCT COKE OVENS.

It is maintained that the by-product ovens of the United States are now producing a sufficient amount of sulphate of ammonia, more, in fact, than the market demands or the public will take, and that by the operation of the plant at Muscle Shoals, producing about 200,000 tons of fertilizer per annum, the value of the product will be impaired, the great steel industry and the operation of blast furnaces will be rendered unprofitable, and that irreparable damage will be done to private enterprise.

This position, in my humble opinion, is not well taken, and there is nothing in the facts to warrant that conclusion. In the first place, the manufacture of ammonia is not the purpose for which by-product ovens are erected. A by-product oven producing a ton of coke would produce about 6 pounds of nitrogen, about 10 gallons of tar, about 50,000 cubic feet of gas that can be used for illuminating and other purposes, and a small amount of lubricant or motor oil. The production of nitrogen is no more the purpose for the erection of by-product ovens than the making of glue is the prime purpose of erecting slaughter-houses and packing houses. The production of 200,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia will no more affect the by-product industry than the destruction of the price or the value of bristles would affect the killing of hogs and the packing of pork.

More than that, the by-product oven can not be depended upon for the production of fertilizer. There is a constant demand for the use of fertilizer. The tiller of the soil, who is in the habit of using fertilizer, needs a fixed amount each year, and in order to extend the use of fertilizer—and nothing is more essential at this time—we must be assured of an adequate amount. There is no business that is more vacillating or more uncertain, or that more depends upon industrial conditions and financial conditions than the making of pig iron. Whenever there is an overproduction of pig iron or loss in demand, the blast furnace closes, and with the closing of the blast furnace would be destroyed for the time the production of an essential fertilizer.

Maj. Gaillard has given this question careful and exhaustive study. He states:

The expansion of nitrogen supply from coke ovens and gas works, even though abnormally stimulated by the war demand, will not furnish in the future half of the nitrogen used in this country, and unless this source of supply is supplemented as soon as possible by the operation of the Government fixed-nitrogen plants, and further supplemented by such development of the private fixed-nitrogen industry that there may be, this country will be even more dependent on imported nitrogen 10 years from now than it is at present, and not only will the country be less prepared from a military point of view but the American consumers, which include directly a very large proportion of the farmers of this country as well as many of the most fundamental chemical industries, and indirectly the greater part of the population, will find it harder than ever to get an adequate supply of nitrogen at a cost within reason.

According to the United States Geological Survey, we produced in 1918, 218,194 tons of sulphate of ammonia as a by-product of coke ovens; in 1919 we produced 211,300 tons of sulphate from coke ovens, with a total production of 25,171,000 tons of coke. At a time when the war demands made it absolutely necessary that those coke ovens should be run to the maximum of output, they did not produce one-third of the necessary sulphate of ammonia required as fertilizer and in industrial enterprises. It is claimed by those who oppose this bill, Mr. Washburn and others, that in 1920 the coke ovens will produce 500,000 or 600,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia, the claim being predicated upon the idea that the blast furnaces will run to full capacity, both those that are now in operation and those that will become producers during this year; and that that sulphate of ammonia will be all used for the production of fertilizer. Taking that as true, it is estimated that we can produce 36,800,000 tons of coke from ovens run at 85 per cent capacity, which will give us 977,100,000 pounds of ammonia sulphate, or 487,000 tons. But 45 per cent of that output will be absorbed by industrial enterprises, leaving 268,000 tons for fertilizer purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I am much interested in the very intelligent discussion of the Senator from Kentucky. I think one of the important features of the pending bill, if it passes, will be its ability to provide fertilizer. I desire to know from the Senator if he has given that matter ample consideration, and is able to say to the Senate that as a fertilizer nitrate has proven practicable, and within the easy reach of the farmer, and can sell at competitive prices with other fertilizers?

Mr. STANLEY. I will say to the Senator that I shall discuss that question at some length in a very short time. Nitrate is an ideal fertilizer, as has been demonstrated by 50 years of practical experience.

Maj. Gaillard, of the Agricultural Department, has made a careful survey of the future needs of sulphate of ammonia for fertilizer purposes. He has taken into consideration the product of coke ovens, fertilizer from inorganic sources, imports from Chile, and all other sources from which this material may be obtained. He estimates that in 1924 agriculture will demand 172,000 tons of nitrogen, the industries 120,000 tons, and for military explosives 2,500 tons, making a total of 294,500 tons of nitrogen. The deficiency in the domestic supply, if the Government does not operate, will be 172,000 tons of nitrogen, or the equivalent of between 700,000 and 800,000 tons of Chilean nitrate.

Maj. Gaillard's statement illustrating the total inadequacy of coke ovens to supply the country's future need for inorganic nitrogen is in full, as follows:

The preceding consideration of the probable future consumption of inorganic nitrogen for agricultural, industrial, and military purposes and the supply to be expected from the coking of coal and the fixation of nitrogen within this country and the importation of sufficient nitrogen to meet the deficiency in domestic production may be summarized for 1924 and 1930, the two years for which figures have been previously given, as follows:

	Nitrogen.
	1924	1930
	Tons.	Tons.
Estimated peace time consumption in—
Agriculture	172,000	285,000
Industries	120,000	150,000
Military explosives, assumed	2,500	3,000
Total consumption	294,500	438,000
Estimated domestic supply from—
Coking of coal	122,500	159,500
Privately owned fixed nitrogen plants		25,000
Total domestic supply	122,500	184,500
Deficiency in domestic supply if Government plants do not operate	172,000	353,500
Estimated supply from—
Government fixed nitrogen plants	45,000	55,000
Deficiency in domestic supply if Government plants operate	127,000	198,500
Estimated imports necessary:
Canadian cyanamid	15,000	15,000
Chilean or European nitrate, if Government plants not operated	157,000	238,500
Chilean or European nitrate, if Government plants operated	112,000	183,500
Proportion of total consumption furnished by domestic supply:
If Government plants not operated.....per cent	41.6	42.2
If Government plants operated.....do	56.9	54.7

NOTE.—Nitrogen exported from the United States is not included in the above, as amount of future exports uncertain, and if included only make the deficiency of domestic supply more marked.

EXHAUSTION OF ORGANIC NITROGEN.

Mr. President, hitherto this essential material to the profitable cultivation of the soil has been obtained in great measure from organic sources. I will, with the consent of the Senate, insert in the RECORD, from page 145 of the hearings before the Agricultural Committee, a table quoted by Mr. Washburn, who is opposing this measure and whose statements may be taken, at least from this viewpoint, as correct, showing the average annual production of organic compounds from which fertilizer is made from 1912 to 1917, and giving a total of over 2,500,000 tons of organic fertilizer, obtained principally from cottonseed meal, tankage, dried blood, fish, and miscellaneous substances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. STANLEY. More than 2,500,000 tons of organic fertilizer, which have hitherto been available for agricultural purposes, can no longer be obtained. In the beginning the fertilizer used by the farmer came almost entirely from organic sources. In 1899 five-sixths of the nitrogen in our fertilizers came from organic sources; in 1904, about three-fourths; in 1909, slightly over one-half; in 1914, slightly under a half; and in 1919, somewhat over one-third was obtained from organic materials. This substitution of inorganic for organic materials is due in great measure to the constantly increasing demand for cottonseed meal, tankage, and other like substances for stock feed, and "'tis a consummation devoutly to be wished."

Cottonseed meal now is approximately of the same value as corn, about three-fourths that of oatmeal, about two-thirds that of wheat flour; and at these prices it will naturally be evident why cottonseed meal is going into feed rather than into fertilizer.

Figures compiled by the Agricultural Department show that in 1917 and 1918 about half of the high-grade animal tankage was being used for feed and about two-thirds of the cottonseed meal. Since then this proportion has undoubtedly increased.

In 1917, according to statistics gathered by the Department of Agriculture, a little less than half of the total nitrogen in mixed fertilizers was furnished by inorganic materials, Chilean nitrate supplying about three-fifths of this, sulphate of ammonia about one-third, and miscellaneous materials the remainder. I will incorporate in my address a portion of the statement of Dr. Whitney, Chief of the Bureau of Soils.

He gives a very interesting account of the change to which I have referred. He says:

Another change came, however, that we had not foreseen; that is, the use of the organic ammoniates for feeding cattle. One of the first necessities was increased production of meats and of fats. After this country entered the European war the demand for meat and for feedstuffs were so great that the War Industries Board asked me if it would be possible to entirely stop the use of cottonseed meal for fertilizer and have it all used for feeding purposes. I told them it would not be possible unless they could provide a substitute in the fertilizer industry; that that was one of the supplies we counted on for the farmer. As the result of the war, however, the amount of cottonseed meal, of tankage, of dry blood, and of fish scrap that has gone into feeding has far exceeded our wildest idea of what could be possible. And as the result at present these materials are very hard to get; they are very high priced.

The price of ammonia and of organic ammoniates was formerly controlled by the price of nitrogen and nitrate of soda. In the middle of 1919, or after the armistice was signed and things were coming into more normal conditions, the price of nitrogen and of nitrate of soda fell materially, and, as I remember it, in October it was about 25 per cent higher than the prewar prices. Ammonium sulphate came down, but the price of organic ammoniates went up. We called a conference of the producers of the main organic ammoniates, tankage, cottonseed meal, and fish scrap and asked them why it was that prices had not come down but were still going up. They very coolly replied: We are not interested in fertilizer; we are out of that class; we are selling now not on the basis of ammonia, as we did to the fertilizer people, but are selling on the basis of the protein content, based on the price of the protein that is in these concentrated feeds, and the price of cottonseed meal, although very high for fertilizer, is very low for feeding purposes. Now, gentlemen of the committee, we find that the greater proportion of these organic ammoniates is going into feeding, over which we have no control.

If this Government can by the use of inorganic material taken from the air supply necessary fertilizer, leaving 3,500,000 tons of valuable feed for the stock raiser, it will be indeed "a consummation" whose value it is difficult to estimate.

It must be remembered that when tankage and cottonseed meal and other protein substances—when these cheaper materials are put into that balanced ration it makes the whole mixture more valuable and increases the product from the animal at the same time, while lessening the cost of production to the farmer, enabling the consumer to purchase at a lower cost.

DEMAND FOR SULPHATE OF AMMONIA AS A FERTILIZER.

In response to a question as to the ease of handling sulphate of ammonia, Mr. George J. Roberts, of the Ordnance Department, who it has been thought by some would take charge of the great plant at Muscle Shoals and who is an acknowledged expert on the subject, in response to a question by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who asked if it could be easily handled, said:

Just as easily as the Chilean nitrate. It has been known and used for 50 years by the farmers, and by all the users of Chilean nitrate.

As to whether or not this product will be marketable, and as to the danger of producing an oversupply of sulphate of ammonia, Mr. Roberts continues:

That is just like gold dust, so far as selling is concerned. I can sell it and get plenty of people to sell it at 2 per cent commission. It is so easy to market it that they will sell it on a 2 per cent commission basis. I have already had a big firm in New York come to me and offer to take it on that basis (p. 12).

In response to a question by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] as to what effect it would have on the chemical fertilizer industry of this country, he replied:

None. The demand for nitrogen is growing right along, and we will have to import larger and larger quantities of Chilean nitrate, even with this plant running.

Senator WADSWORTH. There is room for everybody?

Mr. ROBERTS. There is room for everybody. Mr. Myers, who represents the Chilean nitrate industry in this country, says the demand for nitrogen is going to be so great that this would not affect his interests at all.

Senator SMITH of South Carolina. That is the ingredient in all fertilizer that is not only in greatest demand but it is the costliest.

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

Senator SMITH of South Carolina. Nitrogen, as every agriculturist knows, is the very life of the grain itself. It is not so important in the fibrous plants, but for cereals of all sorts with the proper use of nitrogen the crops can be doubled and, in some instances, quadrupled.

Mr. ROBERTS. I know of nothing, sir, that does not require nitrogen just as much as grain. Tobacco certainly requires it, and you can not successfully grow tobacco without it. Certainly your truck gardens could not exist without it.

In 1916, out of an expense bill for fertilizer of $175,000, Mr. Washburn states, $75,000 of it, or 40 per cent, was spent for nitrogen. The nitrogen content of a perfectly balanced fertilizer—phosphoric acid, potash, and nitrogen—is the most essential and the most costly, being approximately 40 per cent of the cost of the whole mixture.

The three essential elements of a complete plant food are fixed nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potassium, according to a statement of Col. Burn, and of these three nitrogen is claimed to be the most important and it is the most expensive.

The first use of inorganic manures occurred about 1850 as a result of German research development, and it was some 25 or 30 years later that the use was taken up in the United States. It has, of course, very rapidly expanded, until to-day some 8,000,000 tons are used per year, having a value of approximately $400,000,000. Of this amount some 100,000 tons are fixed nitrogen, with a value of approximately $40,000,000.

GROWING DEMAND FOR FERTILIZERS.

If we can consume 8,000,000 tons of fertilizer, if we can import and do import and will import this year 800,000 tons of Chilean nitrate—and a ton of Chilean nitrate supplants only a part of a ton of sulphate of ammonia—it will be readily seen how utterly impossible it is for the blast furnaces to accommodate this enormous and growing demand.

The Department of Agriculture and those most interested in the use of nitrate as a fertilizer, understanding how totally inadequate is the supply, have not brought this matter home to the agriculturists of the country.

The use of fertilizer on a broad scale is confined at present to only a small section of the country. If we did use fertilizer as we will use it and as we should use it, the demand would infinitely exceed the supply. It has been estimated by the Department of Agriculture that if nitrate were to be used next year on all the cultivated lands of the United States to the same extent that it is now used in Georgia—a use about the same as in England and less than in Germany—there would be required more than 400,000 tons of nitrogen in addition to what is now used in fertilizers. To furnish this nitrogen would take 2,000,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia, or nearly 2,500,000 tons of Chilean nitrate. With a normal need for 2,000,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia, you can readily see what from two to five hundred thousand tons of blast-furnace production would do to satisfy this essential demand. If mixed fertilizers were used to the extent of one-half the amount used in the State of Georgia, then the shortage would be at least 150,000 tons of nitrogen, to supply which would take approximately a million tons of Chilean nitrate.

Mr. President, before the use of nitrogen as a fertilizer the soils of Germany, France, and England produced about 15 bushels of wheat to the acre. To-day England uses about as much fertilizer as Georgia. Germany uses more. The average production of wheat per acre in England is 30 bushels; in France and Germany it is 28 bushels.

In my own country, southwestern Kentucky, described by Savoyard at one time as having the fatness of Egypt, we produced 25 or 30 years ago from 20 to 30 bushels of wheat to the acre. That country has exhausted its nitrogen supply. Those same fields to-day, for the lack of that nitrogen, will not produce half that amount—not over 15 or 18 bushels of wheat to the acre. The cost of cultivation of an acre of land in grain is practically the same whether you use fertilizer or not. The labor is the same; and yet with no increase in labor, with a slight increase in cost, you can in this country, as they have done in Europe, absolutely double the production of the staff of life.

To-day we are seesawing in the Senate, seesawing in the country. One great army of millions is crying for a lowering of the high cost of living and the price of bread. The other is protesting against the lowering of the price of wheat, since it is now below the cost of production. Here is the solution of the problem. Increase the fertility of the soil, and you at once lower the cost of the finished product, lower the cost of flour and bread, without decreasing in any degree the profits of the producer.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate the Senator's statement that the soil of the country in many localities has been worn out by constant use. There are a great many fertilizers, such as the nitrates we get from Chile, barnyard manure, and bean manure or legumes, that have proven very satisfactory and cheap in many parts of the country. I want the Senator to answer this question, if he can: Has any nitrate been produced at the Muscle Shoals plant as fertilizer? If so, has that fertilizer shown itself to be able to compete on the market with other fertilizers that we may call standard fertilizers?

Mr. STANLEY. By an actual test this plant has shown that it can produce 215,000 or 220,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this plant can not produce a pound of sulphate of ammonia. It can only produce cyanamid.

Mr. STANLEY. I stand corrected. This plant can now produce cyanamid, a known, recognized commercial fertilizer. The sulphate of ammonia, however, is better known and is more easily handled. The lime in the cyanamid is objectionable. It is hard to handle; but in the form of sulphate of ammonia you rid it of those objectionable features. It has the same content, and is a merchantable fertilizer, in demand by the mixers of fertilizers and the users of simple fertilizers, and it is only a matter of a small expenditure for the installation of known processes, and there is no question about their efficiency to convert the cyanamid into sulphate of ammonia.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand from the Senator that the finished product of fertilizer has not been produced at this plant at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. STANLEY. No.

Mr. McNARY. Therefore, no practical test has been made of the product as fertilizer?

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon. Sulphate of ammonia has been produced for years by by-product coke ovens, and it is now in general use. You produce the same substance that is produced by the coke ovens.

Mr. McNARY. That is true in the respect that the Senator speaks of, but no product from the plants at Muscle Shoals has been used for the purpose of enrichment of the soil?

Mr. STANLEY. No. No sulphate of ammonia——

Mr. McNARY. Therefore, how do you estimate the cost per unit of this fertilizer to the farmer, so as to judge whether or not it will sell in competition with the other well-known fertilizers on the market? In other words, what is the inducement to the Government to put up this money to make fertilizer, unless it can readily compete with the other fertilizers of the country?

Mr. STANLEY. I went into that question at great length on yesterday. I shall be glad to advise the Senator in regard to it.

Arthur Glasgow, who investigated this question in Europe and elsewhere abroad, the ablest engineers of the Army and of the Ordnance Department, and experts of known ability in Europe and America have thoroughly investigated that question. Secretary of War Baker has stated that cyanamid can be produced in this plant by the use of water power at $27 a ton. It can be produced at a little increased cost by the use of steam power. Sulphate of ammonia can be produced at $42 and some cents a ton, or at a profit over the then cost of sulphate of ammonia of about $16.80. There is no question about the capacity of this plant to produce cyanamid. There is no difficulty in ascertaining the cost of converting cyanamid, by a comparatively simple process, into sulphate of ammonia, and that cost is easily estimated; so that the cost of producing this product at this plant are well known, and have been definitely ascertained.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit another question, I assume that the figures he has offered here in demonstration of his arguments were prepared during the war, when there was a great shortage in the tonnage of our merchant marine and the tonnage of the world?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. In view of the plentitude of ships at present, would not the competition of Chilean nitrate be very much more keen than would be indicated by the figures the Senator has offered here?

Mr. STANLEY. Chile can not export nitrate of soda at a price that is anything like competitive with the sulphate of ammonia produced by this plant. I have some figures here on that subject.

DANGER OF DEPENDENCE UPON CHILEAN NITRATE.

As you understand, this Chilean nitrate is produced from a salt called caliche, found in northern Chile. This salt is subjected to a process by which the merchantable commodity is extracted. In 1901 the Chilean nitrate imported into this country contained 28 per cent of nitrogen. In 1909 it contained 19 per cent. In 1919 it had 15 per cent; so that within 30 years the nitrogen content—the only thing that has any value in this Chilean nitrate—has decreased approximately 50 per cent. The total production per man in 1881 was 73 tons. In 1911 it was 56 tons. At present Chilean nitrate can not be imported into this country for less than $40 a ton. I put in the RECORD yesterday a statement from the London Statist to that effect and an itemized statement giving the details of every item of this expenditure.

More than that, there is an export duty on Chilean nitrate of over $12.53 a ton. You must remember that when you buy a ton of Chilean nitrate for, say, $55, you have 15 per cent of nitrogen. That is what you pay for. When you get a ton of sulphate of ammonia you have 20 per cent, so that a ton of Chilean nitrate, say, at $75 would be the equivalent of a ton of sulphate of ammonia at $100. At $42 the actual cost of that Chilean nitrate is equivalent to sulphate of ammonia at $60. So that even if Chilean nitrate should sell for the same price in this country as sulphate of ammonia—and that is impossible—the sulphate of ammonia would be one-third more valuable on account of its nitrogen content.

More than that, we must look to the future, and it is a matter of very great importance, as I see it. The total production of Chilean nitrate to-day is about 3,000,000 tons. During the war we took annually over 2,000,000 tons of it. To-day we are absorbing one-fourth of the entire production of Chilean nitrate. Chilean nitrate is rapidly decreasing on account of the leanness of the ore and the increasing expense of producing it. The demand for nitrate is increasing in this country by leaps and bounds, and it is estimated that within a few years our normal demands will be over 10,000,000 tons. For the last 20 years the demand for fertilizer has increased 7½ per cent, and if that demand increases for 5 years we will take one-half of the production of Chilean nitrate; if that demand increases as we think it will increase, in less than 10 years we will be using in this country more nitrate for agricultural purposes alone than is produced in the entire Chilean field. I will return to the question of the production of Chilean nitrate at a later time.

As I stated, it is estimated that in 1924 our consumption of nitrogen for agricultural purposes will be 10,500,000 tons.

The United States statistics available show that in 1899 we used 2,887,000 tons of fertilizer; in 1914 we used 8,432,000 tons.

Now I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another matter. We can not afford to endanger a dependable supply of nitrogen. We are utterly unprepared in case of war, no matter how many guns we have, no matter how many ships, no matter what our coast defenses or our fortifications are, we are utterly unprepared unless we have an available supply of nitrogen for the making of munitions and explosives.

France understood the necessity of the use of nitrogen, and has installed nine great plants, using the same process, as the backbone for her enterprise.

Great Britain was greatly concerned over the insecurity of nitrogen supplies and early appointed a committee of prominent business men and eminent scientists to investigate and advise. In its full report, in May, 1919, the committee, after complete analysis of all comparative data as to the cost, yields, and so forth, and a recognition of the scarcity of water powers in Great Britain, recommended, as an economic provision for the safeguarding of the future and for meeting a portion of the growing demand for the various nitrogen products, the establishment without delay, under private enterprise, if necessary, and if not, then supported by the Government, of plants for the production of 60,000 tons of sulphate, or 12,000 tons of nitrogen.

Italy before the war had a capacity of 7,000 tons of nitrogen by the cyanamid process. The present capacity is probably 20,000 tons.

Japan has fully doubled her capacity. Germany has forbidden the export of nitrogen without the consent of the Government. The Japanese are working very hard on this problem, and they are now working on all processes.

I include a statement from Col. Joyes as to the activities of other nations.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PREPAREDNESS AND GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP BY OTHER NATIONS.

[Statement of Col. Joyes, hearings, pp. 52–53.]

This information, which comes from most reliable sources and is not to be disputed, shows that beyond question anyone outside of Germany producing or desiring to purchase nitrogenous fertilizers or similar compounds will have to deal with a single organization, essentially a branch of the German Government, which will have an absolute monopolistic control of all such products produced in Germany, or whatever surplus there may be for export.

In France, the Government found itself in somewhat similar position as to actual governmental investment in fixation plants, although on a much smaller scale. During the war the Government became interested financially in nearly all of the expansion of nitrogen fixation, and it owned completely two of the cyanamid plants.

At the time of the commission's visit to France the subject of utilization of the large cyanamid producing capacity created during the war, and especially of that part of it which was owned by the Government, was being discussed in the Chamber of Deputies and in the press. The urgent need for more use than previously of nitrogenous fertilizers by French agriculturists, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the advisability of some measures to assure the continued operation of the war-created manufacturing facilities were being urged by men of such prominence as M. Pottevin, M. Roux, and M. Tisserand. There seemed to be very strong public opinion in favor of some arrangement which would insure the operation of the cyanamid plants. At the time of our visit no decision appeared to have been arrived at as to a definite plan of operation, but it appeared very probable that there would be some action by the Government, perhaps not as systematic and comprehensive as the German arrangement above described, but nevertheless one that would provide some basis of organization of the industry to meet the commercial outlook, possible German competition, etc.

Our commission saw installations in French Government plants for making ammonium sulphate out of cyanamid, and at one there was a very large scale installation of apparatus then (July, 1919) in process of erection for this same purpose. The French Government is, therefore, unquestionably in the market to some extent as a producer of ammonium sulphate.

Mr. STANLEY. There is not a nation in the world that is not prepared to supply nitrogen to-day by artificial means in case of war. Germany is now producing 300,000 tons of nitrogen by the Haber process, 120,000 tons by the cyanamid, and 150,000 tons from her coke ovens. She has installed seven cyanamid processes and two Haber processes. France has nine great plants for the production of fixed nitrogen. Germany is now producing 8,700 tons of nitrogen per million of her population; Norwary, 7,250 tons per million of her population; Great Britain, 2,240 tons; Canada, 2,000 tons; France, 1,850 tons; Switzerland, 1,840 tons; the United States, 1,480 tons, less than one-third of Germany and less than one-half of Norway and Sweden.

Mr. President, if we were to-day engaged in war, if our relations with Great Britain or Japan or with South America were strained, we would be utterly unprepared, no matter how many hundreds of millions you put in your appropriations for the Army and Navy.

There is no adequate supply of nitrogen obtainable to-day that is not absolutely controlled by Great Britain.

ENGLAND'S WORLD-WIDE CONTROL OF CHILEAN AND OTHER NITRATES.

The only known natural fields of potassium nitrate are located in British India. The only other supply is in the Chilean field. This Chilean nitrate is controlled by an ironclad trust. Unlike most trusts, it makes no secret of its existence and of its purposes. I hold in my hand a report from the American embassy, of date October 15, 1920, in which it is said, among other things:

According to the organization of the association, it will cease in its functions on the 30th day of June, 1921, if by that date it does not include in its representation 90 per cent of the nitrate producers. At present the organization has about 85 per cent of the total number of producers, the balance being represented by American and German firms.

While we purchase one-fourth of all the nitrogen produced in Chile, of the 118 nitrate plants in the nitrate district of Chile America owns but 3; in production it produces about 2½ per cent. Undoubtedly the largest producers of nitrate in Chile are British. British nitrate plants now number 45 out of a total of 118, or close to a half.

In addition to the companies designated as British, there are many of the so-called Chilean companies, such as the Agua Santa Nitrate Co., which are controlled entirely by British capital. However, a glance at the statistics will show that while the British own they do not buy, for the entire United Kingdom, with all its new possessions, does not consume over 20 per cent of the amount sold to the United States.

A recent statistical publication gives the following list of nitrate companies, with the nationality of their ownership:

Chilean companies, 54; British companies, 43; Slavic companies, 8; German companies, 6; American companies, 3.

I hold in my hand a consular report, whose authenticity no Senator can question, which states:

The nitrate association virtually a cooperative trust. The present nitrate association (Asociacion de Productores de Salitre de Chile) was formed in 1919. It is engaged in propaganda work to increase consumption, and also collects much valuable data. Its principal function is, however, the fixing of prices, and in that function there is considerable danger to our interests. The workings of the association, its rules and regulations, are beyond the scope of this report, so that no attempt will be made to describe them here. However, practically every nitrate company is a member of the association with the exception of American and German companies. The former because it was believed to be against the Sherman law, and the latter because they were not permitted to enter. The German companies are to be admitted to the association within the near future.

Not only that, but the railroads which operate between these fields and mines in which this nitrate is produced and the port of Iquique are controlled and owned by the British Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is speaking of Chilean nitrates. He does not contend, does he, that the product which may be made at Muscle Shoals, after the plant is put in position to turn out ammonium sulphate, will take the place of Chilean nitrate in all respects?

Mr. STANLEY. Practically so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator knows that the product to be made at Muscle Shoals can not be used for propellant powders, does he not?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly. I know you can not use sulphate of ammonia for munition purposes, but it can be converted to that purpose. But you can use cyanamid for that purpose, or you can use that plant for the purpose of making nitric acid. You have your towers there, and I am told this plant could be utilized for the making of nitric acid and the making of explosives whenever the Government so chooses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand the Senator to say that ammonium sulphate can be used in both propellant and explosive powders?

Mr. STANLEY. No. This plant can make nitric acid. It can make cyanamid, or it can make the fertilizer, sulphate of ammonia. But the plant is available for the production of 40,000 tons of nitrogen, which can be used for propellants, or at least for a bursting charge, whenever you get ready to use it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only bursting powder. I ask this question because in a little colloquy which was had on the floor of the Senate yesterday the suggestion was made that we could spare more than 150,000 tons of our reserve of the Chilean nitrate in view of the plant, but that the plant can not take the place of the Chilean nitrate without more extensive alterations, not contemplated in the estimates given in connection with this bill at all. It would be unwise to dissipate more than one-half of our military reserve of Chilean nitrates.

Mr. STANLEY. I have not contemplated that, or asked it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it would be absolutely necessary to change the bill, because the 1,600,000 tons of Chilean nitrates which it was estimated would be sold will not raise $12,500,000, which is required under this act.

Mr. STANLEY. That could be attended to as a mere detail by an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very important detail. It is $12,000,000, but I know that is so small that we can look over it.

Mr. STANLEY. No; the difference in the fall in the price of Chilean nitrate would make a difference of one or two million dollars in the appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has it fallen 40 per cent?

Mr. STANLEY. Compared with the necessity for the use of this plant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The price of Chilean nitrate upon the market has fallen, and if you sold 150,000 tons of Chilean nitrate to-day you would only get seven and a half million dollars instead of $12,000,000.

Mr. STANLEY. What is Chilean nitrate now selling for—$55 a ton?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Fifty-two dollars. It was estimated at $83 at the time the bill was drawn and it is going lower than $52.

Mr. STANLEY. It may.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is sure to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it not go back if there is no competition in the future?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no competition now except the by-product coke oven, which is a very important competition.

Mr. STANLEY. Whether the appropriation is made or whether the 150,000 tons be utilized for the purpose is a detail that can be determined later. The question I am calling to the attention of the Senate and that I regard of prime importance is that in time of war all our preparations in the way of ordnance and arms are useless unless the gun is loaded, and we can not load the gun without nitrogen, and there are only two sources of supply, domestic and imported. The Chilean fields are the only natural source from which we can import nitrogen. With those fields constantly diminishing, with the ores growing leaner and leaner all the time, now practically in the hands of the British Government—with all the potassium nitrate in the hands of the British Government—if we become involved either with a South American country or with Great Britain or with any country that she can control, or if we lose control of the sea without an adequate supply of fixed nitrogen, prepared as those foreign countries have prepared it by the installation of these plants, we are not in a position for self-defense, the country is not secure, and our arms are rendered comparatively worthless.

It is foolish, as I see it, to spend hundreds of millions or billions of dollars for instruments that are to use nitrogen and then leave the gun unloaded. As Gen. Williams has well said:

In so far as the Ordnance Department is concerned, our prime interest in this plant is maintaining it as a war insurance, on account of the fact that we are absolutely dependent on foreign sources for our supply of nitrogen, and we can imagine our position in case we got into a war and lost control of the sea. We would not then be able to maintain a war for six months unless we have plants of this kind.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would like to ask the Senator—further carrying out the question of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], when the estimate of $12,000,000 was made to complete the plant and it was also estimated that the 150,000 to 160,000 tons that we might dispose of on account of the duplication or supply of that quantity by the plant—if that estimate of $12,000,000 was not then predicated upon the present price of material and the cost of labor; and I was just wondering if the drop in the price of nitrate of soda was not almost equal to the drop in the price of the material that might be necessary to complete the plant, so that the sale of itself would practically take care of the necessary improvements.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely the Senator from South Carolina can not point out any building materials that have decreased 40 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There are some building materials that the Senator will find have decreased 40 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should be very glad to hear of them, because I have myself been interested in building recently and I wish I had at hand that information.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator will find that brick, concrete, the wood that would go for the trusses——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Forty per cent since last spring?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I rather think the Senator upon investigation will find they have fallen 40 per cent or more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And labor?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I expect in some forms of labor utilized the Senator will find it is a great deal more than 40 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A decrease of more than 40 per cent?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very interesting.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not speaking of skilled labor. That, of course, has a very slight variance at any time, but the common labor that will take the orders and carry out the purposes of the skilled labor, I think the Senator will find 40 per cent or more reduced.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be very interesting to look it up, because it has a bearing on the bill. It also has a bearing on the completion of the dam. But I notice that the Army Engineers estimates, instead of decreasing, are increasing.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are for another purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What other purpose, except to construct?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not pretending to speak authoritatively. I am only speaking from things that come under my own observation as to the relative prices paid now for unskilled labor, as compared with those that were paid during the time that this very estimate was made. I think the Senator will find that there is a decrease of 40 per cent or more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not found it so in my personal experience.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Perhaps the Senator is in a different locality from myself. I do not know that I could say that it is general. I do not know that there has been any reduction where there is organized labor, but when we come to the question of material, a great proportion of which would be necessary in this construction, I think it has gone down quite as much as the price of the nitrates.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is true that sodium nitrate has dropped 40 per cent, would it not require an entire revision of the figures to determine whether this plant can be operated commercially at a profit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say that the figures contained in these hearings are all out of date as a result in the change in the price of Chilean nitrate?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I state, if the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, that a question was asked by the Senator from New York or some one a moment ago in the colloquy, if there had been any practical demonstration in commercial channels of the use of products from this plant. Quite a good while before the war broke out the cyanamid from the only plant in America, which is the Niagara plant, was shipped across the country and sold to the fertilizer manufacturers along the whole South Atlantic seaboard and utilized in their balanced fertilizer and sold to the farmers. That was also true during the war. They tried to use the cyanamid as they had used the nitrate of soda, not that it was as rich in its nitrogenous content as the soda; but on account of it having lime as its carrier for nitrate, it was dangerous in its use, and quite a number of lawsuits grew out of its effect on the human skin. But so far as being used as a mixer in producing a balanced fertilizer, there is nothing in the world about its availability and the practicability of its use.

As to the cost of its production, I can not conceive why a great plant already installed, and installed under the pressure of war necessity, now equipped with the greatest water power perhaps in this country outside of Niagara Falls, which we partially own, can not produce as cheaply as or cheaper than the plant at Niagara Falls.

I think one should take the time to read the testimony of Dr. Whitney, who is an expert on this matter, showing the possibility of a combination of the phosphoric acid produced from low-grade phosphate rock by the discovery of a process of converting the phosphorus in low-grade rock into phosphoric acid by the sulphuric-acid process, sulphuric acid being the costly ingredient in converting phosphorus into phosphoric acid, which he intimated had been superseded by the use of silica in high pressure and great heat in a great retort, where they liquefy the air and extract the nitrogen. By the use of common red sand they produce phosphoric acid, and by the use of this heat they combine it so as to produce phosphatic nitrate, and by the same process they could extract potash or potassium from the green shales of the Appalachian and from the greensands of New Jersey. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who was present, will remember that he displayed samples of the actual work done, in an experimental way, it is true, but showing the possibility of so developing from our own natural resources an unlimited supply of the very thing that the country is rapidly coming to depend upon absolutely.

At the proper time I wish to go a little further into this, believing, as I firmly and honestly do believe, that the conservation of our natural resources is going to largely depend upon conserving them by making the soil rich and fertile by artificial methods.

Mr. STANLEY. In further answer to the question as to whether it can be operated at a profit or not, Arthur Glasgow, an engineer of international standing and who has given the subject the most exhaustive investigation, when at present we are paying royalties to the cyanamid companies, which royalties were to be paid to June 9, 1920, and all of them to be subject to arbitration after that time, gives this calculation. He shows it by the use of steam power, and of course if water power is installed the cost will be much less. I am quoting now from the report of Arthur Glasgow to the Secretary of War. He says:

> For the middle period, from June 1, 1921, until water power is available (say until December, 1922, or 18 months), we may add 10 per cent to "Cost of product" for the first period, in substitution for operating fee, royalties, and contingencies, making—
> Total costs from June 1, 1921, until water power is available:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Cyanamid | $36.16 |
> | Sulphate | 58.27 |

If cyanamid should go to $40 a ton instead of $55 a ton, we still would have in this sulphate of ammonia a better product at a cheaper price. The whole question of profit from this operation was discussed by Mr. Roberts, of the Ordnance Department, at great length.

He was asked all about this in the investigation. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], on page 11 of the hearings, which are printed in pamphlet form, asked this question:

> That $65 a ton that you mentioned, is that on the cost basis? Does that allow anything for interest on the investment?
> Mr. ROBERTS. We have figured here the cost price of the sulphate of ammonia, as soon as we get the water power running, as $48.22 to us, and if we sell it at $65 it will give us $16.80 profit per ton.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] asked him what percentage of nitrogen there was in cyanamid. His reply was that it was from 19½ to 20 per cent. The Senator from Oklahoma again asked him this question:

> Would that allow enough now on the manufacturing cost of sulphate to pay interest on the investment?
> Mr. ROBERTS. Well, sir, we have figured this way, and I will answer your question. I have the figures before me. We have figured that cyanamid which can be sold—we have only calculated on using one of the units producing a very small quantity, a very small number of tons—73,000 tons of it—that is going to cost us oiled, hydrated, and made suitable for the farmer, $27, which gives $10.50 profit, because we are going to sell it at $37.50. The price of $37.50 for cyanamid means about 11 cents a pound for nitrogen, which is an extremely low price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. STANLEY. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator recall upon examining these hearings that the estimate leaves out absolutely all charges for interest?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator know that that will reduce the estimated profits; that it will cut them squarely in two?

Mr. STANLEY. We have $100,000,000 invested down there, speaking roundly, on which the interest charge would be, say, $5,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not speaking of the interest on money already invested; I do not believe we shall ever get that back; I refer to the money yet to be invested before the plant is completed. That is utterly left out. Mr. Roberts estimated that later in the testimony and according to the figures of that day there are $38,000,000 more to be invested at Muscle Shoals and in this nitrate plant before it can produce the ammonium sulphate which is mentioned by Mr. Roberts. That money has got to be taken from the taxpayers, probably in the form of bonds or something of that kind, and at least they are entitled to interest on it. The Government has got to pay interest on it, and we have got to charge interest on at least $38,000,000. It will be more than that, because we now hear that the dam is going to cost $45,000,000 instead of $20,000,000 as originally estimated.

Mr. STANLEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. The estimate of profit which I have read, of $16.80, is not based upon operating by the use of the dam. I read the estimate which was based on the use of steam power. If the dam is used the power will be produced at a much less cost.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; we shall have to pay interest on the cost of the dam the year around, whether water power from the dam is used or not. That is chargeable against the product.

Mr. STANLEY. I understand that; but the estimate I read as to the cost of producing cyanamid is based upon the use of steam. If, for instance, they should use water power, they would produce this commodity at much less cost.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Senator remembers perfectly well that the estimate of Mr. Roberts was that this plant could be run at an annual profit of $2,500,000.

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is, by the use of both water and steam?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And that he failed to include in that interest on the money yet to be invested, which cuts it squarely in two. Then he did not include any deterioration on the acid plant.

Mr. STANLEY. That would be 5 per cent, say, on $38,000,000 if the dam shall be erected?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am reckoning 5 per cent interest on $38,000,000, and I should like to know—and the knowledge could be gained only from experience—what would be charged for the deterioration of the plant itself, which is an item every business man has to take into consideration.

Mr. STANLEY. We have the plant in any event.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. STANLEY. I shall be delighted to have the interruption of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. I think I was the Senator who asked Mr. Roberts if it were contemplated that the plants now nearing completion should consume all the power which was to be developed. Is it not a fact that these plants, which it is estimated will produce the amount of fertilizer ingredients contemplated, will only consume a portion of the power, and that it is proposed selling the surplus power for commercial purposes? Is it not the statement incorporated in the hearings that there will be a tremendous surplus power which is going to be sold? I remember asking the question: How much of this cyanamid or sulphate of ammonia could be produced if they were to utilize the entire maximum power that is to be developed at the plant?

If an income of $2,500,000—I believe that is what the estimate was in reference to the profit arising—may be derived from a partial use of the power generated, what would be the estimated income from the sale of the surplus power that will not be utilized in producing fertilizers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nothing is said about that. That is a very curious thing in reference to this whole proposition from the business man's standpoint. As I recollect, the cost of producing the ammonium sulphate by water power was figured upon the basis of horsepower at something like five or six dollars a horsepower.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I think so; anyway, not over $7 per horsepower. If the surplus power is going to be sold in the vicinity of the plant at the same price that it is proposed to sell it to the plant, it will be necessary to charge the plant with horsepower at the same value at which it is charged to customers outside.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is a mere matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it involves millions of dollars.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It might and it might not. It would not involve anything, in a way, if a reasonable profit could be made for the Government by using the plant and incidentally keeping it up and furnishing fertilizer for the basic industry of this country. There is quite a distinction between that and selling the product to some artificial corporation that is capable of taking care of itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator know that this plant is not going to sell fertilizer to the farmers? It is going to sell one-tenth of the value of the fertilizer to the fertilizer manufacturers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not necessarily.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the testimony of the Secretary of War. It is not intended to establish selling agencies; it is not intended to turn out a finished fertilizer; it is intended to make ammonium sulphate which in value is one-tenth of commercial fertilizer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but ammonium sulphate is available to the individual farmer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it is to be sold to the fertilizer manufacturers and the fertilizer manufacturers are to sell the fertilizer to the farmer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to interrupt him further?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from New York must understand that the sulphate of ammonia is already available to the farmer. He can purchase it as well as can the fertilizer companies. What is there in the bill that requires the corporation which is going to be created to sell to the fertilizer companies alone if a farmer presents to it an order to purchase the material?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, we are talking about a different kind of business. It is contemplated, then, to establish selling agencies and distributing agencies, but the expense of such agencies must be charged against the cost of the product.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those items are not charged against the cost of the product in Mr. Roberts's estimate, and the Secretary of War testified—and he was backed up by Mr. Roberts and all of the others who proposed this particular organization—that it was not the desire nor the intention of the United States Nitrate Corporation to do anything more than to sell to the manufacturers of fertilizer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from New York what is the difference between the selling of a minimum amount—a carload lot, for instance—to a farmer and selling it to a fertilizer manufacturer? If I can purchase it and have it shipped to my farm, there is no more necessity for a selling agency in that operation than there would be if it were sold to a fertilizer manufacturer. The fertilizer manufacturer might not want more than two carloads.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am astounded that the Senator from South Carolina can not see that it costs something to sell commodities.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The corporation will have to sell to the fertilizer manufacturers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but there are only a few of them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Exactly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But there are thousands upon thousands of farmers, and if we try to reach them by selling agencies, to coax them to come and buy what they need, or to place orders for delivery, it is going to cost money; it will be necessary to advertise; it will be necessary to employ agents; it will be necessary to send out literature. There is not a business concern in the United States that will not testify that it costs money to sell goods.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is true as a matter of course, but what is the reason why, if the plant is operating and I know that they have the goods at a certain price, I can not send in my order without their soliciting it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Senator thought anything of the clerical help that will be necessary? In other words, the Senator contends that it costs no more to sell goods at retail than it does at wholesale.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I am not contending anything of the kind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the contrast between the two.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not proceeding on any such line as that. I am taking issue with the Senator's statement that it is contemplated only to sell as an ordinary commercial organization would sell to the manufacturer because the manufacturer takes it in great bulk.

UMI

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all the estimate contemplates; that is what I have been talking about; that is all that Mr. Roberts's estimate contemplates. If it is now contemplated to sell to individual farmers, there must be added selling expense; but nothing is estimated for selling expense.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Even if they have to go out and solicit what we call retail lots—and carload lots, I presume, would come under the head of wholesale—the clerical force necessary to take care of and ship the orders would amount to a mere bagatelle, if included in the estimate; the clerical force would not need to be increased by one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under a Government corporation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; under a Government corporation.

Mr. GRONNA rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me to ask the Senator from New York a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator from New York if I understand him to say that it is provided in the bill that the Government can only sell to fertilizer companies the nitrates produced by it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Senator from New York did not say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not myself seen anything of that kind in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was asking the Senator from Kentucky about the accuracy of the estimate made by Mr. Roberts as to the cost of producing this commodity and selling it, and in connection with the testimony I reminded him and the Senator from South Carolina that it was the purpose of the proposed corporation, as outlined by the Secretary of War and Mr. Roberts himself, not to sell to farmers, but to sell only to the manufacturers of fertilizer, thereby avoiding the creation of an elaborate selling organization. Then I went on to say that if the policy of the corporation were later changed and it was determined to sell to the farmers direct, a selling organization must be erected as a part of the machinery of the corporation, and the cost of that selling organization must be charged against the cost of the product. It is simply business, that is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can understand that; but I did not understand this bill to provide that the views of the two gentlemen who happened to be testifying would be controlling at all; but whoever is to control the organization, its directors or managers, shall determine to whom the product shall be sold.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The management of the corporation under the terms of the bill is solely and entirely in the hands of the Secretary of War. He is to appoint the directors, and at his pleasure may remove the directors.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Secretary of War is not a fixed institution. He is changed every once in a while.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there is going to be a change very soon.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator and break the continuity of his remarks; but I want to say that while it is true that the Secretary of War did make the statement before the committee that he had never thought it wise to sell this product at Muscle Shoals directly to the farmer at retail, the Senator from New York has overlooked a very important matter, and that is that we are discussing wholesale prices, prices to the trade, prices to the merchant. We are not discussing the price to the farmer, and as a man who has had some experience in this connection, I should be very glad to sell the product at the profit which is generally received by the fertilizer corporations, the difference between the price which we are discussing and the price which the farmer has to pay. I was going to suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that there would be no danger of not being able to get sufficient money if you take the difference between the price which we are discussing here and the price that the farmer actually must pay.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STANLEY. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall take only a moment, because the Senator is making a very interesting and able speech.

Before the Committee on Agriculture of the House, of which I was a member, Mr. Washburn, an expert upon this matter, appeared. I asked him if the cost of fertilizer to the farmer would be reduced by the establishment of such a plant as this, and if so, about how much. He closed his statement by saying:

It will give the farmer his fertilizer for one-half of what he otherwise would pay for it.

So, whether we should sell to the fertilizer company and it should sell to the farmer or not, a statement is in the hearings to the effect that the farmer will receive the fertilizer ultimately for half of what he paid for it formerly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator say who gave that testimony?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Washburn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What page is it on?

Mr. HEFLIN. This was in the hearings before the Agricultural Committee in 1916. It is in response to a question that I asked him, and is quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. WADSWORTH. 1916?

Mr. HEFLIN. 1916 or 1917; 1916, I think.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is four years ago. Was not Mr. Washburn talking about his own company then?

Mr. HEFLIN. I was talking about the establishment of a nitrate plant in Alabama, at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. That was at the time when the American Cyanamid Co. made the proposition that if the Government would spend $20,000,000 for the dam, the American Cyanamid Co. would spend $24,000,000 for the cyanamid factory; and then, as an inducement to get that $20,000,000 from the Government, did not Mr. Washburn say that if we would do that the result would follow?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. It has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. My point is that wherever this plant is established, the farmer will get his fertilizer for half of what he paid before.

THE VITAL QUESTION.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, whether or not there is included in this calculation 5 per cent on $38,000,000, while that is an item of importance in itself, it is a mere detail when you consider it in connection with the importance of the great measure involved. The vital question before the Senate and the country is, Shall we be prepared to produce a sufficiency of fixed nitrogen to supply in a measure the needs of the country in time of war and to supply a needed fertilizer for the rehabilitation of the soil in time of peace? If we fail to do it we shall be the only civilized country on earth that has ever depended upon a remote country for a substance that is a saver of life unto life and death unto death, whether in peace or in war. We shall be the only civilized country in the world that will look for the rehabilitation of her soil in time of peace and for the success of her armies in time of war to the lean and diminishing fields of far-off Chile.

I readily concede that it is better to save a million dollars in interest than to pay it. Do you know that we paid in bounty to the Chilean Government in a single year during the war the enormous sum of $20,000,000—not for nitrate but for bounty? We have paid to the Chilean Government since 1878, $163,647,680 for bounty.

Following is a statement of export duty paid to the Chilean Government from 1867 to 1919. It is estimated that this year will be paid not less than $11,277,000 in bounty to this Government.

Fiscal year—	Long tons.	Value.	Average value per 100 pounds.	Export duty.
1867	13,150.00	$563,624.20	$1.92	(1)

NOTE.—The value given here is based on the value at the port in Chile, and does not include export duty paid to the Chilean Government, ocean freight, insurance, commissions, etc. Before 1914 freight from Chile to the United States was about $7.50 per ton; at the present time it is about $17.50. In 1879 an export duty was put on nitrate shipments from Chile, and amounted to about $4.18 per long ton. In 1880 this duty was raised to $12.53 per long ton, and has not been changed since that time. The export duty paid to the Chilean Government on all nitrate of soda coming to the United States up to July 1, 1919, would amount to $163,647,680.6827.

Mr. NORRIS. That is in addition to the fertilizer?

Mr. STANLEY. That is not for the fertilizer. That is an export duty that we pay on the fertilizer. To compete with the American manufacturer, these concerns must not only produce the fertilizer but must pay $12.53 a ton for the privilege of taking it out of Chile. Any interference with our control of the sea, any interference on the part of the Chilean Government, any effort on the part of Great Britain to prevent the exportation of this product by the Chilean Government, any purchase of this 3,000,000 tons of nitrate of soda by any Government in the world, would be fatal to this country. It is stated in the hearings by those who are qualified to know that, if the German Government had purchased the output of the Chilean mines before we went into the war, at the time we went into the war we would have been utterly helpless in so far as the production of an adequate amount of nitrogen for the needs of the Army was concerned. It strikes me as absurd that this Government should have her arsenal in Chile, with the key to that arsenal in the hands of the British Government.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Where did Germany get her explosives?

Mr. STANLEY. I am delighted the Senator has asked that question. She produces it as we should and can. Germany produces 300,000 tons of nitrogen per annum by the Haber process, the equivalent of 1,800,000 tons of Chilean nitrate. She produces 150,000 tons of nitrogen from her coke ovens. She produces 120,000 tons of nitrogen from her cyanamid processes. Germany, as the Senator understands, was cut off from the sea. She is absolutely dependent upon domestic production. Not only that, but Japan, France, Great Britain—every other civilized country except this—with any eye to the future, has, at Government expense or by Government aid, made arrangements for the fixation of nitrogen from the air. If we demolish this plant, if we close its doors, we shall be the only country in the world that is not producing fertilizer for the use of the people in time of peace, and that is not prepared with an adequate supply of nitrogen in time of war.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, can the Senator state what percentage of Germany's explosives was made from nitrogen procured by fixation from the air?

Mr. STANLEY. No.

Mr. LENROOT. Was it a small percentage?

Mr. STANLEY. It may have been, because this Haber plant was completed in the latter part of the war. At the beginning of the war Germany's great plants were not in operation.

Mr. LENROOT. Germany had no great water powers. She did not require any such great amount of power with such a large investment as is here contemplated, did she?

Mr. STANLEY. That is the reason why she went to the Haber process. It only needs one-quarter of 1 horsepower to produce a ton.

Mr. LENROOT. And if we had the same knowledge of the Haber process that Germany has, we would be in quite as good a position as Germany, would we not?

Mr. STANLEY. We certainly would not, because we would not have the Haber plant.

Mr. LENROOT. We have all the constituent elements, except that they know some things that we have not yet discovered.

Mr. STANLEY. We do not know how to operate the Haber plant and nobody else knows. The experts have testified that they would be perfectly willing to allow the Frenchmen to take their formula and operate their plant if they could.

Mr. LENROOT. Our own people are hoping to make that discovery at almost any time, are they not?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Scott, who I understand is one of the six greatest engineers of the world, and is a member of the British munitions commission, has testified that he believes that with a little effort on the part of American chemists and engineers we can take the plant we have now at Muscle Shoals, the smaller of the two plants, and soon learn to operate it.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, if we could, we would not need this very large investment that is contemplated by the water power to be created at Muscle Shoals, would we?

Mr. STANLEY. Why, certainly we would need it.

Mr. LENROOT. Not any such amount of power.

Mr. STANLEY. The 40,000 tons of nitrogen which this plant would produce is nothing in comparison with the production per annum of the countries with which we are likely to be at war.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not get my point. If we should get what Germany has, we could manufacture this product without any such amount of power as is necessary under present conditions.

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, that goes to the erection of a dam?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STANLEY. If we should discover how to use the Haber process, we might produce nitrogen by that process. Whether we could produce it as cheaply as it can be produced by the cyanamid process is the question. It is a strange thing—I went into that matter yesterday, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin—that no country in the world except Germany has ever depended upon the Haber process. France has erected with Government aid a good many of these plants since the signing of the armistice. The French Government, in fact, either on its own initiative or behind private concerns, has erected nine great plants for the fixation of nitrogen from the air, and every one of them is a cyanamid plant. Canada has utilized the cyanamid process. There are about 46 of these plants, I think, in operation. There are in the world 8 of the arc-process plants, 35 of the cyanamid-process plants, and 1 of the Haber-process plants, outside of our attempt in the United States.

So I am firmly of the opinion that if we understood the Haber process it would pay us to utilize our water power.

Mr. President, there are two dangers which face every civilized country in the world.

SOIL EXHAUSTION.

All the obliterated, all the civilizations of the past, owe their destruction to one of two causes. One, the force of arms, overthrowing the political institutions of a country; and the other, the depletion of its soil. The barrenness of the soil ends the national life of a country dependent upon it. A political revolution may restore a people whose soil is still fertile. The soil of this country is being depleted, is being robbed of the most essential element of its productivity and its life, and that element is nitrogen. As I have said, there are wheat fields to-day in France that were golden in the days of Charlemagne. There are wheat fields in England that were garnered in the time of Alfred the Great. There are wheat fields in Germany older than the feudal system that are to-day producing 30 bushels of wheat to the acre. Your wheat fields in the United States without the use of nitrogen will produce little more than half of it. What would be the result? What would be the effect upon our industrial life and our prosperity if we would learn some of the wisdom of the intensive farmers across the sea, if we would utilize this great fertilizer simply in the production of cereals alone? We could double the production of wheat per acre in the United States without any material increase in the cost and with no material increase in the labor.

Before this question, so infinite in its future, so beneficent in its effects, so vital to the life and puissance of the Nation, it does not matter so materially whether our estimates are correct to the cent, whether the sheet balances to the mill. The great question is, Shall we utilize this great instrumentality, this great apparatus, the greatest of its kind in the world, or shall we junk it or lock it up to the needy agriculturists of America?

The letter from Mr. Davis is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 3, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR STANLEY: I believe the data set out below are what you desire with regard to the nitrate situation.

The only information available here with regard to the cost of production of Chilean nitrate is derived from three different sources and for different dates. The figures given include the export duty imposed by the Chilean Government.

Federal Trade Commission report of 1916 on the fertilizer industry gives the price, as of 1903, at approximately $1.16 per hundredweight.

A paper read by Prof. Belisario Dias Ossa, before the Eighth International Congress on Applied Chemistry, in 1912, gave the price at that time as $1.36 per hundredweight.

The London Statist gives the price, as of 1920, as approximately $2.16.

Information as to how the above costs are arrived at is available only with reference to the paper read by Prof. Ossa. His figures of $1.36 is divided as follows:

Item.	Per cent.	Cost.
Export duties	41	$0.5576
Miscellaneous supplies—sacks, powder, etc	6	.0816
Freight and lighterage and commissions	11	.1496
Administration and general expense	3	.0408
Labor	19	.2584
Fuel	11	.1496
Amortization	9	.1224
Total	100	1.3600

Ocean freight rates to Atlantic and Gulf ports before the war were approximately 33 cents per hundredweight; during the war, 78 cents per hundredweight; and now, from 29 cents to 40 cents per hundredweight. You asked for rates to San Francisco, but I find that practically all nitrates came through Atlantic and Gulf ports, because of the prohibitive cross-continental freight rates.

The cost of nitrate in this country in 1912, on board cars at seaboard, was from $2.25 to $2.60; during the war this price rose as high as $5 per hundredweight. The present price is approximately $2.75 per hundredweight.

With regard to freight rates from seaboard to munitions plants, I take two routes as examples: New Orleans to Old Hickory, governmental rate $3.98 per net ton, which is about $1 lower than commercial rates because of land-grant railroads. The rate from Norfolk to Hopewell, Va., was $2.38, which governed both governmental and commercial shipments.

I assume that you have before you the Senate hearing held some months ago with reference to the nitrate situation. The Secretary of War believes this hearing to contain about all the available information with regard to the subject.

Cordially, yours,
FRANK B. DAVIS,
Confidential Clerk.

Hon. A. O. STANLEY,
United States Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending measure, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from New York offer just the one amendment, or all the amendments he intends to offer to the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just the one I regard as more important. Those I intend to offer later on are so voluminous that I doubt if they could be displayed in print very well. They all have to do with a certain theory I have about the pending legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has not put them in form so that he can offer them as a whole?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not as a whole.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator whether it is his intention to offer all his amendments a sufficient time in advance to give Senators an opportunity to consider them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. There may be some of us who might offer amendments, but if we knew what his were we might find that they cover the points. That is all I had in mind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment I have just offered has to do with the capitalization of the proposed corporation. Then I intend to offer amendments later on which will withdraw this corporation entirely from the jurisdiction of the War Department and place it under the Treasury Department, because I believe that soldiers ought not to be running a business concern.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Senator had his amendments prepared and would offer them en bloc, so that we could take the bill and see just the differences between the bill itself and the amendments offered by the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will try to get them ready before we adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Senator would, because I would like to see them. I would like to take the bill and see what effect the amendments have upon the bill, for in discussing it I may want to refer to the amendments which the Senator proposes to offer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the splendid speech of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. It is a very learned statement of the case, and I do not feel that I can add to it, except to give what seems to me a common-sense view about these plants which have already been established at Muscle Shoals and about the dam which is also under construction.

This Government has depended for all time for its nitrates for war purposes upon the nitrate beds of Chile. If our communication with Chile were cut off at any time, we would be without sufficient nitrates to wage a war. Naturally, that is a condition no country ought to be in. It is surely a position the United States of America ought not to be in. We ought not to be dependent for our nitrates for war purposes upon any other Government in the world, and especially so when we are able to prevent it.

That was the view we took of it when the World War broke out. We knew it was not right, it was not the sensible thing, to be dependent upon the Chilean nitrate beds for our supply of nitrates to go into gunpowder, and therefore we immediately established these two great plants at Muscle Shoals. It was an ideal place for them, for the reason that at the same time we started to build the dam there so as to get enormous water power by which the nitrogen from the air could be fixed. Those two works have gone on in a measure hand in hand. Appropriations have been made from time to time by which the work has proceeded on the dam, which is not yet completed. Work has continued upon these power plants, which also are not entirely completed.

The question is whether we shall go on with these power plants and go on with the work on the dam at Muscle Shoals and complete the work now nearly finished. Both of those propositions are not in this bill, but both of those propositions are before Congress and must be determined at this session.

Mr. President, it just happens that the same nitrates which are used for gunpowder in times of war are absolutely essential for the manufacture of fertilizers in time of peace. The United States is dependent upon the Chilean nitrate beds for her fertilizers in times of peace. It is almost as essential, certainly just as essential, for this country to have unlimited supplies of nitrogen for fertilizer purposes in time of peace as it is to have the nitrogen for gunpowder in time of war.

What should we do about it? Here the plants are nearly completed. Shall we finish those plants and use them for the manufacture of nitrates for fertilizer purposes, or shall we abandon the plants? We have spent some $85,000,000 on those two plants. Are we going to throw all this money away? Are we going to scrap the $85,000,000 plants? Is it possible we are going to do what we have done in the cases of other plants—sell them out for about 5 per cent, or less than 5 per cent, of their cost? I have no doubt that will be the best we can do if we scrap them. It does seem to me that no sensible Government on earth would take plants that cost $85,000,000 and throw them away when they can be utilized for the manufacture of that ingredient in fertilizer which is most necessary to the American farmer, and especially when that ingredient is now controlled by a trust. It would be hardly less than criminal for us to throw away these plants at this stage of the game. Again, it has been proposed that we should just keep them there.

Shall we just keep them there and let them rust, and not do anything with them, looking forward to another war? It seems to me that plan also would be equally foolish and quite as criminal. It does seem to me that the only businesslike and sensible thing to do is to complete the plants and let them make fertilizer for the farmers of the United States in times of peace, because a great trust has gotten control of the nitrate beds of Chile, and our farmers, in the matter of fertilizers, are virtually in the hands of this trust. If we complete these plants we will have the manufacture of fertilizers on a competitive basis at all times, and surely, it seems to me, that is a condition that is very greatly desired.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said that this corporation is not likely to make the profits that is expected, that the Government is not going to make the $2,000,000 that has been estimated as profit. Suppose the Government does not make a profit on it. If it furnishes an inexhaustible supply of fertilizer to the farmer at a low price, and at the same time guarantees a guaranty of our having our own nitrate plant in time of war, we have done well to continue these plants, whether the Government does more than break even on them or not.

Talk about making money out of it! If we scrap the plant, we deliberately throw away about $85,000,000, because you are not going to get over four or five million dollars for those plants. We might as well look the facts straight in the face; that is all we will get out of them. Whenever you scrap those plants down there, you are not going to get over four or five million dollars at the outside for what has been done, and I doubt very much whether you will get that much out of it.

Under those circumstances it does seem to me that there is but one thing for us to do, and that is to do the business-like thing and complete the plant and manufacture the fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of the country, and be guaranteed an American supply of nitrates in time of war.

Mr. STANLEY. At that point, it is admitted this plant is not as valuable as salvage as the nitro plant in West Virginia, and that brought in about $3,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it brought a little more than that, but at the outside I would say these plants if salvaged would bring somewhere between three and five million dollars, five at a high estimate, and three at a low estimate; and the Government would be facing a loss of some $80,000,000 or more. Here we not only stand to prevent the Government from losing that money but the money itself will be used for the best purposes possible—namely, to furnish fertilizer at a low cost to the farmers in peace times and held as a plant almost immediately convertible into use for war purposes.

Who is against it? The American Cyanamid Co., of course, is against it, because it would interfere with their business.

The Fertilizer Trust is against it, and why? Because it interferes with their business. The Chilean nitrate industry is against it—why? Because it interferes with their business. Everybody whose business is interfered with is against it, of course. The farmers are not against it. They want it. If we are the true and genuine friend of the farmer, we will show it by voting to complete these plants and to complete the big dam at Muscle Shoals, which will produce so much water power that can easily compete with the Chilean Nitrate Trust in the production of nitrates.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator know the position of the Alabama Power Co. with reference to the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not. I am not privy to their inside views and I do not know what their view is. If the Senator knows their position, I would be delighted to have him state it, because I would like to know.

We say a great deal about the farmers. We talk about our friendship for them. Yet at the same time we do very little for them. They are intensely interested in this matter. The appropriations that we make for the farmers of the country are less than one-half of 1 per cent of the entire appropriations that the Congress makes. One-half of 1 per cent of the appropriations that are made by the Congress are made in the interest of the farmers, and the farmers compose nearly one-half of our population—about 40 per cent, I believe. That is all that Congress does for the farmers in the matter of appropriations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. What is the basis of the Senator's computation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I take the entire amount of annual appropriations by the Congress; I then take the $31,000,000 which I think we appropriated last year for agriculture, and by simple arithmetic arrive at that result.

Mr. THOMAS. The basis of the computation, then, is——

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount appropriated for agriculture.

Mr. THOMAS. The amount carried by the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator then does not admit that any of the other appropriations benefit the farmer?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; but I was speaking of those that go directly to the farmer. I think we could compare it in this way. For instance, we appropriate so much for the Army, so much for the Navy, so much for agriculture, so much for the Indians, and so much for various other activities of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. The Department of Commerce carries how much every year?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a very small amount, less than one-fourth of 1 per cent, as I recall. It is wholly an inadequate amount. I believe that it would pay us a great deal better to appropriate larger sums for agriculture and for commerce in the country instead of devoting billions to our Army and Navy, having them always ready to fight a war which may or may not come and which is always costly and destructive, even when we win it, and for which, because of discoveries and inventions, we can never safely prepare in advance.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yet the Senator knows that some 90 per cent of all the great appropriations of the Government are for war purposes, and not 1 per cent, not three-fourths of 1 per cent, for both commerce and for agriculture together. We ought to pay more toward building up our commerce and agriculture, and especially so since we have just had the luxury of a great war, and will not likely have another for several years.

Mr. THOMAS. I know, Mr. President, that more than 90 per cent of all the revenues of the United States are appropriated either for wars that we have fought or wars that we expect to fight.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; either for wars past, present, or future.

Mr. THOMAS. I have always assumed that our appropriations for general agricultural and commercial and manufacturing and other purposes were interrelated with each other and mutually beneficial. I think they are.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator is correct to some extent, but in segregating appropriations and in forming computations the best method of getting at it is by taking what is appropriated for the Department of Agriculture, which is $31,000,000 and which is less than one-half of 1 per cent of what we appropriate for all purposes.

As I said, the primary purpose of establishing the plants was both for war purposes and for peace purposes—nitrogen for gunpowder in time of war and nitrogen for fertilizer in time of peace. When the plants were started that was the professed purpose. We carried it on so as long as the war lasted, but now that the time comes when the plants will be beneficial to the farming interests of the country, we find a disposition on the part of some not to carry out that peace purpose. It seems to me that peace purpose ought to be carried out.

Mr. President, I do not always agree with Secretary Baker; I frequently disagree with him, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to his testimony on the subject of these plants as it occurs in the hearings. He sets out with remarkable clearness and ability and thoroughness, as it seems to me, the benefits that will accrue from operating these plants by a Government corporation. I am not going to read it all, but I ask permission to insert as a part of my speech quotations from the testimony of Secretary Baker on this very important subject, reading the more important excerpts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SECRETARY BAKER'S TESTIMONY ON THE SUBJECT.

Excerpts from the testimony of Secretary Baker, given in the hearings, are as follows:

"I want, however, to open the hearing, if I may, by a statement which will show the committee the importance of the project under consideration. During the war we spent approximately $85,000,000 in building two nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals. Plant No. 1, the smaller of the two, is known as the Haber Process Plant; and the larger of the two, or No. 2 plant, upon which something over $70,000,000 has been spent, is known as the Cyanamid Process Plant.

"If I may continue as I was going, there are three possibilities: One is the disassembling and salvaging of the plants, and because of the loss involved that is quite out of the question. The second is to put the plants in stand-by condition, paint their corrodible parts and let them stand there idle and do nothing with the plants until another emergency arose, if any does arise, and keep as an emergency reliance of the Government. That, of course, is a tremendously expensive thing to do, because we would get no interest at all upon the $85,000,000 invested, and it is not unlikely that by the time another emergency would arise which would require us to resort to plants using processes developed in the future by other people and so changed as to make those we have an obsolete or obsolescent reliance. * * * The third course which I am going to suggest, and the course which I recommend, and upon which this bill is based, seems to be the only practicable one, and that is to operate the plant with such slight additions to its machinery as to make its products more readily available as fertilizer, and by the process of continuous operation and the development of processes it may be possible in the operation to keep it constantly up to date, making it increasingly useful for the purposes of agriculture and for fertilizers, and keeping it constantly ready for any emergency of war, so that the Government may have a reliance for its explosive needs.

"I think probably I need not say this, because I think everybody knows it, but history shows that every nation which has disappeared out of civilization of the world went out by one or the other of two courses: It was either vanquished or destroyed by military processes, or it exhausted its soil and had to move. So far as I know, there is no exception of that in the history of nations.

* * * * * * *

"The principal product which we are at present equipped to make, Senator, is cyanamid. There are many people who believe that cyanamid is in itself a fertilizer. It undoubtedly is a fertilizer, but it has not yet been accepted by the agriculturalists of the country as a complete fertilizer or an adequate and available fertilizer so that the possibility of disposing of the entire product of the plant if it were run to capacity and produced nothing but cyanamid is not at present good. But what the future of that may be, we do not know. Therefore, we are proposing to add to that additional processes and machinery to be installed which will enable us to produce the sulphate of ammonia, which is a very much better product for commercial fertilizers than cyanamid, because it is a better drillable product, less hygroscopic than the products that we are now making, than ammonium nitrate, for instance, which we make there in large quantities, and it is therefore better adapted to the commercial agricultural-fertilizer market.

"The amount of Chilean nitrate which this country in prewar times has imported is estimated to be about 500,000 tons.

"Senator WADSWORTH. Per year?

"Secretary BAKER. Per year. My associates here have charts which show the nitrate consumption of this country from a prewar period down to the present, and forecasting the consumption up to 1930. The line of increase is steadily mounting, and they have in that chart—which is a very instructive chart—undertaken to estimate all the available sources of nitrate supply, showing what remains to be imported from Chile after we have gotten all the nitrates that we can get in this country from by-product coke-oven processes and things of that sort.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. About what is the capacity of this plant now in the production of sulphate of ammonia, in tons?

"Secretary BAKER. As soon as the sulphate process is installed, which it is proposed to install by this bill, it would be about 215,000 tons a year.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. What percentage of nitrogen does the sulphate of ammonia contain?

"Secretary BAKER. Twenty and one-half.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. And that of the Chilean nitrate is 15 per cent?

"Secretary BAKER. The Chilean nitrate nitrogen content is 15.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. So that we would have approximately 300,000 tons on the basis of Chilean nitrate at 15 per cent?

"Secretary BAKER. Yes; that is, if the needs of the country for nitrogen remain constant, we would have to import about 300,000 tons less of Chilean nitrates. As a matter of fact, the need in the country for nitrate is constantly growing, and even with the production of this great plant as proposed it is likely we would continue to import Chilean nitrate at about the same rate we do now, if we are to fill the full demands for the agricultural interests for fixed nitrogen.

"Senator GORE. What do you estimate to be the additional cost of preparing this plant to successfully produce nitrogen?

"Secretary BAKER. This bill is proposed to carry $12,500,000, only a portion of that, however, is for the installation of additional facilities.

* * * * * * *

"Secretary BAKER. These figures, Senator, are all prepared in very accurate tables here and will be put into the record by my associates, who have them arranged so that they can be followed through. But the outstanding fact was the one I was about to give Senator GORE, that we can sell sulphate of ammonia if we put in this sulphate process at $65 a ton, which is to be compared with a price for the imported Chilean nitrate of $75 per ton. The Chilean nitrate has 15 per cent of fixed nitrogen, while our product has 20 per cent of fixed nitrogen, and our product is therefore 30 per cent higher in relation to nitrogen content, and our product sells at $65 and theirs at $75 per ton.

"Senator GORE. What was the price of the Chilean nitrate before the war, do you remember?

"Secretary BAKER. The price varied, but my recollection is that it sometimes went as low as $55.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. It went as low this year as $56 or $57. Before the war it fluctuated between $49 and $55. It has been some lower than that, but not after its use became general and its efficiency as a fertilizer had been established. But the price fluctuates, and it has varied this year very radically, from $56, $58, to $78. It is not quoted, delivered—that is, coming to the ultimate consumer, around $78 a ton.

"Secretary BAKER. Those figures, Senator, are all in the tables which my associates have, so that the record will contain all the figures.

"Senator GORE. That $65 a ton that you mentioned, is that on the cost basis? Does that allow anything for interest on the investment?

"Mr. ROBERTS. We have figured here the cost price of the sulphate of ammonia, as soon as we get the water power running, as $48.22 to us, and if we sell it at $65 it will give us $16.80 profit per ton.

"Senator GORE. Would that allow enough now on the manufacturing cost of sulphate to pay interest on the investment?

"Mr. ROBERTS. Well, sir, we have figured this way, and I will answer your question. I have the figures before me. We have figured that cyanamid which can be sold—we have only calculated on using one of the units producing a very small quantity, a very small number of tons—73,000 tons of it—that is going to cost us oiled, hydrated, and made suitable for the farmer, $27, which gives $10.50 profit, because we are going to sell it at $37.50. The price of $37.50 for cyanamid means about 11 cents a pound for nitrogen, which is an extremely low price.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. What percentage of nitrogen is in the cyanamid?

"Secretary BAKER. It is about the same as sulphate, which rates according to how you make it up, 19½ to 20 per cent.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. Available nitrogen?

"Secretary BAKER. Yes, sir; all of it is available. And on the sulphate, as I say, we make $16.80 profit. The total profit from this plant, selling at these prices, will give $2,900,000 to the Government.

"Senator NORRIS. Per annum?

"Secretary BAKER. Per year.

"The CHAIRMAN. On how large an output?

"Secretary BAKER. That is using 10 of the carbide furnaces out of 12, which will give you 73,000 tons of cyanamid, 22,000 tons of nitrate of ammonia, and 107,000 tons of sulphate.

"Senator GORE. Of course, in this business you will have to meet the Chilean competition if the price goes down; you will have to meet that competition even though you have to sell below cost.

"Secretary BAKER. Very good. Then they will have to sell their Chilean nitrate at $27, while we are getting for our cyanamid $37.50, and, as I have been informed by one of the big firms who own the mines in Chile, it can not be brought into this country under $40 without any profit to them on their investment.

"Now, Senator, you are striking the exact point I was just about to make in reply to Senator GRONNA. He asked me why the Government itself chose to operate the plant rather than to sell it to some private individual or rely upon private enterprise. This whole business is in a nascent state. The Germans are the only people who have so developed the fixation of nitrogen as to practically free themselves from the necessity of Chilean supply. Every other nation in the world relies on Chile. The Germans practically exonerated themselves from that reliance, although during the war they did have to import large amounts of nitrates from the Scandinavian countries, where they produced it in large quantities.

"From a military point of view, it is of the very greatest importance that we should not be dependent upon Chile; but from the agricultural point of view these processes are all now being developed by scientific research, and I think it is to the interest of the agricultural people of the United States to have the Government itself, which has no interest in the matter except their interest, has no commercial interest in continuing an inefficient process or in advertising an inefficient process, but has every interest in developing the best process, and that the Government itself should continue the operation of these plants and proceed with a continuous system of scientific inquiry, with the idea of perfecting the product so that it will be the very best that can be gotten for agriculture and will be produced under the most favorable conditions.

"* * * but in order to free this commercial enterprise from the limitations which are supposed to inhere under governmental direction, we have suggested the creation of a corporation of which the Government shall be the only stockholder, like the Panama Railroad enterprise, which operates in competition and in contact with the general industry of the maritime interests of the world; and we want to have that private enterprise operating the plant and conducting scientific inquiries, perfecting the processes, and turning out the product and distributing it to the large distributors who, in turn, will distribute it throughout the country, thus obviating the general distributing system and dealing direct with the farmers. That is the plan which this bill provides.

"Senator NORRIS. Is the German system still a secret system?

"Secretary BAKER. The German system is not so much a secret system; as a matter of fact, the Germans had several systems. They had the cyanamid process, the same as we have at plant No. 2; they had the Haber process, which is in effect the process which we have at No. 1, except that they used very much higher pressure in their Haber process.

"Senator NORRIS. Are we familiar with all their methods?

"Secretary BAKER. So far as I know, we are familiar with every one of fixation processes which they used.

"Senator NORRIS. The Germans have made themselves free from the Chilean nitrate beds, and we know all they did or do, and there is no reason why we should not do it?

"Secretary BAKER. None in the world. There is no mystery, no secret; it is just going ahead.

* * * * * * *

"Secretary BAKER. The power problem, Senator, is complicated. At present the plant is operated by steam-generated power. We have a very large power plant down there, one of the largest power plants I know of anywhere in the world, so far as its units are concerned. There is one unit there of 60,000 kilowatts, which is equal to 80,000 horsepower. We are using that while the water-power plant is being built. We ran in power lines which were coupled up with private sources of distribution of power developed on the various rivers—hydroelectric power developed by some southern power companies. We have steam power enough of our own now to operate our plant at the proposed capacity. In the meantime the Muscle Shoals Dam is being built, and some day, probably very much earlier than anybody had previously supposed, we will have the great hydroelectric power of the Muscle Shoals Dam across the Tennessee River, one of the most imposing water powers possibly in America. * * *

"And now comes the question that undoubtedly will impress Congress most, and that is the cost of it. This bill undertakes to carry $12,500,000, and I know there will be very great reluctance on the part of Congress to spend $12,500,000 for any project, which is a very proper reluctance, with which I have complete sympathy.

"We have figured in the War Department that the necessary safety reserve of Chilean nitrate for us to keep on hand against an emergency is 300,000 tons, and we have sold the Government's surplus stocks of nitrate down to 300,000 tons, or we are in process of doing it. We have now figured in the War Department that if this plant is kept going, and in addition to that we can rely upon it in an emergency to produce half of what would otherwise be required to keep as a safety reserve; in other words, if this plant is continued according to the plan proposed here we will be required to keep on hand only 150,000 tons rather than 300,000 tons.

"I am going to ask you, therefore, to bring in a committee amendment to this bill which will authorize the War Department to dispose of 150,000 tons of the nitrate which it has on hand and use that money, instead of a fresh appropriation of $12,500,000, to carry out the purposes of this bill.

"Senator NORRIS. How much money will that bring you?

"Secretary BAKER. It will bring us $12,500,000. We can sell 150,000 tons and get enough money to put in the additional appliances, have the working capital, and keep the company going until it begins to earn.

"Senator NORRIS. That would save an appropriation then?

"Secretary BAKER. It would save us the necessity of any appropriation.

"Senator SMITH of South Carolina. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I got an appropriation of $20,000,000 to purchase Chilean nitrates for the farmers during the war, and it was made a revolving fund. That was handled by the Agricultural Department. The demand for it was so great that they sold it all, and the Government had all the appropriation and was reimbursed with all the expenses attached, so that the $20,000,000 is back in the Treasury without a cent's loss to the Government. That was one time when the Government appropriated money and got every cent of it back without any loss.

"Senator CAPPER. Mr. Secretary, what would be the chances for this project being self-supporting after you got it started?

"Secretary BAKER. We believe it will be self-supporting from this on. We have asked for a $12,500,000 capital, which we believe will carry the project on until its net earnings recoup, and from then on it will be continuously self-supporting.

"Senator GORE. Will there be other sources of revenue from the sale of power?

"Secretary BAKER. There will always be the possibility of selling power. Of course, the power will have to be fed into the lines that run all through that part of the country.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. ROBERTS. There is no doubt in my mind, sir, at all that this plant can more than carry itself. I feel no hesitancy in saying that. I certainly expect it to make $3,000,000 a year.

"Senator WADSWORTH. What effect do you think it will have on the chemical fertilizer industry of this country?

"Mr. ROBERTS. None. The demand for nitrogen is growing right along, and we will have to import larger and larger quantities of Chilean nitrate, even with this plant running.

"Senator WADSWORTH. There is room for everybody?

"Mr. ROBERTS. There is room for everybody. Mr. Myers, who represents the Chilean nitrate industry in this country, says the demand for nitrogen is going to be so great that this would not affect his interests at all.

"Senator WADSWORTH. What are his interests, do you say?

"Mr. ROBERTS. The importation of sodium nitrate into this country, and he made that statement before the Graham committee. We will not interfere with any private interests at all; there is plenty of room for all of us."

FACTS CONCLUSIVE.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the foregoing facts there can not be any doubt that this plant, including both the steam plant and the water plant, should be completed at an early date and used for the benefit of the agricultural interests of this country. To scrap the machinery there would be folly. Next, to hold it without doing anything with it would be hardly less than folly. The only possible business proposition is to continue the work, and I think the plan proposed in this bill is manifestly the business way to do it.

THE FARMERS ENTITLED TO IT.

Mr. President, many talk about legislation in favor of farmers. Some of the proposed legislation this year will be very beneficial to them I believe. Other legislation that is alleged to be in their behalf is of very doubtful value to them, but this measure is almost a necessity to them. Chile now has what might be called a corner on nitrates. The Chilean nitrate trust is supreme in its control of the nitrate situation. When private power plants are erected, it is perfectly natural for them to form some kind of combination with the Chilean nitrate trust and the farmers have to pay large prices for this necessary component part of fertilizers and will continue to do so indefinitely unless these plants are completed and operated. On the other hand, if the United States Government through this corporation manufactures nitrates, the farmers would be assured that they would always get them at the lowest possible cost and under highly competitive conditions. They would also be assured that no combinations can be made that will raise the price unduly. The greater portion of the lands of this country need fertilizers. Right next by Muscle Shoals are the wonderful phosphate beds of Tennessee. These phosphate beds are unusually large. They are near and can be used in conjunction with the nitrates secured from this plant and at the lowest possible cost. Muscle Shoals is an ideal situation, therefore, for such a plant as this.

Mr. President, the farmers of our country bear the heat and burden of the day. They are hewers of wood and drawers of water. In order to produce what the rest of the world consumes, they must rise early and work late and constantly; in the cold of winter they have to keep and feed their stock and cattle and hogs and poultry. They have to feed them and water them and give them their constant care and attention.

As spring advances they have to prepare the lands for planting, and from that time on until the crops are finally gathered, in heat and in cold, in rain and in shine, in season and out of season, if they succeed, they must work, work, work. They have no time to lobby about legislatures or about the Congress. They have little time for even meeting among themselves in their various localities. They are not adepts in getting legislation that is favorable to them passed, but they are the backbone of our country. If they are prosperous, the whole Nation is prosperous, and if they are not prosperous the whole Nation is not prosperous. Congress has done much for them in the way of teaching them, through the agents of the Department of Agriculture, how to fertilize their lands, how to produce the greatest quantity of crops on them, and how to care and preserve and market them, and all this is important, but nothing is more important than that they should be assured of an inexhaustible supply of fertilizers at reasonable prices. Except in especially favored localities, these farm lands have to be constantly reinvigorated by fertilizers. As the years go by the amount of fertilizers must be constantly increased. It would never do for the American farmer to be dependent upon a trust-controlled supply of fertilizers, as is the case now.

Mr. President, our farmers only want fair treatment. They do not want the best of it. They must have better facilities for securing money with which to make their crops. They must secure it at less interest rates than they now have to pay. I hope that the farm loan act will be declared legal; but if it is not legal, then the Congress should speedily pass one that is constitutional. They must have an ample supply of fertilizers at a reasonable cost. The Government should take no backward step in its farm extension and agency work or its work in home economics. Federal aid to road building should be continued. The teaching of the value and use of improved farm machinery, of improved stock and cattle and hog breeding should be continually emphasized. We must make every farming community a safe, a fit, an attractive, and a prosperous place to live in. The recent census shows an enormous exodus of population from the rural districts, and a consequently enormous increase in the population of our cities. For the first time in our history our city population is larger than our country population. This is not a favorable condition. It is a condition which is national in its character, and should be dealt with nationally. We must find the proper methods and means to make country life more inviting and more attractive, so as to keep more of our boys and girls on the farms. The war did much to bring this condition about, though it would have occurred without the war. But the war accentuated it. It is one of our most important readjustment problems. We must meet it squarely and take steps to checkmate it. More of our people are engaged in farming than in any other industry. As I said to the Senator from Colorado, the National Government appropriated for its upbuilding and improvement last year only $31,000,000, not much more than one-half of 1 per cent of its entire appropriations. But then the farmers own no great metropolitan newspapers to put their needs before Congress and the country. They have no money to invest in magazine propaganda in their interest. They have no money to employ college professors to secure and present statistics to aid them. The result is that every time a legislator speaks out for the farmer, representatives of the other interests are always on the job and ready to cry out, "Oh, he wants the farmers' vote!" Mr. President, it is time for the Congress to become alive to the needs of our great industry, that upon which every other industry depends. We must do more to build up, dignify, make attractive, and make prosperous the farm life of our people.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss this matter at length. It has already been done by members of the committee. It seems to me it is a great opportunity to benefit the farmers of the country. Our lands are getting poorer every day. They are wearing out. They have got to be reinvigorated. They can only be reinvigorated in a scientific and proper way in order to make the crops that are necessary to sustain our people. We ought to leave no stone unturned to give to the farmers of the country a cheap and excellent fertilizer, when such an opportunity offers as the one which now confronts us. If we do not give it to them the Government does not make anything except the three or four million dollars that it will get as compensation and for the sale of this $85,000,000 plant.

How any man can believe that it is better to junk or scrap these new plants than to use them for the benefit of the farmers of the country I can not imagine. It is inconceivable to me that any business man would feel that he ought not to make an effort to give the farmers of the country the benefit of cheaper fertilizer.

It is said by the Senator from Kentucky that fertilizers may or will go down. Of course they may go down. I hope they will go down. They are certain to go down if we pass the bill and let it be known that Congress intends that the Government itself will operate these plants. The farmers will get their nitrates cheaper. But if by any chance or mischance the bill should not pass or an intention is shown on the part of Congress to defeat it, we will see fertilizers going up instead of down. We will find that the trust feel that they could increase their prices of fertilizer to the farmers. The farmers have to have fertilizers. In order to get along they are obliged to have them. It is a question of competition, and the greatest good that will be done will be along a competitive line upon a competitive basis, because as long as the Government operates the plant the trusts and everybody else will know that the farmers are going to get these fertilizers at about cost.

I think it would be wholly immaterial—not wholly immaterial either, but certainly not a reason for not organizing this corporation and not carrying on this work—that the Government does not make anything out of it. If it does not make a cent out of it, if it can pay running expenses and just keep down the cost of fertilizer to the farmers of the country, it will pay for itself a thousandfold. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] gave the figures showing that the country has paid an enormous tax to Chile because of its purchase of the Chilean nitrates in the manner that we have been purchasing them for many years. We ought not to pay that tax. It should not be inflicted upon the American farmer. If a profit can be made out of nitrates for fertilizers, let us make it for the American Government, not pass it into the coffers of the Chilean Government. It is a good time to be for America first.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I am very much impressed with what the Senator is saying. Does the Senator see any material difference in principle between spending hundreds of millions of dollars for the building of dams to restore arid lands in the West and spending thirty or forty million dollars for the restoration of formerly fertile lands all over the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no difference in principle. One is a great deal easier to be done, of course. This project means much more to all the people. The returns are far greater.

Mr. STANLEY. The reason I ask the question is that it seems to be assumed that if for any reason the Government should not make a restoration of our soil by the increased use of fertilizer, possibly that it would be a bad investment. We have been spending millions and millions of dollars for the development of arid lands and the improvement of lands without any hope or expectation of direct reward.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course. The Senator is exactly right in his illustration. I do not see how in the world a Senator who has voted for the reclamation of arid lands and to devote the money of the Government to building dams in order that they might be reclaimed could object to voting for a bill of this kind, which allows the farmer at his own expense to reclaim, in substance, the fertility of his own soil. I do not believe our western friends who have done so much in the matter of reclamation of arid lands in their States will make a distinction when it comes to a like proposition that will benefit all the farmers and all the people.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably the idea I was going to suggest is covered, and that is that all the money that is pledged to reclamation of lands comes back and must be paid back by the settler. However, I think this thought is probably covered in the proposition the Senator was discussing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow me, the money that is appropriated for this purpose never goes out. It belongs to the Government all the time as a national-defense item.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Alabama is exactly right. The great asset we have is that we have there constantly and at all times a plant that will make us independent of the Chilean nitrate beds in times of war, while we will have a highly beneficial fertilizer plant in times of peace.

It is inconceivable to me, when at such a small expense we can complete these plants and keep them ever ready for time of need for war purposes, why we should destroy them, why we should scrap them, or why we should leave them idle, when by running them without a loss we can keep them there at all times ready, and in the meantime benefit the farmers by giving them cheaper fertilizers.

One of the first effects of the formation of this corporation is told by Mr. Secretary Baker. We now keep on hand some 300,000 tons of Chilean nitrate for war purposes. He said that if the plant is completed there is no reason in the world why that supply of Chilean nitrate may not be reduced to 150,000 tons, at an immense saving, not only of 150,000 tons of nitrate but an immense saving of warehouse room and of expensive storage protection of all kinds that is necessary in regard to it. I believe that we could well afford to reduce the reserve amount of Chilean nitrate to considerably less than 150,000 tons if we had a plant running at all times that could be depended upon for a sufficient supply of nitrate. That is an additional reason why these plants should be completed.

While I am on the subject let me suggest that the dam, the water power at Muscle Shoals, the second largest water power in the country, I believe, will produce 200,000 primary horsepower, whenever it is completed, and 200,000 secondary horsepower. After going to the expense we have of almost completing the plants, to stop now, to throw away what we have already done, to throw away this water-power plant and these steam plants, seems to me little less than madness. We ought to have guardians appointed for us, as it seems to me, if we do a thing so foolish. Mr. President, I sincerely trust that this bill will pass. I do not see how any friend of the farmer can vote against it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is lying on the Secretary's desk one amendment which I prepared and which I desire to offer to the pending measure and to have printed. I now present three more amendments, which I desire also to have lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken as to the four amendments to which the Senator from New York refers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber for a minute or two, and I now wish to inquire whether any Senator has given any notice of an intention to speak on the pending bill to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). No such notice has been given.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If I may be permitted to say so, I intend to try to keep the bill continuously before the Senate until it can in some way be disposed of. I hope that all Senators who desire to offer amendments to the bill will prepare and present them, in order that they may be printed and put into such shape as to be readily understandable. I make this suggestion for the reason that I think the pending measure is one of the most important pieces of constructive legislation which has ever been brought before this body. Whether we are going to foster the nitrate enterprise as best we may in the hands of the Government or turn it over to private individuals, it is a duty on the part of Congress to see that this development shall be made for the benefit of the agricultural interests of this country, upon which everything rests. I think the condition of the present plant is such that it would be a piece of stupidity for us not to have the Government take charge of it at this time and run it during peace times specifically for the interests of agriculture.

We need it in war for the purpose of producing explosives; we need it in peace for the purpose of producing fertilizers with which to enrich our soil. The proposition is in an empirical stage; it is a matter so technical and so costly that it is almost impossible to depend upon private initiative for its development. The Agricultural Department is working along experimental lines, and when they have developed an idea to a point where it is of practical benefit turning it over to those whom it will benefit.

Fertilizer is something which underlies all other agricultural activities. I do not propose this afternoon to take up any of the time of the Senate, but simply desire to say that this is one instance in which a part of the country at this time does not appreciate the terrible handicap under which another part of the country is producing. There is a certain section of the country which without artificial fertilization does not produce greatly, but which with artificial fertilization produces more than the richest sections of the country. It is a peculiarity of the South Atlantic Coastal Plain that with the proper fertilization it will produce more per acre than the richest valleys of the West. That is an asset of the Government, of the whole people of the United States. It is a tremendous drain on the agriculturists of that section to get the proper ingredients for fertilizers.

We have a plant which the necessities of war caused us to build. Although in an experimental stage, it is now so equipped that we may take from the inexhaustible supplies of the air a necessary plant food. As the years go by it will be more and more perfected, and as it contributes to the enrichment of the soil its cost will be returned to the people in a hundredfold profit. It would be a paying investment if the Government were to spend out of its general funds every dollar necessary to produce this material and to give it to a helpless class, 60 per cent of whom are tenants, to produce that which in the aggregate spells the prosperity of the country.

For Senators to stand here and attempt to thwart this proposed legislation and endeavor to turn over into the hands of certain corporations this plant forever, to exploit the great mass of helpless agriculturists of this country, does not speak very well for them. I am not more of a socialist than is any other Senator in this body, but I do contend that at this time we should develop this enterprise under Government auspices. When it shall have become perfected, then a different proposition will present itself.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is aware, is he not, that the bill now before the Senate does not require the manufacture of one single pound of fertilizer by the Government or by the corporation representing the Government?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, well, as I read the bill, as a matter of course, such provision is contemplated. The corporation, if it sees fit to do so, may manufacture sulphate of ammonia. Besides that I have some amendments which I myself propose to offer and leave it to the Senate as to just what it is going to do as to that phase of the proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad of that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will have his amendments in order so that we may read them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will have them in order so that the Senator may read them.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following conference report, which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7775) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

KERENSKY GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, yesterday I submitted a resolution calling on the Treasury Department for certain information, and it went over under the rule on the suggestion of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I have talked with him about it to-day, and he said he has no objection to it; that he had talked it over with his colleague, and there was no objection to its passage. He authorized me to make this statement if I could get the floor this afternoon, and ask that the resolution be taken up and passed. I therefore ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 417), submitted yesterday by Mr. NORRIS, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate the following information:

1. Are funds of the United States being used either directly or indirectly to support or maintain an embassy in the city of Washington, D. C., representing the so-called Kerensky government of Russia, and if so, how much money has been thus expended and what authority is there for such expenditure?

2. Was money advanced from the Treasury of the United States to established a credit on behalf of the Kerensky government, and if so, in what amount, and for what purpose was it used?

3. What amount of money, if any, does the Kerensky government owe to the Government of the United States; how is it secured; what rate of interest does it bear, and when does it mature?

4. After the downfall of the Kerensky government did the Government of the United States purchase war material or other supplies from the officials of the Kerensky government with funds of the United States, and if so, what was the nature of the supplies; how much money was paid for the same; and was the purchase made at a time when the Kerensky government was indebted to the United States, and, if so, in what amount?

5. Has the Government of the United States taken any steps to reimburse itself for money advanced or loaned to the Kerensky government?

TARIFF ON ZINC.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to present an amendment which I shall propose at the proper time as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 6238) to provide revenue for the Government and to establish and maintain the production of zinc ores and manufactures thereof in the United States. I ask that the proposed amendment may be referred to the Committee on Finance for their consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that his proposed amendment, in the nature of a substitute for House bill 6238, be referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he does not desire the original bill to be taken from the calendar, does he?

Mr. SPENCER. No. The original bill, as I understand, is left upon the calendar unaffected. The amendment is sent to the Secretary's desk to be printed, with a notice that it is intended to be offered as a substitute when the original bill comes up for consideration. In the meantime, for information and for such consideration as the committee may desire to give it, it is requested that the amendment be referred to the Finance Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the Senator ask that his proposed amendment lie on the table, to be called up when the bill to which it is offered is reached on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I was going to suggest.

Mr. SPENCER. That is quite satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be the procedure.

THE OIL SITUATION.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if no other Senator has given notice of an intention to address the Senate after the morning business on Thursday next, I desire to give notice that I wish to make a few remarks in reference to the subject of oil on that day after the morning business shall have been concluded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 5, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 4, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, constant in Thy ministrations unto Thy children, faithful, kind, generous, just, and merciful, impart upon us plenteously of these gifts that we may live together in harmony and peace, according unto others every natural right we claim for ourselves, that honesty, justice, and truth may harmonize all differences, that love may be in the ascendancy after the manner of the world's great exemplar, our Lord and Master. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

The Clerk began the reading of the Journal.

During the reading,

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk is reading the Journal; is it a long message from the President?

The SPEAKER. The message was read last night.

Mr. CANNON. But is it a long one?

The SPEAKER. Quite long, requiring about 10 minutes to read, the Chair is informed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reading of the Journal in full. I did not happen to be here, and I have no time to read it nor the eyesight to read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the message of the President.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is that the same message read yesterday?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why is the Clerk reading it again?

Mr. CANNON. It is part of the Journal, and I demanded it be read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman wants to hear it twice, does he?

Mr. CANNON. I did not happen to be here.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is an important message, and I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] It is obvious there is no quorum present——

Mr. McFADDEN. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Dunn	Lonergan	Rainey, H. T.

Dooling	Lehlbach	Pou	Yates
Drewry	Lesher	Rainey, Ala.	Young, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the Journal in full.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

FINANCING AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business when the House adjourned yesterday was the reconsideration of Senate joint resolution 212 notwithstanding the objections of the President. The question before the House is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the joint resolution the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have all listened to the President's message with a great deal of interest. I think we all realize that while the President has presented a very excellent argument in support of the position he has taken, he has not raised any new questions or issues with regard to this matter which has been so fully considered in the House heretofore. Therefore it seems to me it would be well to proceed to vote on the measure without further debate at this time, and therefore I move the previous question. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass Senate joint resolution 212 the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 250, nays 66, answered "present" 3, not voting 112, as follows:

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. PARK (at the request of Mr. BRAND), for to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. MOORE of Virginia (at the request of Mr. BLAND of Virginia), for to-day, on account of death of relative.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422—the sundry civil appropriation bill—with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the time for general debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto for to-day was limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes, one-half to be used by those in favor of the amendment and the remaining one-half by those opposed to it. I ask unanimous consent that the distribution of that time be left to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and myself, the gentleman from Tennessee to have control of one-half of the time, to be distributed among those in favor of the amendment, and the remaining one-half to be controlled by myself, to be distributed among those opposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the one hour and a half for general debate on the amendment be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], in favor, and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa, opposed to the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, for a great many years efforts have been made to develop water power and electrical energy at Muscle Shoals. Every kind of device to reach the Treasury that it was possible to think about was used to accomplish that end. During the war every committee in the House that was thought to have appropriating power was applied to to make an appropriation to begin this activity. It was finally begun through the national defense act. Seventy-seven million dollars so far has been exended in the construction of a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, to be used for war purposes only; and the war-purpose plant is complete, and so far as war purposes go, there is nothing more to be desired. Peace has come and we no longer need nitrates for war purposes. But if war should come we have the plant complete with which to make the nitrates.

The business people of the United States have been induced to make fertilizer from coke-oven by-products. They have a capacity now of 500,000 tons a year. The plants proposed to be erected in addition to the one now at Muscle Shoals, it is said, would have a capacity of 86,000 tons. The plants already erected by private capital will, in the next few years, be able to develop 900,000 tons. The investment of more money at Muscle Shoals at this time would mean a charge on the Treasury that is not justifiable. The construction of a dam to create electrical energy to sell to manufacturing plants is what it would amount to, and if we manufactured nitrates for fertilizer purposes there we would come into competition with those who pay the taxes to maintain the Government, and we could not manufacture enough nitrates there to justify the expenditure.

It will cost, if we proceed with this improvement, $120,000,000 more than we have already invested, and there is not a leading man anywhere, in the Government or out, who has been able to tell the Committee on Appropriations when the plant can be completed, what it will be when it is completed, how much money it will cost, or how much revenue can be derived from the expenditure.

This proposal to do something for the farmer is a subterfuge. You are throwing sand into the farmers' eyes in order that you may be able to put your hands up to the elbows into the Treasury of the United States. The time has come when we must know the facts before we impose further burdens upon the taxpayers of the country. Economy must be the watchword. Facts should be the basis of action here, and not fancy, and we must under no circumstances pay any more money for this iniquity until we know more about it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I consider the proposition before us one of preparedness for national defense, and as such I shall vote for this appropriation.

I dislike very much to disagree with my colleague [Mr. GOOD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; but considering it, as I do, a question of national defense, I can do nothing else than vote for the appropriation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I asked a question at that point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I prefer the gentleman would not, but I will answer the question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman says this is a preparedness measure. Does he claim that water power is necessary to produce nitrate?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will answer that question in a few minutes, when I get to it.

I want to say a few words about some of the arguments used against this appropriation. The first one, and the one that has been used most, is that there has been extravagance in the building of this plant. Why, my friends, in company with other members of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have traveled all over this country and a portion of Europe, and I have found practically everywhere there has been a great deal more extravagance than should have been in the conduct of the war; but because we find extravagance are we going to scrap our Army? [Applause.] Because they are extravagant at West Point, perhaps, do we refuse them appropriations? Because they were extravagant at Camp Grant are you going to sacrifice what you have paid for there?

The other day I went down to Camp Eustis; we could see where they had been extravagant there. But you have this camp paid for, and you will have to keep up running expenses. We are in the position of a man who has hired a superintendent to run a farm, for instance. He has been extravagant. He has purchased things that he does not need. We have found it out. He has practically ruined us. We have discharged him. Somebody else is coming in. The question now is, Are you going to sacrifice the things that you have, or are you going to conserve them for future uses? By this appropriation we furnish an opportunity to a Republican administration to conserve or salvage this plant.

The answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is this: It is not necessary to have water power. But the gentleman from Ohio knows full well the result. You refuse this appropriation, and in a few years the corporations of this country that control nitrates will buy that steam plant, because it is worth nothing to the Government in peace times unless it is developed. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is no answer.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is my answer to it. I know full well that the corporations of this country control the supply systems of the Army. They have done it for 20 years.

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Wait a minute.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman wants an answer, I will give it to him.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can tell you about control by the corporations. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield. I want to tell the gentleman what it costs this Government to have the supplies controlled by the corporations. We went into this war without a blue print of modern artillery in our Ordnance Department, and in consequence of that we paid out $2,000,000,000 for artillery ordnance, and we never fired one piece over our boys in Europe.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why does the gentleman point to me?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You are the one that asked the question.

Some gentlemen want to postpone action. They say, "Wait, wait." That is the same argument I heard in the Committee on Military Affairs for years before the war: "Wait, and we will produce something a little better, and our corporations, privately controlled, can produce everything that you need." We waited, and the result was that it cost us $5,000,000,000, for which we never received one thing that we could use. I refer to the aeroplanes and to the ordnance. That is the result of waiting for national preparedness. I am opposed to it. I am unalterably opposed to this Government letting a foreign nation control one of the fundamental things that you need for national preparedness. [Applause.] When we went into the war we had to go down to Chile, 5,000 miles away from our nearest port, to get nitrates, and they spent many sleepless nights down in the War Department wondering whether they were going to get them. I am opposed to that kind of preparedness.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Iowa believes in the Government manufacturing rifles and guns for the Army as a preparedness proposition. Would the gentleman favor the Government manufacturing guns in our arsenals to sell to sportsmen and citizens generally?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I suppose the gentleman's idea is that the farmers are sportsmen. [Laughter.] If he thinks that, he had better go out and see some of his farmer friends and ascertain their sporting qualities. Mine are not. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois would spend $100,000,000 to erect a factory for powder to kill men with and then refuse to spend $28,000,000 more to make it useful for food production.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true that more nitrates are now produced by private concerns in this country than this plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals would be capable of producing? And if that is true, what effect does the gentleman think it would have upon those private plants to have this plant No. 2 run by the Government in competition with them?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will answer that by saying I am not worried about the ability of the United States Steel Corporation to take care of themselves on peanut propositions. [Applause.] There is no question about it. The gentleman is worrying about the United States Steel Corporation manufacturing a by-product, and he is afraid it will go broke. [Laughter.] I am much more worried about the common people than I am about rich corporations, and the Republican Party had better be, if it expects to retain itself in power.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The farmers of the United States now use 190,000 tons of fertilizer a year. The by-product coke ovens make 500,000 tons a year, and it is proposed in several years from now, after we have spent another $100,000,000 on this plant, to produce 86,000 tons. How much benefit is the farmer going to get from that expenditure?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let me answer that. Although I did not intend to argue this from the farmers' standpoint, I believe that if you appropriate the money necessary to complete this water-power plant, as you should, you will reduce the price of nitrates to the farmer over $30 a ton, and that will be of direct benefit to the food producers and the food consumers of this country. [Applause.]

Now, looking at it again from the standpoint of preparedness, the War Department has just asked for an appropriation of something over $800,000,000. I am not in favor of giving it all to it, but it is safe to say that we will appropriate more than $300,000,000 for this purpose during this session of Congress. We have over 200,000 enlisted men and some 12,000 officers, but we might as well send them all back to civil life and forget the Army appropriation bill if we do not have an adequate supply of what this Muscle Shoals plant will produce.

We are now dependent entirely on Chile for our supply of nitrate. All that we use must come from a country some 5,000 miles away. It is true we are getting a sufficient supply at the present time, but I want to ask these gentlemen who are opposing this measure if they think it is a good policy for the United States to depend solely upon a foreign Government for a supply of material upon the possession of which might depend our national safety?

There are no nitrate beds in the United States. The only way therefore that we can obtain it is from the air. There are no plants in the United States that manufacture nitrate, or rather there is only one or two whose output is so inconsiderable that it need not be considered. We have then only one of two courses to follow, either keep on depending upon Chile for our supply or build this plant and be in a position to supply our own demands if the occasion demands.

What is the use of appropriating money for an army of men if we have no guns, and what is the use of spending money for guns if we have no powder? We can have powder only if we have a supply of nitrate, and we can have this supply at the present time only if we can get it here from Chile, a country that lies on the west coast of South America. I know some people think that we can keep on getting our supply from a foreign country indefinitely, but it seems to me that it is a poor policy for this country to turn down a proposition that will give us an opportunity to develop what we need within our own doors. This is from a military point of view only. Now, let us look at the other side for just a moment.

So far we have expended, in round figures, $100,000,000 to develop a great water power and nitrate plant. All of the preliminary work has been done on the water-power project and the nitrate plant is about completed. Twenty-eight million more will complete this great project, and it is now proposed that we refuse any appropriation, which means that the work must stop, the working force disintegrate, and the immense supply of materials and machines on hand lie idle and deteriorate in value while we speculate on whether it is a good thing for the United States to manufacture its own explosive material or not.

There have been charges of extravagance in the building of the nitrate plant and in the work that has already been done on the power plant. I do not know whether it is true or not. It is quite probable that there was, although I am told that the elaborate officers' quarters that were referred to in the argument a day or two ago were not built from the funds appropriated, but from lumber that was salvaged when the first plant was built. This is beside the question now, however, for I see no economy in throwing away what we have simply because extravagance was allowed when it was being built. As near as I can learn the power plant is now about 30 per cent completed. All of the preliminary work has been done. The machinery has been assembled, an immense bridge built, the cofferdams erected, and we are in a position to go ahead and lay the concrete, and finish the dam. Why not do it?

We can be as economical in finishing the work as the present administration was extravagant in starting it. Because the people who have had the matter in charge are said to have been extravagant is no reason why we should continue to be so.

A new administration is coming into power, an administration that has pledged itself to economy and a businesslike policy. To refuse to complete the work on the ground that there has been extravagance is an admission that we are not able to do it more economically, an admission that we can not do what we have pledged ourselves to do—get a dollar's return for a dollar expended.

If we are to be economical, how are we going to justify our action of allowing a hundred million dollars go to waste when by spending a few million more we can develop one of the greatest water-power plants in the world and supply our country with one of the most essential products necessary for our self-protection? How are we going to justify our action in refusing to complete a project that will produce a material for which there is an enormous demand at the present time, and produce it as cheap if not much cheaper than we can now bring it from another country whose supply we are almost wholly dependent upon for our needs?

Now, let us go into a little detail in regard to the expenditures on this proposition, for I have been digging into them a little myself. We spent $83,000,000 for the nitrate plants. They are completed and ready to operate.

The total appropriation for the water-power plant to date has been $17,159,610.42. Of this amount $11,423,388.84 has been expended, $1,288,359.50 contracted for but not paid out, leaving a balance on hand of $4,447,862.08. This amount, it is estimated, will keep the work going until the new appropriation will be available.

Of the eleven million and some odd thousand that has been expended, $1,682,500 went for camp construction and operation. This includes the roads that have been built, the bringing of the water supply from Florence, a town some 7 miles away, and the erection of 30 permanent houses and 308 temporary houses. This work is now complete, and so far as it goes we are ready for business.

It was also necessary to build a railroad 25 miles in length, and this, with the cost of operation and equipment to date, has cost $1,075,100. The road is now in operation and brings to the camp the supplies, material, and so forth.

We have spent another $2,980,000 on the general plant, including the enormous cranes, the barges that bring in the sand, and all the numerous other things that go to make up a big plant such as it is necessary to operate there. We have paid out $421,000 for flowage rights, which means that we have paid that amount to the landowners whose land has been overflowed or will be when the dam is constructed. Another $300,000 went for the big cofferdam that it was necessary to construct, and another $606,000 for the bridge across the river.

So far we have placed 70,000 yards of concrete at a total cost of $614,000. We now have a plant that has a capacity of laying 5,000 yards of concrete at an approximate cost of $7 per yard. It will be necessary to lay 1,000,000 yards to complete it. Here we are with the preliminary work all done, everything ready to build a mighty dam, millions expended in preparation, and some of you now propose to stop the work because it is hinted that the houses might have cost too much, the officers' quarters are perhaps too commodious, or the bridge too expensive.

I have devoted some little time also to analyzing what the plant will produce when it is completed.

We are going to have a water-power plant that will produce 100,000 primary horsepower and 500,000 secondary horsepower. We now have a steam plant with a capacity of 80,000 primary horsepower.

I am advised that we can sell all our primary power, which means the power we can furnish continually, and still have left about 400,000 secondary power, which would produce 110,000 tons of nitrate a year. Thus we have a market for our surplus power, and there is no doubt about the market for the nitrate.

There is also no doubt but that we can produce the fertilizer cheaper than it can be imported. There is no doubt but that we will. To acknowledge otherwise would be to admit that we were incompetent. There are many details that I could explain if I had the time, but I think they are matters that each Congressman should investigate for himself. If he will take the pains to do so, as I have done, I have no doubt but that he will come to the conclusion, as I have, that not to proceed with this project now would not only be failing to provide for the military policy and safety of the Nation but it would be an economic waste that we can not afford and that we have no right in justice to wish onto our constituents.

I want to add right here a statement from Mr. Hugh Cooper, one of the greatest engineers this country has ever produced and a man with an ability so great and a character so high that his words can be taken without reservation.

NOVEMBER 27, 1920.

Gen. HARRY TAYLOR,
Office of the Chief of Engineers,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: 1. You have asked us for a general statement with respect to the value to the general public of the Muscle Shoals project as a water power, and you have also asked us for a statement as to what losses would probably be met with if the construction of the works should be interrupted by the failure of Congress to make necessary appropriations to carry on the work vigorously and thoroughly as now under way.

2. With reference to the first question, we have carried out under your instructions an exhaustive analysis of the value of the power element in this project. Our investigations have included a thorough check of the Florence rating curve, involving 45 separate checked quantitative measurements for different elevations of the gauge. This gauge, as you know, has been the basis for determining accurately the flow of the Tennessee River during the last 21 years. Based upon the flow of the Tennessee at Muscle Shoals thus determined, and based upon the operating heads as they will occur at the Wilson Dam, we find, as previously reported to you, that the average primary power production in the future would be 700,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum, and for the secondary power 1,470,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum.

3. In the territory reachable from the Wilson Dam the present coal consumption in steam-operated industries will be found in excess of 6 pounds of coal per kilowatt hour and is probably more than 8 pounds per kilowatt hour. Assuming 6 pounds, the saving in coal by the complete installation of the works as now planned will amount to more than 6,500,000 tons per annum if this energy is used for standard normal domestic purposes. If the plant is used otherwise than above indicated (for fertilizer, for instance) such other use will not, of course, be adopted unless the resulting benefits are found to be in excess of those incident to the conservation of 6,500,000 tons of coal per annum, and therefore you should be safe in submitting the coal-saving quantities as a basis for congressional determination of future action.

4. In determining the amount of power that should be developed at the Wilson Dam we have carried out your instructions to figure that 10 years of time will be required to load the plant after it is completed, and that after the works are completed interest should be figured until the product of the plant is fully marketed. We have also carried out your instruction to use the unusually low selling price of 1.2 mills per kilowatt hour for the secondary power and 4 mills per kilowatt hour for the primary power at the low-tension bus bars of the generating station in order that Congress may always be certain that the final results will fully justify the money to be here invested.

5. Under your instructions we have figured that the plant when completed must earn 5 per cent for interest and 5 per cent for depreciation and operation, or 10 per cent of the cost of the power end of the enterprise. Both of these assumptions are conservative. The kilowatt hours in paragraph 2 multiplied by the selling prices in paragraph 4 will produce a gross annual income of $4,554,000, which is 10 per cent of a cost price of $45,540,000. The best estimate that can be made at this time of the total cost of the project, including the two lift locks and all of the navigation facilities, is around $50,000,000, and thus leaves about four and one-half million dollars as the amount applicable to the navigation account.

6. All of the above quantities are accurate and are not to be considered as assumptions or approximations. The values for the secondary and primary kilowatt hours are about 50 per cent of prewar steam costs in the territory under consideration.

7. On the second question, as to the cost of closing down the work at this time, this is difficult to answer. It is not conceivable that the Government would withdraw from this project entirely in view of the more than $12,000,000 already invested and the showing in the foregoing paragraphs. In order to estimate the cost of a shut-down it would be necessary to have a basis as to the date when work would be resumed so that the loss in interest might be computed. If the work should shut down at this time to be resumed, say, in three years, I am of the opinion that the combined losses to the Government would be around $4,000,000, and without any compensation therefor unless the Government might claim there was a compensation to be expected in waiting for a lower interest rate three years from now than can be obtained at this time. This amount of saving would be very small as compared to the $4,000,000 loss. The $4,000,000 would represent a loss of interest during three years on $12,000,000, and on the construction side the loss of all of the cofferdams which are now in place, the loss of the construction bridge, the removal and reerection of a large amount of construction derricks, tracks, concrete mixers, and rock crushers, and other construction equipment. The job would also have to suffer the losses incident to the breaking up of the construction organization which has been assembled at necessarily large expenses, and I feel very certain that, collectively, the above losses would be a minimum of $4,000,000 and might easily amount to four and one-half million dollars.

8. If the work should be shut down now or at any future time, there would result only a small loss to the Government on account of the engineering division on the Muscle Shoals work being suspended because of the 30-day cancellation clause in our contract therefor.

Very truly, yours,
HUGH L. COOPER.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, one of the first statements I ever made on the floor of this House was against the Muscle Shoals proposition. I did not believe it was a feasible business proposition then, and I do not believe it is now.

This proposition has been before the House in several different forms. It came here first as a river and harbor proposition, then as a military proposition, and now I believe it is here as a farm proposition. Every single time it has been before this House the Members by a very decisive vote have disapproved it; they have always voted it down; and the only way it got started was as a war emergency proposition, through Executive order, and out of money over which we had no control. That war emergency is a thing of the past, and now is the time for us to get together and get back to earth and consider things from the standpoint of common sense and business judgment. If we do that, there is no possibility of the membership of this House voting at this time to appropriate $10,000,000 more for the Muscle Shoals proposition. It is simply another attempt to continue the Government in business; and if there is one lesson above all that we have learned in the last few years, it is that the Government can not conduct business properly. Our business in conducting the railroads——

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. No; I can not yield. Our experience in conducting the railroads and telephones and telegraphs during the last few years ought to be lesson enough in that direction, and it is my understanding that the people of this country last November, by a most decisive vote, showed that they are absolutely opposed to continuing the Government in the conduct of business operations in competition with private concerns. Furthermore, from any information I can obtain, no man knows how much it is going to cost to complete this project, and before we go any further we should first define what the final Government policy is going to be in regard to this proposition, how much it is going to cost, what we will have when it is finished, and then put the proposition fairly up to Congress and let them decide what they want to do. I am positively opposed to making piecemeal appropriations of $10,000,000, $15,000,000, or $20,000,000 for this proposition, when no man knows what it is going to cost or what he is going to get when he has it. I am absolutely opposed to this amendment and hope the economists of the House will not vote to include this in the bill. [Applause.] I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back one minute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and fellow Members, I am not going to attempt to make an address upon this subject. I wish to call attention to one or two facts, and to quote from a letter which I received this morning from a very distinguished gentleman in Philadelphia for whose opinions I have the highest regard, because of his competency to judge and the intelligence with which he does it. This has been spoken of as a military operation, it has been spoken of as a farmer's operation, and I might introduce a new term and say it ought to be spoken of now as a salvage matter. If this measure were presented to Congress for the first time I believe my vote would be cast against attempting to do this work, but since it has been passed upon, authorizing a large amount of money which has been expended upon it I know of no reason why we should not attempt to salvage what has been done and put it to the best use possible. Some one has said that there are so many hundred tons of nitrates used by the farmers and that there is a production that nearly equals it or will soon equal it. That is no argument why, if the Government has a plant on its hands, it should not utilize it to the best advantage even in making nitrates through private enterprise and letting the nitrate produced come in competition, if you please, with the manufacturing of by-products from the coke oven.

That is one suggestion, in other words, the war feature of it is completed and that part of it need give us very little concern. The water power and the nitrate products are the elements for the future. A developed water power could be let and produce some income to the Government on what has been expended.

Now, I wish to quote from a letter written by J. H. Mull, president and general manager of the William Cramp Shipbuilding Co., of my city:

> Among all the war projects carried out by the Government at a cost of billions of dollars, much of which must be written off as a dead loss as far as any peace-time value is concerned, here is one project which will be of as great use in time of peace as in time of war. Here is an opportunity to salvage some small part of what otherwise would be lost. One of the greatest needs of the country to-day is the saving of coal and the providing of power for our industries.
> The failure to complete this great project, upon which many millions of dollars have already been spent, would certainly be an act of folly. It would surely be greatly to the discredit of our Government if after having entered upon a useful project of this kind they should stop before finishing the job and let all the work that has been done go to waste. This is one of the few great water powers available in the eastern part of the United States. The Government has elected not to permit the development of this power by private initiative, but has assumed the work itself. The power will be available not only for general industrial needs of the community, but for the manufacture of nitrates to supply our agricultural needs during time of peace and explosives in time of war. The use of this power will save many thousands of tons of coal at a time when the lack of coal is becoming continually more acute.

[Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, one of the first measures that came to my attention when I first appeared in this House was the effort to develop the Muscle Shoals proposition as a navigation feature. I made a visit to that neighborhood and was thoroughly convinced of the hospitality of the people residing near Muscle Shoals. So far as the merits of the proposition from the viewpoint of navigation, I was not convinced that it was a good offer to have the Government go into its development. Congress saw fit not to adopt the Muscle Shoals navigation proposition for the development of water power at the expense of the Government. It refused to put its hand into the Public Treasury for the sake of development along the line of war needs.

Again we find this measure before us as of very great value to the agricultural interests of this country. So far as I am able to see into the action of our friends outside of Congress, in my experience here there never has been a more strongly lobbied proposition than the development of Muscle Shoals at Government expense. If there is such a great value to Muscle Shoals for the development of navigation and water power, war protection, agriculture, or some other method likely to be pressed for, why have none of the private interests of the country seen fit to go into the business of developing Muscle Shoals? I, for one, think we ought to get out of this business as a Government.

Now, then, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] says that in a short time some private corporation will benefit by the amount of money we have already spent there. Well, that does not scare me one bit. I am not one of those who believe in putting a good dollar after a bad one. The Government has spent $70,000,000, call it, if you will, bad money; do not let us spend a hundred and fifty millions more of good money. We are here advocating economy in the expenditure of the people's money, and the very first thing we do is to bring forward these measures of piecemeal legislation similar to this one carrying $10,000,000. I say it is false economy; let us salvage Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am much interested in the discussion of this question as it has proceeded in the House for the last two days. I consider it a very important question. Since the Great War I have been surprised many times at the wonderful waste there has been in the salvage of the materials and property that came to us by reason of the war.

We have spent $116,000,000 on this Muscle Shoals proposition. It will create a greater power than there is at Niagara Falls. This power if it is developed will do the work of a million men. I am for saving the work of a million men. There will be over 400,000 horsepower. I am for putting the harness on this water power instead of putting harness on the men. One gentleman says you must have an auxiliary plant in order to operate this dam. The way to avoid that, where they do not develop enough water power to operate for the full year is to provide in the contract that the users of the power shall provide their own auxiliary. For instance, if they agree to use the whole power during the high water, then the purchaser of the power must provide for the auxiliary during the low water that will be needed by him; but the larger part of the time for eight or nine months this dam will have 400,000 horsepower. The Government does not have to operate the plant. It can be leased to private individuals. I understand we purchase 30,000 horsepower from the Warrior River for the manufacture of nitrate at one of the plants when it is operated. I am against the junking or abandonment of 116,000,000 hard-earned dollars already invested by the United States for the purpose of saving $10,000,000 or $20,000,000. That is just the proposition. We have a great power there, and if we can save the labor of a million men we ought to do it. [Applause.]

The Secretary of War at the hearings before the Senate testified in relation to the power, and I wish to incorporate a part of his testimony:

> Senator NORRIS. How much power will it develop?
> Secretary BAKER. It will develop 200,000 primary horsepower.
> Senator NORRIS. The year around?
> Secretary BAKER. That is primary power; yes, sir.
> Senator NORRIS. When that is developed, the steam units will be of no consequence, will they?
> Secretary BAKER. The steam units will be of consequence, because they will be used to supplement the low stage of the river.
> Senator NORRIS. Then the horsepower developed by water power that you have given applies only to the maximum and not to the steady flow?
> Secretary BAKER. That was the primary power. Then, in addition to that, they have 200,000 horsepower secondary power.
> Mr. ROBERTS. They claim it can go up to 400,000, but that 400,000 can only be used, a part of it, for six months.

Others testified that the stream would only produce 100 horsepower the year through. While none of these estimates were backed up by the figures, and the figures were wanting as to the exact volume of water that would flow over the dam when constructed, they give some idea. Whatever it is, the whole of the Tennessee River, near its mouth, is fairly comparable with the Ohio in volume, and the entire current will flow over the dam when completed.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], who was on the subcommittee that held hearings on the Muscle Shoals proposition, tells us that there has been expended on this project already about $116,000,000. Gentlemen, this is too much to abandon when the plant is nearly one-third completed and the construction of the dam will only require upward of $20,000,000 additional. It is claimed that the completion of the main dam will call for the construction of two other dams. As the other dams have not been started and no expenditure has been made on them, as an original proposition I would not favor constructing more dams at this place, and that can easily be brought about by denying any appropriation therefor.

The construction of dams by the United States Government is not a new program and does not present a new policy. There are already scores of them constructed in the Western States, used for irrigation purposes, and the following is a table covering the projects in the various States. These dams are all used for irrigating purposes, and it is estimated that in the one project of the Imperial Valley alone they raised more than $50,000,000 worth of products last year as the result of the reservoir there.

[1] Deduct.

The utility of water power is no longer of questionable value. We hear much of the value of the water power in the improvement of the St. Lawrence River for commercial purposes. It is proposed to utilize this Muscle Shoals power in the manufacture of fertilizer in aid of agriculture. The great farm organizations are in favor of it, among which are the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, the National Board of Farm Organizations, and, in the interest of good husbandry, the request of these out-of-door organizations ought to be granted. It is as well of equal interest to those living in our great cities that they be furnished food at reasonable cost.

None of you gentlemen who have addressed the House on this proposition claim that we ought to scrap and abandon the project. If not, then why not develop it? That is one of the questions that concerns me. I am not in harmony with the proposition of abandoning this great improvement and shall vote for its continuation. When constructed it will be operated by private capital.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if you want to vote for an absolutely unjustifiable expenditure of money now is your chance. If you want to dump into a sewer millions of dollars of the people's money, this is your opportunity. You speak of salvage propositions. To my mind the great salvage problem that this Congress has before it is the salvage of the people's money in the Treasury. Now, you propose, instead of salvaging that money, to add to the already tremendous burden. I know something about this Muscle Shoals proposition. I have known about it for years. I am not going to repeat what has been said here, because it would be a useless expenditure of time.

This Muscle Shoals proposition started out first as a navigation scheme. It then developed into a "preparedness" scheme. Now it is a fertilizer scheme. You talk about this being necessary for preparedness. I asked my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] whether he regarded water power as being necessary to make nitrates. His answer was hardly satisfactory. He said that, while he agreed it was not necessary, yet if we did not do this, some corporation would do something or other, not divulged. I have from the beginning asked this question in this House, and I have never had an answer to it: If water power is necessary to produce nitrates when a country is deprived of an outside supply of nitrates, how was it possible for Germany throughout the war to produce every ounce of nitrates necessary for complete preparedness, when there is not an ounce of water power in Germany? Will some one answer that question now or at any other time? Germany was able from the beginning of the war, cut off from Chilean nitrates supply, to manufacture in complete and adequate quantities all the explosives necessary. Now, you come at this late day, when the war has been over for two years, except technically, and say that this is a preparedness scheme.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that we have a plant that is already equipped that is adequate for preparedness?

Mr. LONGWORTH. For manufacturing nitrates in another way, but this cyanamid method of manufacturing nitrates is antiquated, and there is no other country in the world that uses it to any extent.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that Germany did manufacture nitrates with water power in Sweden for a number of years, and finally abandoned the idea?

Mr. LONGWORTH. A German syndicate controlled the greatest water-power site in the world, the one in Sweden, which could produce infinitely more power than this Muscle Shoals project if completed, and yet that syndicate sold their interest in that water-power site because they found it was not necessary to produce their nitrates. They produced them by other methods, upon which scientists here and elsewhere are now experimenting, infinitely better and more cheaply.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman consider the plants at Muscle Shoals practical plants for the manufacture of nitrogen, considering the present state of the industry?

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, as it stands to-day that plant at Muscle Shoals can not produce commercial fertilizer. This is one of the entering wedges for the whole scheme. They are asking here for more power. In a few days they will come along with another entering wedge and ask you to spend $12,500,000 to so change this plant that it can produce commercial nitrates. We have spent God knows how much money already. Some one says $80,000,000, probably more, and you have spent nearly $20,000,000 on a dam which does not yet appear above water. You are now asked to spend $10,000,000 more on the dam, and nobody knows whether that will make it appear above water. The truth of the matter is that the money spent on this dam so far was taken out of an appropriation which did not contemplate water power in any shape. The plant was built out of an appropriation which had nothing to do with nitrates.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] spoke about the water power which was to be generated here. Is not that of great interest and value to the people in that section?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, to the people of that section; precisely.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Wherever you save coal, is it not beneficial to the whole country, whether saved in that section or wherever you save it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, if the gentleman advocates the expenditure of a hundred and fifty million dollars to benefit one particular section only in times like these, he is entitled to his opinion, but my opinion is contrary to that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We have some water power in Illinois that we would like to have the Federal Government come and develop.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman intimated that the cyanamid process was obsolete. Will the gentleman answer why it is that Germany is making 130,000 tons per year by that process now, and why, at the beginning of the war, there were 14 cyanamid plants in the world and now there are 35?

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the first place, I think the gentleman's figures are absolutely incorrect, but I do know this, and I think the gentleman does, that manufacture by the cyanamid process is absolutely impossible commercially unless you have a great water supply. That being so, why did you put a cyanamid plant 90 miles away from any water supply, as you did in this case? Why did not you put it where there was water power? There is no water-power supply there now. There is none nearer than the Black Warrior River, which is 90 miles away. It is true there is a river that goes by Muscle Shoals, but there is no water power there and will not be for years, and yet you talk about this as a matter of preparedness. This plant was expected to be run half by water power and half by steam power. You have spent millions for a steam plant at a water-power site, and you have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in getting electrical current from the Black Warrior River power plant 90 miles away.

Mr. MADDEN. If you create water power that can be developed there, will you not also have to have steam plants in reserve?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Unquestionably. I do not like to bring a personal question into this, but it appears of record that the reason of the authorities for putting a certain nitrate plant in my congressional district was because it was thought that possibly it might remove my opposition to the expenditure of further money at Muscle Shoals. I think I have given an exhibition of the fact that I can not be influenced in that way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, this project was commenced as a national-defense proposition, and those of us who are members of the subcommittee on deficiencies shortly after we got into the war with Germany found ourselves confronted with this proposition. It was extremely doubtful at that time whether or not after we got into the war we would be able to get nitrates from Chile at all. Quite a good deal of negotiations were had, and we were holding our breath here because for six weeks we were without any supply of raw material out of which to make explosives. With the utmost care we guarded the terrible condition in which we found ourselves and when the first shipload of nitrate reached this country from Chile, and we found that notwithstanding the German diplomatic opposition that we were able to get nitrates from Chile we all breathed better. Now, we already have expended within $21,000,000, I believe, of all that is necessary to complete the project which we now have on hand. Now, the most wasteful, the most extravagant man in the world is the man who is not willing to spend enough money to care for his property. We have spent in the neighborhood of something over $100,000,000 on all the propositions there are, including the appropriation which is now being used, and you propose to stop that. Of course, I can not discuss this proposition in three minutes, but there is one proposition I want to call to your attention, and that is that while this plant is not needed in time of peace it can be kept every moment ready to make nitrates for war purposes, and during the time as a secondary matter you can make fertilizers for the farmers. One great thinker has said that the greatest problem involved in the world, a problem now confronting us, is for America to be able to feed herself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. SISSON. Do not take the flattering unction to your souls that you are going to be able to keep these farms in operation, keep them productive and keep the boys upon the farm unless you can by some method, scientific or otherwise, develop the soil and make the conditions of the farm prosperous. Now, if the Republican Party wants to go on record now, if you want to stamp your disapproval upon this proposition because, forsooth, some man says it is for the purpose of benefiting the American farmer, go take this course. You Republicans control both the House and the Senate and can do it. But when you do, every farmer should hold you to a strict account. The first man to suffer when agriculture begins to fail is not the man living on the farm, but it is the man living in the crowded cities, where all the opposition to this amendment comes from. I see New York, with its mighty pile of brick and mortar, towering toward the vaulted heavens, filled with millions of people, and I see other cities with mighty buildings filled with busy people that would soon be hovels of destitution if farm products fail to find their way there to feed them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, having been a member of the subcommittee that drafted this bill, I feel that I should state to the House my position. I am not satisfied that it would be wise for the Government to spend $40,000,000 more for the purpose of making and selling fertilizer and generating and selling electric light and power. Business of that character might well be left to private enterprise. I feel that we should leave the matter at this time to the Senate that has investigated the project, rather than to determine under the pending amendment what the governmental policy shall be.

When our Democratic friends were in power they not only wasted billions of dollars but they milked the Government's cow into a pending deficit of several billions more; that is a grave menace to the business interests of this country. Being now in the minority their raids upon the Treasury should cease. And they can not conceal their real purpose by raising the cry of sectionalism. I am fond of the South, of its people, and of its Representatives in the House, many of whom I count as my personal friends. But they must quit sandbagging the Treasury. [Applause on the Republican side.]

They remind me of an article that recently appeared in a Washington newspaper about a farmer in North Carolina whose cow was milked at night by a marauder. The farmer took the cow out of the stall and placed therein a young mule. A few nights later, hearing a devil of a racket in the stable, he rushed out with a shotgun only to find in the stall an old stool kicked to pieces, an old slouch hat, and a battered milk pail. Thus ended the felonious assaults upon that cow. [Laughter.]

I want to say to my Republican colleagues that the country expects us to do our duty, which is as clear as God's sunlight. We must put the Government upon a healthful financial foundation which will be a real basis for a new era of prosperity in this country. We can do this only through the most rigid economy in public expenditures. I am strongly in favor of placing a young mule in the stall of the Government's cow. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back whatever time may be remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have never been euthusiastic in the effort to improve a navigable stream in order to enable private interests to make money at public expense. I feel about Muscle Shoals, Niagara Falls, and everywhere else wherever there is navigation as does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. This is not an original proposition, and I have seen hundreds of thousands, if not millions, voted out of the Treasury to improve some unimprovable watercourse in the name of competition to the railroads in order to bring down rates. Now, I suggest that it is just as important to have competition to bring down the prices on fertilizer manufactured by private concerns in order that the farmer may get his supplies as near cost as is possible as it is to spend public money on dry branches in the name of navigation in order that privately owned and privately operated railroads may be forced to cut down rates. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] speaks of private corporations making all the nitrates we need. Perhaps they will, at a profit. And who pays the profit? The man who owns rich land that does not have to be fertilized is not the purchaser. It is poor land, and such lands are usually owned by poor men, because rich men will not invest in these poor lands.

Now, why not let this Government plant, for whatever purpose it was erected, be converted into that which at least would have a tendency to hold down the price of private manufacture of a public necessity, as it is admitted that fertilizer is a public necessity. Why should we not do so? As private interest begins to be menaced by the nitrate from Chile, its owners, that operate for profit, will come here and ask for a prohibitive protective tariff against Chilean nitrate so that they may be able to make more and more money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have heretofore at considerable length taken time in this House in giving my views on this matter. It is not a matter of any particular interest to me, except the interest which every Representative ought to have in the affairs of his country. Anyone who votes for this amendment, gentlemen of the committee, is voting for an appropriation not of $10,000,000, but for an appropriation of $55,000,000. When we have once taken this step there is no going backward from the other steps which we must take to carry out the object that is intended by this amendment.

Let me call your attention to the steps you will necessarily take if you take this one. This amendment calls for an appropriation of $10,000,000, a bagatelle, perhaps, in the way we ordinarily spend money for national needs. Originally Mr. Cooper, who was called in consultation on this Muscle Shoals Dam, said, a year ago before my committee, under oath, that the dam would cost approximately $25,000,000. To-day the Secretary of War says it will cost $45,000,000. Already there has been taken from the funds of the Government $17,000,000 and allotted for this purpose. This calls for $10,000,000 more. You will observe after this appropriation of $10,000,000, $27,000,000 will have been put into it, and approximately $20,000,000 more will be necessary to complete it.

In addition to this, what else was thought necessary? There is pending now in the Senate and before the Committee on Military Affairs in this House a bill to appropriate $12,000,000 to turn this into a fertilizer plant—that is, to make certain ammonium sulphate units, to be added to this plant, and $12,000,000 is to be appropriated for the purpose of organizing a semipublic corporation to conduct it.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I have not the time. I would like to proceed.

In addition to this, the engineers have concluded that two more dams must be erected, one below and one above the dam that is now being constructed, the lowest estimate for which is $15,000,000. Add, if you please, $10,000,000 and $20,000,000 and it makes $30,000,000, and $12,000,000 is $42,000,000, and $15,000,000 more is $57,000,000. That is the program you are starting on if you take this step. What ought we to do about it as reasonable, rational men? The administration of this country is about to change. In two months there will be a new President and a new Secretary of War. The question will arise before them, very pertinently and very appropriately, as to what ought to be done with this nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals. It ought to be the duty and pleasure of the new Secretary of War and those acting under him to determine some policy, if Congress has not already done so. But this is not an appropriation for the purpose of changing the present Muscle Shoals plant into a fertilizer factory but is an appropriation of $10,000,000 to carry on work on the dam, that may or may not be a part of the general plan.

I do not know what the Secretary of War and those under him may conclude is the proper thing for us to do. I simply know that those who are at present in charge of these affairs are biased and prejudiced in favor of the view they have taken, that the thing for us to do is for the Government to operate this plant. But the new administration may have a different view. Gentlemen, it is a wise and safe thing for us to do to wait two or three months and see what the policy shall be as to this before we take the step that must ultimately lead to the appropriation and expenditure of $55,000,000.

You say it is wise for us to do this on behalf of the farmers. Do you know how much this plant can be replaced for? It was the sworn testimony before the committee that investigated this thing that the whole Muscle Shoals plant could be reconstructed to-day for $30,000,000. And yet you are about to spend $55,000,000 in order to conserve a plant which can be built to-day under present conditions for $30,000,000. You say that it will go back and that it will be harmful to let it stand by. The Secretary of War testified before my committee, as did many others, that this nitrate plant can be allowed to stand by indefinitely without additional expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this proposition has passed, it seems to me, beyond the stage of statistics. It is too late to talk about the amount of money that is necessary in order to establish a benefit of this kind. Yet I would like to correct the statement made by the gentleman who has just preceded me, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], in regard to the transformation of the plant. If the committee will recall the reading of the Kahn-Wadsworth bill and the hearings on that bill, they will remember that the original proposition provided for an appropriation of $12,500,000 to put these plants in proper workable shape. Subsequently the Secretary of War came before the committees, both of the House and the Senate, and stated that he had a sufficient supply of surplus Chilean nitrate which, if he was allowed to sell, he could get a sufficient sum from to put those plants in condition without asking Congress for a single dollar.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I dislike to refuse, but I have only four minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but I would like to supplement that——

Mr. DENT. I have not misstated that fact.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; but if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. DENT. I can not yield.

Now, here is the whole proposition: The depletion of the soil of any country has been the cause of the ruin of that country, because it has made the people move away. After the soil has been exhausted it needs something to renew it, and every nation that has failed to do that has gone down in disaster, because its population has moved away.

No civilized nation in the world to-day except the United States is depending on the importation of saltpeter from Chile. They are manufacturing nitrate from the air. We are the only great civilized Nation in the world that has not developed this process. Unquestionably it can be developed more cheaply by water power than it can be by the burning of coal.

In 1912 this Congress passed a bill authorizing the construction of a dam for the purpose of establishing a cyanamid plant on the Coosa River, in Alabama, known as Lock 18. That bill unfortunately was vetoed because of the fact that there was a so-called conservation fight then on in the country. It was a family row. It was among Democrats and among Republicans. It was not a party question, but it was a row involving the question of the Government giving up water rights. The conservationists claimed that the stream ought to run on to the sea unutilized rather than that the Government authorize it to be utilized for the benefit of the whole people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one additional minute.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, not being able to conclude my remarks except to say after the defeat of this measure for a plant on the Coosa River the plant was located in Canada, and now let me ask, Is it possible that this Congress is going to repudiate a proposition for the manufacture of nitrogen from the air, thereby making us independent of Chile in any future emergency and giving the farmer a cheaper fertilizer? [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands at present?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has 15 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has 14 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. How many speeches has the gentleman yet to come? There will be two speeches on this side.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have heard so many statements and cross-statements in regard to this matter that I feel somewhat at sea on the particular facts. I suppose I feel the same resentment toward what has seemed to me the gross, wasteful extravagance of many departments of the Government during the war that most of the Members on my side of the House feel. I do still have a resentment against continuing things that seem to me to have originated in extravagance and wastefulness. And yet I hope my common sense will not lead me to throw away advantages which may exist or to destroy property which we may own, no matter how extravagantly acquired.

The fertility of the soil is, after all, the matter of supremest importance in any agricultural country. We have not so much felt the need of artificial stimulants because the prairie soils of the West were so filled with the necessary chemicals that they furnished ample plant growth without aid. And yet many portions of the country are now absolutely dependent for good crops upon added soil fertility.

Take a plant: What does it consist of? It grows out of the ground into the air, and in its live state it is composed mostly of water and carbon, the carbon being taken from the air. When it is dry, it is composed mostly of carbon taken from the air. But the plant can not assimilate either the water or the carbon, it can not grow successfully without some chemicals in solution in the soil—nitrogen, phosphorus, and potash.

Now, the air is full of nitrogen; but the plant does not have the power to take the nitrogen from the air and convert it into plant form except a few plants, such as clovers and other legumes, which by the aid of bacteria attached to the roots of the plants are able to take nitrogen from the air and use it for plant life and use it for the fertility of the soil. Hence we have the rotation of crops all over the country, where clover comes in once in three or four years.

But if we add to these chemicals in the soil less than 3 per cent in the completed plant, more than 97 per cent of the plant is either water or, taken from the air, in the form of carbon. But the ability of the plant to make use of the carbon in the air and the water in the soil is dependent upon its power to assimilate nitrates or nitrogen, phosphorus or phosphoric acid, or potassium or potash in the ground; and where we want to double or add to the plant life, where we wish to increase the crop growth and produce, we add to these chemicals in the ground which constitute such a small portion of the final growth, but which enable the plant to utilize the waste materials in the air.

Now, gentlemen say that there may be enough nitrate manufactured without the use of this plant. Why, sirs, as time goes on and the people who till the soil learn better the use of the artificial aids to growth, the demand will always far exceed the supply. [Applause.] We can do nothing in all that we legislate which will be of such value and supreme importance to the country at large, to the producers of farm products, to the consumer of farm products, as to aid them in securing as cheaply as possible these additional chemicals which give the plant the power to produce more. [Applause.] They used to rely upon manures largely. That is largely disappearing with the disappearance of the horse and of farm labor by horses. But we continue to use these products. We import I do not know how many tons of saltpeter now, nitrate of soda. That is the main dependence for our artificial fertilizers. But we never have enough.

Shall we now scrap a plant simply because we feel resentment at its cost? Shall we throw away an opportunity because we do not like the men who have created it? Shall we waste the thing that we have because, perchance, we have not liked the methods that have been followed? We ought to rise above that. [Applause.] We ought to be bigger than that. We ought to be willing to continue the work which is of benefit to the country and to utilize nature's power, the water power, in its power to draw from the air the power to make grain and other farm products. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yields back one minute.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, one of the great issues in the extraordinary campaign through which we have just passed was that of the expenditure of the public money. From every platform in the country the administration was assailed vigorously by everyone speaking for the Republican ticket, because of its willful waste and criminal extravagance. In my opinion that issue had more to do with the enormous total of votes cast for the Republican candidates than any other single issue before the people.

Of all the examples in the land of this wicked, wasteful, extravagant, unnecessary expenditure of public money, the expenditures at Muscle Shoals and thereabouts were perhaps the worst. After a careful, painstaking investigation of the whole matter, it developed that every practice of wastefulness and extravagance which has been charged against the administration anywhere was the rule rather than the exception in and around Muscle Shoals.

And now, as though this were not the case, without further examination of the matter, without any evidence before us that the program started at Muscle Shoals should be continued, we are asked to spend $10,000,000 more, the beginning of an ultimate expenditure of at least $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 of the people's money in this enterprise.

I do not know what may ultimately happen with regard to these projects. It is possible that having spent so much and gone so far it may be necessary to go on. But I do know this, that there is money enough available to carry on this enterprise as rapidly as it is now being carried on until at least the 1st of June and probably until the 1st of July. I do know that during the remainder of this Congress and in the beginning of the new Congress it will be possible to examine into this matter carefully, thoroughly, and in a painstaking manner, and then we can decide intelligently whether or no this enterprise should be carried forward, and if so on what plan.

An appeal is made to us from the standpoint of national defense. And yet everyone knows, who knows anything about the enterprise, that from the standpoint of national defense the project now stands completed, and the capacity of the plant will not be increased by the substitution of water for steam power.

The farmer has been appealed to, and those who pretend to speak on his behalf have claimed that further great expenditure is necessary in order to furnish the farmer with fertilizer. Ah, we know the American farmer. We know first that he is not much given to paternalistic enterprises and undertakings of state socialism. We know further that he has never asked the American Congress to embark upon great enterprises on his behalf or on behalf of anyone else when those enterprises were questionable in character.

Gentlemen, there is time enough to determine what we ought to do in this matter without taking action now. Before any harm can have come to the dam at Muscle Shoals there will have elapsed several months of the new administration, during which time we may determine intelligently what should be done in this matter. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa how many more speeches he has on his side?

Mr. GOOD. Only one.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with interest to the debate upon the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee] looking to the completion of the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals, Ala. It appears that there is practically no divergence of opinion as to the importance of the Muscle Shoals project from the standpoint of national defense—for the production of nitrates to be employed in the manufacture of explosives in case of war. However, in spite of the criticism of the lack of preparedness on the part of this Government prior to the time it was drawn into the recent World War, many of those very critics seem to now lose sight of the importance of preparedness for a future war, which we hope to escape, but may not be able to do. When we entered the World War we were wholly dependent upon importations from Chile—5,000 miles away—for the essential compounds entering into the manufacture of war explosives. The completion and preservation of the Muscle Shoals plant would make us independent in that regard if we should again unfortunately become involved in war. While many preparations can and should be made only when war is immediately impending, yet the construction of a plant for the production of nitrogen can not be accomplished in a day or a month or a year, for that matter.

Some of those opposing this amendment profess to favor the retention of the existing plant at Muscle Shoals for the production of nitrates to be used in the manufacture of explosives in case of war, but insist that the plant should in the meantime remain idle and the Government and the people lose the use and benefit of the $77,000,000 investment already there made. With regard to this proposition Senator GRONNA, a broad-minded Republican and chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, in a debate in the Senate said:

> I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that it has been demonstrated, I think quite satisfactorily, to the Committee on Agriculture that it would cost the Government approximately a half million dollars annually to take care of this plant if it is locked up.

On the other hand, it is estimated by competent engineers that the Government would realize approximately half a million dollars from the operation of this plant during the first year following the completion of this project.

Those of us supporting this proposed amendment are not only in favor of preserving this great plant for use in case of war emergency, but we favor the completion and utilization of same in peace times, so as to not only bring in sufficient income to avoid what would otherwise be a heavy cost of maintenance, but also for the production of nitrogen fertilizer, as specifically provided for in the original resolution authorizing the construction of such a project. I have been impressed with the wide divergence and even conflict of opinions expressed by opponents of this measure as grounds for their opposition. Some of them profess to be against the proposition because the Muscle Shoals plant will not produce a sufficient amount of nitrogen; others because it will produce too much and thus come into competition with the private corporations producing nitrates. Some claim to oppose the bill because nitrogen could not be produced cheaply enough at this plant to compete with the imported Chilean nitrates; still others express the fear that nitrates will be produced so cheaply at the Muscle Shoals plant that it will undersell and put out of business the private concerns producing nitrates. Some Members express opposition to the measure on the ground, as they claim, that the improvement is sectional and the benefit local in character.

However, there is no divergence of opinion among the farmers of this country as to the propriety or wisdom of the completion and operation of this valuable plant for the production of nitrogen fertilizer.

As the farm organizations correctly insist, this is a clear-cut issue between the American farmer and the American consumer, jointly, on the one hand, and the powerful monopolistic interests, who have heretofore controlled the importation and manufacture of fertilizers in this country, on the other hand.

During the past five years the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, the National Board of Farm Organizations, the National Farmers' Union, in fact, all of the important farm organizations in this country, have unanimously adopted resolutions in favor of this proposition, and have in various ways earnestly, and with perfect unanimity, urged the completion and operation of the Muscle Shoals project for the production of nitrogen fertilizer. They have done this regardless of the sectional location of these great organizations or their members. They have correctly treated the matter as one of national importance, one of direct benefit to the large and important agricultural interests of the country, but of equal, although indirect, benefit to every consumer in the country. Last April representatives of these great organizations appeared before the Agriculture Committee of the Senate and urged the enactment of two, and only two, matters of legislation then pending. This request from the farmers was expressed before the said Senate committee by Mr. R. F. Bower, representing the National Board of Farm Organizations, the National Farmers' Union, and so forth, as follows:

> There are two matters of legislation pending before this present Congress which offer assistance along two different lines to the agricultural problems of the country—production and distribution. One of them is this pending legislation for the operation by the Government of the nitrate plants and the power being developed at Muscle Shoals in the interest of agriculture, an accomplishment which we earnestly believe will give us much-needed assistance to meet the present production conditions that the farmer is forced to meet, the most difficult of which is labor. The other is the Capper-Hersman bill, now pending before the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House, which grants us the undisputed right to cooperatively market our products once they are produced. No other legislation is before this Congress or has been adopted by this Congress that attempts in any way to come to the relief of the serious agricultural situation in the country, and it is our earnest request that these two pieces of legislation be promptly enacted into law during the present session of Congress.

With regard to the productural capacity of the Muscle Shoals project, it is estimated by those qualified to speak on the subject that with the completion of the dam in question there could be developed over 400,000 horsepower, as compared to 385,000 horsepower available on the American side of Niagara Falls; so that it would be the largest water-power development in this country. With regard to the question of cost of production, it is a matter of common knowledge that the cheapest form of power is hydroelectric power, when available.

In reply to the argument that the production of nitrogen fertilizer by this plant would be in competition with the private interests producing nitrates, I wish to state that I am not as deeply concerned about the profit which may be made from their by-products by the United States Steel Corporation and a few other concerns as I am in the welfare of the whole people. Entirely too many voices are raised in this chamber in behalf of special interests; the masses of the people have entirely too few friends and champions. In my humble opinion too many members of this body forget or disregard the fact that the true function of Government is to serve and protect the interests of the whole people, and not a few people or corporations. Whether it always is or not, this should be a Government "for the people," and not "for the classes." During my brief service in this Congress I have been most unfavorably impressed by a subserviency to special interests and classes and an utter disregard of the interests of the masses.

Furthermore, the amount of nitrates for fertilizer produced by private interests in this country are wholly insufficient to meet even the present demand. There is not only a scarcity of fertilizer, but the cost to the farmers is so great as to absolutely prevent or materially curtail its use. We not only need a much larger supply, but we need competition with the imported Chilean nitrates as well as the nitrates manufactured in this country, to the end that some of the enormous profits may be squeezed out and the farming interests enabled to procure fertilizer at reasonable cost.

Even if this proposition be merely in the interest of the farmer, as some insist, we very gladly and proudly align ourselves on the side of the farmer, for the reason that the agricultural interests compose by far the largest and most important industry in this country—yea, greater and more important than all other interests combined. The importance of this amendment to the agricultural industry alone is sufficient to fully justify the adoption of the proposed amendment. However, as vitally important as it is to the farmers, it is, as a matter of fact, none the less important to the whole people, regardless of residence or vocation, in that every man, woman, and child in this Republic is a consumer of farm products. Many people, including a large number of the Members of this body, seem to be unable to grasp the fact that increased and cheapened production of farm products lessens the cost to the consumer of such products, and consequently decreases the cost of living.

The manufacture and use of fertilizers are in their infancy. We are just now beginning to learn of the importance of soil analysis and the addition in the form of fertilizer of the elements needed for proper food production. The successful and profitable use of fertilizer is practically without limit even now if the price of fertilizer be reduced to a reasonable basis, and the need of fertilizer will grow more acute as the different farm soils throughout the country, by long use or improvident cultivation, are gradually robbed of the elements requisite for crop production. With regard to this feature of the subject I quote from a letter written by Mr. Frank I. Mann, of Illinois, who is recognized as one of the greatest experts in this country on soil and farming, to his brother, a distinguished Member of this House, who is supporting the amendment under consideration. While this letter has been inserted in the RECORD, yet it is of sufficient importance to warrant repeating, and I read from it as follows:

> Ever since I learned of the Muscle Shoals project, when in Tennessee a few years ago, I have felt quite an interest in its success, because of the great opportunity it seemed to present for an increased and economical production of crops by supplying a cheaper form of fixed nitrogen. The value of nitrogen and phosphorus in the production of crops has not been properly realized. Take an example of corn for instance: In 100 pounds of corn there are but about 3½ pounds of materials which were taken from the soil; the balance of the dry weight is made of compounds formed from carbon taken from the air by the leaves of the plants and formed into sugars, starches, oils, and so forth. The amount of these carbon compounds that can be formed are measured, however, by the amount of materials that could be secured from the soil. If the same plants, which produced 100 pounds of corn, could have secured another 3½ pounds of soil materials—mostly phosphorus and nitrogen—they could have formed another 100 pounds of corn, without any further effort on the part of the grower, and the yield would be increased 100 per cent. On the best corn-belt soils we find it is comparatively easy to double the yields of crops by doubling the phosphorus available to the crops, where there is sufficient nitrogen to match such an amount of phosphorus. The soils which contain such an amount of nitrogen, however, are small in area. On the early glaciated and the unglaciated soils nitrogen is in small amount, and the crops will grow in proportion as they can secure nitrogen, except on the natural rich soils, which are usually alluvial and limited in extent. As a rule, the soils south of the Ohio and Missouri Rivers are unglaciated and low in nitrogen, except the alluvial types. A large part of southern Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Ohio is composed of soil types on which crops—other than legumes—will grow in proportion as the plants can secure nitrogen from the soil.
> This increase in yield, which comes from the proper element of fertility, increases food production without an increase in area or of man labor, and is real economic production if the cost of the fertilizing element is small.
> A good deal of the corn-belt soils have already or will soon reach a nitrogen limit to their production, and, while we will be able to profitably maintain a nitrogen supply for some time by using legume crops for the purpose, it might also be profitable and economical to supplement this legume nitrogen with a fixed commercial nitrogen. In the South, however, with the high average temperature and rainfall, it is doubtful if it would be possible to maintain enough legume nitrogen in a soil to secure a high production of food products, because of the great destruction of the organic matter in which such nitrogen must be held from the bacterial action and leaching when crops are not taking food from the soil.
> I know of no one thing which could add so much to the production of more and cheaper food, and in such an economical way, as to supply cheap nitrogen for these lands so poor in humus. I do not know how cheaply nitrogen might be fixed at Muscle Shoals, but it would certainly be much cheaper than to secure it through legume growth. I figured out once the relative horsepower equivalent at Niagara Falls in fixing nitrogen compared to a clover field. The nitrogen fixed by an 80-acre field of clover, under favorable conditions and a large growth, could be fixed by a 28-horsepower engine working throughout the season. If the Tennessee River can be properly harnessed, it should be able to fix nitrogen at a small fraction of the cost of fixing it by means of bacterial or legume energy.
> In these days of low man power on the farms and the need of more food economically produced, it would seem to be almost a crime against civilization to not heed this great need for cheap nitrogen.
> If there is any possible and fair way to provide that the Muscle Shoals power might be used for fixing nitrogen, and that it might be obtained cheaply for farm use, it would be a wonderful step in the production of cheaper food and help to quiet the unrest of the present and future.

Our needs will furnish ample market for all nitrogen that can be produced by the Muscle Shoals plant and by all the private interests in this country which have or can provide facilities for its production, and even then, at least for many years, we will probably be compelled to import much nitrate from Chile, although the increased production and competition at home would doubtless result in being able to obtain the Chilean nitrates at a more moderate price.

In reply to the argument that this project is sectional and would only benefit a certain section, I respectfully submit that the same objection would apply with much greater force to innumerable other improvements which have been made at Government expense. For instance, there has already been expended on reclamation projects in the West over $154,000,000. The completion and operation for the production of nitrogen of the Muscle Shoals plant would undoubtedly result in the reclamation of more unproductive soil and at much less comparative expense than resulted from the said expenditures upon irrigation projects.

While, of course, the South would perhaps obtain more direct benefit than any other section, because of its greater need at this time for fertilizers, yet that fact in itself does not constitute the proposition "an iniquity," as it was described by that beloved friend (?) of the South, the gentleman from Chicago, Mr. MADDEN. Furthermore, we submit that while the South is the only section in this country producing cotton, yet this cotton is absolutely required and universally used by every citizen in every State in the Union.

While this proposition is not sectional in character, yet most of the opposition to it is. I have enumerated some of the reasons advanced as grounds for opposition to the completion and operation of this great plant for the production of nitrogen. However, in spite of the broad-minded view of the subject taken by the national farm organizations and by several Members on the Republican side of this Chamber, yet it is quite apparent that the opponents of this proposition have failed to specifically state the real ground of objection impelling most of them, although the partisan bias of some of the speakers was such that they could not conceal the fact. The ground of opposition referred to was very aptly stated in a recent editorial appearing in the Nashville Banner, as follows:

> Unfortunately for Muscle Shoals, it is located in a Southern Democratic State. Were there such power available in Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, or anywhere else than in the South, there would be proper and profitable Government aid. There is little or nothing, however, to be hoped for from a partisan Republican Congress, and the tremendous project will suffer accordingly.

In another recent editorial the same paper correctly and aptly stated:

> The Republican opposition to the completion of the Muscle Shoals Dam seems to be clearly prejudiced and partisan. The two facts, its Southern location and that it was begun under the Wilson administration, plainly weigh more than anything else in creating opposition to the completion of the work.

In fact, the animus impelling this opposition to the completion of the great Muscle Shoals project is so palpable and despicable that it called forth a severe condemnation from a very prominent Republican of my State, who formerly served as a Member of this House, and who is now a member of the Tennessee State Senate, Hon. John C. Houk. Some months ago Mr. Houk was in Washington, and, duly appreciating the importance of the development of the Muscle Shoals project, spoke to some of the Republican leaders in the House in its behalf; upon learning their attitude, he expressed himself in a statement appearing in the press at the time, as follows:

> There seems to be a tendency on the part of the Republicans north of the Mason and Dixon line to interfere with any public work of this kind in the South. They seem to have a prejudice against the South receiving any aid from the Federal Government.

If this appropriation for a continuance of the work on the Wilson Dam is denied, it will be the first of many jolts that will be received by those Southern business men who in the last election turned to the Republican Party under the delusion that they were voting in their own interests.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized for six minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, those who did me the honor of listening to the remarks I made upon this subject in the general debate have really heard substantially all that I have to say upon the matter. In those remarks I endeavored to point out the peculiar situation with which the country is confronted in regard to this project. For the benefit of those—if it be a benefit—who were not present at that time, it is perhaps not out of place to reiterate for the purpose of emphasis that this is not a new thing upon which the Government is being invited or requested or urged to embark. This is a proposition, so far as the dam alone is concerned, one-third of which has been completed, and more than one-third of the expenditures that will be required have either been made or allotted.

No one will question the value that the power to be developed there will be to that section of the country, and therefore to the country as a whole. So it seems to me one element that should be seriously pondered by Members of the House in passing upon this great question is, Shall we deliberately throw away $17,000,000 that has been expended or allotted, or shall we complete a work confessed by everybody to be a great outstanding enterprise for the benefit of all the people?

I do not believe in Government operation of the things that can be operated by private parties. I expressed myself upon that the other day, as I have frequently before. But no such situation as this has ever confronted any Congress before. Not only as for the dam but for the nitrate plant itself, if we are wise, we may not lose sight of the military concept in connection with it. We must not be at the mercy of foreign countries in the future with regard to the supply of the elements of explosives and of propellants. If we throw this away, as the years go by it will become of less and less value.

Just here I wish to correct an impression that may have been made by some of the remarks of some of the gentlemen. It seemed to me that the argument of my friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] was devoted almost entirely to an effort to bring this House to a state of mind where it would stop this work, first, because of the fact that he did not like the point at which it was placed, and second, because of the fact that the American Cyanamid Co., or Mr. Washburn, who is at the head of the American Cyanamid Co., had been responsible for the original movement to bring about this great development. If any have got in their minds that which was so deftly thrown out by the gentleman from Illinois, let me say this: That the institution that would probably profit most by this amendment being voted down, by the plant being abandoned, peculiarly enough happens to be the American Cyanamid Co., at whose head Mr. Washburn yet is.

I might go into the question as to the cost of the different processes of development—the Haber process, as compared with the cyanamid process. As a matter of fact, if I am not mistaken in my memory, half or more of the ammonium nitrate produced in the world, as a whole, by artificial means has been produced by the cyanamid process. The Haber process has never been brought to an effective working condition in the United States. It is predicted that it will be. It may be. It may be that the genius of man will develop it. I think the Government was amply justified in the experimentation it made on plant No. 1, but the fact remains that on this side of the Atlantic Ocean the cyanamid process is the only process which has been effective and successfully developed. I think it would be the height of folly to stop this great work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in 10 minutes it will be impossible to make an argument, and I shall be content if I can make a statement that will give a fairly clear idea of this nitrate situation. Keep this in mind, that there is no proposition before this House to throw away the $17,000,000 Woodrow Wilson threw away, and for that and similar acts he and his party received the condemnation of the American people on November 2 last. It is seriously proposed by this amendment to throw away $10,000,000 more, and every man who votes for it, who votes to throw away more good money after bad will receive, and ought to receive, the same condemnation that the President and his party received for wastefulness and extravagance in this nitrate expenditure and other similar extravagances.

Gentlemen, the Secretary of War said that this proposition rested on three grounds: First, navigation; second, nitrates for war-time needs; and third, nitrates for fertilizer. Let us analyze the first, for the first will be rather typical of what we find in the others. You have down at Muscle Shoals now a canal 30 miles long that cost $8,000,000. Last year there were 8,000 tons of freight passed over that canal. If you compute interest on the cost of that canal at the current rate the Government is paying of 6 per cent, it cost the Government $40 for every ton of freight it sent through the canal just in interest charges alone. Now, they do not propose by the construction of this dam to increase the availability of the river for traffic by a single ton of freight, because there are 30 miles of shoals, and this will only raise the water for 18 miles, and therefore you will have to build two more dams after you complete this one. If you will multiply the forty-five millions that the plant cost by 6 per cent you will get an annual interest of $2,700,000 on the cost of the dam. Two per cent for depreciation, that adds $900,000 and brings the total annual carrying charges up to $3,600,000 for 8,000 tons of freight. It would cost therefore according to their own estimate $450 to move a ton of freight through the locks of this dam, and yet they are asking for $10,000,000 toward the completion of the dam in aid of navigation.

The gentleman from Michigan says that we want to protect the investment we have made. In that conclusion he is in error. Now, what are the facts? The plant at Sheffield, plant No. 1, is a failure, and it is doubtful if the expenditure of an amount of money equal to the original cost can ever make it a success.

Plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, has a capacity of 86,000 tons a year at its full capacity. It has one of the best and biggest steam plants in the world, a plant sufficient to turn every wheel and produce ample power necessary for the operation of the entire plant. That plant will produce just as much cyanamid with steam power as it can possibly produce with water power. It is there complete and for military purposes; it is just as complete and will produce just as much nitrate as if we should spend $45,000,000 more for a dam and for water power. They say it will cost $45,000,000. Col. Cooper makes that estimate. But Col. Cooper estimated the cost of the Keokuk Dam, and he only missed one of the big items involved in that dam by 125 per cent; and if he was there too low in his estimate, how do we know that he is correct here? The Keokuk Dam has not in its earning power done anything like Mr. Cooper estimated it would.

Now, in regard to fertilizer, the Secretary of Agriculture came before the Committee on Appropriations in 1917, when he asked for $10,000,000 for nitrates for the farmers, and I asked him this question:

Mr. GOOD. The reason for the question was whether or not by the adoption of the methods advocated by the Department of Agriculture (rotation of crops) they would not accomplish results just as quickly as they would accomplish them by purchasing nitrate of soda, and at a great deal less expense.

Secretary HOUSTON. Yes. In another measure, with a view to stimulate production, we are asking for funds and power to extend our farm demonstration force, to put one or more county agents in each of the 2,850 rural counties in the Union. I should think we might get larger results through such efforts than by using nitrate under existing conditions at prices prevailing.

But because the farmers in the South will not farm in a progressive way we are asked to expend $45,000,000 for a dam to generate cheap power in order to secure fertilizer for farmers who will not help themselves. We must keep in mind that even if we build this dam we will not be able to produce nitrate of soda or a fertilizer that can be used in a cold soil or cold climate but can be used in the South and warm soils successfully.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Rushmore, probably the best-known authority in the United States on hydroelectric power development, in a new work says that it will take from 15,000 to 60,000 kilowatt hours to produce 1 ton of nitrogen. He says it all depends on the atmospheric and other conditions. The average is 37,000 kilowatt hours per ton of fixed nitrate. Assuming that it will take but 30,000 kilowatt hours to produce 1 ton of ammonium nitrates, it will require 2,580,000,000 kilowatt hours, or 358,330 kilowatts, to produce 86,000 tons—the capacity of plant No. 2—of fixed nitrate.

Reducing it to horsepower, it means that it will require 475,000 horsepower, according to the best authority upon the subject, to produce nitrogen by the cyanamid process. We do not have 475,000 horsepower at Muscle Shoals. No such water power exists in the Tennessee River.

The Secretary of War, when he appeared before the Senate committee on March 22 last, said the primary horsepower was 200,000. When he came before the Committee on Appropriations the other day he said that it was 100,000 horsepower. Mr. Roberts said that the low-water, or primary, horsepower was about 89,000 horsepower, and Gen. Taylor, in the committee, said that the low-water mark, which is the primary production, was only 85,000. If this plant were running 24 hours per day for 300 days in a year, 89,000 horsepower would produce only 16,440 tons of fixed nitrates, according to the standard set up by Rushmore. Gentlemen must not conclude that we are at an end in appropriating money for Muscle Shoals; when we appropriate $10,000,000 we will have just commenced. There is a bill now pending in the Senate making provision for a working capital amounting to $12,500,000 more. If you figure interest on the Government's investment, to say nothing about the operation expenses at all—and they will be very large—the interest upon the investment in the dam and working capital alone, if you produce but 16,440 tons, will make a carrying charge equal to $264 per ton for the total capacity of the plant by water power. If we build the dam and run the plant to the full capacity, we will be compelled to furnish 75 per cent of the power from the steam plant, because the water power will not be sufficient. Anyone who knows anything about this subject knows that you must supplement your horsepower with steam power if you are going to produce anything like 86,000 tons of nitrates. They ran that plant at one-fifth of its capacity to a short time ago to test how much it would cost. How much do you gentlemen think it cost to produce nitrates down there when they were running the plant to test it? It cost over $160 per ton, not allowing anything for depreciation, not allowing anything for maintenance, and not allowing one penny on the tremendous cost for interest.

Mr. Chairman, if there is an item which will come before this body that ought to receive the condemnation of the Congress, it is this wasteful and extravagant item, for which you are now asking us to appropriate $10,000,000. Vote for this, and then forever keep your tongue still with regard to economy. It is all very well to talk economy, but it is better to practice economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 107, noes 121.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. GOOD were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 125, noes 132.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of superintendent of Antietam battle field, said superintendent to perform his duties under the direction of the Quartermaster Corps and to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of War, at his discretion, the person selected for this position to be an honorably discharged Union soldier, $1,500.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon a bill which I dropped in the basket yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon a bill he introduced. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees: For interment, cremation (only upon request from relatives of the deceased), or of preparation and transportation to their homes or to such national cemeteries as may be designated by proper authority, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of the remains of officers, cadets, United States Military Academy, including acting assistant surgeons and enlisted men in active service and accepted applicants for enlistment; interment, or of preparation and transportation to their homes, of the remains of civil employees of the Army in the employ of the War Department who die abroad, in Alaska, in the Canal Zone or on Army transports, or who die while on duty in the field or at military posts within the limits of the United States; interment of military prisoners who die at military posts; for the interment and shipment to their homes of remains of enlisted men who are discharged in hospitals in the United States and continue as inmates of said hospitals to the date of their death, and for interment of prisoners of war and interned alien enemies who die at prison camps in the United States; removal of remains from abandoned posts to permanent military posts or national cemeteries, including the remains of Federal soldiers, sailors, or marines interred in fields or abandoned private and city cemeteries; and in any case where the expenses of burial or shipment of the remains of officers or enlisted men of the Army who die on the active list are borne by individuals, where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement to such individuals may be made of the amount allowed by the Government for such services out of this sum, but no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1910; expenses of the segregation of bodies in permanent American cemeteries in Great Britain and France; in all, $1,000,000: Provided, That the above provisions shall be applicable in the cases of officers and enlisted men on the retired list of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while on active duty by proper assignment and also to citizens of the United States who may have died while serving in the armies of the Allies associated with the American forces: Provided further, That, in addition to the foregoing sum, the unobligated balance of the appropriation "Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civil employees" for the fiscal year 1921 is made available during the fiscal year 1922 for the above purposes and for the care and maintenance of graves of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees of the Army abroad and for the preparation and shipment of their remains to their homes or to national cemeteries.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee whether this is the item covering the expense of bringing back the bodies of the soldiers in the late war who died abroad.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and for taking the bodies of those who will not be brought back and placing them in certain cemeteries in France and Great Britain. The bodies are now scattered, buried in a great many cemeteries. It is not intended by the Government to allow them to remain in that way, but to place them in a few American cemeteries. It is proposed here to keep 550 bodies permanently in cemeteries in Great Britain. They are buried in a great many cemeteries throughout Great Britain, and it is proposed to take the bodies and inter them in one cemetery in Great Britain and have that an American cemetery and provide for its maintenance.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can the gentleman state approximately what is the unobligated balance of the appropriation of 1921?

Mr. GOOD. There was a balance on hand, appropriated for 1921, in December, of $20,400,000. There were obligations aggregating $3,676,000, leaving an unobligated balance available for the rest of this year and next year of $16,724,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I believe the department this year asked for an appropriation of $20,000,000 in the original estimate?

Mr. GOOD. That is correct; but they stated at the hearings that under no circumstances could they use more than $1,000,000, and I doubt very much if they can use that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did they give any reason for having originally asked for $20,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. They wanted the money appropriated so that they could have that money and know that they could carry out certain plans, but the committee felt that inasmuch as Congress would make liberal appropriations to carry out any reasonable plan with regard to the disposition of the remains of the soldiers, it was not wise to have a large sum appropriated that was unused for any purpose.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an opportune time to call attention to the unwarranted agitation and propaganda to which all of us were subjected more or less at the time the last sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration. Somehow the impression was quite broadcast in the country that this Congress was not appropriating adequately for the care in France and in England and elsewhere and for the return to this country of the bodies of the men who fell in the war. We find that at the time the last sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration the department asked for more money than has been proven to be necessary, and at this time they made a request for $20,000,000, but subsequently admitted that they can use only approximately $1,000,000 in addition to the unexpended balance that will be on hand at the end of this fiscal year. It simply shows one of those occasions when, because of the failure of the department to make proper estimates for expenditures, the purposes and actions of Members of Congress are brought into question. It always was and always will be the purpose of the Congress of the United States to appropriate adequately for the soldiers who died abroad in the late war or engaged in any war in which the Republic has taken part. It is very gratifying that the committee has given proper consideration to the necessities of the case and has not been carried away by the clamor of the day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a similar request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion to strike out the last word, if I may be recognized. May I ask the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in reference to this paragraph as to American cemeteries in Great Britain, and especially in France? Does the Government of the United States own the cemeteries, own the ground where the bodies are interred, and are we maintaining those cemeteries and the salaries of the necessary employees?

Mr. GOOD. My understanding is that certain areas were set aside by the Government of France and ground and property donated to the United States for that purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have the same sort of an understanding, but that does not give me the information. I do not know whether it came out in the hearings or not. For instance, a lady said to me the other day that her son, who had been killed in the war, was buried in France. She desired to have his remains stay in France if they were to be in a cemetery of the United States and cared for where other American boys were buried. The information has been very indefinite.

Mr. GOOD. There are now 4,000 bodies interred, or were a little while ago, at Suresnes, 20,000 graves at Romagne, 4,000 at Belleau Wood, and 4,700 at Bony. American soldiers who died in France were also buried in other cemeteries in France. Now, it is proposed to give up some of those cemeteries, but in all cases where the bodies are to remain in France they are to be interred in a cemetery owned by the United States and maintained by appropriations made by the Government of the United States. There is no question about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, do we own any cemeteries there? That is what I want to know. Do we own the ground, and, if so, what is our jurisdiction and authority there?

Mr. GOOD. Inquiry was made of the department and they answered the question by stating that the land was donated by France to the United States for cemetery purposes. Now, just exactly what we own abroad and the nature of our title I do not know. It may be simply a right to use that ground for cemeterial purposes or we may have absolute title.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We own, I believe, a cemetery at Mexico City; at least, we provide for a superintendent of a cemetery there. Now, are we taking care of these cemeteries which we are supposed to own in France now, and is anyone able to tell us how much we are spending in that way and whether we are properly caring for them?

Mr. GOOD. At the present time they are removing a great many of these bodies, and removing them very rapidly, and for that reason not so much is being done now in regard to the maintenance. I have forgotten how many thousand bodies they are now removing, but they propose to remove the bodies very rapidly and bring them back when the relatives want them brought back, and while that is being done they are not spending much money in the care of cemeteries. At present they are badly torn up and will continue to be until the work of removal and consecration is over. At Suresnes, I understand, we do own that land. We own the cemetery there. That is the cemetery just outside of Paris, where it is proposed to make a permanent American cemetery.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, the War Department and Congress have assured people that where the relatives desired the remains of a soldier who died in the war it would be brought home. That is a comfortable assurance, so far as that goes. But there are many relatives in the United States who would like to be sure as to whether the remains which stay in France are to be cared for in American cemeteries, where the bodies are segregated, and where they are not scattered around in local cemeteries and never cared for. That assurance would be of great value to many people in the United States, and would probably prevent the disinterment of a good many bodies which would otherwise be brought home.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I notice the language in the bill provides for the segregation of bodies in permanent American cemeteries. Does not the gentleman have the idea that this means the cemeteries themselves are permanent and belong to America, and that the segregation of the bodies means the grouping of the bodies of soldiers in cemeteries which really belong to America?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I could draw that inference, but I prefer to have the facts. It is much better to have facts than an inference.

Mr. GARD. I am entirely in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. I think they have that assurance. The Government of France has turned over these cemeteries to the United States. Now, as to the legal title to the land, just how it is, whether acquired by an act of the legislature or not, I can not advise the gentleman; but they are to be American cemeteries, owned by this country and maintained by this country, and it is proposed to erect some chapels and to permanently improve these cemeteries and erect monuments or gravestones at the graves. They will be American cemeteries and maintained in a first-class way. There has been a great deal of moving of bodies over there; in some instances bodies of American soldiers interred in France have already been removed three times. The bodies have been interred in a great many cemeteries, and they are trying to segregate those bodies that are to remain there and inter them in the cemeteries to be owned by the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Evidently the War Department did not give the information I desired to get. "Are to be" is different from "being."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arlington Memorial Amphitheater and Chapel: For care and maintenance of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater and Chapel and grounds in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., including a custodian at $1,200, $12,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee who determines who is to be buried in the National Cemetery over here in Arlington? For example, last Tuesday, I understand, there were 84 soldiers buried there, and they have burial days twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays. The question that came to me is, Who is buried there, and who determines it?

Mr. GOOD. I can not give the gentleman the law in the case, but the law determines largely who may be buried there. The administration of that law is left with the War Department and the Navy Department.

Mr. FESS. The bodies of many of those people which have been brought from Europe are buried there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. With respect to officers of both the Regular Army and Navy there is the right of interment at Arlington. The administration of the law is left with the War Department, but I think the family of a deceased soldier has something to say in regard to whether or not they desire that to be done.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation of civilian commissioners; clerical and other services, labor, iron gun carriages, mounting of siege guns, memorials, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps, surveys, roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase of lands, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; and other necessary expenses, $27,500.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FESS. Does this bill take care of all of our national parks?

Mr. GOOD. All the national parks and all the national military parks. But what we are now considering is just the military parks of the United States. There are quite a number of military parks in the United States.

Mr. FESS. They are not all included in this bill, are they?

Mr. GOOD. All the national military parks are.

Mr. FESS. Is there not a national military park just outside of Richmond?

Mr. GOOD. I think not. I do not think that is a national military park. It has never been so designated. I do not know where it would get its appropriation if not in this bill.

Mr. FESS. Is there not one down at Martinsburg, W. Va.?

Mr. GOOD. Not one supported by the Government. I never heard of any that is not carried here.

Mr. FESS. I do not see it here. There are 60 or 70, all told. There are some, I think, that are not designated here, which are very small. I understand they are cared for out of a lump appropriation for cemeteries.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is one at Fort Donaldson. It is not a park, but a cemetery.

Mr. FESS. A custodian is kept there, I understand, at the expense of the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is a cemetery. They have a custodian there. That is under another appropriation.

Mr. FESS. My question is whether all the national military parks are carried in this bill, or whether there are some carried in another bill?

Mr. GOOD. They are not carried in any other bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Those that are not specifically mentioned are covered by a general fund.

Mr. GOOD. We are carrying an appropriation of $1,250 for Confederate plats, and in addition to that there is an appropriation for these separate national military parks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For placing and maintaining special portions of the parks in condition for outdoor sports, $15,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have been patiently waiting during the reading of all of these items in amazing amounts of $30,000, $35,000, $45,000, $65,000, $75,000, and $100,000, to see whether or not some economist on the other side of the aisle would not rise to try to strike out some of these items for maintenance of parks and memorials here, and to prevent some of these duplications.

This particular item, to which I have interposed the pro forma amendment so that I may discuss all this waste and extravagance, is for $15,000 for placing and maintaining special portions of the parks in condition for outdoor sports, such as tennis, polo, cricket, golf, and other outdoor games. When I was checking up some of the departments here last August and September and October and trying to find out where all of this money goes and how it is expended, one of the wastes that attracted my attention was a bunch of men down here on the Potomac Park tennis court. I saw one day a whole group of colored citizens on the Government pay roll, presumably at work inside of those grounds, and I walked up and heard an extended argument on some church question during which no work was done; and to see how long that would prevail, I watched the bunch quite a little time. Not an attempt was made to do one single lick of work. There was a whole bunch of them. I went on to another place, and came by there, and called aside the foreman in charge, who was a colored man, who by the way was the only man there who was industrious, and I asked him who employed those men. He said, "Col. Ridley." I said, "You are the foreman?" He said, "Yes." I said, "Do you permit them to fritter away all this time that way?" He said, "I can not help it. It would be dangerous for me to make complaint about them. They do it here every day." I asked him, "Have you ever told Col. Ridley?" He answered, "No; I am afraid to tell him." I watched them as I went back and forth there for several days, and I do not believe outside of the foreman, who is industrious and a good hand—I have watched him frequently during the last year—I do not believe the others worked half an hour during a whole day. I went to Col. Ridley and asked him out of what bill they were paid. He said they were paid out of this sundry civil bill. I told him about the incident, and asked if it could not be stopped.

That is the way that most of these men perform their services in all these parks. There are hundreds of such employees who idle away most of their time. Look at these items for park and memorial maintenance; just casually go back under this head, Engineering Department——

Mr. PELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. I will yield in a moment, if I can have more time. Here is an appropriation of $4,000 under the engineer department; another of $2,000, another of $3,000, another of $2,000, another of $1,500, another of $2,000, another of $7,000, another of $2,500, another for $18,550, another one for $35,000, another one for $4,000, another one for $2,500, another one for $3,500, another for $10,000, another one for $2,000, another for $30,000, another one for $45,000, another one for $8,000, another one for $45,000, another one for $5,000, another for $15,000, to which I have already called attention—for placing and maintaining special portions of the parks in condition for outdoor sports, $15,000.

Then another appropriation for $30,000, another one for $1,500, another one for $1,000, another for $4,000, another for $2,500—

For operation, care, repair, and maintenance of the electric pump which operates the memorial fountain to Admiral Dupont, in Dupont Circle.

Then we get to this very illuminating item of appropriation on page 57:

To provide for the increased cost in park maintenance, $65,000.

Then there is another appropriation for $2,500, another for $15,000, another for $7,000, another for $5,000, another for $12,000, another for $100,000, another for $75,000, another for $1,000, another for $1,000, another for $4,000, another for $5,000, another for $2,400, another for $1,000, and so on.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a minute.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not want more than half a minute.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield because I believe the House will give me a little more time.

Mr. LAYTON. Do you not think that is the easiest speech you ever tried to make—by reading the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am just calling attention to the enormous sums of money that we are wasting here, under this one head of maintenance of parks and memorials here in Washington.

Mr. LAYTON. I know it.

Mr. BLANTON. I know you know it, and your chairman knows it, and yet you majority colleagues continue to do it, and it is almost useless to make a motion to strike them out, because you will vote to keep them in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment, please. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to punish the gentleman in charge of the bill because some one objects, because I know how I can get more time in a few minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, no one who has followed the improvement of the parks of this city, if he knows anything about the subject, will criticize the small appropriations made here as being extravagant. Take, for instance, Lafayette Park. The only appropriation is $2,000 a year to keep in a magnificent condition 7 acres of beautiful park. Now, as labor conditions became more difficult and labor costs increased, it was not the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to increase the amount for each park, but Col. Ridley suggested the granting of a lump sum to provide for the increased cost in park maintenance. I want to say that we shall regret it exceedingly when Col. Ridley leaves that service. He is one of the most efficient men in the Government service. He has done a wonderful work and has held down the expenditures for our parks in this city, and at the same time has given Washington very beautiful parks. The amount we spend per acre for parks like Lafayette Park is not half the amount spent per acre for similar parks in large cities like New York, Chicago, Boston, and other places where they take pride in their parks. Now it is true that they have made some provision for outdoor sports. That has been the policy. It is the policy in every progressive city. They have something like 15 or 20 tennis courts. They have a number of ball fields down there, and places where young men and young women can go and engage in healthful recreation, and the amount appropriated for that purpose is the small pittance of $15,000 a year. I would be almost ashamed to be a Member of this House and attempt to have the Capital City of the Nation get along in a niggardly way and not have any parks at all, as the gentleman from Texas seems to desire.

We have not gone wild with regard to park development. Our growth has been meager, and I believe the amount expended has been at all times economical, and every dollar of the appropriation for this purpose can be justified. There may be men employed to work on the parks, as there always are, who are not doing a full day's work. That has been true not only of men in public parks but it is true in private establishments.

Under the rules of the War Department Col. Ridley can not stay after this year in the position he now occupies, and I think it will be a distinct loss to the Government, because Col. Ridley, who is trained for the service, whose heart is in this work, and who is able to maintain these parks at a minimum expense, is compelled to leave this work and take some other position in the War Department.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I notice on page 56 an item of $30,000 for improvement, care, and maintenance of Meridian Hill Park. Does the gentleman remember how much more will be necessary to complete that park and when they expect to have it completed?

Mr. GOOD. It depends on how rapidly we appropriate the money. That is going to be a very costly park.

Mr. SNELL. I imagined that it was.

Mr. GOOD. It seems to me the Government took on a white elephant when it took on that park, so far as appropriations out of the Treasury are concerned. They ask $165,000 this year, and we gave but $30,000.

Mr. GARD. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. We have not yet reached the paragraph which gentlemen are discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do that in order to ask the gentleman from Texas if in his interview with the foreman of these workmen in the park, who said that he would be afraid to report the idleness of his men, he thought that the foreman was afraid of physical violence from his subordinates or of political violence from his superiors?

Mr. BLANTON. I can tell the gentleman from New York what I think now. These friends of ours on the other side of the aisle are always preaching economy. One of their distinguished Members yesterday jumped on the President of the United States for extravagance, and said he was the most hated man in the universe, and yet every time a Member of Congress seeks to stop the extravagance he or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will eulogize the man who has spent the money and then vote to continue spending it. The poor Negro thought he would have the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Iowa astraddle of his neck if he ever said anything about where the money was going in wasteful extravagance. He was afraid of them, but I am not.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that when his party was in control of the House it gave $20,000 for the playgrounds for which we are appropriating $15,000, and the gentleman from Texas did not raise his voice against it.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have been fighting ever since I have been here.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but the gentleman said nothing about that item.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Texas has called attention to extravagances under the Democratic administration, but he never criticized the administration. He is now seeking to strike out of the sundry civil appropriation bill a small appropriation for the maintenance of places in the park for the outdoor sports. I am not ordinarily unduly extravagant, and I should suppose that even my distinguished friend from Texas would be willing to let the clerks and other citizens of the District of Columbia who desire an opportunity to pay—for that is what this amounts to—to pay for tennis courts where they can get outdoor sports during the hot season in Washington while most of us go to a hotter place, in Texas, or a cooler place in the North. Give these people an opportunity to play tennis; give them an opportunity to play ball; give them an opportunity to play golf where they do not have to belong to high-priced clubs. This is to give the poor people a chance to contribute money for their own support. Even the gentleman from Texas ought to be willing to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement, care, and maintenance of Meridian Hill Park, $30,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How much is it estimated it will take to complete Meridian Park?

Mr. GOOD. The estimated cost is approximately $500,000, if the plans of the Fine Arts Commission are carried out. This appropriation carries $15,000 for maintenance and $15,000 for the purchase of plants, shrubs, and so forth.

Mr. SNELL. It would take about 30 years then.

Mr. GOOD. Longer than that the way we are now appropriating. We have not carried anything in the bill to do anything along the line of work planned by the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. SNELL. Fifteen thousand dollars is a considerable amount for trees and shrubs.

Mr. GOOD. I used to think so, but it seems that a small tree, planted, costs about $10 or $15.

Mr. SNELL. The committee has not been very extravagant up to this time.

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let me say that the most unsightly structure in the city of Washington, or probably anywhere else, is the stone wall at Meridian Park. It takes the cake over anything else that I have ever seen, although it was approved by the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think if the gentleman from Illinois would cast his eye on the so-called park between here and the Union Station he will find a more unsightly place.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not as unsightly as this stone wall at Meridian Park.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There are old buildings and windows with glass knocked out——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; that is bad enough, but not so unsightly as Meridian Park.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this item there is appropriated $30,000 for maintenance of Meridian Hill Park, and in line 8 the improvements on Rock Creek Park and Piney Branch Park the same amount, $30,000. I am led to inquire, in the interest of the Public Treasury and in the interest of those who believe in a better and more beautiful Washington, just how much this monstrosity on Meridian Hill, the name of which the gentleman from Illinois indicates should be changed to White Elephant Park—how much has the park already cost?

Mr. GOOD. There has been appropriated up to date $210,000.

Mr. GARD. What is the acreage of the park?

Mr. GOOD. Eleven and four-tenths acres.

Mr. GARD. And the improvement outside of the original cost has been $210,000. I understand from the reading of the hearings that Col. Ridley said it would cost at least half a million dollars to complete it.

Mr. GOOD. He said it would probably reach $500,000.

Mr. GARD. Is that in addition to the cost of the land?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. He was asked how much it would cost to complete it, and he said:

Mr. VARE. How much will it cost to complete this park in accordance with the comprehensive plans prepared?
Col. RIDLEY. I have not the details of the whole thing. If I were to make estimates now they would be no good when we reached them. It would probably reach $500,000. We have made rough estimates in the neighborhood of $500,000.
Mr. VARE. What is the area?
Col. RIDLEY. Eleven and four-tenths acres.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, it is more than that. The cost of the ground was $400,000.

Mr. GARD. I am glad to have that information.

Mr. GOOD. But here is a park that the Government bought. Congress authorized its purchase, and we have spent now over $500,000 on it. Just a little while ago the gentleman was very greatly moved by the thought that when you spend a little money on a thing of this kind we ought to keep on spending in order not to lose what you had invested.

Mr. GARD. But this is an entirely different procedure. I am entirely in sympathy with appropriations for the maintenance of tennis courts, baseball diamonds, golf grounds, where the people may play, where they may have good wholesome outdoor recreation, but just what there is inside of that stone wall up on the Sixteenth Street hill I never have been able to determine. It seems to me that the committee in charge of public moneys ought to make a halt somewhere in respect to this park of 11 acres, whose utility is of some question, to say the least, which is to cost over $1,000,000 of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then strike it out.

Mr. GARD. It seems to me there is no adequate compensation in benefit from this great expenditure.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the subcommittee that heard the statements in support of this item did not think that we ought to appropriate $155,000, but we did feel that inasmuch as Congress had authorized the purchase and had been appropriating money year after year for the park while this wall was being built and the improvements going on, the planting of shrubs and some of that grading ought to be continued. We have not given here enough money to continue building that wall. They propose to build a great gateway a little further down Sixteenth Street. My recollection is that it is to cost about $80,000 for the rest of that wall. We did not approve of that item for this year. We felt that inasmuch as the ground did need grading and some trees ought to be planted, and some maintenance work done, we should make an appropriation to carry on such work.

Mr. GARD. I am very sure that everyone should be grateful for that interest. What I particularly want to know is this: Is it to be the continued policy of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate large sums of money yearly so that ultimately the sum total spent will be over a million dollars for this park, which is of questionable benefit in any event?

Mr. GOOD. The big and costly improvement is going to be the continuation of that wall. We are not carrying enough to start that, and have appropriated only for the grading and planting next year, and for work that ought to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment. I happened to live for some time at 2400 Sixteenth Street, opposite this park. A very fine gentleman came down from the great State of New York to see me and spend a couple of days with me. I remember one morning as we were at the entrance to that big apartment house he looked across the street at that wall and said, "What institution is that across the street" I had to explain to him that it was not an institution, but that it was a park. It seems to me that if we would appropriate some money to remove that wall and grade that park it would be better than to appropriate money to continue those so-called improvements, because they are not improvements to a great city like Washington. No piece of concrete work in its raw state is an improvement to anything. Something ought to be done by which we can get God's green grass to grow there instead of having this concrete work put there. I am particularly anxious that that should be a beautiful park because Members of the House will remember that the great monument to James Buchanan is to be erected in Meridian Park. I want to see the park beautified. I do not want to see those walls extended any farther. I wish the committee would outline some definite policy by which we could at least lessen the expenditures on the park and at the same time improve it in a beautiful and nature like way.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is aware that the Fine Arts Commission approved the erection of that wall.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am quite aware of that, but I do not always agreed with them.

Mr. STEVENSON rose.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentlemen who have criticized this park have criticized it from the standpoint of Sixteenth Street. If they will travel on the other side and come in on the level and see the great residential section that is right on the level of the park and the splendid advantages the park will be to that section, which is one of the choice residence sections of the city, they will see that a proper development of the park will be of great benefit. It all depends upon which way you look at it. If you go down in a well and try to look out of the top, the horizon is not very big, and that is what you do when you go to the big apartment house across the way on Sixteenth Street. If you will travel up Fifteenth Street and come in on the level, you will see that there are a great many people who live up there—I live there myself—who enjoy going out into the park on Sunday afternoon. The thing I can not understand is how it costs so much money to get so little grass. I have been living up there for about four years. They have been spending about $30,000 a year on shrubs and grass. They have not yet a good stand of grass. I think what they ought to do there is to direct attention to a little more horticultural skill and not spend so much money in cement walls. I will admit that the Sixteenth Street entrance looks like the entrance to the South Carolina Penitentiary, and that is one reason why I have never gone in that way.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest that they use a liberal supply of nitrate of soda.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; or of nitrogen produced at the plant which will soon be completed at Muscle Shoals, and then we will get a proper growth of grass, and the inhabitants of that section will enjoy it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operation, care, repair, and maintenance of the electric pump which operates the memorial fountain to Admiral Du Pont in Du Pont Circle, $2,500.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard?

Mr. GOOD. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That it is not authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the act of Congress that authorized the removal of the old Du Pont Monument authorized the erection of a new memorial, the erection of it to be at the place selected by the Fine Arts Commission and the design of the memorial to be selected or approved by the Fine Arts Commission. The Fine Arts Commission in selecting a memorial for Admiral Du Pont selected a fountain. Now, it is fundamental that where Congress authorizes the erection of a building or of a memorial that carries with it the authority to maintain it. It might as well be said that items for lighting the Capitol Building or lighting other works are not authorized by law. In this case, if Congress made a mistake, it was a mistake of leaving the design—and the word "design," as I recall, is carried right in the act—to some one else and not providing what that design should be. The act provides:

That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed——

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman give the date of that?

Mr. GOOD. Approved February 26, 1917.

That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission for the removal of the statue and pedestal and foundations of Admiral Du Pont in Du Pont Circle, in the city of Washington, D. C., and the erection in place thereof within the circle of a memorial to said Admiral Du Pont: Provided, That the present statue and pedestal may, after the completion of the memorial in place thereof, be turned over to the donors of the memorial for relocation outside the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the site and design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

Now, this memorial is a fountain. Certainly it would be very foolish for Congress to authorize the erection of a fountain and then have it said, as a matter of fact, we did not also authorize the expenditure necessary to allow water to run over the fountain. It is necessary to have these pumps to supply the water, otherwise you can not——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, if the Fine Arts Commission had approved the erection of a small building which required an elevator, does the gentleman contend that there would be authority to appropriate under the language of the act quoted for an operator to run that elevator?

Mr. GOOD. I assume if the Fine Arts Commission had authorized the erection of a memorial building wherein Government work in part could be transacted, that carried with it as an incidental authority for the maintenance of the memorial. I think there is no question about it. Any other conclusion would lead us into all kinds of trouble with regard to the maintenance of Government property. This is simply the maintenance of a thing that Congress has authorized. If the Congress is foolish enough to allow some one outside to select the design and thereby throw on the Government an increased cost in the way of maintenance, that is the fault of Congress, but the authority to maintain always goes with the incidental right and authority to construct.

Mr. LAYTON. Is not a fountain necessarily something where water is flowing?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose so, yes; if it is a fountain of that kind. I think there are electric fountains.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the resolution which authorized this work to be done, Public Resolution No. 41, Sixty-fourth Congress, was Public Resolution No. 51 in the Sixty-fourth Congress, although the War Department, with its usual inaccuracy in sending an estimate to Congress, located it as Public Resolution No. 41. That resolution authorized the removal of the Du Pont statue and the giving of a new monument by the Du Pont people and provided among other things that the site and design of the monument shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts and "that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the removal of the statue, pedestal, and foundations, and the erection of said memorial complete." Of course, the approval of the Fine Arts Commission of this fountain was itself a fraud upon the Government and only illustrates the fact that it is never safe in this House to let anything go through on the supposition that the people who will deal with it will deal with it honestly. We were told there would be no expense to the Government by the change of the Du Pont statue for some other form of memorial.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. I just wanted to call attention——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will yield.

Mr. GOOD. Call attention that the language of the statute is that the Government should be put to no expense——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I just read the language.

Mr. GOOD. By reason——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have just read the language and here it is in the statute.

Mr. GOOD. I wanted the gentleman to know the construction——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman wants to argue that state of facts if he will wait I will meet that question. The passage of the resolution was a fraud upon the Congress. If we had provided in the resolution that there should be an electric pump installed at that place it would have been in order to make an appropriation for the maintenance of it, but we made no such provision. There is no authority for an electric pump at that place, no authority for the maintenance of an electric pump, and the mere fact that the memorial is there is no excuse for saying we have to maintain an electric pump. The memorial will still be there and we will still maintain it without our maintaining an electric pump which is not authorized.

Mr. LAYTON. But it is not a fountain.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, the gentleman sometimes makes a remark that does not add anything—everybody knows a fountain implies water.

Mr. LAYTON. That is all I want you to admit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Sometimes water on the brain. [Laughter.]

Now, I contend that where we provide for the construction of a building it does not mean we give authority to make all sorts of appropriations for things not necessary for the building. We authorized here a memorial to be placed there without expense to the Government. The first proposition we get out of it is $2,500 a year expense to the Government for maintenance—$2,500 a year for all time—on the plea that a resolution providing for a memorial without expense to the Government authorizes directly an expense of $2,500 a year.

Mr. GOOD. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the words to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has addressed himself, and that is, that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the removal of the statue, pedestal, and foundation, and erection of said memorial complete. Now, the thought I had in mind was that a strict construction of the language there could not be construed to mean that the Government of the United States should be placed to no expense for maintenance. That provision only goes to the extent that the Government should be put to no expense in the removal or the erection of this pedestal. Nowhere is it provided that the Government shall be placed to no expense in its maintenance. The Government was at an expense in the maintenance of the old monument that stood there. The Government is at some expense all the time in guarding its property and maintaining it, whenever and however authorized. I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the War Department may have placed this matter before Congress in a false light, but it seems to me they have put one over on Congress. They have had Congress authorize this monument, and whether you like it or not we have got to maintain it, it seems to me. Where we authorized the acquisition of property either by gift or by appropriation, are we then to abandon it?

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in the way he has answered me, but I do propose to answer him in as logical and courteous a manner as possible.

I was not in the House at the time Congress, of which I suppose the gentleman was a Member, had this thing "put over" on it. It is a very simple proposition, it seems to me, and there is no need for any hairsplitting or irritation either on the part of the gentleman from Illinois or anybody else. The Congress of the United States, as I understand it, did authorize the removal of a statue in Du Pont Circle, and the substitution therefor of a fountain. That fountain, as I understand it, was to be paid for by the——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There was no provision for the fountain.

Mr. GOOD. A memorial.

Mr. LAYTON. All right, a memorial. But the law, if I understand it, Mr. Chairman (I am talking to the chairman of the committee), authorized the Fine Arts Commission to select whatever they pleased in substitution for the monument that was already placed in that park. Is that correct?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. The law gave to the Fine Arts Commission the right to substitute a memorial in the shape of a fountain.

Mr. GOOD. We gave them the right to select the design and memorial, and they designed it as a fountain.

Mr. LAYTON. They had the right to put back a statue or whatever they pleased. Is not that right?

Mr. GOOD. That is my contention.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes. It is my contention that they had a right to select a design, and did select a design, which was a fountain. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] contends that a fountain is a fountain, though there is no water flowing from it.

This may be true, but the gentleman will have to change the accepted meaning of words in order to substantiate his contention. The facts, as I understand it, are that the Du Pont family offered to remove an old statue which stood in the Du Pont Circle and, at their own expense, to erect another for the purpose of more adequately memorializing the fame of Rear Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, a distinguished member of one of the oldest and most notable families in the United States. Rear Admiral Du Pont was born at Bergen Point, N. J., September 27, 1803, died in Philadelphia, Pa., June 23, 1865, and was buried at the family burying ground near Wilmington, Del. He was appointed to Annapolis in 1815; was commander of the United States steamship Cyane from 1846 to 1848, which ship was a part of the Pacific Squadron at that time, rendering conspicuously gallant service at Santiago, Mazatlan, San Jose, and other ports, and was recognized by Congress, together with other officers, for gallant service in the War with Mexico. Upon the recommendation of President Lincoln he was retained in active service as flag officer in 1861, and especially thanked by Congress for "decisive and splendid victory achieved at Port Royal, S. C., on the 7th of November, 1861." He commanded the South Atlantic blockading squadron from 1861 to 1863 during the Civil War. Congress twice recognized the high character and the public service of this distinguished officer, so that it was altogether fitting that a memorial should be raised to perpetuate his memory in this the Capital of the country, where the memorials of other distinguished public servants are found. Full authority was granted by this body to the Fine Arts Commission to design such a memorial and have the same erected under their supervision and at the expense of the family of which Admiral Du Pont was a member. With this authority, the Fine Arts Commission designed a fountain, which was accepted by the Government, and by all the rules of common sense, as well as of patriotism, the design and purpose of a former Congress and the Fine Arts Commission should be carried fully into effect by making it a veritable fountain and not a mere mass of stone.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order upon the paragraph from lines 6 to 8, inclusive, page 57, which is for "the operation, care, repair, and maintenance of the electric pump to operate the memorial fountain to Admiral Du Pont in Du Pont Circle, $2,500." The act referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] confers authority upon the Chief of Engineers to grant permission for the removal of the statue and pedestal and foundation of the statue of Admiral Du Pont at Du Pont Circle, and to also grant permission for the erection in place thereof of a memorial to said Admiral Du Pont. It also provides that the present statue and pedestal may be turned over to the donors of the memorial for relocation outside of the District of Columbia. But the act further provides that the site and design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts. And further, that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the removal of the statue, pedestal, or foundations, and the erection of said memorial complete.

It is the view of the Chair that it would seem that Congress intended, in granting this permission to remove the statue which formerly was there, and permitting persons to donate a substitute in the form of a memorial, that the Fine Arts Commission should first pass upon the site and the design of the memorial that is the substitute for the statue, and, having approved the site and the design, the further qualifying language of the resolution required that that memorial, whatever it should be, after having received the approval of the Fine Arts Commission, should be placed there without additional expense to the United States; that is, so as not to require any additional expenditure for the maintenance of the park, by reason of the removal of the statue and the acceptance of the memorial in its stead. There is still authority to appropriate for the maintenance of this park, but this is a new facility for which the Chair finds no authorization in the resolution which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has cited. That act does not, in the opinion of the Chair, authorize an appropriation for the operation of anything connected with that memorial, such as an electric pump or any other form of apparatus. The change was to be made and the substitute located and erected complete, without expense to the United States—this would seem to limit the discretion of both the Chief of Engineers and the Fine Arts Commission. The matter of having selected a fountain, it would seem to the Chair, would not authorize an appropriation by the Congress for the operation of anything connected with it unless further authority be given. And the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the increased cost in park maintenance, $65,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion in order to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. As I understand the former paragraphs, each park has a specific appropriation for the expenditure on that park for the year. What additional maintenance is necessary, aside from the regular maintenance of the parks as provided in the other paragraphs?

Mr. GOOD. The parks, as a general rule, unless there was some specific thing to be done in a separate park, have been appropriated for uniformly for a period of 10 or 12 years without increase for any park. Take, for instance, Montrose Park. They have had $5,000 for a number of years. There was no increase during the war, but there was an increase granted in pay to the men who worked in the parks, amounting to something between 80 per cent and 100 per cent. The only way that increased pay was taken care of was by a lump-sum appropriation such as we are carrying here.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire why the increased cost? If there is an actual increased cost, why is it not placed on each item in each park?

Mr. GOOD. The committee thought we ought to get back to the same costs at which the parks were formerly maintained if wages were reduced, and we felt that if we had a lump sum appropriated we could get back a good deal more quickly in this way than if the increased maintenance of each park was provided for separately, and therefore this was a temporary thing until conditions again became normal. We have reduced the amount by $10,000 over last year.

Mr. DOWELL. This is not a continuation?

Mr. GOOD. Only until it is wiped out, and if the price of labor goes down next year or the year following, this money may not be spent. It simply permits the superintendent to pay the wage, and if that wage is not necessary the money will not be expended. He must pay current wages.

Mr. DOWELL. Then it will not be necessary to increase the other items permanently?

Mr. GOOD. Exactly.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the paragraph. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] reserved a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GARD. I reserved a point of order on the paragraph. I will withhold it if the gentleman wants to speak on it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, we must get along with this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair has recognized me, I believe.

Mr. GOOD. A point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is at liberty to make his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair recognized me, subject to the reservation of the point of order.

I only wanted to answer some of the lecture that was given to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], when I was seeking to eliminate Government waste and extravagance.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a continued story. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it is a continued story. The gentleman from Texas is awfully hard to down by lectures. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is the one who does the lecturing.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois would intimate to the House and give to the country through the RECORD the impression that I lodged my protest merely against the one little item of $15,000 that was appropriated to maintain the tennis courts and the polo grounds and the golf links. I was pointing out the duplications and waste and extravagance in all of the numerous appropriations I mentioned for park maintenance. My statement was that all these items, some of them amounting to $30,000 and some to $40,000, and this one $65,000, and so on up to $100,000, were extravagant and wasteful. It was the whole aggregate of all these items of appropriation under this head which I stated was wasteful extravagance. That was what I directed my criticism against, and the gentleman knew it. And in his lecture the chairman of the Appropriations Committee saw fit to eulogize Col. Ridley in one breath, and then later on, when the gentleman from Illinois admitted the force of my argument—because by his point of order he struck out this $2,500 for Dupont Circle fountain from the bill, which was one of the items to which I objected—when he admitted it, I say, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, after eulogizing Col. Ridley, then in the next breath admitted that Col. Ridley "had put something over" on the Congress.

Mr. GOOD. No; the gentleman is mistaken again.

Mr. BLANTON. Who put it over on Congress, then?

Mr. GOOD. Col. Ridley had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BLANTON. Who had to do with it if it was not the distinguished officer in charge of public buildings and grounds? Some one asked the chairman whom he meant, and he said that the War Department had "put it over on us" in this item.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not understand that Col. Ridley is the entire War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. But Col. Ridley had this item in charge, and he permitted this resolution to pass, as he has charge of all public buildings and grounds.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He had no more to do with it than the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Texas was far away in Texas at the time.

Mr. BLANTON. I know whom it was done by. It was done by this big rich family known as the Du Ponts, who made hundreds of millions of dollars out this Government during the war. They put that memorial there to commemorate one of their kinsmen, and left it as a charge on this Government, and expected the Government to appropriate $2,500 a year to maintain a little pump there to water the fountain, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations fought to help spend that $2,500 there every year to commemorate that memory. If the Du Ponts, who made hundreds of millions of dollars out of this Government during the war, want to commemorate by such a memorial some of their kinsmen, let them put aside a sum, like $50,000, that would maintain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the point of order that was reserved is now made, as there is evidently no authority of law for such a provision as that contained in the item on lines 9 and 10, providing for the increased cost in park maintenance.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know why this item is not absolutely in accordance with the laws of the United States. These are permanent parks, and if we wanted to appropriate for every one of them in a lump sum, we could do it. I know of no ruling to the contrary. I know of no statute preventing it. They are parks that must be maintained, and whether we carry an appropriation for each park or provide by lump sum for all the parks, it would not make it subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not see what the point of order is.

Mr. GARD. The point of order made by me was that there was no authorization for this particular item contained in lines 9 and 10.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The authorization, of course, is for the maintenance of the parks. It makes no difference whether we carry the appropriation in a lump sum or whether we segregate it among the different items of the bill, so far as the authority is concerned. If it is in order to make an appropriation for the care of Rock Creek Park, $30,000, it is in order to make an appropriation for the same purpose of $40,000. There is no limitation of law upon the amount which Congress may appropriate for these parks, and there is an authorization for the maintenance of the parks.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations—I think wisely—instead of increasing the specific amount for the different parks, which if once increased would probably remain increased from year to year thereafter, put in one item for the increased cost of maintenance, which is just as much in order as any of the other items in the bill, because it is for the maintenance of the parks.

Mr. GARD. The point of order is made because it is apparent, it seems to me, that this item in lines 9 and 10 is not for any item of expenditure, but is an item that is purely speculative.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman says the item is speculative. Does the gentleman mean to assure the House that he has lived during the last three years and that he believes the increased cost of maintenance of everything is speculative?

Mr. GARD. I do not understand the gentleman's inquiry. Does he mean to ask me if I appreciate that the cost of everything has increased?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I say, does the gentleman believe that the increased cost of everything is only speculative?

Mr. GARD. In so far as this item is concerned, emphatically yes, because there is no element of certainty as to how much of this $65,000 is necessary for increase in park maintenance. There is no certainty as to what the labor schedule of the District of Columbia will be for the next month or the next six months.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is very true, but——

Mr. GARD. It is entirely speculative, and as the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] said a moment ago, it was their thought to carry this item, and to discontinue it in the event that it was not found necessary. If at any time the condition should arise when it was not necessary, the $65,000 or some part of it would not be carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is reduced $10,000 in this bill. Let us hope it may be reduced more in the next bill.

Mr. GARD. I hope so. I hope it will be a proper measure of economy. I am not interested in economy which cripples parks or anything else.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to carry an item like this in one paragraph than to put it into a whole lot of different items which, if once increased, would probably never be decreased?

Mr. GARD. I do not think so, because I believe that an appropriation should be specific and certain.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, but you never can tell exactly what it is going to cost for the maintenance of a park a year ahead.

Mr. GARD. But when we have provided, as we have provided—take the instance of our old friend Meridian Hill Park, $30,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have carried an item of $30,000 for that in this bill. Why? Because last year we carried an item of $30,000 for it. Why did we carry the item last year? Because the year before we carried an item of $30,000 for the same purpose.

Mr. GARD. That is little or no argument.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know, but it is a fact; and next year we will carry an item of $30,000. It ought to be eliminated entirely, but even the gentleman from Ohio did not make the motion to strike it out. If he had, I would have voted for it.

Mr. GARD. I realize how futile it is to make motions to eliminate things; but I tried to explain to the House my own ideas about Meridian Hill Park.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman explained his ideas very succinctly as to why the appropriation ought not to be made.

Mr. GARD. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And yet it passed without a motion to strike it out. Why? Because of the law of inertia, because it is in the present law, and that is the reason the Committee on Appropriations did not increase these amounts on account of the increased cost of maintenance.

Mr. GARD. I do not speak for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not, either, of course, because I am not on that committee; but I know the facts, and I assume that the committee have good judgment.

Mr. GARD. The one thing I had in mind when I made the point of order was that appropriations for parks and appropriations for any purpose should be made for specific and certain objects and in certain amounts; and I thought, and still think, that the appropriation in lines 9 and 10 is so speculative, has so many elements which may not be necessary, that it is subject to a point of order as not being authorized by law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is as much authorized as anything else for the maintenance of parks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order to the language on page 57, line 9, "to provide for the increase in cost of park maintenance, $65,000," on the ground, among other things, that it is so speculative in character as not to come within the requirements of being authorized by law. There seems to be no limit of cost fixed by any law heretofore passed for the maintenance or existence of any of these parks. This is a general provision covering increased cost in park maintenance, which would be available for any of the parks specifically appropriated for in the bill. There being no limitation to the amount which might be appropriated and expended for the maintenance of the parks, the Chair feels that this is not outside of the requirements, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a motion at the desk striking out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care of the center parking in Pennsylvania Avenue, between Second and Seventeenth Streets SE., $2,500.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask why they appropriate $2,500 for that parking upon Pennsylvania Avenue and only $1,000 for the parking on Maryland Avenue, which begins at the same place and runs the same distance in the other direction?

Mr. GOOD. The park on Pennsylvania Avenue SE. is about a mile and one-third long, and if I recall correctly, they plant and cultivate flowers in that parking and keep the park in condition. It is to maintain that park, which would otherwise be an unsightly park along the street car track.

Mr. DENISON. The parking along Maryland Avenue is almost all devoted to flowers.

The Maryland Avenue parking is appropriated for specifically, $1,000, and for Pennsylvania Avenue parking you give $2,500.

Mr. GOOD. The Pennsylvania Avenue parking is a double parking with a car track through the center. For Maryland Avenue I do not know exactly what it is, but we give $1,000, just what was estimated for the cost of maintaining it. In both of these cases that has been the appropriation for a number of years past.

Mr. GARRETT. There is not near as much parking on Maryland Avenue as there is on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. DENISON. The Maryland Avenue parking is devoted almost entirely to flowers and on Pennsylvania Avenue parking there are very few flowers.

Mr. GOOD. The Pennsylvania Avenue park is a double park, a mile and a third long. On Maryland Avenue it is a single park, a mile long and only 12 feet wide. On Pennsylvania Avenue, as I say, there is a double park, so the gentleman can see the difference.

Mr. DENISON. I do not quite see the difference.

Mr. GOOD. The double parking is 12 feet wide on each side of the track a mile and a third long. That would make a single parking 2⅔ miles in length and would cost twice as much as the parking 12 feet wide and a mile in length.

Mr. DENISON. The Maryland Avenue park, as I say, is devoted to flowers, while that on Pennsylvania Avenue is a tree park.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct. I walk up and down there a good deal, and I never saw any flowers on the Pennsylvania Avenue park. Nearly all of that park is taken up by street car tracks. It puzzles me why it should cost so much to maintain it.

Mr. DENISON. The park on Maryland Avenue is devoted wholly to flowers.

Mr. GOOD. The members of the Committee on Appropriations can not examine the books of the departments. We have representatives of the departments come up before our committee and ask them if this amount is necessary to maintain the parks. They say that the maintenance costs a certain amount of money, and we have no way of knowing any difference. Of course, no part is spent for the flowers, which are supplied from the greenhouse.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tidal Basin bathing beach: For purification of waters of the Tidal Basin and care, maintenance, and operation of the bathhouse and beach, $15,000.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what process is used for the purification of water there? Have they found a satisfactory method of purifying it?

Mr. GOOD. They have a chemical plant, a chlorination plant at the inlet gate where the water comes in from the river. They chlorinate the water that goes into the basin during the bathing hours. The statement is made that it is operating very successfully.

Mr. GARRETT. I think in response to a Senate resolution a year or two ago on the matter of the inflow into the Tidal Basin an Army engineer reported that a certain amount of sewage was getting in there.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and that was the reason it was necessary to purify the water by the installation and operation of this plant. The committee asked Col. Ridley with regard to this matter both this year and last year. He says that the operation of that plant has been very successful and that there has been no objection to the water in the Tidal Basin during the bathing season.

Mr. GARRETT. I suppose that there has not been any practical method found of stopping the sewage inflow there, such as it is?

Mr. GOOD. I take it there has not been.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why not establish a sewage system instead of dumping it into the Potomac River and ruining all the sea food, for that is what you are doing at the city of Washington and the Naval Academy and all along.

Mr. GARRETT. I regret that I can not answer the gentleman in regard to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation of a ferry line from the vicinity of Seventh and Water Streets to East Potomac Park, $7,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the chairman of the committee inform me whether it is the intention of the Government to go permanently into the ferry business from Seventh Street over to East Potomac Park?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the Government has gone permanently into the ferry business. Congress authorized the purchase of the ferryboat and has been operating it for a long time.

Mr. TILSON. It authorized it a little over a year ago.

Mr. GOOD. And they carried about 15,000 persons in the year. They commenced that in 1919, there was an appropriation of $10,000 for the boat, and the receipts this year are pretty nearly $5,000. Last year my recollection is that the receipts were not more than half that amount, and it is estimated that within a year or two the receipts from passengers for taking them over across to the East Potomac Park will pay for the operation of the ferryboat; but we have the boat authorized by Congress, and this appropriation is just for the maintenance.

Mr. TILSON. Is it expected that this will continue to be operated by the Government itself? Is it not a temporary measure? I thought it was originally intended as a purely temporary matter in order to carry certain employees over and to accommodate a certain part of the public who were not being accommodated by anyone else.

Mr. GOOD. No. The Government now owns the ferryboat, and under the law is authorized to operate it. As far as I know there is no legislation pending from any legislative committee to sell the boat or stop its operation.

Mr. TILSON. What does the financial balance for the year show?

Mr. GOOD. We appropriated $7,000 last year, and we took in almost $5,000, which is a loss of $2,000 in operation. The year before there was a loss of about $4,000.

Mr. TILSON. In the hearings Col. Ridley speaks of $712.50 being taken in from the public. To what does that refer? That is on page 1047. I call the gentleman's attention to what is said in the hearings, which does not coincide with what the gentleman has just said.

Mr. GOOD. I am just trying to ascertain where I got my notes. My notes show that the receipts were larger than the amount indicated in the hearings.

Mr. TILSON. As I recall the testimony, they carried something like 17,000 passengers in a year and the total receipts taken in from the public were $712.50.

Mr. MADDEN. How much do they charge?

Mr. TILSON. Five cents a passenger.

Mr. GOOD. My notes are evidently in error. I think perhaps that some of the information obtained there was obtained from Col. Ridley when the stenographer was not taking down the hearings, and that evidently they must be the total receipts for the entire period of operation from 1919 on, because I notice, as the gentleman states, that the actual receipts last year were only $712.50. The gentleman is correct about it, and I am mistaken in regard to the amount of the annual receipts.

Mr. TILSON. So that, as a matter of fact, it is quite a losing business?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What is the real necessity for maintaining this small ferry at so great a loss?

Mr. GOOD. Congress has authorized it; that is the principal reason; and it was strongly contended that the growth in passengers carried was on the increase.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And, if the gentleman will yield, I think the real object in providing this ferry is to enable some one who can not afford to buy an automobile to enjoy the park; to make it available for citizens who are not able to get there in automobiles, who take the car line down Seventh Street and then take the ferry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. I notice that there is a golf course there of nine holes and that it is expected to increase it to 18 holes. Some people do get around by automobiles, but as I understand it this ferry is to accommodate the other golfers who do not happen to own automobiles?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not only golfers but people who in the summer want to go over there in the evening and get a little recreation and fresh air.

Mr. TILSON. Well, it would be a fine thing for people to have steamboats put at their disposal to get across the Potomac River over to the beautiful shores of Virginia, but we ought not to go into that kind of business.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think it would be a waste of money to appropriate money for the purpose of providing a park for those who are able to go in their automobiles and have this for a private golf course and place of recreation. My object in voting for these expenditures is to enable the people of the city who can not afford these luxuries to have a little chance to secure some recreation.

Mr. TILSON. How far is this paternalism to go? How far is the Government going into this sort of thing?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is not a——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. If we are going to supply the transportation to go across the inlet, why not do it on the street cars for people who can not pay their way?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Or across the ocean?

Mr. TILSON. It would be more economical to send the people around to this park by trolley if we are going into that kind of business.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, let the poor people walk. The rich can ride in chaises.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of roads and walks surrounding the Lincoln Memorial and roads and walks leading thereto from existing improved roads, $100,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, in line 25, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add these words: "to be immediately available and to be expended by the Lincoln Memorial Commission, including compensation of the special visitant commissioner authorized by the joint resolution approved March 29, 1920."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: There are only two commissioners who are left in the House—ex-Speaker CANNON and myself. We want to get this monument and all the accessories to it fixed, and unless this amendment is adopted the commission can not use one cent of this money until the beginning of the next fiscal year. We want to get it dedicated and through with and off the hands of the Congress before that time. It does not cost a cent; it simply makes it available.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixty per cent of the foregoing sums under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what his intentions are about continuing this afternoon?

Mr. GOOD. We have only read a few pages this afternoon. I thought we could read about 10 or 12 pages in the next 10 or 12 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Sit until 5 o'clock?

Mr. GOOD. We want to get further than that, because we have not read hardly any to-day, and if we are going to finish this bill we must get something done to-night.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In that connection, is it going to be the purpose of the gentleman to attempt to set aside Calendar Wednesday proceedings to-morrow?

Mr. GOOD. That is the purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement and maintenance of Executive Mansion grounds (within iron fence), $5,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this item can not be used for the purpose of improving the iron fence. I want to call the attention of the chairman to the condition of the iron fence and the coping on Pennsylvania Avenue that surrounds the Executive Mansion. The coping in many places is broken. No two stones are at the same angle, and it seems to me it is a disgrace for such a fence to surround the Executive Mansion; it does not add dignity to the presidential residence. While the function of the chairman is not to inspect fences, I hope that when the next appropriation bill is reported he will call attention of the one who has authority to present these appropriations to the condition of the wall and the fences.

Mr. GOOD. There was no estimate made for that.

Mr. WATSON. I know, but I was only saying that I hope in the next appropriation bill the distinguished chairman of the committee will make that suggestion.

Mr. GOOD. I will. I will look after the fences. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Lincoln Memorial: Custodian, $1,200; three watchmen, at $720 each; three laborers, at $660 each; heat, light, miscellaneous labor, and supplies, $3,500; extra services of employees and for additional supplies and materials to provide for opening the Lincoln Memorial to the public on Sundays and legal holidays, $1,750; in all, $10,590.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the chairman recall what the Lincoln Memorial has cost the Government?

Mr. GOOD. I do not recall the total amount appropriated for the Lincoln Memorial. There was no estimate this year, of course, the building having been completed, and that matter did not come before the committee.

Mr. FESS. When will it be dedicated?

Mr. GOOD. It is proposed to dedicate the monument some time when Congress is in session, during the coming extra session of Congress.

Mr. FESS. The date has not been fixed?

Mr. GOOD. The date has not been fixed definitely, or had not a month ago. It was intended to dedicate it last fall, but there was some objection to dedicating a monument of that kind when Congress was not here, and so the ceremony was postponed.

Mr. FESS. It certainly was a wise conclusion not to dedicate a monument like this in the absence of Congress. How long is it contemplated it will take to complete that reflecting pool?

Mr. GOOD. That ought to be completed well within the year.

Mr. FESS. So that by the end of the year the Lincoln Memorial in its plan and design will be complete?

Mr. GOOD. Unless Congress should desire at some time in the future, when costs are much less, to put the granite coping on the pool, and for which we have never appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation of $5,000 made in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, for unveiling and dedicating the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including erecting and taking down viewing stands and putting the grounds in sightly condition is made available for said purposes during the fiscal year 1922, and shall also be available for removal of so much of the iron part of the brick and iron fence on the east side of the Botanic Garden as in the opinion of the superintendent of the garden may be necessary to improve the surroundings of the said memorial. However, the large stone or brick gateposts on the east side of the garden shall be taken down to a level with the substructure which also is made of brick or stone.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the word "Garden," in line 24, page 61.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOWELL: Page 61, line 24, after the word "Garden," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to the reason for submitting this matter to the opinion of anyone with reference to the taking down of that fence. Is it not the opinion of everyone that it should be taken down?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. I have no objection to the amendment. The facts are that it has been discovered recently that a number of years ago Congress authorized the State of Pennsylvania to place a monument to Gen. Meade in the other part of the park, at the corner up along Pennsylvania Avenue, and sooner or later that fence will have to be taken down. It ought to be taken down now.

It is proposed to dedicate the Grant Monument some time this year. The entire monument is completed, except two casts or tablets that go into the side of the monument, and they are working on those now.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, assuming that everyone would agree that this fence should be taken down, I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FREAR. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he also wishes to strike out the first three words of line 23, in order to make the text read smoothly.

Mr. DOWELL. That is correct. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I want first to see whether I am correct or not. Is this fence along the Botanical Garden here, just west of the Capitol?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there ought to be a summary order for that fence to be taken down. Probably it is not known to the Members of the House that within the inclosure is about as fine a collection of rare shrubs as can be found anywhere, having been brought from all parts of the country, and there certainly ought not to be any movement to take that fence down until there is a place provided for them to be reset. And then, again, there are some exceedingly rare trees in this little plot of ground. I do not know what you are going to do with them, and I am quite certain the membership of the House does not want to see them destroyed. There is a tree planted by Abraham Lincoln. It is a very large one, and it certainly can not be replaced and be kept alive. There is another one planted there, that is known as the Grant tree, that I do not think can be replaced. There is a cedar of Lebanon growing there; probably that could be destroyed and another put in its place, because there is no particular personal element connected with it. But there are two trees, very large ones, one planted by the famous Edwin Booth and the other by Lawrence Barrett, the noted actors, standing on either side of the walk. There is no possibility of moving these and preserving them. To destroy those trees would, in my judgment, be sacreligious. Especially would it be grossly unwise to destroy these magnificent flowering shrubs that begin to flower early in the spring and continue up to the middle of the summer, the rarest that can be found anywhere. For us summarily to order that fence to be taken down without a provision for the transplanting of these trees and shrubs would be very unwise, it seems to me, and for that reason I think there ought to be some latitude given to the superintendent who has charge of that collection, and who more than any other person knows the significance of the botanical richness of that garden. He should be consulted in whatever is done there.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. GARRETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has not expired. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he was familiar with the fact that in order to make room for the Grant Monument a historic tree known as the Crittenden Oak was taken away? As a matter of interest, if the gentleman will procure the debate had in the House here at the time the question was discussed as to whether Congress would give its permission for the Grant Monument to be erected in the Botanic Garden, he will find some interesting reading. There was then standing, and there is still standing and still living, a tree planted by Senator John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, known as the "Peace Oak."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has an amendment.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] is going to withdraw his amendment, as I understand. I do not wish to take the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to complete my statement. There was quite a warm fight in the House of Representatives when the question came up giving permission to locate the Grant Monument in the Botanic Garden. At that time a gentleman by the name of William R. Smith was the Superintendent of the Botanic Garden, and he had held that position for over half a century. He was a very learned Scotchman. He had the greatest collection of Burns's works in America, I am informed, and one of the greatest collections of its kind in the world. He was very much devoted to that Peace Oak, the Crittenden Oak, and he predicated his whole opposition to the location to the Grant Monument in the Botanic Garden on the fact that that tree would have to be removed, and he thought in that case it would not live. The tree, however, was removed, and it was a very large tree, a larger tree than those that the gentleman from Ohio has mentioned; it was moved a few feet away. It is still living, although there is no assurance how long it will continue to live.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I hope the House will appreciate them, especially from the fact that the tree he refers to was planted by Senator John J. Crittenden, whose grandson it was who lashed Admiral Farragut to the mast of the famous Hartford. He is still living, now a very old man. I hope the membership of the House will regard a growing tree as a monument equally important to one made of marble or bronze. I hope the fence will not be taken down until proper provision for these trees and shrubs can be made.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] by striking out all the language after the figures "1922," on page 61, line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD to the amendment offered by Mr. DOWELL: Page 61, line 22, after the figures "1922" strike out all the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I am in accord with what has been said by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. FESS], that we should not make it directory, this important removal of the fence, in this appropriation bill. All this matter, I suspect, was subject to a point of order before we began to discuss it.

But I do not believe we should make it directory in an appropriation bill the matter of the removal of any fence or fences until those on this floor who know more about it than we do have a chance to be heard.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The item carried here was thrashed out a year ago, and is simply reenacted now because the ceremonies were postponed. It is not intended to remove anything except the iron portion of the fence which obstructs the view of the monument. It is not intended to take down any of the brick wall. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will allow the matter to stand as it was.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. I am hoping that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] will not prevail, because then there would be no authority to remove the fence at all. It seems to me we ought not to prevent it being removed; and with the hope that before the next year it may be removed I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa again asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monument to Francis Scott Key and others: For dedicating the monument to Francis Scott Key and others at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., $1,200, and for laying out and improving the grounds immediately surrounding the same, $6,800; in all, $8,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINTHICUM: Page 62, line 9, after the paragraph insert:

"And the President of the Senate is authorized to appoint three of its Members and the Speaker of the House of Representatives five of its Members as a committee to attend said dedication, without expense to the Government."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment providing for the appointment of three Members of the Senate and five of the House to attend, this summer, the dedication of the Francis Scott Key Monument now being erected at Fort McHenry, Baltimore.

This bill wisely provided for a limited expense of the dedication, and ample for the grading and preparation of the grounds surrounding the monument. I offer this amendment because of the fact that the people of Baltimore would not consider the dedication complete nor the Government properly represented without the attendance of a substantial committee from Congress.

To those Members who are not familiar with the legislation passed by Congress in 1914 and approved on the 29th day of July of that year, appropriating $75,000 for a monument to Francis Scott Key and others, at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, I particularly address myself.

On the 12th day of September, 1914, and for a week preceding that time citizens of Baltimore staged one of the greatest centennials of its kind ever held in this country. It was the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of North Point and Fort McHenry and the writing of the Star-Spangled Banner by that immortal man, Francis Scott Key. Congress, recognizing the importance of those events in the history of the Nation, both cooperated and encouraged the people of Baltimore in this great celebration, and by resolution authorized the inviting of the representatives of the various nations of the world. It caused to be repaired and reconstructed that old frigate Constellation, which then lay at anchor at Newport, R. I., at a cost of $50,000, and brought it to Baltimore for exhibition at the centennial.

The building of the Constellation was authorized by Congress on July 10, 1797, when Gen. George Washington was President of the United States, and when it appeared in Baltimore it was in splendid shape. It now serves as a student ship at Newport, though 123 years old. It is one of the last links between the administration of the Father of his Country and the present day.

Congress also turned over to Baltimore at that time the Fort McHenry Reservation to be used as a water-front park until the Government might again need it. No one at that time thought the Government would ever require it, but it was only a short time when the Great War broke out between the nations of the earth and Fort McHenry became a Great War hospital reservation, and now acts as such under the Public Health Service.

In one corner of the fort grounds there is also erected, by appropriations made about that time, the model immigration station of the country, for which Congress appropriated $550,000. Its plans and construction have been so approved by the immigration officers that Mr. Caminetti, Immigration Commissioner, said on one occasion that those to be built on the Pacific coast would most likely be built according to the same design.

I say, therefore, that to have the dedication of the Francis Scott Key Monument and not to have present a committee of Congress would not be very agreeable to the people of my city. This monument now to be dedicated by the National Government to that immortal poet is but a fitting tribute from the Government to my native State of Maryland for the heroism, generosity, and support of its people during the troublous times of 1812.

To the strong support of Maryland, and particularly of its metropolis, Baltimore, is largely due the successful termination of that war. It was a Baltimore man—Minister Pinckney—who asked for his leave of England, and was made Attorney General of the United States, and wrote the declaration of war.

Maryland gave to the war more officers, ships, and seamen than any other State. She supplied 46 officers, or nearly one-fifth of all the officers, of the American Navy. Virginia supplied 42, which was more than all New England. Baltimore supplied 51 privateers; Salem, 40; Boston, 32; and Philadelphia, 14; and the State of Maryland equipped over 100 privateers in all. It is estimated that the loss to England's commerce by the Baltimore privateer captures alone was over $16,000,000.

It was Commodore John Rogers, of Baltimore, who commanded the North Atlantic Squadron, and Stephen Decatur, jr., a native of Berlin, Md., who commanded the South Atlantic Squadron. It was Commodore Rogers, of Maryland, on the flagship The President who personally fired the first shot of the war at the British ship Belvedira. It was a Chesapeake crew, commanding the Constitution, better known as Old Ironsides, which captured the first frigate Guerriere, which was captured from Napoleon by Lord Nelson at the Battle of the Nile in 1798; and it was a Baltimore man, Christopher Hughes, jr., who sailed direct from Stockholm in the schooner Transit, landing at Annapolis February 11, 1815, who first bore the glad news of peace to Washington and the Nation before the ratified Treaty of Ghent, signed on December 24, 1814, had arrived.

The merchants of Baltimore loaned to the National Government $3,000,000, which was later assumed by the city of Baltimore, and became its first municipal debt. Finding no part of this fund available for the defense of the city, Baltimore raised $600,000 additional with which to fortify Fort McHenry, Fort Babcock—now Riverside Park—and Fort Covington—now Port Covington—all to-day within the limits of the city of Baltimore.

Because of her zeal and loyalty, Baltimore was singled out as the target for British vengeance. On the 17th of June, 1814, a newspaper published in London stated—

> The great expedition preparing at Bordeaux for America is destined for the Chesapeake direct. Our little army in Canada will at the same instant be directed to make a movement in the direction of the Susquehanna. Both armies will in all probability meet at Washington, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. Our naval and military commanders have no power to conclude any armistice or suspension of arms. They carry with them certain papers which will be offered to the American Government at the point of the bayonet.

After the humiliating sack of Washington, the British turned with renewed anger to attack Baltimore, to which the helpless National Government could offer no resistance.

The British, however, found strong fortifications to protect the city against their attack. Gen. Samuel Smith, a heroic Revolutionary figure, with a large force, had built fortifications over a mile in length from the harbor as far as the present Hopkins Hospital. Behind these were mounted over 100 cannon, with 10,000 troops. The citizens rallied as one man under Gen. Smith and toiled day after day with pick, shovel, and wheelbarrow until a great armament greeted the British when, after the Battle of North Point, they arrived within sight of the city and were compelled to retreat to their ships without a single shot. The Americans were so eager for the encounter they could not await their coming. When news reached Gen. Smith of the anchorage at North Point of a British fleet of 50 vessels, the most formidable fleet ever seen in American waters, Gen. Stricker asked leave to advance with a brigade of 3,000 men to draw them on. It is not recorded whether Gen. Stricker knew the manner of men he was to meet. Those men who landed on the 12th of September, 1814, were picked soldiers of Europe, the Duke of Wellington's Invincibles and Lord Nelson's victorious marines, all fresh from the conquest of Napoleon. The flush of victory had not yet subsided, and they came with the determination to occupy the seaport towns, to defeat the Americans, and to dictate terms, as the London paper said, "at the point of the bayonet." Stricker's brave defenders, however, whether knowingly or otherwise, feared not their enemy. They marched bravely forward to meet the conquerors of Napoleon on the battle field of North Point. Gen. Ross, with his 7,000 men, tarried to lunch. Gen. Stricker, with 300 voluntary skirmish party, advanced to draw them on. Gen. Ross, believing it incredible that the new Republic should have men so fearless as to advance against his British forces, proceeded to investigate, when he was shot down by American riflemen, and the command fell to Col. Brooke. A monument to-day stands for the two young men in Baltimore who brought down Gen. Ross. For an hour and a half the raw militia of the States held in check the veteran army numbering four times its strength. The day closed with a loss to the British of 500, as against 150 of the militiamen, only 20 of the latter being killed, the others wounded or disabled. Thus was fought the Battle of North Point and the retirement of the British to their ships and to the matchless defense that saved the Nation and checked the proposed attack upon Philadelphia and New York.

Then took place the attack upon that historical Fort McHenry; 16 bomb-and-rocket vessels bombarded the fort, throwing a constant shower of rockets and bombs, the latter weighing 220 pounds. Col. Armisted, in command of the fort, was unable to reach them except on one or two occasions when they came nearer. As the Army was retreating, a more severe bombardment than before was executed. Under the cover of darkness, as a last resort, several rocket vessels and barges, with 1,250 picked men, passed south of Fort McHenry and attempted to land. After passing the fort, they threw up rockets of rejoicing and to light a landing place. This, however, was their undoing, and caused Commodore Rogers's "invincible crew" at Fort Covington under Lieut. Newcombe, and Barney's flotilla men under Lieut. John Webster at Fort Babcock to pour into them a pitiless fire, sinking one barge with all on board and compelling the rest to retire. The enemy retired badly damaged under the fire from Fort McHenry and the Lazaretto. At a safe distance they continued to bombard Fort McHenry until morning. The bombardment lasted for 25 hours, and they are said to have thrown 1,500 to 1,800 great bombs, 400 of which landed in Fort McHenry.

Dr. William Beanes, who had encountered the displeasure of the British at Upper Marlboro in their march upon Washington, had been carried off in their fleet. He was a particularly close friend of Francis Scott Key, who visited the fleet at Baltimore to seek the release of his friend. Having boarded the Minden, one of the ships of the fleet, the British compelled him to remain until after the bombardment.

There he was during that memorable night when Fort McHenry was being so terribly assaulted. We can well imagine his anxiety as to the fate of the fort and the attack to be made upon the city wherein resided his family and loved ones. He and his friend paced the deck during that night of September 13. The bombardment ceased just before day. So long as the bombardment continued they knew the fort had not surrendered, but when it ceased before daylight it left them in great suspense as to the result. We may well imagine how earnestly they looked forward to dawn and sufficient light to relieve their anxiety. How happy they must have been when they saw that "the flag was still there." Key was stirred to the depths by patriotic fervor and devotion, and there wrote his song of rejoicing, "The Star-Spangled Banner," which has become the "Te Deum" of the Nation and its national anthem.

During the summer of 1921 this beautiful monument will be dedicated at Fort McHenry under the very shadow of the flag which is the successor of the one that waved to the breeze during that memorable siege of the fort and attack upon the city—a grateful commemoration of a glorious occasion, a monument to a name which is immortal to the millions of people who constitute the Government of the United States. The memory of the old flag which saluted Key on that morning of September 14, 1814, still lives in the hearts of the people, and the flag is stored in the archives of the Government.

To this celebration I take this opportunity of not alone inviting the committee which is to be appointed under my amendment, but in asking each and every one of you to come to Baltimore at that time and to become a part of this great celebration and meet the people of our city as well as enjoy their hospitality.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and other boundary and connecting waters between said lake and Lake Superior, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation, $125,000.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman what this appropriation is for.

Mr. GOOD. It is for making a survey of the northwestern lakes in the United States. That survey has been going on for a number of years, and it is thought that the entire work of making the survey will have been completed within two years.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It is an incomplete work?

Mr. GOOD. It is an incomplete work, a work in progress.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus, or commutation therefor, and necessary transportation, $50,000.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, line 7, strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$60,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York is not aware of the fact that this appropriation has to do only with soldiers in prior wars. It has nothing to do with the artificial limbs furnished soldiers in the recent war. It is the same amount that we appropriated in 1920. The present year it was the opinion that they would not use the $60,000. They asked for $60,000, and it was their opinion that they would not need the full $60,000 which they asked for; that they could get along with $50,000 owing to the great number of deaths among the Civil War veterans.

Mr. PELL. I am willing to rely on the gentleman's judgment, but I hate to see the economy made here.

Mr. GOOD. Most of this is paid out in commutation; they do not furnish the artificial limbs any more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES ON INLAND AND COASTWISE WATERWAYS.

For additional expense incurred in the operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways acquired by the United States in pursuance of the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Federal control act of March 21, 1918, and operated in pursuance of section 201 of the transportation act approved February 28, 1920, as follows: For terminal dock, South St. Louis, Mo., $400,000; cotton-handling equipment, Memphis, Tenn., $60,000; terminal dock, New Orleans, La., $400,000; storage bins for coal tipple, Cordova, Ala., $40,000; cargo-handling facilities, Demopolis, Ala., $25,000; mooring facilities, immigration station, Algiers, La., $25,000; and for operation, $300,000; in all, $1,250,000, to be available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $17,680 of this appropriation may be used yearly for the payment of experts, clerks, and other employees in the War Department in accordance with the provisions of section 201 (e) of the transportation act, 1920, approved February 28, 1920.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FREAR. It is upon the ground that it is new legislation and is not authorized by law. I wish I might have had opportunity to make a further examination into this, but I know that the chairman of the committee is very anxious to proceed with the bill, and, therefore, I am going to make my suggestions to the Chair without any particular preparation. The items are very important to examine, in view of the question that is raised. It is a new policy that the Government is undertaking, and no legislation of this kind, so far as I know, has ever been before the House.

For terminal dock, South St. Louis, Mo., $400,000; cotton-handling equipment, Memphis, Tenn., $60,000; terminal dock, New Orleans, La., $400,000; storage bins for coal tipple, Cordova, Ala., $40,000; cargo-handling facilities, Demopolis, Ala., $25,000; mooring facilities, immigration station, Algiers, La., $25,000; and for operation, $300,000; in all, $1,250,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; although I would like to make my statement first.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I merely want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the paragraph expressly states that the appropriations are made in obedience to existing law, citing the law, the act of March 21, 1918, section 6, Federal control act, and section 201 of the transportation act approved February 28, 1920.

Mr. FREAR. I thank the gentleman for the interruption, but I am about to read the law and also read from the hearings, if I may, to show the application of the law. I have here the transportation law, and I propose to read from section 201, which is cited as the authority for this legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I think this is going to bring on a pretty long discussion, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not do that, because I think we can dispense with the point of order and then go on with the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that the point of order is not well taken?

Mr. GOOD. I think that it is not.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am willing to wait.

Mr. FREAR. If that is the point, Mr. Chairman, then I make the point of order. If that is to be the disposition——

The CHAIRMAN. Sixty-two Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, indefinitely.

REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints on the committee which was authorized by the joint resolution concerning the reorganization of the departments the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

ENROLLED SENATE BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2371. An act for the relief of Kathryn Walker; and

S. 390. An act for the relief of Peter McKay.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman conferred with members of the Committee on Military Affairs, who have the call to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. I have talked with them about it, and they are entirely agreeable.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have a little bill that I understood was going to be considered.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee does not lose its place on the next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CALDWELL. The bill was objected to when it was reached on the Private Calendar by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I am told. It is a very meritorious case of a very poor woman, whose husband was a very good soldier. He was not a deserter, but his record was erroneously written in the War Department, in that on one part of his discharge it contained a statement that he was discharged on the 3d of July and in another on the 29th of May. I want to ask the gentleman if he will consent to taking up that bill? It will take only a couple of minutes to pass it.

Mr. MONDELL. We could not make that arrangement, because if we started on Calendar Wednesday business the committee, of course, would want to use its day. When the committee starts on Calendar Wednesday——

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, I did not mean on Calendar Wednesday, but, let us say, one day next week.

Mr. MONDELL. The next day that Calendar Wednesday is reached the gentleman can have his bill called up.

Mr. CALDWELL. I understand; but I can not get here all of the time, for I am trying to restore myself to the practice of my profession.

Mr. MONDELL. It is just a week from now.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wonder if the gentleman will consent to give me the opportunity one day of this week to call up that bill?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not within my jurisdiction to do that. I could not help the gentleman in that regard.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman ask unanimous consent for me? I am satisfied the Republicans will agree to his doing so where they would not for me.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not feel I would be justified in asking unanimous consent for the consideration of a private bill. We have unanimous-consent day and we have Private Calendar day. We hope the gentleman's bill will be reached in time, but I think I would hardly be justified in making a request in regard to a particular bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. I really want this case passed and I can have it passed on if I object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. That will not help the case.

Mr. GOOD. Because a motion can be made to dispense with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CALDWELL. You will not be able to move it to-day, and I doubt very seriously if you have a quorum to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. We would have to do that in the morning, and this would save a roll call.

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not want to be nasty about this thing, but I do like to get a square deal from my colleagues. This is a case of very great merit, and I think it ought to be acted upon, and I am asking the gentleman who leads the majority if he will not help out this poor woman——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, well, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. GOOD. Well, this woman will have her pension.

Mr. CALDWELL. You can do as you please, but we will take our chances of fighting on and endeavoring to secure it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 5, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, an executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

292. Letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting list of publications of the Navy Department issued for free distribution or sale during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11325) granting a pension to Tinnie A. Gary; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 15174) granting a pension to Peter Edwin Fitzpatrick; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FAIRFIELD: A bill (H. R. 15510) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and the standardization of compensation therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 15511) to amend section 6 of an act approved January 17, 1914, entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 15512) to acquire site for distant-control radio station in Porto Rico; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 435) authorizing the President of the United States to accept the invitation of the Commission of the League of Nations to send a representative to the disarmament commission conference; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CRAMTON: Resolution (H. Res. 629) amending the rules of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 630) authorizing the consideration of a new section in House bill 15441, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 15513) granting a pension to Mary E. Hulen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 15514) for the relief of Edith Kreger; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: A bill (H. R. 15515) granting an increase of pension to William Weddington; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 15516) for the relief of Barton H. Newell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MANN of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 15517) granting an increase of pension to Clara L. Conklin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 15518) for the relief of J. A. Leslie; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15519) for the relief of Bessie B. Fowlkes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 15520) granting a pension to Sallie Blevins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 15521) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Fortier; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15522) to validate the war-risk insurance of Warren O. Grimm, Dale Hubbard, Arthur McElfresh, and Ben Casagranda, who were murdered while parading in the uniform of the United States Army at Centralia, Wash., November 11, 1919; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4811. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of several councils of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, favoring the recognition of the Irish republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4812. Also (by request), petition of Topeka Motor Trades Association, Topeka, Kans., favoring the repeal of the present revenue laws; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

4824. Also, memorial of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Columbiana, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Sheppard-Towner bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 5, 1921.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou art rapidly changing our to-days into yesterdays and thus teaching us how to redeem our time. So help us to understand these passing moments. Speak with importance to others as well as to ourselves, that we may serve our generation by Thy grace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, a Senator from the State of Mississippi, appeared in his seat to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McKellar	Simmons
Ball	Harris	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Harrison	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Heflin	New	Spencer
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Stanley
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Swanson
Edge	Kenyon	Phipps	Trammell
Elkins	Knox	Pittman	Underwood
Fletcher	La Follette	Poindexter	Wadsworth
France	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Glass	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams

Mr. MCNARY. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resignation of Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS, a Senator from the State of Colorado, as Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, and appoints as his successor Hon. A. O. STANLEY, a Senator from the State of Kentucky, and directs the Secretary of the Senate to inform the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution of this action.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under Senate joint resolution 191, to create a Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government, the Chair appoints as members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate joint resolution 237, making appropriations for inaugural ceremonies.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I told the Senator from Pennsylvania, I have no objection to taking up the joint resolution this morning, but I do object until routine morning business is disposed of.

Mr. KNOX. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution, in the nature of a memorial, of the faculty of the University of Georgia, of Athens, Ga., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the exploitation of commercial water power in the national parks, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the mayor and council of the city of Brunswick, Ga., in favor of the enactment of legislation providing for the regulation of the coal industry by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER (by request):

A bill (S. 4780) to regulate the practice of the science of chiropractic in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MCKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4781) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4782) making it unlawful for unauthorized persons to wear the insignia of any organization of war veterans chartered by act of Congress; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4783) for the relief of David Thygerson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4784) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916; and

A bill (S. 4785) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," approved August 29, 1916; to the Committee on the Philippines.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 4786) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to create in the United States Coast Guard the rank or grade of chief gunner, electrical, and to transfer thereto all the present incumbent supervisors and assistant supervisors of telephone lines in the Coast Guard; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 4787) granting consent for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Delaware River from the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to the city of Camden, N. J., and also to consent to an agreement between the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey and the city of Philadelphia for the construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4788) for the relief of Charles A. Mayo; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4789) to reimburse David J. Williams for cash shortage due to theft of public funds; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 4791) providing for the retirement of officers of the Marine Corps by reason of injuries or disabilities resulting from operations against the enemy; and

A bill (S. 4792) providing that warrant officers of the Marine Corps shall be commissioned chief warrant officers under the same conditions as commissioned warrant officers of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4793) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Arthur E. Rump; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 238) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REGULATION OF HOTELS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCUMBER. I introduce a bill which I ask may be read by the Secretary, as it is very short. I invite the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who is a member of the District Committee, to it, as the chairman and the acting chairman of that committee are absent at this time.

The bill (S. 4790) to prevent extortion by owners or proprietors of hotels and public rooming houses in the District of Columbia during the occasion of the inauguration of the President of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation owning, operating, or conducting a hotel or public rooming place in the District of Columbia to charge a higher rate for the use or occupation of a room in such hotel or public rooming place from the 1st day of March, 1921, to the 7th day of March, 1921, inclusive, than the average charge per day made for such room or other room in said hotel or public rooming place of substantially the same character, during the months of December, 1920, and the months of January and February, 1921.

SEC. 2. That it shall also be unlawful for any such person or corporation to demand or exact from any person or guest any agreement that such person or guest shall continue in or pay for the occupancy of such room for a longer period than one full day, as a condition of the letting of such room.

SEC. 3. Any person or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined $1,000 for each day's violation thereof.

SEC. 4. That in addition to the aforesaid fine, any person who has been charged a price for the occupation or use of such room in excess of the aforesaid average charge shall have a right to recover in a civil action from such offending person or corporation a sum equal to five times the amount paid by him.

This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to offer the contents of House bill 14461, which is the immigration bill, as an amendment to House bill 15275, the so-called emergency tariff bill.

I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment providing for visual education materials and for increasing the appropriation for said materials, textbooks and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades, etc., from $100,000 to $122,000, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that the treaty of Versailles with Germany be ratified with certain exceptions. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and at an early date I shall seek an opportunity to discuss certain provisions of it before the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 419) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by joint resolution passed upon the 6th day of April, 1917, declared that a state of war existed between the United States and Germany and authorized the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to prosecute said war to a successful termination; and

Whereas the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy did upon the 11th day of November, 1918, in conjunction with the Allies and associates of the United States in said war, enter into certain articles of armistice whereby there was a cessation of belligerent operations and the establishment of a de facto status of peace between the United States and Germany; and

Whereas the President of the United States and the delegates of the United States duly accredited did upon the 28th day of June, 1919, at Versailles negotiate and sign certain articles of peace, designated the treaty of Versailles, which articles contain covenants upon the part of Germany which inure to the benefit of the Government and people of the United States and which establish a lawful status of peace between the United States and Germany; and

Whereas Germany has irrevocably signed and ratified said treaty of Versailles and is irrevocably bound upon the covenants therein contained, including the covenants which inure to the benefit of the Government and people of the United States; and

Whereas the Government and people of the United States can not obtain the benefit of said covenants in their favor without a ratification of said treaty and an acceptance upon the part of the United States of said covenants which inure to the benefit of the Government and people of the United States; and

Whereas Part I of said treaty of Versailles comprised of articles 1 to 26, inclusive, being the articles of the League of Nations, constitute in form and effect a treaty between the States which were allied and associated in the war against Germany; and

Whereas Germany is not a party to said articles of the League of Nations and is not a member of the League of Nations by virtue of her ratification of the treaty of Versailles or otherwise; and

Whereas States which were neutral in the war between the United States and Germany and which were not parties to said treaty of Versailles have acceded to said articles of the League of Nations without becoming otherwise parties to said treaty of Versailles; and

Whereas Part XIII of the treaty of Versailles comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive, is ancillary to the articles constituting the League of Nations and have the same status and relation to said treaty of Versailles as the articles constituting the League of Nations; and

Whereas the establishment of a legal status of peace between the United States and Germany and the acceptance of the covenants upon the part of Germany, which inure to the benefit of the Government and people of the United States, do not require that the United States accede to articles 1 to 26, inclusive, constituting Part I, and to articles 387 to 427, inclusive, constituting Part XIII of the treaty of Versailles, to which articles Germany is not an effectual party; and

Whereas it is impossible at this time that the Senate of the United States, two-thirds of the Senators concurring, agree to advise or consent to the ratification of Parts I and XIII of the treaty of Versailles, or agree, two-thirds of the Senators concurring, to any revision or amendment of the articles comprising said Parts I and XIII of said treaty; and

Whereas the ratification of the treaty of Versailles by the United States can not by means of reservations, qualifications, or conditions be made the instrument of such revision or amendment of the articles constituting the League of Nations as would be acceptable or agreeable to the United States; and

Whereas the revision and amendment of the articles constituting the League of Nations can only be effectuated by the action and recommendation of the assembly of the League of Nations and the ratifications of the States which are members of the League of Nations; and

Whereas the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate, may hereafter accede to said articles constituting the League of Nations in the event that the same be revised and amended in a form acceptable to the United States, and that the obligations of the United States be defined and qualified as may be agreed upon between the United States and the members of the League of Nations; and

Whereas it is not incompatible with the interests of the United States that the League of Nations discharge the duties and functions committed to the league by the treaty of Versailles, including the granting of mandates with regard to territories in Africa and Asia, the government of the Saar Basin, the government of the free city of Danzig, the control of the Polish communications, the supervision of the internationalized waterways of Europe, and the supervision of commissions and bureaus created by international conventions; and

Whereas it is imperative that the acceptance by the United States of the terms of peace with Germany as embodied in said treaty of Versailles be not longer delayed, that a permanent status of peace with Germany be established and proclaimed, that diplomatic and commercial relations with Germany be resumed, and that impediments to the execution of the treaty of Versailles as affecting the interests of the United States and of the allied and associated powers be removed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the treaty concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, be ratified, excepting the articles 1 to 26, inclusive, constituting Part I, and articles 387 to 427, inclusive, constituting Part XIII of said treaty, and that the aforesaid exceptions be expressly included in the act of ratification.

INAUGURAL EXPENSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). Morning business is closed. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has asked unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of Senate joint resolution 237. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 237) to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 4, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 11, after the word "appropriated," it is proposed to strike out "$50,000" and to insert "$10,000."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before the roll call proceeds, if it be in order, I should like to ask that the amendment be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska is to strike out "$50,000" in the joint resolution and to insert "$10,000."

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have temporarily a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent to-day, and I promised to pair with him until he should be here. Therefore I must withdraw my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am informed that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am paired, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to cast my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily detained from the Chamber on account of a committee meeting.

I also desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are absent on official business; and that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] are absent by reason of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—8.

Borah	Gronna	La Follette	Norris
Fletcher	Kenyon	McKellar	Phelan

NAYS—43.

Ashurst	Capper	Edge	Harris

Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	Ransdell	Watson
Gay	Keyes	Reed	Williams
Glass	King	Robinson
Gore	Kirby	Sherman
Hale	Lodge	Shields

So the amendment of Mr. NORRIS was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the joint resolution, it is proposed to add the following:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby prohibited from incumbering or permitting the incumbering with stands, platforms, seats, benches, or other obstructions any of the parks, reservations, streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District during the period from February 28, 1921, to March 10, 1921, both inclusive.

The Secretary of War is hereby prohibited from incumbering or permitting the incumbering with stands, platforms, seats, benches, or other obstructions any of the public parks, reservations, streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District during said period: Provided, That the foregoing provisions shall not apply to the White House grounds nor to Jackson or Lafayette Squares.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Washington that he is linking together two separate and distinct matters. The committee which has asked for an appropriation to carry out the will of Congress, namely, to conduct the inauguration ceremonies at the Capitol, has nothing whatever to do with what transpires in the city. It seems to me that we ought, out of regard to our own dignity, to conduct our own affairs separately and apart from the affairs of the city in connection with the approaching inauguration.

Furthermore, Mr. President, if the precedents indicate anything, they indicate that the commissioners and the Secretary of War can not do the things that are proposed to be prohibited by the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, unless they have the affirmative authority of Congress; and the matter will come before Congress, either upon their own application or in some other way, so that we can deal with it in a separate measure. Therefore, I hope that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania takes a very peculiar position. He does not argue anything upon the merits of the amendment, but, simply because it may not be within the jurisdiction of his committee or for some other more or less technical reason, he urges the Senate to vote it down. It is true his committee may not have any jurisdiction over the subject matter of the amendment, but the Senate certainly has, and I am proposing this to the Senate and not to the committee. The Senate can put any legislative provision upon the joint resolution that it sees fit to put there. There is nothing in its rules nor in the law to prevent its doing so, and I have presented the amendment simply because I think that the action it proposes ought to be taken.

The other suggestion of the Senator that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia will have to come to Congress to secure authority before granting permits for the erection of stands, and so forth, I do not understand to be correct. I understand the commissioners now have general authority of law to grant permits for putting up such obstructions, and it is for the purpose of taking away that power of the commissioners with reference to the occasion of the approaching inauguration that this amendment is offered.

Mr. President, this is substantially the joint resolution which was introduced yesterday by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have taken the liberty of copying that resolution and making some minor changes in it and offering it as an amendment, because I think this is the time for the Senate to express its views with reference to the matter.

If the Senate thinks these stands ought not to be erected, it ought to say so. Of course, if the Senate should conclude, solely for the reasons presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania, not to put this amendment on the joint resolution, the District Committee would feel justified in considering the measure; but it seems to me that everybody knows the purpose of this amendment. Everybody knows what will be done here if the erection of these stands is not prohibited. Everybody knows what has been done heretofore, and it seems to me that it is a simple matter for the Senate to say whether it desires these obstructions to be placed on the streets and these charges, and all that sort of thing, imposed upon people that come here to see the inauguration.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I introduced yesterday the joint resolution that has been offered in a modified form as an amendment to the pending joint resolution reported by the committee, I feel that I ought to say that while I am heartily in favor of the joint resolution that I introduced yesterday I do not think it ought to be attached to this measure. This is a single matter. It relates wholly to the construction of a platform and seats in front of the Capitol for the inauguration ceremonies. The committee of which I am a member have confined their work expressly to this and nothing else; and however meritorious this other matter may be, I do not think it ought to be attached as an amendment to this joint resolution.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from Minnesota, because there is a committee here that is raising a large amount of money; the various States of the Union are considering the sending of delegations and participating in this great demonstration; and it seems to me that here in the District and elsewhere the people are entitled to know to what extent Congress is in sympathy with the demonstration that is proposed to be had here on the 4th day of March. Therefore, if action is to be had expressing the view of Congress, it ought to be had now, and this is a very proper place in which to express it.

As for myself, I believe this appropriation ought to go through as recommended by the committee; but in view of the condition of the country and in view of the great depression that exists, I think this inauguration ought to be completed in so far as any great demonstration is concerned when the oath of office has been taken by President Harding here in front of the Capitol. I do not believe that Congress should appropriate another dollar for any other purpose than the strictly official proceedings contemplated by this committee.

Mr. President, I noticed in the papers not very long ago the suggestion that in addition to the inaugural ball there should be a popular dance given upon the Plaza here in front of the Capitol, and, while not saying so in those words, it conveyed the idea that the inaugural ball should be held for the aristocracy, that the peasantry would be permitted to dance upon the Plaza, and that perhaps some of the aristocracy might look upon them for a few moments and permit them to view the distinguished personages.

Mr. President, in view of present conditions in the country, it seems to me this ceremony should be made as simple and as dignified as possible. Because I want the opportunity to vote to have the inaugural ceremony as proposed by the committee a dignified, impressive occasion, but do not wish to go any further than that under the circumstances, I shall vote for this amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I think I shall move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, because it opens up an entirely new question.

I am not desirous of having it understood that I am at all out of sympathy with the purpose of the amendment. I want this ceremonial to be just as dignified as possible. Personally, I really do not feel at all impressed with the stories I read in the newspapers, which proceed from the imaginations of young reporters, as to what is going to happen to the "peasantry" and the "aristocracy." That makes no impression at all upon me. I do not think there is anything in contemplation along the line that has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin. Although I am not a member of the committee having charge of the functions outside of the inaugural here at the Capitol, I am quite in touch with them, and I am sure no such project is on foot.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in view of what has been said here about the probability of requests for future appropriations, I think it well enough that the Senate should at this time understand just about what is in contemplation.

I know of no intention on the part of anybody to ask for the use of any Government building for the purpose of giving an inaugural ball. I think Senators may just as well dismiss that from the apprehensions under which some of them appear to suffer. As to future appropriations, all that I know of that is likely to be asked in that line is a sufficient sum to provide for the proper policing of the District of Columbia for whatever crowd shall come for that occasion and making provision for their comfort and safety through the construction of information booths and comfort stations about this town.

Yesterday some Senator on the floor said that it would be necessary to bring here a lot of detectives and police from other cities. That will be necessary. It is necessary, Mr. President, wherever a large crowd is congregated. Of one thing the Senate may rest assured, and that is that whether they want them or not the people from Nebraska, the people from Idaho, the people from Indiana, and the people from other States are coming here for that occasion. They come whenever the administration changes. It is a national event of quadrennial occurrence, and the people come.

They will be here without regard to what action Congress takes, how much or how little Congress appropriates; and the only thing that is contemplated, so far as I know, is to ask sufficient funds of Congress to provide for the safety and the comfort of the people who will be here when that event transpires.

I have said this for the sole reason that I have been asked to present, a little later on, a bill or joint resolution which shall cover the purposes to which I have made reference in these few remarks. That is coming. As I understand at present, it will not exceed $60,000. I think, all things considered, the amount to be asked for in the various bills is not excessive.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator speaks of $60,000 that he will ask. May I ask him for what purpose it is to be used?

Mr. NEW. For additional police, many of them from other cities, comfort stations, information booths, and things of that kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the additional police, I assume, are for the purpose of protecting the people who come here against theft, robbery, and so forth. Is that correct?

Mr. NEW. The ordinary dangers incident to the assemblage of large crowds.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I was trying to get at is what provision is being made for the utilization of this money to prevent the people from being robbed by the hotels and by the rooming houses. I know that if, during this parade, a man holds up on the streets of the city somebody who is visiting here and extracts $50 from his pocket he probably will be sent to the penitentiary for 10 years; but how about the hotel that holds up a visitor for $100 a day, and then commits the offense seven times over during the week, and insists that it shall hold him up seven times for $100 a day? Is any protection being afforded to the public along that line?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not know that there is. No one has yet presented a bill on the subject, and I think that will be a matter for discussion at the time such a bill is up for consideration, whenever that may be. I merely made this statement in order that Senators might have a thorough understanding about what is to be expected of Congress—the total for this whole event.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was wondering whether the extra police are simply to protect the people against the little pickpocket that is around on the streets, and whether nothing is to be done to protect the people against the big robber who robs a man of six or seven hundred dollars because he desires to come to the city of Washington during the inaugural week.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether he means to say that the only governmental expenditures contemplated here are the $50,000 provided in this joint resolution and $60,000 for police, to be provided in another joint resolution? Are those the only governmental expenditures contemplated in connection with this inaugural proceeding?

Mr. NEW. The only ones of which I know.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, the Senator is speaking simply of those of which he has knowledge as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Senator, of course, knows that already provision is being made in the appropriation bills to bring the cadets here at a cost of $37,000.

Mr. NEW. That is another matter. I am not speaking of that.

Mr. BORAH. I know it is another matter. It is another matter and another matter that we are dealing with. The fact of the business is, as I said yesterday, that this is just the first step, but the Congress will be responsible for it all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the effort of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to protect the public who shall be here during the week of the inauguration from the little thefts and injuries and from robbers, if there should be any attempted holdups; but I do hope that the Congress of the United States will take cognizance of the bigger robberies which have been perpetrated ever since I can remember upon the public during the inauguration week. I think we have become so inured to the Treasury being held up and to the public being robbed that we do not take into consideration any large theft at all. It is only the little fellows we are looking after. The Republican committee did a good work for the country, I think, during the recent campaign. At the same time, delegates who were selected for the Republican convention, and attended at Chicago, were, every one of them, held up for five times the value of every room they occupied.

I think the time has come when we should call a halt against offenses of this kind. The District of Columbia is under the complete control of Congress. We Republicans on this side of the Chamber have been condemning the administration because of its awful extravagance, and especially because it allowed the Government to be held up and the people pratically to be robbed for the three years and one-half since we declared war. I think we ought to begin to make good, and the place to start is right here, in the city of Washington, when we inaugurate the President, who has pledged himself, and his party backed him in that pledge, to check the robberies against the Treasury of the United States and of the public themselves.

I am making this little plea at this time in the hope that the Committee on the District of Columbia will take some action, and take it immediately, upon the bill which I have introduced or amend that bill in such a way as to bring it before the Senate and the House and have it acted upon and protect the people who will come here during the inauguration week.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit a statement?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am in hearty accord with the Senator's suggestion and have an amendment myself prepared along the same line to offer to the resolution now before the Senate. But when the Senator introduced his bill he called my attention to it as the acting chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Senator is mistaken in that. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is the ranking member of the committee in the absence of the chairman, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator misunderstood me. I said he was the only member of the committee present, and that the acting chairman was absent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while I think I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, yet I believe we will be in somewhat of an inconsistent position if we adopt it. I agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] that we ought to protect the public, and I am in favor of the bill he introduced this morning. Of course, we can not add it to this resolution, which is, I understand, a concurrent resolution, and the amendment suggested by the Senator from North Dakota is in the shape of a bill. I hope, with the Senator from North Dakota, that the District Committee will report it, and report it at once, and that we will pass it immediately, although I doubt it very much.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand this is a joint resolution; but whether it is a joint resolution or not, we can put such a provision on it.

Mr. NORRIS. The joint resolution can be amended by the addition of the bill the Senator proposes, if that be a proper amendment. I was under the impression that it was a concurrent resolution.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] made some suggestions about some necessary appropriations, and what he suggested are necessary. I do not believe anybody will dispute for a moment that proper police protection for the immense crowds who will come here to view the inaugural ceremonies is absolutely necessary, and we ought to provide for it. That is not an unnecessary expenditure of money.

I thought we ought to commence our economy at the beginning; but the Senate by almost a unanimous majority decided against a reduction of the appropriation named in the joint resolution. It voted down almost unanimously an amendment to strike out $50,000 and insert $10,000, so that the Senate has gone on record in favor of building a large platform on the east side of the Capitol which will seat about 10,000 people who will be able to get the favor of Members of the House of Representatives or of the Senate in order to get seats. It does not seem quite right that we should say to the balance of the people who can not find favor with some Representative or Senator that they must stand up. It hardly seems right that we should say that there should be no other seats erected along the line of the parade, after we have accommodated ourselves and our friends by the expenditure of $50,000 of money in order to do it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does the Senator say that the parade is a part of the inauguration?

Mr. NORRIS. No; not necessarily; but the parade will take place, and I suppose it will be considered part of the inauguration; at least the people will want to see it. If there is a parade, and there will be one, I would like to accommodate them and let them see it, if I can do it without the expenditure of public money. If seats are built along the parks and along the streets, it is not supposed that we will have to provide for it out of public funds, but what we are doing for ourselves and for our friends we are paying for out of the Treasury of the United States. That is where the inconsistency comes in, and it does not seem to me that I will be quite consistent when I favor this proposition and oppose the other.

Mr. President, we ought to economize somewhere, but when the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] speaks of $37,000 that is going to be appropriated to bring the cadets here, he probably forgets that there are going to be detachments, regiments, and battalions of Artillery, Infantry, and Cavalry that will be transported from all parts of the United States to Washington and back again, so the $37,000 will be nothing but a bagatelle as compared to the other expenses that must be paid for by the taxpayers of the country. If we erect this great big platform here to seat our friends and pay for it out of the public funds, are we not really in duty obligated to give our friends whom we have provided at public expense a place to sit, something that will pay them for sitting in the seats in the inclement weather? So ought we not really to encourage the balance of the program, and has not our action already encouraged it? Has it not already been decided that we shall have the balance of the program carried out in accordance with the first thing that we have mapped, the erection of a great platform on the east front of the Capitol for our friends, paid for at public expense?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator think that it would be better to change the amendment offered to the joint resolution so as to provide that these seats may be built, but that the sidewalks shall not be obstructed so as to prevent people from passing, and also to regulate the charge for the use of such seats? I agree with the Senator that people who shall congregate along the Avenue should have a place to sit, if they desire to be seated, and pay a reasonable price therefor. We should safeguard that matter in the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think if we give them permission to erect the stands, we ought to regulate the price.

Mr. HEFLIN. People who have automobiles will drive up and park along the sidewalk and they will sit and be comfortable while they watch the parade, and other people who desire seats should have the opportunity to obtain them by paying a reasonable price, because this parade will last for hours. It seems to me that there ought to be seats on the sidewalks along the avenue, but they should not be permitted to obstruct the sidewalks.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, he is raising up false hopes that are going to be dashed to the ground. I would like to know where you are going to get a seat for 50 cents on that day. They will be nearer $5.

Mr. HEFLIN. The prices of seats should be regulated and Congress should see to it that the prices of these seats are reasonable and not unreasonable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I send to the desk another amendment, which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add, at the end of the joint resolution, the following:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make all regulations necessary to prevent, during the period from February 28, 1921, to March 10, 1921, both inclusive, charges by hotel keepers, restaurant keepers, or other persons furnishing lodging, or meals, or lodging and meals, greater than those charged for such or similar service on January 1, 1921. Such regulations shall be promulgated two weeks prior to February 28, 1921, and shall be printed and published in one or more of the daily papers in the District of Columbia to be designated by the commissioners, and in such other manner as said commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with such regulations.

Any person violating any of such regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction of such offense, be fined not less than $100 and not more than $1,000, or sentenced to imprisonment in the workhouse of such District for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Prosecutions for such offenses shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I realize that this is subject to the same objections that were urged to the other amendment, and I have no doubt that the objections urged by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] were really the reasons which actuated the Senate in rejecting that amendment. I have the assurance of some of my good friends on the floor here that if we will leave this off this joint resolution, and bring in a bill from the District Committee covering these matters, they will support it and vote for it. That is very encouraging. That would give us some hope that we will be able to get action along these lines.

Mr. BORAH. It is more encouraging now than it will be after you get the bill reported.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think the vote on the last amendment was very encouraging at the present time. I do not think we will lose anything by relying somewhat upon the assurances of our friends who are so heartily in favor of the joint resolution that is pending.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does the Senator think that this amendment of his will protect our visitors from the extortions which he anticipates will otherwise be imposed upon them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is hoped that it will, if it is adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand the amendment limits the charges to those which are now prevailing?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator knows how high the present charges are. But does the Senator think that what I suppose he would call the robbery going on now would not be increased if we did not try something of this kind?

Mr. THOMAS. It might possibly be increased; but that would only be a relative relief.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. The average man who is obliged to come here at present generally has to get his ticket home in advance, if he is to return home at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If we do not get something of this kind, we will not even get relative relief.

Mr. THOMAS. I will support the amendment, but I do not see that it is going to help matters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was sure the Senator would support it, though it probably will not accomplish all that the Senator would like.

Mr. KING. Would it not be a good idea and answer the purposes of the Senator to have the District Committee report a bill immediately authorizing the District Commissioners to fix the rates of compensation to be charged by public innkeepers, and prohibit them from increasing those rates without an appeal to the commission and obtaining permission so to do?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I am going to bring my remarks to a close, and also probably close action on my amendment by stating that the proposition submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] I think covers the situation much better than the amendment which I prepared hastily but which is prepared very much in the language of a resolution which we adopted once before in connection with an inauguration providing especially for the regulation of charges for hacks, and so forth. I think the resolution offered by the Senator from North Dakota covers the matter much better than mine, and in view of the apparent attitude of the Senate and of the very controlling reasons that would no doubt actuate it in voting upon the amendment at this time, and feeling satisfied that we will probably get a unanimous vote in favor of something of this kind in the very near future, I withdraw the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. KNOX. I was only going to suggest the wisdom of sending it to the Committee on the District of Columbia, because I think in its present form it is rather ineffective. What is the use of undertaking to control the price of meals if we do not also control the quantity of the meals? Beefsteaks ought to be of the same size. One egg ought not to be served for breakfast where usually they serve two. If we are going to protect the public, we shall have to go into these details.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If I thought the Senator was really serious I would have a different opinion of him than I really have. I do not think he means that at all in the sense in which he stated it. I withdraw the amendment, and I hope that the District Committee will take up the matter in the very near future.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 414, authorizing the Committee on Patents to hold hearings. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

ANTHONY SULIK.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12337) to provide for the relief of Anthony Sulik, former sergeant, United States Marine Corps, and in behalf of the committee I ask for its immediate consideration.

The facts, very briefly, are that the bill passed the House without objection after having received favorable report from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, that it was investigated very carefully by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, and the committee are unanimously of the opinion that the bill is meritorious and ought to pass at this time. I therefore ask that it may receive immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the Senator explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. Anthony Sulik was in the service, and while he was out with an expeditionary force of a dozen men on a very meritorious service he was reported absent without leave, was court-martialed, and the court-martial retired him, of course. The real facts were that when a future investigation took place it was found that he was not away from his service, but was doing an important and very meritorious service, and that everything done by the court-martial was done under a misapprehension. The report exonerates Mr. Sulik fully, and I can not think of a more meritorious case.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether officials of the Navy Department have recommended the passage of the bill?

Mr. PAGE. They have. I have here a letter from the Navy Department, in which the matter is set forth fully, and the department recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. When was the court-martial proceeding had?

Mr. PAGE. Sulik was tried under general court-martial, then in France, on the charge that he ran away from his company, which was then engaging the enemy, and was absent from about 7 a. m. July 18, 1918, until 4 p. m. July 20, after the engagement was concluded. He plead not guilty, but was found guilty and sentenced to be reduced to the ranks, dishonorably discharged, and to forfeit all pay and allowances, and to be confined at hard labor for 20 years. It was actually shown by reliable evidence that during the period of alleged unauthorized absence he was engaged in conducting a number of German prisoners to the rear.

Mr. KING. The bill is only for his restoration?

Mr. PAGE. Yes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Anthony Sulik, former sergeant, United States Marine Corps, be, and he is hereby, relieved from all disabilities, including loss of pay and allowances attendant upon the dishonorable discharge received by him pursuant to the sentence of an Army general court-martial, published in General Court-Martial Order No. 103, Second Division, Expeditionary Forces, France, dated October 20, 1918, while detached for duty with the Army by order of the President, the amount of pay and allowances forfeited by him pursuant to said court-martial sentence to be reimbursed to him from the current appropriation for

"Pay, Marine Corps": Provided, That the service of the said Anthony Sulik shall be computed as though he had served continuously in the Marine Corps from the 16th day of November, 1914, to the date of his release as a general court-martial prisoner, and as though he had been honorably discharged on that date: Provided further, That he shall be granted all the rights, benefits, privileges, allowances, and gratuities to which he would have been entitled had he not been dishonorably discharged pursuant to the said sentence.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if there is nothing else before the Senate I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 4746) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, in relation to forcible entry and detainer."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 20 of an act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, in relation to forcible entry and detainer, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"(a) Whenever any person has forcibly entered upon the prior actual possession of real property of another and detains the same; or

"(b) Whenever any person without force unlawfully enters upon the real property of another and unlawfully and forcibly detains the same; or

"(c) Whenever any tenant in person or by subtenant holds over after the termination of his lease or expiration of his term or fails to pay his rent for five days after the same shall be due; or

"(d) Whenever any mortgagor or grantor in a mortgage or deed of trust to secure a debt or any person claiming under such mortgagor or grantor subsequent to the date of such mortgage or deed of trust shall unlawfully detain possession of the real property conveyed after a sale thereof under such deed of trust or a foreclosure of the mortgage; or

"(e) Whenever a judgment debtor or any person claiming under him since the date of judgment shall so unlawfully detain possession of real property after a sale thereof under execution issued on such judgment, it shall be lawful for the municipal court on complaint in writing under oath by the person aggrieved by said unlawful detention, or by his agent or attorney having knowledge of the facts, to issue a summons to the party complained of to appear and show cause why judgment should not be given against him for restitution of the possession of such real property: Provided, That in all cases arising under subdivisions (b), (c), and (d) five days' notice to quit, exclusive of Sundays and holidays, must be given to the tenant, subtenant, or party in possession before proceedings in the municipal court can be instituted, such notice to be served in the same manner as provided for the services of notices by section 1223 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided further, That in any case of failure to pay rent after due as provided in subdivision (c) the notice to quit shall be in the alternative and require the payment of rent or the surrender of the real property detained within five days after the service of such notice. And in the event of the payment or tender of the amount due as rent within such period of five days no action for possession shall be maintained."

SEC. 2. That section 1218 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is hereby repealed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as I understand the bill, it changes the law as to the remedy of owners of property in cases against tenants, which is almost universal throughout the country. Nearly every State in the Union has a system by which comparatively inexpensive and speedy hearings may be had in controversies of this kind. It is a very important matter, and I think there are a number of Senators who are interested in it who are not present at this time. Therefore I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	New	Smoot
Ball	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Beckham	Harrison	Nugent	Sterling
Borah	Heflin	Overman	Sutherland
Calder	Kellogg	Phelan	Townsend
Capper	Kenyon	Phipps	Trammell
Dial	King	Pittman	Underwood
Dillingham	La Follette	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Edge	Lenroot	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	McCumber	Simmons	Williams
Fletcher	McKellar	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
France	McLean	Smith, Md.
Gerry	Nelson	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. The amendment is in print, and proposes to insert an additional section as follows:

SEC. 2. The remedy provided herein shall not be available to any landlord as against a tenant who regularly pays or tenders rent at the rate at which he is occupying, and who offers to pay thereafter the difference between the amount thereof and any sum which the Rent Commission appointed under the act of Congress approved October 22, 1919, shall find to be just and reasonable rental of the premises.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what the purpose of this bill is and what its effect will be. Is it for the purpose of enabling tenants who have been occupying and who are now occupying premises in Washington to hold those premises indefinitely if they tender the rent?

Mr. BORAH. No. The proposed change in the law consists of the requirement to give notice to quit and also a 5-day notice before bringing an ejectment suit. We have endeavored so to frame the bill that the landlord may get rid of the tenant who refuses to pay the rent, and, on the other hand, so that the tenant who is willing to pay the rent—either the rent which is fixed by the lease or the rent which is fixed by the rent commission—can not be ousted.

Mr. KING. Does that permit the tenant who is willing to pay the rent previously agreed upon to occupy the premises indefinitely?

Mr. BORAH. No; it does not; but if the amount to which the landlord desires to increase the rent is determined to be fair by the rent commission, then the tenant, if he pays the rent, may continue to occupy the premises; that is, so far as the pending measure is concerned.

Mr. KING. But there is nothing in the proposed act which will prevent the owner of the premises from getting possession of the premises for his own use or for leasing to some other person, is there?

Mr. BORAH. No. Of course, if the landlord increases the rent and the rent is found to be fair by the rent commission, the landlord, under this proposed act, can not exclude the tenant; but if the rent is found to be reasonable and the party fails to pay it, then the tenant can be excluded.

Mr. KING. What becomes of the act if the rent commission shall be abolished or shall cease to function in any way?

Mr. BORAH. Then that part of the act would cease to be effective, of course.

Mr. KING. Then in what manner could the landlord obtain possession of the premises?

Mr. BORAH. He could then take possession of them absolutely, whenever he got ready, by giving five days' notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, before the amendment is submitted to a vote, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to a provision in the present rent commission act. I think his amendment will include a class of landlords which really ought to be excepted from the general operation of the amendment which he now proposes. I call the Senator's attention to a part of section 109 of the present law, which reads as follows:

The rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner—

And so forth.

It seems to me that the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho would be to deprive the owner of the property who wants to get possession of the property for his own use and his own occupancy or the occupancy of those dependent upon him from securing such possession.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. If I correctly caught the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho I think the Senator from South Dakota is in error. The amendment relates to the question of rent; it only goes to the question of whether the landlord will accept the finding of the commission as to the rent. The commission, as I understand, has no jurisdiction of the other question, whether or not the landlord wants the property for his own use.

Mr. STERLING. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho refers to any tenant "who regularly pays or tenders rent at the rate at which he is occupying, and who offers to pay thereafter the difference between the amount thereof and any sum which the rent commission appointed under the act of Congress approved October 22, 1919, shall find to be just and reasonable rental of the premises."

So that, as I understand its reading, the amendment would prevent the owner of the property who wants to occupy it for himself from gaining possession. I think that is the proper construction.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, that does not seem to me to be the proper construction at all. The amendment relates only to the question of rent and the increase of rent. The intention is to reach a case where, for instance, an owner has leased property for a given time at a stipulated rental, and then goes to the tenant and says "I am going to increase your rent; you have got to pay more rent or you have got to get out." If the landlord who asks for an increased rent will not accept the finding of the commission, then he can not have the benefit of this proposed legislation; that is all there is to it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I must respectfully disagree with the construction put upon this provision by the Senator from Minnesota. The original bill, Senate bill 4746, reported by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] from the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for the Ball bill, provides the conditions under which an action for forcible entry and detainer may be maintained. It applies to all classes of cases; it applies to cases where the premises have been forcibly taken from the rightful owner; it applies to those cases where the lease has terminated by expiration of time according to the terms of the lease, and it applies to those cases where there has been a failure to pay rent. It also applies to cases where there has been a judgment and an execution and a sale of property under execution. It applies likewise to cases where there has been a sale of the property under foreclosure of a mortgage or trust deed, and prescribes the notice that must be given.

The main difference between the bill offered by the Senator from Idaho and the present law is that the present law, section 20 of the code of laws of the District of Columbia, which relates to forcible entry and detainer, permits a landlord to resort to court proceedings to evict the tenant in the first instance without giving him any notice at all; but the bill reported by the Senator from Idaho provides that in all cases of the termination of the lease, in all cases where there has been a failure to pay rent when due, in all cases where the party has held over after a sale of the property under execution or foreclosure, notice to quit must be given in order that the tenant, the one holding over, may not be put to the expense of defending a lawsuit without any notice or time to make other arrangements or to find other property which he may occupy. That is the main difference. Now comes the Senator from Idaho with a further amendment, which provides in effect that—> the remedy provided for herein shall not be available to any landlord as against a tenant who regularly pays or tenders rent at the rate at which he is occupying, and who offers to pay thereafter the difference between the amount thereof and any sum which the rent commission appointed under the act of Congress approved October 22, 1919, shall find to be just and reasonable rental of the premises.

Therefore, contrary to the law as it is now, contrary to section 109 of the rent commission act, the man who owns the premises and has nowhere else to go but to the premises occupied by his tenant whose term has expired or who fails to pay his rent can not get possession of his premises unless the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the bill reported by him is further amended.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Idaho ought to be amended so as to include this language:

> Provided, however, That the rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself or his wife, children, or dependents, as provided by section 109 of the rent commission act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota about the case where the owner of residence property desires to obtain possession of it to convert it into some other kind of property. Neighborhoods are constantly changing. The owner might want to remodel it entirely and make business property out of it and rent it for a store. Ought he not to have a remedy to recover it for that purpose or any other lawful use that the owner sees fit to make of his property?

Mr. BORAH. I think he would be protected in that particular instance. So far as the question of bona fide residence is concerned, I think the Senator from South Dakota is perhaps correct; but if the owner desires to change the property and rent it for business purposes, undoubtedly he could fix the rent accordingly, and undoubtedly the commission could pass upon that, and if the party would not pay it he would have to get out. In other words, I think the man who desired to rent his property for another purpose would be fully protected. The man who wanted to occupy it himself as a bona fide proposition perhaps would not be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would depend on the discretion of the rent commission to take into consideration the changed condition the property would be in if the owner had an opportunity to put it in that condition, but which it was not actually in at the time. It would be rather a precarious question, I should say, as to whether or not the rent commission would give him relief under those circumstances.

Mr. BORAH. I invite the attention of both Senators to this proposition: The particular phase of the question which this amendment presents, and which the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota presents, is that they profess to want the property for themselves when they do not.

Mr. STERLING. It may be, Mr. President, that some men will profess to want it when they do not want it; but, of course, there are cases where they do want the property, and want it to occupy it for themselves. That may be true; we can not avoid some evasions of the law, probably; but it would be a great hardship and an injustice, it seems to me, to prevent the owner of property, on the termination of the lease or on failure to pay the rent by tenant, from getting possession of the property when he wants to occupy it himself, or wants it for the use of his family or his dependents.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, he has the other remedies to get possession of it. It simply takes away this particular remedy.

Mr. STERLING. He has a remedy by ejectment, yes; by going into the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and perhaps being kept out of possession for a year or two years. He has that remedy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator offer the amendment indicated by him?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I offer it now. I have not it written out, but I can indicate it. I send the proposed amendment to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, the following proviso:

> Provided, That the rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment, if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner provided by section 1223 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia," as provided by section 109 of Title II of the act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, and "To regulate rents in the District of Columbia," approved October 22, 1919.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I confess my entire inability to follow the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota so as to understand its significance, although I have in mind clearly the idea that he desires to express. I hope it may be presented in some more readily comprehensible way.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Montana that in the amendment I have followed the language of section 109 of the food control and rent act, which provides that the rights of persons who desire to get possession of property for their own use and occupancy shall not be subject to the limitations of the act. That is the substance of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand the idea that the Senator desires to express. He desires to give in this statute the same right that is accorded to the owner under the rent statute.

Mr. STERLING. Exactly; that is the purpose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think we might safely do that; but I have not been able to follow the reading so as to know whether or not the language of the amendment is open to any criticism. Will the Senator himself undertake to read it now so that we can understand it?

Mr. STERLING. I will read it, if I may have the copy that I sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that the whole amendment be read as it will read if amended.

The reading clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 2. The remedy provided for herein shall not be available to any landlord as against a tenant who regularly pays or tenders rent at the rate at which he is occupying, and who offers to pay thereafter the difference between the amount thereof and any sum which the rent commission appointed under the act of Congress approved October 22, 1919, shall find to be just and reasonable rental of the premises: Provided, That the rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment, if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner provided by section 1223 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia," as provided by section 109 of Title II of the act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, and "to regulate rents in the District of Columbia," approved October 22, 1919.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word in regard to the further reading. I do not think the whole title of that act need be given, as just read by the Secretary, but it can be referred to as "the food control and rent act" approved on such a date, I do not recall the date.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not think we can act understandingly on this matter without a rather more careful presentation of it. At least, we ought to have the amendment before us. The trouble about it is that the amendment now tendered by the Senator from South Dakota contemplates that the rent commission continues as a regular functioning body. As I understand the purpose of the amendment now tendered by the Senator from South Dakota was to meet the condition that would arise even if the rent commission act were found to be entirely ineffective. In other words, if the tenant offered to submit the matter to the rent commission for determination, not as an official body at all, but practically as a board of arbitrators, then the remedy by forcible entry and unlawful detainer would not be available against the landlord. Now, I am in entire sympathy with the idea proposed by the Senator from South Dakota that that really should not apply to the case of a man who desired to recover premises which he had rented, the term of the lease having expired, which he desired to use for his own family purposes, his living place, or perhaps even if he desired to tear down the building and construct a new building.

But the amendment now tendered by the Senator from South Dakota for that purpose proposes that the question as to whether or not a new building shall be erected shall be submitted to the rent commission for determination. That contemplates that the rent commission is a regular going institution. If it is, we scarcely need any legislation upon this subject at all, because the rent commission will probably take care of it; that is to say, if there is any controversy, and you go to the rent commission, the rent commission will determine it. The idea of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was to make the rent commission a stipulated board of arbitration. It might be anybody else, for that matter, just as well as the rent commission. What I am afraid of is that the thing would be entirely inoperative if the rent commission act should be determined to be unconstitutional and ineffective.

I see no reason for including in the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota all of that portion of the language which refers to the procedure which is to be taken before the rent commission if one wants to get a tenant out for the purpose of rebuilding. Apparently he must get the consent of the rent commission to erect a new building. I would not like to encumber the measure with that idea.

Because the Senator from Utah has expressed the idea that he did not apprehend the character of the legislation, I beg the indulgence of the Senator to state briefly my view of it. The bill proposed by the Senator from Idaho is substantially a reenactment of the present forcible entry and unlawful detainer statute of the District of Columbia, except that under that no precedent notice is required before proceedings are instituted. Under this bill five days' notice must be given before the proceedings are instituted and demand upon the tenant either to pay or to get out. If he pays, then the remedy is not available.

The difficulty about it is that the remedy, if thus enacted, would permit a landlord who is demanding an exorbitant rent of his tenant to resort to the act and eject his tenant, and it is supposed to give some protection to the tenant. The amendment proposes, accordingly, that this remedy for forcible entry and unlawful detainer shall not be available to a landlord against a tenant who pays or offers to continue to pay at the rate under which he is occupying and to pay any additional sum which the rent commission may find reasonable. So it will be available against the tenant who refuses to pay his rent, or neglects to pay his rent, but will not be available against the tenant who pays his rent or offers to continue to pay his rent, and also to pay any additional sum that may be held by the rent commission to be reasonable. It is now suggested by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that it ought to be available to a man who wanted to occupy the premises for his own use, and to that I agree. But it seems to me that the language offered by the Senator from South Dakota will make the whole thing inoperative providing the rent commission act is found to be unconstitutional.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit an inquiry, I would like to inquire of him what effect the bill would have upon a case of the character I shall state. The Senator will recall that there has been very much criticism of some lessees who have leased premises and then sublet the premises for extortionate prices. The original landlord gets only a fair rent; but the tenant, through the process of subleasing, obtains extortionate prices. Would the bill permit the original lessee who is subletting to retain possession of the premises if he tendered the amount which was originally agreed upon, or such an amount as might be found to be due by the rent commission, and permit him to continue subleasing at the extortionate prices which he has been charging?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is nothing in the bill which meets that situation of affairs. That we will have to try to take care of by some other legislation. Of course, the pending rent bill takes care of it; the price is fixed, but I apprehend that the practice of subleasing is pretty much an affair of the past, and it does not take care of that situation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Montana how this language would suit him:

Provided, That the rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself or his wife, children, or dependents or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment, if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What is the significance of the language "if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing"?

Mr. STERLING. We want to provide, if not that, "that upon serving the notice as herein provided," or "upon giving the notice as herein provided," referring of course, to the five days' notice heretofore provided of some kind. The question is as to whether there should not be under these circumstances a longer notice required than simply the five days' notice in the ordinary action of forcible entry and detainer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Under that a person desiring to build would have to make an application to the rent commission for leave to build and would have to give 30 days' notice that he was going to make the application.

Mr. STERLING. I do not understand that he would have to make an application for leave to build.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, what does it mean?

Mr. STERLING. It may bear that construction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why not stop when you say that it shall be available to the man who bona fide desires the premises for his own use, or for the purpose of razing the building or allowing it to be torn down?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think I appreciate the objections made by the Senator from Montana. If I have the time, and this matter can go over for the present, I think the amendment can be put in better form, because I think it highly desirable that we protect that class of landlords, those who want the possession of property for their own use, and they are not protected under the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Montana stated the amendment, it seems to me, in very good shape. Would the Senator from South Dakota be willing to accept it as stated by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STERLING. I think so.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Montana state it again?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My suggestion was to cut out the last part of it, which refers to the application to the rent commission, and permission by it, and just end it up with the statement that it shall be available to a man who wants to occupy the premises himself or to tear down the buildings and erect new ones.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, as I understand the bill, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, it would permit the tenant in a building here in the District of Columbia to maintain possession of his apartment or house at the expiration of his lease and that he could not be put out of the house except for nonpayment of rent. Under the Senator from Idaho's amendment the tenant could refuse to pay an increase in rent at the expiration of his lease and could retain possession by depositing his rent and the increase demanded with the rent commission, and they would determine the amount he was to pay. The bill gives to the rent commission the right to say just what the landlord's profit upon his property may be.

I know, Mr. President, that there is great provocation for legislation of this character, and I know, too, a measure of almost the same kind has been enacted in several of the States—in my own State, in Massachusetts, and in New Jersey, in those three States to my knowledge. But the effect of legislation of this character has been to stop the construction of tenement and apartment houses, and while, as I say again, there is need for something to stop the tremendous raises in rents here, as in other parts of the country, as certain as we pass this legislation it will impede the building of any more apartment houses in this city.

I want Senators to understand that and to clearly know what they are voting upon when they pass this bill. I have been studying this subject and endeavoring to afford facilities to encourage men to build houses, because I believe that the way to solve the housing question and the tenantry question is to build more houses. But legislation of this kind will not encourage the building of more houses; it will stop the building of houses. If Senators pass this legislation they will be responsible for stopping building, and Senators should understand this fact before they vote upon it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in lieu of the amendment already offered, as a substitute therefor, I offer the following amendment, beginning with the sentence "The rights of the bona fide holder" and going to the word "apartment," if the Secretary will read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute as modified.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move as an amendment to insert after the words "tearing down" the word "remodeling."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is out of order. This is an amendment to an amendment. The Senate can vote on the amendment to the amendment and then add further language.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to change the amendment just offered by inserting the word "remodeling," as suggested by the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed modification will be stated.

The READING CLERK. After the words "tearing down" insert the word "remodeling," so that it will read:

Or for the purpose of tearing down, remodeling, or razing the same.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I object to that amendment. It seems to me that it opens up too wide a field. It would very likely give rise to a question difficult to adjudicate. My landlord may want to remodel my apartment by calcimining the wall, by putting in some inconsequential addition, taking out a partition, or something of that kind, which would be remodeling it. It seems to me it would be resorted to as a pure excuse for an evasion of the law.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say that it came to my knowledge probably two years ago that that very method was resorted to in certain apartment houses here on the theory that they were trying to convert them into hotels, and thereby displace tenants who were prompt in paying a reasonable rent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I trust that amendment will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, we would like to have a chance to vote on that particular part of that amendment if possible.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, so far as I can do so, I withdraw the amendment last suggested, the addition of the word "remodeling."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification is withdrawn and the question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, in a case recently decided, the case of Hirsh against Block, which is found in Two hundred and sixty-seventh Federal Reporter, page 614, dealt with the question of the rent commission, which is mentioned in the amendment just adopted, and which was established upon the general proposition of jurisdiction of the Government to regulate the question as to what should be charged by an owner of property for its lease——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will suspend. The morning hour having expired the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from North Dakota, who is in charge of the bill, is absent at this moment, but I think in his absence I can say that he desires to go ahead with the consideration of the bill unless the matter which has been before the Senate can be disposed of in a few minutes; if it is not going to bring on any debate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it will take some time to dispose of the bill which has been under discussion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we ought to go ahead with the unfinished business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, under the head of unfinished business I would like to complete in just a word the statement which I was making with reference to the decision of the Court of Appeals of the District upon the rent commission and upon the constitutional question of the right of the Government to fix rentals. They held that no such constitutional power was vested in the Government. I cite this case in order that it may be available in connection with the discussion of the bill which has just been before the Senate should it come before the Senate again.

The court of appeals, on page 618 of that case, said:

Coming to the validity of the act, we have held in the recent case of Willson v. McDonnell (49 App. D. C., 265 Fed., 432), considering an act of Congress similar to the one before us, that the provisions of the Constitution which protect persons and property are uniform in their operation throughout the United States. In this respect, there is no distinction between the District of Columbia and the States of the Union.

There is nothing in the history of the Constitution or of the original amendments to justify the assertion that the people of this District may be lawfully deprived of the benefit of any of the constitutional guaranties of life, liberty, and property. (Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S., 540, 550; 8 Sup. Ct., 1301, 1304 (32 L. Ed., 223).)

But what are the rights of which plaintiff has been divested, if the present act is held to constitute a valid defense to his action for possession? Plaintiff had a vested estate and reversion in fee in the property in question to come into possession on January 1, 1920. Defendant's right of possession terminated on December 31, 1919, by the express terms of his lease, a contract valid and existing when this act was passed. This right of reversion is a property right, of which plaintiff can not be divested, except by due process of law. The act gives defendant the option of retaining possession of the property at the rental fixed in the lease, which is continued in force; or, if dissatisfied, he may apply to the commission for a reduction of the rent. If reduced by the commission, plaintiff is powerless to have a review of the facts upon which the action of the commission is based. Not only is plaintiff denied any remedy for this continued detention of his property, but he is forbidden to sell his property, except subject to and burdened by the option of the tenant. It would seem, therefore, that if the property clauses of the Constitution are longer to have any restraining power over Congress, the case here presented is one within the inhibition of the fifth amendment.

There is still further discussion of the constitutional question in the opinion of the court to which I have just called attention. I will conclude what I have to say about the matter with the suggestion that originally the regulation of rentals and the interposition of the Government to avoid abuses which seemed to exist, was considered by Congress because we were in a state of war, and there was a certain liberality of action by Congress in addition to the recognized war power which the Constitution of the United States vested in the action of Congress while we were engaged in the war.

But the effort seems to be to continue this governmental interference with private property and with private rights, and with the ordinary laws of supply and demand, frequently defeating its own purposes, as I think was very soundly suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who is an experienced man in such matters, by reason of the fact that in such a case as this, for example, it discourages people from building houses for rental. We are attempting now to continue that character of legislation in time of peace, actual peace although not technical peace. It seems to me there should be very grave consideration given to the matter before it is acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington if there was not a dissenting opinion in that case?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The chief justice dissented.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before the discussion is closed I merely desire to add that the act to which the Senator refers did not rest by any means solely upon the war powers of the Government; at least it was very urgently urged, when the matter was under consideration, by members of the committee from which the bill emanated, that the power might very properly be exercised under the general power of government to legislate generally concerning the District of Columbia. It was insisted by members of the committee who had the matter in charge that it was not necessary to have recourse to the war powers of the Government at all to justify the legislation. That is the view, as I understand it, taken by the chief justice of the court of appeals.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had that in mind in the statement which I made a moment ago. I did not confine the reference which I made to the actual invocation of the war powers of the Government, but to the exercise of the discretion of Congress, even under its peace powers, in a much more extensive and more liberal way in time of war than in time of peace.

It is not only a question of power, but it is also a question of policy. What is a good policy for the Nation in time of war, even though it may have the same power in time of peace, which I do not believe it has in this case, may not be good policy in time of peace. That was the point which I desired to make. It is a question of how long we were going to continue the course of governmental intervention in private business and in private property matters after the war is ended.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AUTOMOBILES.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am going to take just a few moments to read a letter which I have received from a citizen of Washington, and I do it because I do not want to take the time to call the waste mentioned in the letter to the attention of each one of the departments of our Government. I hope that this statement will be taken as a request that the waste mentioned in the matter will be obviated in the future:

To-day when going down North Capitol Street I saw a Ford mail wagon belonging to the post office here standing at the curb across the street in front of the Government Printing Office. There was no one in the mail wagon and the engine was running. I watched this truck for five minutes by the watch and the driver did not appear. I do not know how long it had been running that way before I saw it, nor how long it continued to run. Are you Senators up there appropriating money to buy gasoline to burn like that? I would like to know, as I am a taxpayer and voter from the West. I understand this is a violation of the law of the District. Now, this is not the first time I have seen mail wagons left standing on the street with the engine running, and I hope you will take this matter up with the police department and have this driver fined. The wagon was No. 1503 and the District license No. 563 and the time was 1.12 p. m., Monday January 3, 1921. The postmaster can doubtless furnish the police with the name of the driver and he can be made an example of.

It is a little thing, but I have noticed it upon the streets of the District of Columbia in going from department to department. While this may be a small item in one case, yet with thousands and thousands of cases it will amount to a great deal. I hope that some instructions will be given by heads of the departments that this practice will cease.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to invite my colleague's attention to a matter about which a number of taxpayers have written me, so that the Committee on Appropriations may make an investigation. I am not sufficiently advised as to whether the matters criticized are within the law. The letters to which I refer state that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of employees of the Government in the Army, in the Navy, and particularly in the Public Health Service, who have Government automobiles at their disposal and at the disposal of their families, and which are being used indiscriminately; that is to say, without regard to public business. I have seen thousands of automobiles in the District marked "For official use only," which I know were being devoted to private services.

It seems that every officer in the Government, especially in the War Department, must have an automobile. I find that many of the Public Health Service doctors and employees in various other departments have automobiles. I do not know whether the law authorizes the use by Government employees of thousands and tens of thousands of automobiles, and I venture the assertion that there are more than 100,000 Government automobiles employed in the various departments not for public service.

Mr. SMOOT. The law strictly prohibits the use of Government automobiles for private purposes. I know that the statement made by my colleague at least in part is true. The practice ought to cease. When it will I can not say. I do know that there is an awful expense attached to it. I simply hoped, in reading the letter, to call the attention of the departments to the practice and see if it can not be stopped.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Heflin	McKellar	Smoot
Borah	Hitchcock	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Johnson, Calif.	Overman	Stanley
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sterling
Curtis	Kellogg	Phelan	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	Poindexter	Townsend
Elkins	Kenyon	Pomerene	Trammell
Fletcher	King	Reed	Underwood
Glass	La Follette	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gronna	Lenroot	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Harris	McCumber	Smith, S. C.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. KNOX, and Mr. BALL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. EDGE, Mr. NEW, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. Without objection, the order to the Sergeant at Arms is vacated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, shortly before November 7, 1919, the Secretary of War invited Mr. KAHN, of California, and myself to drop into his office, and at the interview held at that time he requested us to introduce into the House and Senate, respectively, the bill which is now the unfinished business before the Senate. I consented to do so, taking pains to say that I could not then commit myself to support all the provisions of the measure. A perusal of the bill at that time convinced me that it related more to an agricultural project than to a military problem; and while it is probable that the Secretary of War asked me to introduce the bill on account of the fact that I happened to be chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, when I introduced the bill I asked that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I may say in passing that Mr. KAHN, who introduced the duplicate bill in the House, had it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House; so that the two Houses are approaching the consideration of this very important problem through unrelated committees.

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate held extensive hearings, which are contained in the volume which is at the disposal of Senators, and listened to expert testimony presented by the War Department, including the Secretary of War and his assistants, and by some persons from outside, who discussed the general question of the production of nitrates and their values, and by some persons who appeared in opposition to the measure.

I think it is fair to say that most of the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry were completely bewildered by the maze of technical testimony having to do with the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen. I know, for one, that after I had listened for many hours to the testimony my ideas and opinions were pretty well confused as to just what the truth was and what the future held in the matter of the development of this most important industry.

When the hearings were finished the members of the committee held some desultory discussions concerning the industry and the disposition of the Government property at and near Muscle Shoals, and, if my recollection is correct—and I am quite sure it is—several members of the committee indicated their disagreement with some of the provisions of the bill. I was among those who stated the belief that it should be very radically amended before reporting it to the Senate. Later on, however, just before the close of the last session of Congress, the committee decided to report the bill practically as it was. I regret that I was not present that day when the committee decided to report it.

I do not think I am inaccurate when I say that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has given very little consideration to the structure of this piece of legislation. Certain phases of it were discussed in the most casual and brief manner, and it was perfectly apparent that many members of the committee believed that it was susceptible of vast improvement; but no concerted effort was made in the committee to improve it or amend it in the slightest degree. It was reported practically as introduced, and is before the Senate in that form.

At the time the committee reported the bill I informed several of my colleagues upon the committee that I had hoped to offer amendments, and certainly I would do so when the bill was taken up in the Senate; and I was informed by some of my colleagues on the committee that they, too, expected to offer amendments, and that the committee's action did not forestall such action on the part of individual members.

A study of this volume of hearings is a pretty difficult undertaking. Like many hearings, the topics are not discussed in sequence, and a discussion of strictly practical business problems is interwoven with a discussion of such technical elements in this situation that it is hard for anyone to start at the beginning and read through the 500 pages and form a real judgment when he finishes. I find, however, that in the House of Representatives the so-called Graham committee examined into this Muscle Shoals situation and discussed at some length the proposals of the War Department as reflected in this bill; and the report of that committee, which is No. 998 of the House of Representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, I recommend to the attention of Members of the Senate, for it is far more compact and understandable than the hearings which were held before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate.

Now, let us see what has given rise to this problem and to this proposed legislation.

Back in 1916, when the national defense act was under discussion on the floor of the Senate, an amendment was offered, I think by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]—perhaps I am mistaken as to that——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from New York that I was heartily in favor of the amendment and proposed a similar amendment, but I do not want to take the credit of the amendment that was actually adopted. It was offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was mistaken, then.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I was heartily in favor of the amendment as offered, and should have been glad to be responsible for it, although I was not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. An amendment was offered to the national defense act of 1916 on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. It became section 124 of the national defense act as finally passed, and it appropriated the sum of $20,000,000 for the purpose of erecting a dam or a series of dams, I think not to exceed three in number, in the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals in northern Alabama.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I hope the Senator will get that part of it correct. The bill which I introduced, and which finally became an amendment to the national defense act, was a bill to appropriate $20,000,000 for the purpose of erecting these plants or developing the power wherever, in the judgment of those charged with the responsibility, it was thought best. No specific place was designated in the bill at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is quite true.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And it limited to three or four, I think, the number of sites that the Government might consider under the terms of that bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, perhaps I have technically misstated the purport of section 124 of the national defense act; but there is not a Senator on this floor who does not know that Muscle Shoals was written between every two lines of the discussion. The whole discussion was on Muscle Shoals, and I do not think I am far from the truth, at least, when I say that section 124 of the national defense act was for the purpose of appropriating $20,000,000 to build a dam in the Tennessee River.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. And, in that connection, was it not well understand that at that time the American Cyanamid Co. proposed to furnish $24,000,000 and the Government $20,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was; and the whole discussion was in and around Muscle Shoals.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is indirectly impeaching the good faith of another Member of this body. I was the author of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely I have no intention of doing that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is exactly what I want to correct; and the Senator can not make that statement in the light of the facts that I am going to give, because I know he wants to be fair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. When I introduced that measure it had been brought to my attention that this country, in case of any kind of involvement in that war, was absolutely dependent upon a foreign source for its supply of explosives. It so happened that the very ingredient that we needed for war was the prime ingredient needed for agricultural purposes. I introduced the bill. There was brought to my attention a certain prejudice against Muscle Shoals. I had not given it very great study, and I, in conjunction with my collaborators on that bill, so worded it and put it through this body in such a manner as to give those having the administration of that law and the execution of its purposes the right to examine the different sites throughout the country. The Senator from Alabama, hoping that the site at Muscle Shoals would be the one that would prevail, attempted here on the floor, as he will bear me out, to get certain amendments that tended in that direction. I, on the floor of the Senate, did everything in my power, and the bill was so worded as to give the department having it in charge the power to examine all other sites and to locate it wherever they thought best.

It is not accurate to say that written between each line of the measure was "Muscle Shoals," or that the intent and purpose of it was to have the plant located at Muscle Shoals. I drew the bill myself, with the cooperation of those who were familiar with the technical terms involved, and did all I could to keep from having a taint about it that it was for and in the interest of the cyanamid company. The fact of the business is that the cyanamid company seems to be the one that is now perhaps jeopardizing this splendid piece of constructive work, and that, even if we fail to pass this bill, some Congress will come that will utilize the resources of this country for the benefit of its people.

I hope the Senator will understand that when he makes the statement here that the bill was conceived and born in a spirit and purpose to put this plant at Muscle Shoals it is not true, because I was the author of the initial legislation that started it and had the support of those who were then prejudiced against locating the establishment at Muscle Shoals. After it got out of my hands and out of the Senate, if certain influences were brought to bear that carried it there, the blame does not lie here; but they took 18 months to decide where to put it. My State bid on certain water powers and offered certain facilities, but it finally was placed at Muscle Shoals, as I understand, because the power there is perhaps superior to any other in the whole country at large.

I think we had better discuss this matter from the standpoint of a national asset, and if there is a sinister influence, then let us view it in the light of what is necessary, rather than say that we are suborned here by outside influences.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like to have a chance to answer the question of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yielded for a question, but it seems to me the interruption was a little too long for a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator made a personal reference in this matter, and I simply wanted to make a short statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has used the word "taint" and the word "sinister" and the expression "subornation by outside influences." I had not the slightest intention of giving the idea that there was anything wrong about building this dam in the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals. I was simply giving my recollection of the character of the discussion upon the floor of the Senate when section 124 was under discussion, and that discussion did relate almost entirely to the practicability of building the dam at Muscle Shoals in the Tennessee River, and it was generally understood by the Senate that in all probability, if the legislation was adopted, the dam would be built at that point. I do not think that understanding, or my repetition of that understanding at this time, constitutes any reflection upon the motives of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] or of anybody else. In all probability, for the purposes set forth in section 124, Muscle Shoals was the best place in the United States. I do not criticize it. The Senator from South Carolina is oversensitive. I did not intend to put him on the defensive here; he has put himself on the defensive. I simply mentioned the fact that this legislation started in 1916 with the offering of the amendment to the national defense act appropriating $20,000,000; and perhaps I was not technically accurate when I said for the purpose of building a dam at Muscle Shoals, but I am accurate when I say that it was the understanding that in all probability it would be spent there. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. I did not hear any other place discussed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He has answered his question, and made the last condition worse than the first.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am doing my best to be pleasant.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator's memory serves him correctly, every amendment offered on this floor looking toward the very object the Senator mentions was defeated. That is the record of the legislation. There were several amendments offered, and they were defeated in order that the thing might go through, because of the necessity of having this work started in this country. If the Senator will recall the remark he made which called me to my feet, it was that it was written in every line that the purpose and object was to put it at Muscle Shoals. I am not on the defensive. I am simply seeking to keep the record straight. I have nothing to defend. I offered the amendment in good faith, believing then, as I believe now, that it is a wonderful piece of constructive legislation, and the incident in connection with Muscle Shoals is outside of the argument, and it does not do to say here that those who were responsible for the legislation were interested in it with the purpose of carrying the project to Muscle Shoals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina and myself are not very far apart in our understanding of this situation, and I think we are making a mountain out of a molehill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt the Senator, and I rose not so much because of the remarks the Senator has made as the remark that came a moment ago from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I think this matter ought to be tried on its merits.

When the original proposition of the national defense act was before the Senate it was not brought up on the proposal to go to Muscle Shoals, but for the President to select the site. I had no doubt in my mind, I am candid to say, that if they selected the best site, the site that would produce the greatest horsepower at the least expense this side of the Mississippi River they were bound to go to Muscle Shoals. There was no other place for them to go to that had such great horsepower; and knowing that, I was interested, because it is in my State, and I wanted to have it developed. But I wanted the other projects brought out.

But the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] insinuated a while ago, or said, that the cyanamid company was in some way mixed up in this original proposal. As a matter of fact, I was one of the proponents of the proposition. I did not offer the amendment; it was offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], but I collaborated with him, and, so far as I know, there was no idea of the cyanamid company putting up any money or cooperating, except that possibly if the Government thought it had the best patent rights it would buy its patent rights. Somebody's patent rights had to be bought. The Government was not committed to anybody's, but it was expected at the time the national defense act was up that this project could be built and operated for $20,000,000. Of course, we were far wrong in the figures. But it was not contemplated that anybody else should put in any money by those who were the proponents of the measure. I am speaking for myself and, I know, for the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I had as authority for the statement I made the president of the cyanamid company.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The president of the cyanamid company is cooperating with the gentleman who is trying to defeat this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. He was not then.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I can not be responsible for any statement he makes, but I can say to the Senator from Wisconsin that there was no understanding, no contemplation, on the part of either the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] or myself—and we are here in the Chamber—that the cyanamid company was to put up any money or to have any control of this operation.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be; but, of course, the Senator must admit that it must have been known to him, as it was known to us, that at that very time there was a proposition from the cyanamid company to expend $24,000,000 if the Government would expend $20,000,000, upon exactly this kind of a proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that was a proposition which had gone over the board.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not speaking of one that had gone over the board; I am speaking of this proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I must say that it is very strange that the two Senators who proposed the proposition in the Senate never heard of such a proposal being made, and now at this late day the man who is fighting the bill conveys the information to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I ran across it when I was going over the hearings before the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know where it comes from. I can state absolutely and positively that I never heard of the proposal of the cyanamid company to put up any money in conjunction with the money proposed to be put up by the Government for this project. More than that, I have never been in favor of it. This project should be controlled absolutely by the Government of the United States in the interest of the people of the United States. That is the position I take.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, from the beginning of its consideration to the passage of the act no intimation of any owner of any patents, from a legislative standpoint, or from any other, so far as I know, as to cooperation between the Government and the owner of these patents, was ever contemplated by the committee or the proponents of the bill. So far as the information that the Senator may have as to any $24,000,000 was concerned, that was elsewhere. The fact of the business is that the arc process was discussed, a modification of the Haber process was discussed, and the cyanamid process was discussed, and the bill was formulated and passed, and it was left to the discretion of the Government as to where to put it, and what method it would pursue on its own initiative, and with the money furnished by the Government, without cooperation with anybody. So far as the cyanamid people were concerned, they were no more concerned than those who had been operating the arc process or the Haber process.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. In order that the record may appear as it is, I would like to read a paragraph from the hearings before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before what committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LENROOT. This testimony was last year, April 8, 1920. It reads:

> Various departments of the Government in the summer of 1915, followed by certain congressional committees—

I do not know what those committees were; this is his statement:

> Various departments of the Government in the summer of 1915, followed by certain congressional committees, invited the assistance of me and my company in the formulation of some plan by which the Government might safeguard itself by having an internal source of nitrogen supply in case of war. Out of this invitation eventually grew our recommendation for cooperation between the Government and private interests under which a nitrate plant was to be built at Muscle Shoals and operated by the American Cyanamid Co. The Government was to invest $20,000,000 in hydroelectric power plant and such portions of the chemical plant as would be required exclusively for the processing of military explosives. The company was to provide $24,000,000 for a cyanamid and fertilizer plant and for working capital and was to rent power from the Government at a rate profitable to the Government. In times of peace the company was to conduct its business in the ordinary way by the operation of the cyanamid and fertilizer plant and was to keep the whole plant in readiness to turn into the manufacture of military explosives on short notice.

Then dropping down a paragraph, Mr. Washburn said:

Out of this grew the "nitrate supply" section (124) of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916 appropriating $20,000,000 for establishing a nitrate supply, but—

And here is where Mr. Washburn lost his interest in section 124 of the national defense act:

But with the amendment tacked on that the "plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital."

I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina, whatever may have been the situation here, the reason why that amendment was put on was because of the understanding had with some of the representatives of the Government that the American Cyanamid Co. was to construct the Muscle Shoals plant and the Government put in $20,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would like to state to the Senator, if the Senator from New York will allow me, that the amendment was handed to me and was incorporated in the measure for the very reason, as I have stated, that from the beginning of the legislation to the end of it we were safeguarding the American people, so that it would be a Government function and not be divided up with anyone, and I want to state here now that what the Senator has read from Mr. Washburn's testimony is the first time I have ever heard it intimated, either from Mr. Washburn or anybody else. I was not present at the hearing before the committee; I had not returned at the time of this particular hearing. Mr. Washburn was there one day afterwards, I think, but did not testify. That is the first time I heard it intimated. He did not approach me, as the author of the bill, with any such proposition, and I do not believe he approached any other members of the committee with any such proposition, and that statement of his in that connection is absolutely out of his imagination, unless he approached other Members of the Senate, which I do not believe they would have allowed him to do unless it had been brought to the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, of course in the very beginning I acquitted myself of any intention of reflecting upon either of the Senators. But if the Senator will investigate this matter he will find that the recommendations from the administrative side of the Government came from this source, whatever may have been his connection with it, and the Senator will remember that it was to be left to these same administrative officers as to where the plant should be located.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I admit that. You have to leave it to some one. The Senate can not go out and pick the place itself.

Mr. LENROOT. So everyone knew it was Muscle Shoals, as the Senator from New York has said.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, of course it is very easy for us to draw conclusions, and a great many innocent people have been hung on circumstantial evidence when they were absolutely innocent. I myself, and probably the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], felt that Muscle Shoals, in the Tennessee River, when it came to a question of horsepower, was capable of developing greater power than any other plant we could get.

But even now, if the Senator will allow me—and I will take my own time hereafter to say what I have to say on this matter—it does not make a particle of difference whether it is at Muscle Shoals or where, the country stands in need of it. It is up to us, if there is any sinister work being done, anything that looks toward jeopardizing the great enterprise of the Government, to eliminate it; and if the cyanamid process was the most available at that time, in spite of what may have been done preceding it, it was our duty to accept it and use it if it was necessary in the prosecution of the war. But we have a proposition here now to utilize a $85,000,000 expenditure of the Government for a beneficent purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I was about to say, this legislation had its beginning in section 124 of the national defense act, which appropriated $20,000,000 for the building of dams and other structures for the purposes of manufacturing nitrates through the process known as atmospheric fixation.

Various powers were given to the President under section 124, which I am going to refer to later, but as the result of section 124 the Government later on, under the direction of the President, proceeded with the construction of a dam at Muscle Shoals.

In the report of the Graham committee, to which I have already referred, the expenditures thus far made at Muscle Shoals by the Government are set forth in very compact form, and I think I will read them into the RECORD. The number of items is not long. Under the heading "Already expended in Muscle Shoals territory," we find the following:

The Wilson Dam, $13,170,000.
The Waco quarry, $60,000.
The Alabama Power Co., $5,167,277.
The United States nitrate plant No. 1, $12,152,636.
The United States nitrate plant No. 2, $69,985,221.

Making a total thus far expended, or rather expended up to the time this report was made, which was May 18, 1920, of $100,535,135.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if, connected with that statement, there is any report of the extent toward completion that has been accomplished?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In various parts of the testimony taken before the committee, and particularly in the report, we do get an estimate as to the degree of completion in each of the subdivisions of the general project.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish the Senator would read that into the RECORD also.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the Senator will permit me to read further from the Graham report as to the contemplated expenditures for the completion of the project.

Completion of the Wilson Dam, $12,000,000; for fertilizer factory under the Glasgow plant, $12,500,000; for Dam No. 1 at Muscle Shoals, $2,455,600; for Dam No. 3 at Muscle Shoals, $12,033,170; for Waco quarry and other works, $1,250,000; making a total of contemplated expenditures of $40,000,000, which, added to the $100,000,000 already expended, will bring the investment of the American people in this project up to the figure of $140,773,000.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Perhaps the Senator gave the name of the party from whose testimony he is reading?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is from the report of the Graham committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRONNA. It is just a summary. It is not the testimony of any one particular person?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is taken from the testimony of the Army engineers who are working on the dams, the testimony of the Ordnance Department officers as to how much money has thus far been expended upon the nitrate plants themselves, and the testimony or the estimates of those officers as to how much more will have to be spent before the project is completed. The total expenditure, including that which has already been expended, will be, as I said, $140,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator give again the estimate of completing the Wilson Dam?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twelve million dollars.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to state to the Senator that I hold in my hand a letter from the engineer in charge of the work which gives an estimate of the total cost as $50,000,000, which will require an appropriation of $33,000,000 more for that purpose alone.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt about it that the estimate of May, 1920, is somewhat out of date, but I am using the most conservative figures. Since then the Army engineers have given it as their opinion that the Wilson Dam, or perhaps it is a combination of the Wilson Dam and Dams No. 1 and No. 3, will cost $50,000,000. In any event $140,000,000 is a conservative estimate of the amount of money that the taxpayers will have put into the project.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I am very much interested in the figures which the Senator from New York has given. As he has stated, they are taken from the so-called Graham report. This matter has been under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for a considerable time. They have had very exhaustive hearings. The Senator from New York has just stated that the views therein expressed on various branches of the subject are rather confusing, if not contradictory. Has the committee itself made any estimate as to the probable cost of the project if it were to be completed as contemplated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we have not. We simply had to take the figures given to us by the Government's own representative.

Mr. POMERENE. There has been no report furnished by the committee, as I understand, and I have been trying to gather some light upon the subject. I confess that I have been a good deal confused as to just what I ought to do in the matter. It does seem to me that it would have aided us all in coming to a conclusion if there had been a report as to the wisdom of continuing the project, as to its probable cost, as to its probable output, as to the benefits to be derived. I confess I am very much disappointed that we have not the benefit of the views of the committee, I care not whether it be a majority report or minority report. It would help me very materially in coming to a conclusion as to whether I shall vote for it or against it, if I had the judgment of members of the committee who heard the testimony.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from New York seems to be in doubt about the figures with reference to the dam. If he would like to have the RECORD state what I think I can assure him is the fact, as it comes from a source which I am sure he is willing to take, I will be glad to put it in at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will be very glad if the Senator would do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. About two or three weeks ago I had a talk with Mr. Hugh Cooper, a noted engineer who built the Keokuk Dam and who is consulting engineer on this dam. He told me that to complete this dam as a whole, with a horsepower of between 400,000 and 500,000, would cost $50,000,000, but that about $8,000,000 of that would be taken up in putting in machinery that was not necessary for the operation of the nitrate plant, and would not be necessary to put in now or hereafter unless the Government desired to sell that surplus power; that there are about $2,000,000 more of incidental matters that would come out in that event, which would leave the present cost of the dam, the immediate cost for the purpose of operating the nitrate plant, $40,000,000, of which $17,000,000 has been allocated. That is an accurate statement of what Mr. Cooper said to me, and he is consulting engineer on the dam, so I think that it is substantially correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. While we are considering these estimates I think it fair to call attention to the estimates that were given to the Senate at the time the first legislation was proposed and when we acted upon it. I have them here, and I will call attention to one item now on plant No. 1, which is under discussion. This is the original estimate that was given by the nitrates supply committee——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not in the same connection give us the original estimates of the cost of the entire enterprise?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not those figures in tabulated form, and perhaps it would take too long for me to state them now, but I will do so before the discussion ends.

As I was about to say, the original estimate for nitrate plant No. 1, Sheffield, Ala., was that it would cost $3,000,000. That was the estimate given to us when we were asked to pass the legislation. The complete cost of construction up to December 31, 1919, of the No. 1 plant, at Sheffield, Ala., was $12,689,676.99.

Mr. POMERENE. What was the date of the first estimate?

Mr. SMOOT. The first estimate was in 1916; I think about April or May. Taking the estimates which are given out here, and if they are only half correct as compared with the estimates that were given in 1916, the Senate can see what this is going to mean to the Government of the United States. I wanted to call this to the attention of the Senate, as the question had arisen at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Whatever our estimates may be, we can be absolutely certain that the sum involved is huge. I think it will be found that $140,000,000 is a conservative estimate for the completed project.

This amount of money, as I said, has been invested by the taxpayers of the United States in and about Muscle Shoals and Sheffield, Ala. The legislation which is before us seeks to set up a corporation whose stock shall be owned entirely by the United States Government; in other words, a United States corporation, and to turn over to that corporation all this property and to launch that corporation into a commercial undertaking. First, let me call the attention of the Senate to some of the features of the structure of the corporation itself. This was one of the things that was very casually discussed in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but nothing was done. Senators will note on the first page of the bill that the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to designate an organization committee of five persons, who are to draw articles of incorporation and, I assume, the by-laws and various other matters preliminary to the final launching of the corporate enterprise. There is no check whatsoever upon the Secretary of War as to who he shall choose, whether they shall have experience of any kind whatsoever. Not even the President of the United States is to have anything to say about it.

That organization committee having finished its work, the corporation is launched. We notice on page 3 of the bill that the corporation shall be conducted under the supervision and control of a board of directors consisting of not less than 3 nor more than 11 members, to be appointed by the Secretary of War—no one else is to have anything to say about it—and that the directors so appointed shall hold office at the pleasure of the Secretary of War. They may be put in and put out of office at his pleasure. He will thus have absolute control of assets worth $140,000,000 of the people's money.

Now, Mr. President, I think if the Government is going to go into an enormous undertaking of this kind—and at a little later period I will enlarge somewhat upon the ramifications of the proposal, because I think very few Senators here realize how far it is proposed to go—I think the President of the United States should have some say, and mayhap the Senate of the United States might well confirm the directors upon appointment or nomination by the President.

Then, as a matter of principle, I think it is bad policy to place in the hands of the War Department a strictly commercial enterprise. Senators will notice on the last page of the bill, page 12, line 3, this languge:

> The Secretary of War may appoint any officer of the War Department * * * as a director of the corporation.

That means that soldiers in the Army are to be detailed from their profession as soldiers and made directors of a commercial corporation engaged in the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer ingredients. I think that is a prostitution of the functions of the Army, just as much as it is a prostitution of the functions of the Army to have Army officers running canal boats on the barge canal of the State of New York. The Army has no business taking part in such enterprises. The Army is supported by this country in the interest of the national defense, primarily for the purpose of fighting or of training those who must be called upon in time of great stress and emergency to defend the country. I have presented on this topic an amendment which strikes the Secretary of War out of this equation entirely and substitutes the Secretary of the Treasury, and also strikes out the paragraph on page 12 which would permit officers of the War Department being named directors of the corporation and receiving salaries for being such directors.

Mr. President, let us examine for a moment the capitalization features of the corporation. This matter was also discussed very casually and very briefly by the committee, and varying opinions were expressed, but nothing done. We read on page 8 of the bill:

> The capital stock of the corporation shall be divided into two classes, to be known as common and preferred. The common stock shall be without par value. The company shall have no power to issue stock except that issued to the United States under authority of this act.

Then, after providing for the method of taking up the properties to be turned over to the corporation and various ministerial acts to be performed by the Secretary of War in the execution and delivery of certificates, we find on page 9 the meat in the coconut of the capitalization feature. Beginning in line 11, on page 9, the bill reads:

> The corporation shall have the power to issue and sell preferred stock in any amount not to exceed $12,500,000, of a par value of $100 per share, such stock to be entitled to 5 per cent dividends.

That last line is the only line in the whole bill which would seem to impose any obligation upon the corporation to make any money, and all that it is required to do—and it is only a moral obligation—is to make 5 per cent on a capitalization of $12,500,000, although the people of the United States will have put $140,000,000 into this project when it shall be completed. To my mind, Mr. President, a proposal of that kind is astounding, and that is the criticism I have had against this bill from the beginning—the capitalization feature.

The bill a little later on, in its original print, provided for an appropriation of $12,500,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, that sum being deemed necessary to put in a state of completion plant No. 2, the great cyanamid plant at Muscle Shoals, and equip it to turn out ammonium sulphate, which is useful as an ingredient in fertilizers. The committee being somewhat desperate about the amount of money involved here, and hearing that the United States Government, through the War Department, had a reserve supply of Chilean nitrate on hand to the extent of 300,000 tons, consulted with the Secretary of War and the Chief of Ordnance, and finally came to an understanding that 150,000 tons of that reserve supply could properly be sold in the open market, and that it would fetch $12,500,000, the committee thereby consoling itself that that would not amount to an appropriation. Of course, it is an appropriation, only it is done with the left hand instead of the right, for the people have paid for the nitrate and when it is sold, of course, the money is gone.

It was estimated that 150,000 tons of Chilean nitrate at the time we were discussing this subject would upon the market bring $12,500,000. Therefore the committee amendment, which starts at the bottom of page 9 and extends over onto page 10, was added to the bill. While it is true that it does not limit the amount of the reserve supply of Chilean nitrate which is to be sold, the clear understanding was that one-half of it should be sold and that it would bring the amount I have indicated. It so happens, however, that since those conversations and since those efforts at high finance the value on the market of Chilean nitrate has shrunk 40 per cent, so that in order to raise $12,500,000 by the sale of nitrate, instead of selling 150,000 tons we shall have to sell 240,000 tons, and the reserve supply of Chilean nitrate upon which the Government would have to fall back if any sudden emergency involving hostilities arose would be reduced to 60,000 tons. In other words, if we reduce our reserve supply of Chilean nitrate to that extent, to the extent which will be permitted by this committee amendment, for the amendment does not limit the sale, the United States could probably fight a war for about three weeks, certainly not more than that. So it will be found that we have to revise our figures if it is intended to sell any of the reserve supply of nitrate.

Of course, the honest, straightforward, manly thing to do is to appropriate $12,500,000 from the Treasury and let everybody know that is what is being done, because we have got to spend that amount of money anyway; we can not camouflage it; we can not deceive sensible people.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. If the market price of Chilean nitrate continues to fall, then, in order to secure the $12,500,000, it may be necessary to sell our entire supply of that material?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and to send to Chile for more.

Mr. THOMAS. We could put an embargo upon the importation of any more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The market does show every evidence of going downward steadily, and, of course, that is a matter of rejoicing for every man who is interested in agriculture.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Under the language of the bill as it now stands, I should like to ask the Senator if they did not sell any nitrate whether there would not be a legal obligation on the part of the Government to make an appropriation for the $12,500,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt of that; in other words, the $12,500,000 is going to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers in one form or another, and it amounts to an appropriation, whether it is done by selling the stock of nitrate on hand or appropriating the money anew.

I realize perfectly well that a great plant, such a plant as No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, could not have been built in time of war at normal prices.

As we all know, the price of all materials and labor went sky-high during the war, and the Government, I presume, under the most skillful management could not avoid vast expenditures, particularly as the emergency overtook us absolutely unprepared. So I would not urge upon the Senate that this business corporation which we are about to set up should be required to earn dividends upon the entire investment. I think that would be asking too much; but I do think it is fair to the taxpayer that a corporation such as this, free from taxation, local, State, and national, and from many other burdens which private industry must of necessity carry, should be required, if it is to go into commercial business in competition with private citizens, to earn dividends upon a reasonable capitalization. If we are to adopt any other policy and are to embark upon projects like this—and this may be merely the first—and hand over to Government agencies vast properties belonging to the taxpayers and then say to the governmental agency, "Go out into commercial business and sell goods the best way you can, but you need not make any dividends upon the taxpayers' money," it will simply mean that private industry will be utterly destroyed, for it will not be possible for private industry to compete under such circumstances.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not been able to follow the Senator's argument in its entirety, but I was struck by one feature at least of this particular bill, so far as its corporation provisions are concerned. It is true that it provides for the issuance of $12,500,000 of preferred stock, which I take it is to represent the value of the property which is to go into this venture; and then it provides for common stock of no par value, without even suggesting how many shares shall be issued.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is exactly correct.

Mr. POMERENE. There is nothing in the report of the committee——

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no report of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. There is nothing here to tell us what the value of the property is, and I myself do not know what value to place opposite the no par value shares. I should like to have this matter straightened out in some way. Certainly, if shares of no par value are to be issued, we ought to be advised as to the number of those shares, and we ought to be advised as to what the value of the property is which is represented by that number of shares. There is nothing here to give us any light on that subject at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] in his remarks yesterday told the Senate that if the Government did not proceed with this enterprise and spend the money for the completion of the plants they would be forced to sell them, and there would not be realized more than $3,000,000 or $5,000,000 for the $88,000,000 which the Government has already expended.

Mr. POMERENE. That is one of the subjects upon which I should like some light. I should like to know whether there is a plant there now worth $100,000,000, or $50,000,000, or $25,000,000, or what it is worth. I should like to know what the prospects of success are; I should like to know whether the committee desires us to develop the Haber process or the cyanamid process or some other process that may be in the minds of chemists. I do not know anything about that.

I am very much impressed with the necessity of having nitrates. I have had correspondence with some of the fertilizer companies in my State, and they assure me that we are already producing in this country more fertilizer than we need, and that they can take care of the demand. I was ungracious enough to call their attention to the imports which we have been receiving from Chile for the last seven or eight years, the high prices we have to pay, the fact that we have to pay export duty to the Chilean Government, and to a number of other matters, and I could not reconcile those facts with their statement that we were producing here all of the fertilizers we needed. I confess that when I approach a proposition of this kind I should like to vote upon it with some degree of intelligence at least.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Ohio that he can get more information out of the Graham report on the very matter that he is talking about than he can get out of the entire hearings before the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to pay Congressman GRAHAM the compliment of saying that I read his speech the other day with a great deal of interest. I, of course, assume—and no doubt that is the case—that he stated the facts just as he saw them. I could not believe otherwise with regard to a man of his standing in the House; but I should just like to have the judgment of the members of this committee, whether they are united or not, and I am frank to say that my mind has been going in the direction of asking that this matter be referred back to the committee with a view of getting the result of their matured study of this subject in concrete form. I do not know whether that is the right course to pursue or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Ohio threatens to impose quite a task upon the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to proceed, Mr. President. I will yield for a question to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he read the speeches, in reply to Mr. GRAHAM, by Mr. GARRETT, of Tennessee, and Mr. ALMON, of Alabama.

Mr. POMERENE. I read Judge ALMON'S address, and he presents in a very forceful way the need of fertilizer. I read the speech of Congressman BANKHEAD, the son of our late lamented colleague here, and I was particularly impressed with the report of the Ohio experimental station at Wooster with regard to the need of fertilizer, the value of it, even viewing it from the standpoint of labor saving. All of those things interested me very much and impressed me with the necessity of having some nitrate plant; but while I do not want to reflect upon my good brethren here who sit on the Agricultural Committee, I think they could have helped us all very materially in coming to a satisfactory conclusion if they had given us their conclusions as to some of the ultimate facts, and if they will give me the facts I will at least try to come to a conclusion that will satisfy myself.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, I just want to state that in my own time I am going to give my side of this proposition as to a report being made by the committee and the circumstances which perhaps caused no report to be made. This bill has had a curious introduction into the Senate and into the committee and is having a very curious treatment by its parent on the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, if you please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not going to get half as incensed at the Senator from South Carolina for that last remark as he did a while ago against me. I have already explained my connection with this measure, and he knows as well as I do that from the very beginning I have criticized it. He also knows as well as I do that the bill was reported from the committee when I was absent and was later made the unfinished business of the Senate while I was absent, so therefore I have lost all rights of parentage.

Now, Mr. President, may I resume for a moment the discussion of the capitalization features, which I was discussing a moment ago?

Yesterday I offered an amendment which was printed and lies upon the desks of Senators, to which I want to refer. In fact, I shall read it. It is not long. I do not boast that it is perfect. My only claim is that it is a desperate effort on my part to see to it that if this corporation is to go into business it shall go into business on business principles; for the bill as drafted in its capitalization features is the most sketchy piece of legislation, of financial structure, that I have ever encountered, and is uneconomic from top to bottom.

Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered provides as follows:

> The capital stock of the corporation shall consist of 200,000 shares of common stock of the par value of $100. The corporation shall also issue an amount of 20-year bonds bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, equivalent to one-half of the total expenditure of the Government, in constructing and acquiring the properties to be transferred to the corporation under this act, and in addition bonds of like character of a par value equal to the full cost of the completed hydroelectric installation at Muscle Shoals if and when transferred to this corporation.

I said a moment ago that I did not think it would be fair to this corporation to require it to earn dividends upon all the money spent thus far by the taxpayers, because that money was spent under abnormal and peculiar conditions. One hundred million dollars has been spent by the taxpayers. My proposal is that $50,000,000 of bonds be issued by this corporation to cover the $100,000,000 of expenditure thus far made, and that the corporation be required to pay interest annually at the rate of 5 per cent on that $50,000,000 of bonds. Now it is estimated that the taxpayers are going to spend another $40,000,000. In other words, $40,000,000 of new money must be invested in this enterprise before it becomes a going concern. Upon that $40,000,000 I propose that the corporation, which is to use that enormous asset belonging to the people, shall earn 5 per cent in the way of interest upon a like amount of bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator provide in his amendment—I have not had a chance to read it yet—for taking care also of the additional expenditure, estimated at $28,336,240?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator's amendment provide for the issuing of bonds not only for the $40,000,000 to which he has referred——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is just an estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. But also for the $28,336,240 that it is shown will have to be expended before this plant is complete, or, in other words, making $169,110,000 altogether?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my amendment provides that to cover the money already spent on this project bonds shall be issued to the extent of 50 per cent of that expenditure——

Mr. SMOOT. That will be $50,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And that for all money to be spent or invested in the future bonds shall be issued at 100 cents on the dollar of expenditure.

Mr. SMOOT. That will take in the $40,000,000 and also the $28,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will take in whatever other expenditures are made in putting this corporation into business.

Mr. SMOOT. And also the increase of actual cost over what the estimated cost will be, which is likely to be another $100,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. One can not tell what it will be.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator regard the present structure, with all its rights and all its appurtenances, as worth actually $50,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My opinion of it is not expert. I suppose it is; yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Could it be sold to any company or to any corporation for $50,000,000 for the purposes for which it is intended?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the company or corporation were clothed with the powers with which this corporation is to be clothed, it could be sold for $200,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is, if it were exempted from taxation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If it were exempted from taxation and clothed with the right to condemn property right and left, to do anything anywhere and anything in any connection with nitrogenous products, it is worth $50,000,000, and much more; there is no question about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the right to call upon the Treasury for any deficit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. KENYON. Were not some recommendations made in the report of the Graham committee as to the Attorney General proceeding to recover back some of this money that has been wasted in the construction of this plant?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not sure. I have not read it all, I can not answer that question.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator read the Graham report in full?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not all of it.

Mr. KENYON. It is the history of perhaps the worst financial orgy that has ever been carried on in the way of thieving and stealing from the Government. I hope that in some way some of this money will be recovered back by the Attorney General.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my amendment as to the capitalization features then proceeds to deal with the common-stock end of the capitalization, and reads as follows:

> The corporation shall have the power to issue and sell common stock in any amount not to exceed $20,000,000 of a par value of $100 per share representing the actual cash still available for the project and the moneys appropriated in this act.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator has been interrupted so much that I really do not like to disturb him. I was a member of the Agricultural Committee which considered this bill, although I was not present when it was reported out; but that does not relieve me from any responsibility.

I am in favor of the bill. I do not say that we should not amend it, but so far as the capital stock is concerned the Senator from New York will hardly insist on his amendment that we should capitalize this plant for $50,000,000, because he knows that the greatest authority on this question—and I might just as well say who it is, Mr. Washburn—when he appeared before our committee stated specifically when he was asked by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] what the value of this plant was, and whether or not it could be sold, that he did not believe it could be sold at all at this time. Is it not unfair for us to try and fix a value on a plant that can not be sold at any price? I want to read a couple of lines from Mr. Washburn's statement. I am just calling this to the attention of the Senate because I know the Senator from New York wants to be fair; he is always fair. I read from the hearings:

Senator KENDRICK. Do I understand you to say that you would have the Government offer it for sale at the time we require it in an emergency, or offer it for sale now?

Mr. WASHBURN. It would be useless, I believe, to offer it for sale at the present time, because no one would buy it.

Mr. President, we are confronted with this situation: We have property here which is practically worthless when offered for sale. If these people who are familiar with the business and interested in nitrogenous projects show that they will not buy them, who is going to take the risk and pay anything whatever for this property? The plants have been built. It was an emergency measure. We had to build them. We commenced the erection of plants in the State of Ohio, at Toledo and at Cincinnati. When they were about a third completed we were obliged to scrap them. Would it be fair because the Government of the United States has invested millions of dollars for us to say that if some one undertakes to go on with those plants we should capitalize them, and include that wasted capital? It is exactly the same condition with this plant No. 2, as the Senator knows. It has no value when offered for sale. We have testimony of the highest authority that it would cost a large sum of money just to keep these plants from going to decay.

Now we are going far afield. I do not say that the Senator's argument is far afield, because that would not be true. But we are going far afield when we take up the entire question of dealing with Muscle Shoals. This bill provides only for $12,500,000, to do what? To complete plant No. 2, or to improve plant No. 2, so that, as the Senator from New York so well said, we can manufacture sulphate of ammonia.

I do not care, as far as responsibility goes; I am willing to assume my share of the responsibility, but it is hardly fair, it is not fair to the Senator from New York, nor to the other members of the committee, to say that we are responsible for all the costs for the entire project. This has nothing to do with the water power at Muscle Shoals whatever. The dam has not been completed; we all know that. Whatever work was done there in the manufacture of explosives was done with steam power, and nobody knows that better than the Senator from New York.

But if the Senator will pardon me again, I simply want to say to him that it would hardly be fair in this bill to say that the capitalization should be $50,000,000, when men recognized as authorities have made the statements to the committee that the property could not be sold at any price; but we are only asking for $12,500,000 in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not only worthless property now, but they want us to put in $150,000,000 more and then that will be worthless, too. The first loss is always the best loss. It is asked that the United States, having lost every dollar it has in, put $150,000,000 more in.

Mr. GRONNA. I realize I have laid myself open to criticism from those who are opposed to the bill when I said it was worthless. It is worthless to the people of the country who do not want to buy it, but it is not worthless to the Government of the United States, because the Government could go in and manufacture explosives.

There has been a great deal of information given with reference to what explosives can be manufactured. The members of the committee who attended the hearings know that no explosives usable as a propellant have been manufactured at Muscle Shoals except at plant No. 2. Cyanamid is not a propellant; is only used as a bursting explosive. But we need bursting material just as well as a propellant, and when I said the other day that we could safely sell a portion of the supply which we have on hand of 300,000 tons, it was, of course, understood, and it was recommended, that this plant should be put into operation so as to increase the supply and go on and manufacture this product, cyanamid, not only sulphate of ammonia, which we are spending money for here in order to put the plant in shape so that sulphate of ammonia may be manufactured at that plant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in my own time may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And I will thank him for his courtesy if he will answer. Does the Senator recollect that the testimony before our committee was to the effect that the cyanamid plant could not be operated at a profit with steam power?

Mr. GRONNA. With profit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. With steam power, the year round. That was my own recollection, but I did not want to be too certain about it.

Mr. GRONNA. I will not be positive; but my impression is that the report of Mr. Roberts, and also of other representatives of the War Department, was to the effect that they could manufacture cyanamid with steam power and could sell it at a price of $37.50 a ton, which was not figuring interest, as the Senator called attention to the other day. There was no interest included in those figures. But they said they could manufacture cyanamid at $37.50 a ton. I believe I am correct in that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Col. Burns testified that in his judgment ammonium nitrate could be produced with steam power at $99.67 a ton, and ammonium sulphate at $60.13 a ton. That is by steam power.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment. I would like to complete my statement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to call the Senator's attention to testimony that same day by Secretary Baker.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Page 997 of the hearings. He testified that while the plant could be operated with steam power, yet it could not be so operated on a commercial basis for the production of fertilizer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was my recollection. My point in asking the question was just this: Three years must elapse before the water power is available. This bill proposes to put this plant in operation with steam power, and keep it in operation with steam power for three years at an admitted loss. It can not be run commercially, and if it can not be run commercially it can not turn out the ingredients of explosives to which the Senator from North Dakota refers. That brings us back to the question, Is it safe to sell 240,000 tons of our reserve supply of Chile nitrates, leaving only 60,000?

Now, Mr. President, I had been discussing the capitalization features of the bill for some time, and due to a great many interruptions my discussion has been chopped up into little chunks.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the Senator goes on I would like to ask him, under the bill as it stands, this corporation may have the entire Muscle Shoals Dam?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The whole thing.

Mr. LENROOT. With an additional expenditure of $40,000,000. Does not the Senator think that if this is gone into at all this corporation should have nothing to do with the Muscle Shoals Dam, and that they could buy their power from the dam just the same?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is just the point I am coming to, and I am glad the Senator emphasized it the way he did. Mr. President, I leave for the moment the capitalization features and the formation of the corporation. Let us examine for a moment the powers of the corporation, now that we have it started and capitalized. I call especial attention to subdivision (e) at the bottom of page 5. Commencing on line 20 we find this language:

(e) By direction of the President, to act as his agent in carrying out and performing any or all of the duties imposed upon him by section 124 of the act of June 3, 1916, known as the national defense act, including, after its completion, the operation of the hydroelectric power plant now being constructed at Muscle Shoals, and the use and sale of the hydroelectric power to be developed under authority of the act of June 3, 1916, aforesaid, and the President is authorized, in his discretion, to delegate to the corporation any and all powers and duties conferred or imposed upon him by said act which relate to the production, development, or manufacture of atmospheric nitrogen products, or which are incidental thereto, and to pay into the treasury of said company any unexpended balance out of the appropriation made by section 124 of the act of June 3, 1916, such funds to be used by the corporation for the purpose of said act as amended by this act.

Mr. President, let us look at section 124 of the national defense act, and get some idea of what power this corporation is to exercise when it becomes the agent of the President in carrying out the powers conferred upon the President in section 124. We find in section 124 that the President, among other things, is "authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at or on any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment, with other means than water power, as in his judgment is the best and cheapest necessary or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power, and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products."

The President is "authorized to lease, purchase, or acquire by condemnation, gift, grant, or devise such lands and rights of way as may be necessary for the construction and operation of such plants, and to take from any lands of the United States, or to purchase or acquire by condemnation, materials, minerals, processes, patented or otherwise, necessary for the construction and operation of such plants, and for the manufacture of such products."

That power is all to be lodged with this corporation under the terms of this bill. What does it mean? It does not mean that this corporation will be confined merely to the manufacture of ammonium sulphate by the cyanamid process, as is proposed in plant No. 2. It means that this corporation can exercise the power of condemnation over any plant in the United States engaged in the manufacture of any of these products or any product related to them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has been very generous with his time, and I dislike to interrupt him, but I understand that plant No. 1 provides for the Haber process?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. POMERENE. And No. 2 the cyanamid process?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does.

Mr. POMERENE. What are we to conclude? Are we to conclude that the one is better than the other or that both are equally good?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to discuss those two things later, but I will say very briefly, right now, that, comparatively speaking, the cyanamid process, I believe, is somewhat out of date. The Haber process is a growing one and the much cheaper of the two. The testimony so states. At the time the plant was started the Haber process had not reached the state of perfection, in this country at least, that the cyanamid process had reached, and so they built the cyanamid plant and made that the big one, because they felt sure they could work the cyanamid process. The Haber process in No. 1 is somewhat experimental.

But my strenuous objection to this bill lies right in this, that we hereby set up an enormous Government monopoly, clothed with power to condemn property of the people of the United States, condemn not only structures, lands, transmission lines, real property and personal property, but even patents and processes. If some individual or group spends years and years studying this question of atmospheric fixation of nitrogen, and is upon the point of developing some new process which bids fair to be successful, this corporation can reach its long arm across the country and take it away. It is so written in this bill reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. President, it means the end of all research in this industry in the United States. Not a citizen will dare spend his time and money and his brains in an effort to evolve new processes for extracting nitrogen from the air when this Government corporation stands ready to condemn the patent which he may take out covering his process.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I confess that I talked this matter over privately with the Senator from New York, and as far as I am personally concerned, speaking only for myself, of course, I do not think this paragraph is at all essential to the bill. To a certain extent I agree with the Senator from New York, that legislation of this sort ought not to be enacted, because I believe that the States have ample laws to protect any industry set up in the States, and if it is necessary to use the law to condemn property it can be done under the State law.

So far as I am personally concerned, I would have no objection to striking out that portion or to amending it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The trouble is that the section which I have just read, subdivision E, is hopelessly entangled with the whole proposal. We have just learned that we can not run the plant on steam power profitably. It has to be run with water power eventually. This is the section that makes it possible for the corporation to use the hydroelectric power to be generated at the dam, and a law already stands upon the statute books, in the form of section 124 of the national defense act, which prescribes how the power generated at that dam shall be used and how the President can use his powers in connection with the finished dam after the power is put at his disposal. We either have to repeal section 124 and take away from the President of the United States the astonishing powers that section 124 gives him or else accept this proposal.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure the Senator will admit that the reason we passed that kind of a law at that time was because it was a war measure providing that the President should have the power during the war to condemn any kind of property, whether patents or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it was passed before the war. It passed 10 months before we went into the war.

Mr. GRONNA. At the same time it was passed with the idea in view that the President should have the authority in case of an emergency or in case of war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it did not say that, and now this proposed legislation appears here to put it into practice in time of profound peace. It was passed in time of peace. It clothed the President with astonishing power to reach out his hand all over the country and seize and take by condemnation proceedings any property that in any way was related to the manufacture of nitrates or of fertilizer or other useful products connected therewith. Now, the bill as drafted gives that power to the Secretary of War, who is to appoint and remove directors of the corporation at his pleasure.

Mr. President, I think it is about time to pause in our effort toward establishing tyranny and oppression in this country, to get back with our feet on the ground and decide how much freedom is to be preserved for us.

I happen to know, as every Senator happens to know, that there are a good many people in the United States very seriously considering the matter of increasing the supply of nitrate. Many a concern, in perfect good faith and at the urgent invitation of the United States Government, has built by-product coke ovens which produce as a by-product ammonium sulphate. Under the bill this corporation can take every oven, every one or any one that it pleases. Will we ever get another by-product coke oven built under those circumstances? Who would be fool enough to build one or to invest any money in such an undertaking?

There are persons in the country and some in my own State to-day who have already commenced to build a plant and to install the Haber process, but under the bill this corporation can reach out and take the patent away from them and ruin their plant and pay them what they can get in court. Yet this is said to be a measure in the interest of the national defense.

This measure as drafted and presented to the Senate means the end of the nitrate industry in this country. No citizen will ever engage in it with this thing staring him in the face and the plant, about which we have heard so much in the interest of national defense, on the figures of the Government experts themselves could only turn out enough explosives to keep the American Expeditionary Forces in ammunition for six weeks.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I am right, am I not, in the assumption that at this time the process is protected by patents?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The cyanamid process is protected by patents and the Government to-day is paying a royalty to the American Cyanamid Co., and will continue to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. Of what amount?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is $5 a unit, or $4.50 a ton. The present agreement expires, I think, in 1923, and is to be rearbitrated as to what they shall continue to pay. I think the patents expire in 1930 or 1931, but I am not very certain about that. However, the Government will pay a royalty to the American Cyanamid Co. as long as it uses the patent.

Mr. POMERENE. Is that the company of which Mr. Washburn is president?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is. That patent apparently is protected by a contract which the Government made with the American Cyanamid Co. at the time it allowed the company to build the plant for it or to supervise the building of it.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, the American Cyanamid Co. superintended the construction of this plant?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; no one else in the United States knew anything about it. That was entirely proper.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand it is this Mr. Washburn who says the plant, the construction of which he superintended, is a worthless plant?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is an entirely different aspect of the bill——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I used the word "worthless," and I wish to withdraw it. What he said was that it could not be sold at any price; that no one would buy it.

Mr. POMERENE. Then it means that Washburn superintended the construction of a plant which he says can not be sold at any price.

Mr. GRONNA. I may say, if the Senator from New York will permit me—and I say this with kindness, because I do not believe that we could find another man in the United States that would do the work better than Mr. Washburn did—but the Government paid him well for it. The Government of the United States paid all the cost, paid all the help, and then paid Mr. Washburn a million dollars for setting up that plant.

Mr. POMERENE. And the product of his work is worthless.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not say it is worthless.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not mean to say that the Senator from North Dakota says it is worthless; but, to be exact, Mr. Washburn said it could not be sold at any price. That is an expensive luxury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think, perhaps, I can clear that up a little bit, although I do not pretend to be an expert in the matter. We have had so many conflicting figures and so many confusing statements that one hardly knows where one stands. This is to be remembered in connection with the assertion that the plant is worthless. I do not think it is meant that it is actually worthless. As a matter of fact, it is tremendously valuable, looking at it from one point of view, potentially valuable when linked up with this proposed corporation and all the other properties which the corporation may acquire by condemnation.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like to make myself perfectly clear. I do not mean to be understood to indorse the proposition that the plant is worthless, but I wanted my remarks to reflect rather upon the judgment of this millionaire, Washburn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps I can throw a little light upon that by reading again from the Graham report. This is rather interesting, because it has to do with the future supply of nitrate. On page 69, in the paragraph next to the bottom of the page, we find this language:

> The product of ammonium sulphate in the United States in the year 1916 was 288,000 tons.

That is, manufactured in the United States.

> It increased, until in 1919 we produced 500,000 tons, or approximately 100 per cent increase. It is probable that all the coke ovens in the United States will be converted into by-product ovens within the next 10 years, as they are much more economical of operation and much more efficient. When all the coal now being carbonized in coke ovens is treated in by-product ovens there will be a production of 900,000 tons of ammonium sulphate per year in the United States.

That is more than we use to-day from all sources. When a private individual is invited to bid upon plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, the cyanamid plant, which it is proposed shall turn out ammonium sulphate, he has to remember in the back of his mind that the coke-oven industry is going to be a terriffic competitor with him, and that the cyanamid process for the manufacture of ammonium sulphate is the more expensive of the processes employing atmospheric fixation. The American Cyanamid Co. for many years has made cyanamid by atmospheric fixation and has also made ammonium sulphate, just what No. 2 is expected to make. They went out of the ammonium sulphate business because it did not pay to make it by the cyanamid process. They could not compete with the by-product coke ovens. That was the testimony before the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator whether the other members of the committee agree with him in that conclusion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If they understand the English language as I do, they must, because that is what this man said.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, before we vote on the subject, I want to know how many opinions there are on that fact.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was merely commenting on this phase of it on account of the discussion as to how much the plant was worth. The plant is exceedingly valuable when linked up with the rest of the project and owned by a corporation clothed with the powers which this corporation is to employ under the terms of the bill. It has the power to destroy every person, partnership, or corporation in the United States engaged in the industry, because it can condemn its plant and take it away, and its patents and its processes.

I have not offered any amendment as to this phase of the bill, because I confess that I do not know how to get at it. Section 124 of the national defense act stands on the statute books to-day. It gives power to the President to do all these things. He could go out to-morrow and seize the patents and processes of every person engaged in the nitrate-fixation business in the United States or in the fertilizer business under the terms of that section. He has never done so, because the President as an agent has not engaged in a commercial business. But here we are setting up a corporation which is to go into commercial business and compete with other people engaged in the same business, and the quickest and most effective way for it to compete with them is to take their plants, and it has the power under the provisions of the bill to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. May I say to the Senator that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment striking out this particular subdivision entirely and inserting in lieu thereof an amendment repealing section 124 of the national defense act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is one way of reaching the problem. I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, however, to the paragraph at the top of page 5 of the bill, which reads as follows:

> 2. Any other plants or parts of plant, equipment, accessories, or other properties belonging to the United States which are under the direct control of the President or of the War Department, and which the President or the Secretary of War may deem it advisable to transfer, convey, or deliver to said corporation for use in connection with any of the purposes of this act, or for any purpose incidental thereto.

Under that paragraph the President can turn over the Wilson Dam to this corporation; he can also turn over any of the Government powder factories; he can also, again reverting back to section 124 of the national defense act, condemn dyestuff plants, because they also use nitrates and nitrogen products, and turn them over to this corporation. If he can condemn them and once make them the property of the United States under his control, then he can turn them all over to this corporation and launch them into a great business monopoly. The prospect is somewhat staggering.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator that if we are going on with this proposition at all it seems to me it would be going far enough if we give the power to this corporation to operate the plant, with authority to purchase such power as the Government may have to sell from the Muscle Shoals Dam, if it ever is completed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is right, and one of my amendments provides—and more amendments which I shall offer later will carry out the same idea—that this corporation shall be limited to the manufacture of ammonium nitrate, ammonium sulphate, and cyanamid from atmospheric nitrogen.

Mr. GRONNA. But suppose that the Government of the United States should find it cheaper to manufacture by some other process; for instance, the arc process for making nitric acid?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not propose to limit the process.

Mr. GRONNA. Would the Senator prevent the Government adopting some other process which was far better and cheaper?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I have made no such suggestion.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I am going to limit the products, if I can, but not the processes.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that with the arc process they can make nitric acid, first in liquid form, and through a synthetic process can then make it into a solid, or what is called in Norway norgesaltpetre, or Norwegian saltpeter. That is very important for the Government, and if we are to set up this plant at all that is probably what will be done.

The Senator knows that Dr. Ernest Kilburn Scott—and I regard him as among the highest authorities in the world outside of Dr. Steinmetz and a few other men of our own country—recommended very highly the arc process. I have no choice in the matter of processes. All I want is to frame the law in such form that the Government of the United States can adopt any method and can manufacture any product that it sees fit and any product which is necessary for explosives. As to the Haber process, the Senator will remember that it was stated that nobody knows anything about the Haber process in this country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I very much doubt that statement.

Mr. GRONNA. That was admitted by experts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know there are some people who believe they know so much about it that they are investing their money in it.

Mr. GRONNA. It is possible that they have secured a lease, just as Mr. Washburn has secured a lease from Mr. Frank and Mr. Caro, the Germans who invented the cyanamid process. They ultimately sold it to the Italian Government and the Italian Government is leasing it to Mr. Washburn. However. I make the statement, and the record will bear me out in that statement, that we do not know anything about the Haber process.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then there are some foolish people in the United States, because there is a company at Syracuse, N. Y., now building a plant for the use of the Haber process, and they have entire confidence that they can make it run and pay, so long, of course, as the Government does not come along and take it away from them.

Mr. GRONNA. It would not necessarily follow that they would be foolish at all; they simply do not happen to know about that particular process.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator said that they did not know anything about the Haber process; that there was nobody in the country who knew anything about it.

Mr. GRONNA. They can secure the aid of people who do know about it. Mr. Ernest Kilburn Scott, who is an Englishman, and was a member of the munitions board of Great Britain during the war and is also one of the greatest engineers in the world to-day, suggested that the Government of the United States should get the information. He said the Germans would be glad to come over here and show us how to set up such a plant. That was his statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nobody objects to the Government of the United States getting information; I am not objecting to that; but I do not see what that has to do with this case. The Government of the United States to-day has a plant at Sheffield conducting experiments in connection with the Haber process. Undoubtedly they will succeed after a while in perfecting it.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope they will.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So do I, for then the taxpayers may get back a little of their money.

Mr. GRONNA. I was speaking of the testimony before the committee, and it was admitted, I think, by Dr. Lamb, of the War Department, that we have not discovered what the Haber process is. It was admitted and stated that the only people who knew anything about the Haber process were the Germans.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The industry is starting in this country; that I know; but, of course, this bill would kill it. No one would dare invest any money in any nitrate industry if a Government corporation could immediately turn around and condemn its patents and processes. My complaint against this bill is that if it goes through in its present form it will kill all development of the nitrate industry in the United States, and I am glad the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is going to offer an amendment which will strike out the power of condemnation.

Mr. President, there are one or two other matters in connection with the bill to which I may call the attention of the Senate, but they are not absolutely basically important and did not receive any attention in the committee. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that all the employees and officers of this corporation from top to bottom are to be outside of the civil service.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the best part of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. And they are to be paid any salaries which they may desire to be paid.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no limitation upon salaries, although the salaries are to be taken out of the funds of the Government of the United States.

On page 11 we find this:

> The United States shall not be liable beyond its stock subscription for any debts, obligations, or other liabilities of the corporation.

That would seem to remove the corporation, so far as possible, from being termed an instrumentality of the United States; but the very next sentence reads:

> The corporation and all of its assets shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the United States.

So we find a situation which appeals to me, as an amateur, as resulting in this, that the corporation is an instrumentality for some purposes, but not for the purpose of paying its debts.

Then we find later on that—

> The directors, officers, attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, agents, and other employees of the corporation shall not be officers or employees of the United States within the meaning of any statutes of the United States.

Then over on the next page it is provided that the Secretary of War may detail officers of the War Department to this work.

The bill, Mr. President, needs redrafting from top to bottom if it is to carry out the theory on which it is built.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I think it only fair to state that this bill was first referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and was then, later on, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and, of course, some of the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry felt that the bill having been before the Committee on Military Affairs, and perhaps considered there, was in fairly good form.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken. I saw to the reference of the bill when I introduced it, and it went to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the first instance and has never been to the Committee on Military Affairs. However, Mr. President, that is a very small point which I do not mean to emphasize except merely to show that Mr. Glasgow, who drew this bill, is not the great genius he was depicted to be upon yesterday.

REPORT ON PETROLEUM INDUSTRY IN WYOMING.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, on yesterday there was submitted to the Senate a report of the Federal Trade Commission in regard to conditions prevailing in the oil industry of Wyoming. I have been advised that the report is an important one, in which a very considerable number of people are interested, and that the commission is not in a position to have it printed. Accompanying the report is a letter of submittal on the part of the commission, which contains a synopsis of the report itself, and, in order that some publicity may be given to it, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of submittal may be put in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. The document to which the Senator from Idaho refers was referred to the Committee on Printing, was it not?

Mr. NUGENT. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I have merely asked that the letter of submittal be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. How long is it?

Mr. NUGENT. It is comprised in three pages of typewritten matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, January 3, 1921.

To the Congress of the United States:

The Federal Trade Commission herewith submits a report on the production, pipe-line transportation, refining, and wholesale marketing of crude petroleum and petroleum products in the State of Wyoming. The facts set forth in this report were developed in the course of an inquiry into the petroleum industry of Wyoming which was made under authority of section 6, paragraph (a), of the Federal Trade Commission act, which gives it power "to gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, * * * and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships."

The attention of the commission was drawn to the situation in Wyoming by a complaint regarding certain alleged unsatisfactory conditions in connection with the production and sale of crude petroleum marketed under certain contracts in the Salt Creek, Wyo., field. It soon became evident that there were monopolistic conditions in the production, pipe-line transportation, refining, and wholesale marketing of crude petroleum and its products throughout the entire Rocky Mountain section, and the scope of the commission's inquiry was broadened to include such phases of the petroleum business of that section.

Wyoming is now the important crude-oil-producing State in the entire Rocky Mountain region. Its annual production first became important in 1912, when about 1,570,000 barrels were produced, while in 1919 the production was almost 13,630,000 barrels, and in 1920 it will probably have reached 17,000,000 barrels. The only commercial production in other States of this region during the period covered by this report was in Colorado, and that is comparatively small.

The geographic isolation of the Wyoming oil fields with reference to the prolific Mid-Continent and California fields and the absence of pipe-line transportation to large consuming centers makes it necessary for the producer to sell his crude petroleum to local refining companies. The only refineries outside of the State that purchase Wyoming crude are comparatively small ones, which are largely dependent upon this source of supply. These refineries are located in Colorado, Utah, and the Province of Saskatchewan, Canada.

There is greater concentration in the control of the production of crude petroleum in the Wyoming oil fields than in any other field in the United States. The Midwest Refining interests, which, according to admissions of representatives of both the Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) and of the Midwest Refining Co., are now for all practical purposes under the control of the Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), which, together with other Standard Oil companies, now control the bulk of the crude petroleum produced in Wyoming. This control on the part of the Midwest interests has been largely acquired through long-time contracts which expire January 1, 1934. The Ohio Oil Co., a Standard company, has the largest owned production in the State, and in addition to this controls considerable quantities through working agreements. During the period 1917 to 1919 the Midwest interests controlled from 65 to about 69 per cent of the State's production; the admitted Standard interests controlled from 27 to 29 per cent; together these two interests controlled from about 93 to 97 per cent of the total production.

The Wyoming oil fields are so distant from large consuming centers of refined products that no extensive pipe lines have been built to such points; and the different oil fields in the State are so widely separated that the pipe lines do not form a complete system, but consist of comparatively short lines which connect a single field with a refinery or railroad.

Two companies directly operate practically all of the pipe-line mileage and transport nearly all of the crude petroleum marketed in Wyoming—namely, the Midwest Refining Co. and the Illinois Pipe Line Co., both of which are now Standard controlled companies. At the present time the Midwest Refining Co. owns and controls under lease about 38 per cent of the trunk-line mileage of Wyoming, and the Illinois Pipe Line Co. about 61 per cent, while the two together control practically 99 per cent of the total mileage. During the period 1917 to 1919 these two companies together transported from 97 to 98 per cent of all the crude petroleum marketed in Wyoming.

Although not required to do so by the State law, the Illinois Pipe Line Co. acts as a common carrier and has filed rates for its different lines. These rates compare favorably, in cheapness, with pipe-line rates in other fields.

At the present time the Midwest Refining Co. and its subsidiary, the Utah Oil Refining Co., own and operate 85 per cent of the refining capacity operating on Wyoming crude petroleum, while the Midwest Refining Co. and other Standard Oil refineries operating on Wyoming crude petroleum own and operate 90 per cent of such capacity. During the years 1918 and 1919 the Midwest Refining Co. and its subsidiary, the Utah Oil Refining Co., purchased and refined approximately 94 per cent of all the Wyoming crude petroleum refined excepting that refined in Canada.

With a large proportion of the crude petroleum production in Wyoming controlled by the Midwest Refining Co. through contracts which run until 1934, and with the Ohio Oil Co. and other Standard companies in control of most of the remaining production, the question naturally arises, how can any independent refining company become a factor in this section and what possible opportunity is there for future competition?

The refineries operating on Wyoming crude petroleum have a vast but relatively sparsely settled area in which to distribute their refined products, where there is little or no competition from refineries operating on Mid-Continent or California crude petroleum; but the demand in this territory has not been sufficient to absorb all the products of these refineries. For example, gasoline produced in Wyoming has been sold as far west as Spokane, Wash., and as far east as Des Moines, Iowa.

The Midwest Refining Co., which alone consumed about 86 per cent of all the Wyoming crude petroleum refined in 1919, not including that refined in Canada, has elected to sell its products f. o. b. refinery to marketing companies instead of building up an organization to sell and deliver to retailers and consumers.

The refined products sold by the Midwest Refining Co. since it began operations in March, 1914, have been largely sold to Standard Oil marketing companies. From March 1, 1914, to December 31, 1917, the value of sales to Standard Oil marketing companies constituted about 73 per cent of the total, in 1918 they were almost 89 per cent, in 1919 they increased to 90 per cent, while for the first half of 1920 such sales equaled about 88.5 per cent of the total value of all sales.

The earnings of the Midwest Refining Co. reflect its position in the petroleum industry of Wyoming; the rate of such earnings in the oil business as shown by the company's records increased from 4.4 per cent per annum in the first year to 33.1 per cent in 1919, with an average for the six-year period of 25.7 per cent.

While control of the Midwest Refining Co. has not been admitted prior to 1920, Standard interests have been alleged to have control, particularly since 1917. In that year W. J. Hanna and H. S. Osler, who have been identified with the Imperial Oil Co. (Ltd.), of Canada, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), bought 110,000 shares, or about 25 per cent, of the stock of the Midwest Refining Co. The reason given for selling this stock was to bring into the management of the Midwest Refining Co. "strong and experienced oil men, whose ability, experience, and influence in the oil world would strengthen the position of the Midwest Refining Co. in its territory and other territories"; and it was stated that these men were "to be put in control of the affairs of the company."

Soon after this a voting trust was organized with H. S. Osler, John Evans, and R. E. Jones as the trustees. John Evans and R. E. Jones have both been connected with financial institutions, while H. S. Osler, the third trustee, was in 1919 one of the counsel of the Imperial Oil Co. (Ltd.), which is a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey).

During the present year, 1920, the Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), which has had close business relations with the Midwest Refining Co. since its formation, purchased 203,053 shares, or about 33 per cent, of the Midwest Refining Co.'s stock. This percentage is admitted by representatives of both of these companies to be sufficient to give the Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) practical control of the operation and policies of the Midwest Refining Co.

The commission transmits this report to Congress under the powers granted it by paragraph (f) of section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act, which authorizes it "To make public from time to time such portions of the information obtained by it hereunder, * * * as it shall deem expedient in the public interest; and to make annual and special reports to the Congress."

Respectfully, HUSTON THOMPSON,
Chairman.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 6, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 5, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In accordance with the directions of the Master who said when ye pray say:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, in earth as in heaven, give us this day our daily bread and forgive our debts as we forgive our debtors and lead us—not into temptation but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, at the time the committee rose last evening I had raised a point of order against the paragraph on the subject of inland and coastwise waterways, on page 65 of the bill. I wish to discuss briefly the point of order, and to say that I do not care to discuss the policy of the expenditure at this time, because I realize that would more properly come under a motion to strike out. But it is such an important question and a new departure that this Government is taking that I think it ought to be fairly brought before the House now. If it is subject to a point of order, as seems to me probable, it ought to be decided before we pass on to any question of policy. But the law on this subject, with which no doubt the chairman is familiar, seems to be covered by subdivision (c) under the law of interstate and foreign commerce, in which it says:

(c) The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, out of any moneys hereafter made available therefor, to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between the transportation facilities operated by him under this section and other carriers whether by rail or water and to make loans for such purposes under such terms and conditions as he may determine to any State whose constitution prohibits the ownership of such terminal facilities by other than the State or a political subdivision thereof.

There is only one other paragraph that is important in this connection, and that relates to the operation of boats, and that has relevancy because of the appropriation carried in this paragraph of $300,000. The point that I wish to make particularly is that on page 65, the terminal dock at South St. Louis, Mo., $400,000, is not shown so far as anything appearing in the bill or anything appearing in the hearings is concerned, to be a dock for the transfer of freight, as contemplated in the statute. The same is true of practically every other item in that paragraph, with the exception of one, at Demopolis, Ala., which is otherwise stated in the hearings.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman raised the point of order?

Mr. FREAR. I have. I raised it last night.

Mr. DYER. To what?

Mr. FREAR. To the paragraph on page 65.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman raise the point of order to the whole paragraph or some portion of it?

Mr. FREAR. To the whole paragraph. The subdivision (c) provides that the Secretary of War under the railway act may provide for terminal facilities upon interchange of traffic, not terminal facilities for any other purpose, but simply for the interchange of traffic. Assuming, I presume, that the localities will furnish their own terminal facilties otherwise. But this is the only proposition that is involved, and if the Chair will bear with me I will read just briefly from the hearings to indicate that there is nothing, so far as I can ascertain, that indicates that this is for the interchange of traffic. On page 1113 of the hearings, when Gen. Connor was a witness, he testifies:

About $2,100,000 is for terminal facilities, and from that we expect to put a terminal at East St. Louis, a terminal at Cairo, one at Memphis, Vicksburg, New Orleans, and a coal-handling plant at Mobile. In addition to that, a small coal-handling plant at Cordova, Ala., and an interchange at Demopolis.

The CHAIRMAN. These terminals are not local terminals, are they?

Gen. CONNOR. No, sir; we have not embarked on anything that would commit us to providing local terminals. We have taken the stand that where a terminal is for purely local purposes the terminal must be provided by the locality, and we have confined ourselves to Government construction only where the terminal is an interchange point of material size between rail and water facilities.

That is the only place where the suggestion of interchange comes in. Referring now to page 1114, testifying as to these same terminals, Gen. Connor says:

We have not yet reached a stage where we could say what the total cost will be. In almost every case the terminal we would build will be built in conjunction with the municipal authorities of the place. At St. Louis ours will be a separate terminal; at Vicksburg it will be a separate terminal; and at Mobile and Cordova separate. In all the other places we expect to build a part of the terminal ourselves, which will be a unit in the entire terminal project which the municipality is planning on their water front, or else under the terms of the act we propose to advance funds to the locality to build the terminal themselves.

That seems to be the only reference on the subject of the project.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, after Gen. Connor had said that at St. Louis, "Ours will be a separate terminal," if the gentleman will look in the table on page 1115, for the South St. Louis dock, where the appropriation of $500,000 is asked, it shows that it is not to be a separate terminal, because St. Louis is to furnish an additional $500,000.

Mr. FREAR. That may be true; but that does not reach the point I have in mind. Interchange is not because the municipality engages with the Government in the building of the dock, but this is for interchange of traffic either by rail or by water. There is nothing to show here but what this terminal that is proposed to be built is separate and distinct from any other means of communication.

Mr. BLANTON. The point I am trying to make was that previously Gen. Connor had stated that the policy of the War Department under this law was not to attempt to build terminals for the exchange where the traffic was local, and then it is shown in this very title that this is a local proposition for South St. Louis.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Just for a moment.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Does the gentleman understand that this is to be a local terminal at St. Louis?

Mr. FREAR. What is a "local terminal" has no specific definition, Mr. Chairman. What I do say, Mr. Chairman, is that there is nothing in the hearing and nothing in the bill that indicates that this is to be an interchange point; that is to say, that it has any connection with any other system, either by rail or water.

Now, I am willing to concede, if this law is broad enough, that the Government can build a belt line all around St. Louis, for illustration, that the Government can go to the extent of involving the Government in any amount of money. But I do insist that the plain reading of the law is that it must be an interchange place where there is carrying of water traffic immediately on to rails or to other water traffic.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the purpose of this terminal is to accommodate through freight, and that the city of St. Louis has a local terminal?

Mr. FREAR. It is shown by the testimony that it is purely a terminal building or a terminal belt, without reference to any interchange, except in the case of Demopolis, Ala., where, as I understand, judging from the language, it is to be taken either in connection with rail traffic or some other water traffic.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman that under the language of the act the purpose must be interchange.

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now the appropriation that is sought to be made here expressly provides that the money must be expended in accordance with that particular section which authorizes the construction of these facilities.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, with the recollection that this House has, that notwithstanding its positive acts heretofore the Secretary of War has wiped out the action of the House in the past and has expended moneys other than as directed by law, I fear if this is placed in the discretion of the Secretary of War and without specific limitation the money will be expended in his discretion, whatever the law may be.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman surely has no justification for saying that a public official is going to violate the law in this provision?

Mr. FREAR. The "public official" has violated the law in the past, and we all know it; the same "public official." But I do not want to discuss that phase of it further, because I am endeavoring, so far as I can, to compel the "public official" to be bound specifically by the law, and insist that this appropriation shall only be made after the authority has been specifically passed upon by the House.

That is one authority I had in mind. I do not want to take up the time of the House unnecessarily, but on another point I do not understand how broad that law may be, because this is the first time it has ever been put into force. Another provision in the paragraph is for "cotton-handling equipment at Memphis"; I do not know whether that is covered by the terminal facilities, or even by any construction of the law. I am willing to say that it is a very broad law. "A terminal tipple dock at New Orleans." This Government has never built anything of this kind at any other place. What is this tipple dock to be? "Storage bins for coal tipple, Cordova, Ala."; "cargo-handling facilities" may possibly come within the strict reading of the law. "Mooring facilities, immigration station, Algiers, La." How does that affect any terminal facilities, and in what way does it affect the operation of the boats? And then finally, "and for operation, $300,000," specifically. Of course, that is an anticipated deficiency appropriation, because the Government boats on the Mississippi and Warrior are operated at a loss of over half a million dollars a year, some $740,000 deficit paid out of the Federal Treasury in 1919, and this $300,000 is to make up the deficiency. That is the point I wish to raise first.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. How does the gentleman interpret Gen. Connor's testimony that he just read a moment ago, this part on page 1113, in which he says:

We have taken the stand that where a terminal is for purely local purposes the terminal must be provided by the locality, and we have confined ourselves to Government construction only where the terminal is an interchange point of material size between rail and water facilities.

How does the gentleman interpret that?

Mr. FREAR. I have endeavored to make it clear, Mr. Chairman, by reading what Gen. Connor said on the next page, after I had read the identical language that the gentleman has just quoted, wherein he says that in almost every case the terminal we would build would be built in conjunction with the municipal authorities of the place. He says:

At St. Louis ours will be a separate terminal; at Vicksburg it will be a separate terminal; and at Mobile and Cordova separate. In all the other places we expect to build a part of the terminal ourselves, which will be a unit in the entire terminal project which the municipality is planning on their water front.

But not so in these cases covered by the $1,250,000 items in the paragraph. It is no part of the unit, no part of the municipality, no part of their project, nor is it shown anywhere that it is to be interchangeable; that is to say, that the traffic is to be interchanged.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is what it says. He says:

We have confined ourselves to Government construction only where the terminal is an interchange point of material size between rail and water facilities.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, what is the meaning of the word "interchangeable"? If you mean that the wharf at St. Louis offers an opportunity for interchanging traffic, we all concede that, or at any other point. But if it means that this terminal is to be made a part of the terminal which will carry from the same terminal the waterway traffic or the rail traffic—and that is what I believe is contemplated by law—that is not shown by the paragraph which carries the $1,250,000 appropriation. It does show that St. Louis is an interchange place of traffic for the whole city, but I am confining myself to the water terminal. That, with the appropriation of $300,000, indicates that it does not relate to terminals strictly, except to barges, floating apparatus, and so forth. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question to be decided at this time.

We are embarking upon a proposition that is not a question of a few dollars, but may involve the Government in a great many millions of dollars as we well know, and if subject to a point of order, it disposes of the matter. If not, then the House can determine the policy on a motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss anything at this time except the purely legal question raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Subsection (c) of section 201 of the transportation act reads as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, out of any moneys hereafter made available therefor, to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between the transportation facilities operated by him under this section and other carriers whether by rail or water, and to make loans for such purposes under such terms and conditions as he may determine to any State whose constitution prohibits the ownership of said terminal facilities by other than the State or a political subdivision thereof.

The estimate that was submitted to Congress provides for a number of things. The committee have subdivided that estimate and have put in only those specific items that would go to make up a terminal facility or a part of a terminal facility. They have not attempted to carry in the bill and the bill does not carry a single dollar for a terminal that is local and that is not used in the interexchange of freight with railroad and water transportation. Now, Gen. Connor was asked the question whether these were local terminals, and he said:

No, sir; we have not embarked on anything that would commit us to providing local terminals. We have taken the stand that where a terminal is for purely local purposes the terminal must be provided by the locality, and we have confined ourselves to Government construction only where the terminal is an interexchange point of material size between rail and water facilities.

The same testimony was before the committee before, and, so far as I know, the engineers of the War Department have not submitted any estimate for a purely local terminal.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I want to say to the gentleman that so far as the city of St. Louis is concerned the facts bear out just what he has said and what Gen. Connor testified, because the city of St. Louis has provided already, at a cost of $800,000, docks for the purpose of handling all local business, so far as river transportation is concerned.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield for a question.

Mr. FREAR. I think this is really the question at issue, What is the meaning of a local terminal and what is the meaning of an interchange terminal? Is it this: That a local terminal is simply for the local traffic, and an interchange terminal is one that is built for the continuation of the traffic if need be? And then comes the question, Is it to have a connection with rails or a connection with other waterway traffic, or what is to be the basis of an interchange terminal as differentiated from a local terminal?

Mr. GOOD. An interexchange terminal is one where freight can be transferred from water to rail or from rail to water.

Mr. FREAR. That is, the freight is to be brought there?

Mr. GOOD. The freight is to be brought there and transferred to the other system of transportation.

Mr. FREAR. Is there a word in the testimony which shows that that is to be done?

Mr. GOOD. The testimony of Gen. Connor is that it is to be an interexchange terminal, and that is the term they have used all through the hearings on which the transportation act is founded.

Mr. FREAR. Is this terminal to have rail connections—this terminal at St. Louis, for instance?

Mr. GOOD. Why, yes; I understand that is the case with all these terminals on the Mississippi, and the reason the cost is so great is because the level of the river varies as much as 30 or 40 feet, and it is necessary to have a dock extending for a considerable distance along the river, and a railroad track upon it, so that freight can be transferred from one to the other.

Mr. FREAR. I understand that. I have been on the St. Louis docks and on the New Orleans docks as well. The only question is whether or not there is any connection made or contemplated between water and rail. If so, it does not appear in the record except by the use of the one word "interchange."

Mr. GOOD. We have had hearings on this matter several times, and at the short session of Congress we have not had time to go into all the minutiæ of the matter; but the term "interchange terminal" has been used so much here that when it was used it had a perfectly clear meaning which was well understood by the committee, and I assumed that it would be understood by Congress. It is not intended to appropriate a dollar for a local terminal, and there is nothing carried in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. ESCH. Subsection (c) of section 201 of the transportation act I think clearly defines what is meant by the word "terminal" as used on page 65 of the bill. It must be—to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between the transportation facilities operated by him—

That is, the Secretary of War—

under this section and other carriers, whether by rail or water.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I want to say that I have read that section twice to the House to-day and we have all agreed upon that. The only question is, What is meant by "interchange" in the particular appropriation item that is to be made?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire just a moment's time on this proposition. I believe the point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is well taken. A great deal depends upon the decision of the Chairman on this proposition at this time, because if this act is construed too liberally it opens up an avenue of expense far beyond the imagination of any man in this House.

Yesterday we had a proposition of a similar kind in connection with the Du Pont Fountain, and the Chair ruled at that time that the proposition of furnishing water at Government expense for the fountain erected under an act of Congress was not intended in the original act, although it mentions a complete fountain. Now, if he ruled at that time that the water and the pump to furnish the water were not a part of a completed fountain, I think it is very proper that he give very careful consideration to what is meant in this original act, and how far we should go in interpreting the words "terminal facilities for interchange of traffic." The real crux of the whole situation is how liberally these words are interpreted, just what is actually meant. Whether the interchange of terminal facilities means that you can build buildings, inclines, coal trestles, and so forth, or that you can build a railroad 2 miles long, 4 miles long, or 10 miles long, or whether you can build a tunnel under the Mississippi River between St. Louis and East St. Louis. We must decide on some limitation as to what can be done under this act, and now is the time to do it, the first time it has come before the House. Therefore I ask that the Chair and House should give this a thorough and careful consideration, and also in interpreting it I think we should take into consideration the intent of Congress when it originally passed the act. I know that so far as I am concerned personally, and I think it applies to a great number of the Members of the House, that we had no intention when we passed the act of spending countless millions to build docks and coal bins up and down the Mississippi River where there is not now or never will be any commerce. I think also we must take into consideration and decide whether a separate terminal as shown in the testimony before the committee, on page 1114 of the hearings, is also a terminal for the interchange of freight. I also doubt very much whether you could legitimately consider under terminal facilities for the interchange as shown on page 75 of the bill an immigration station, and on this immigration station and the moorings connected with it I hang my principal point of order. It seems to me that it far exceeds the limits of the law and certainly is beyond the intention of the framers of the law and can not be considered as a part of or be included under terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state how it is possible to carry out the provisions of this act in reference to the inland waterways and interchange of traffic without having facilities such as are presented in this bill for dock facilities, how can the freight be transferred from one to the other?

Mr. SNELL. What I want is for Congress to decide how far it is going in this matter of terminal facilities, and whether it is to build a railroad 1 mile long or 10 miles long. It all depends on the interpretation of this transportation act and how liberal we will be, and now is the time to do it before it is too late and we have started to spend the money.

Mr. DYER. I understand the gentleman is presenting to the Chair material facts which the Chair is not called upon to decide in the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. The Chair is called upon to decide how liberal we will be in determining what the terminal facilities are—that is the real proposition that is now before the House.

Mr. DYER. As provided in the section in regard to the transportation act.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It provides that the Secretary of War is authorized to construct terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic out of any moneys hereafter made available therefor. Does not the gentleman think that that is sufficient to authorize the Congress to make the appropriation? Of course, the question as to the amount and how far Congress will go is one for the judgment of Congress.

Mr. SNELL. My point is that the provision for facilities, as carried in the bill, are far beyond the facilities that Congress intended when it passed the original act, and what I want is to get some proper limitations before it is too late.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The facilities for interchange of traffic are not only under the express language in the bill but according to the statement made by Gen. Connor.

Mr. SNELL. It is a question whether they are or not, when you say a separate dock. Is that a dock for interchange of traffic? I want to be sure on that point.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think the question of a separate dock precludes an interchange of traffic from that dock or by means of that dock.

Mr. SNELL. A separate terminal, that does not mean a terminal connection with another terminal.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They may be used for the interchange of traffic.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman say about this immigration station that is carried in the bill on line 15, page 65—"mooring facilities, immigration station"? Does that come under the provisions of the original act?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That simply is the location of the mooring facilities. It is located at the immigration station for the interchange of traffic. That language is to identify the place where facilities are to be constructed.

Mr. SNELL. Mooring facilities; is that necessary in the interchange of freight?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no appropriation to be made for an immigration station; that is where the mooring facilities are to be established.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the Chair that there is one item which, if the point of order is made to the whole section, is subject to a point of order, and that is that we make it available until expended. So, Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order and will offer an amendment that will perhaps clarify it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa concedes the point of order and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 65, insert:

"TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES ON INLAND AND COASTWISE WATERWAYS.

"For additional expense incurred in the operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways acquired by the United States in pursuance of the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Federal control act of March 21, 1918, and operated in pursuance of section 201 of the transportation act approved February 28, 1920, as follows: For interchange terminal dock, South St. Louis, Mo., $400,000; interchange cotton-handling equipment, Memphis, Tenn., $60,000; interchange terminal dock, New Orleans, La., $400,000; interchange storage bins for coal tipple, Cordova, Ala., $40,000; interchange cargo-handling facilities, Demopolis, Ala., $25,000; and for operation, $300,000; in all, $1,225,000: Provided, That not to exceed $17,680 of this appropriation may be used for the payment of experts, clerks, and other employees in the War Department in accordance with the provisions of section 201 (e) of the transportation act, 1920, approved February 28, 1920."

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Was the omission of the item for mooring facilities and immigration station at Algiers, La., intended?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Was it done designedly?

Mr. GOOD. I think perhaps there is some question as to whether that is an interchange facility.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The committee, however, of which the gentleman is chairman, has ordered this item to be inserted.

Mr. GOOD. The committee took the items the War Department estimated for, but refused to give the lump sum as the War Department estimated. That is the reason for that.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The committee authorized this particular item to be inserted in this bill, and now the chairman, having stated yesterday that he thought the point of order was badly taken, this morning concedes the point of order and offers a substitute which eliminates one of the items which his own committee authorized to be inserted in the measure.

I would like to insert an editorial from the New Orleans Times-Picayune of January 3 captioned "River terminals," which is very much in point in the discussion of this item:

RIVER TERMINALS.

In arranging for transportation over our inland waterways the House committee, at the suggestion of the War Department, provides in the measure now before Congress, in response to the earnest demand that has gone up from the West and the South, for the construction of river terminals at New Orleans and other important river points. The committee has cut down the total asked for these improvements from $4,000,000 to $1,250,000; but it has left the appropriation of $400,000 for a terminal dock at New Orleans, the same amount at East St. Louis, and lesser amounts at Memphis and other river points.

The chief of the service explains that it has confined itself to points where there is an exchange of freight between the river and the railroads and other means of transportation; but that for other points the terminals should be provided by the cities benefited by these facilities. The subject, however, will be investigated thoroughly to determine how far the Government ought to go in this matter, and to what extent they will relieve and increase the transportation facilities of the country.

The question was discussed in all its aspects some years ago by the friends of river transportation, and the conclusion was reached that the first and most pressing need for river traffic depended upon better terminal facilities at the river towns, for the exchange of freight between the boats and barges on the one hand and the railroads on the other. Appeals were made to the commercial exchanges, merchants, and others interested to stimulate local interest in construction of the better terminals, and considerable improvements were secured in this direction, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Evansville and other points establishing terminals. The Government has undertaken part, at least, of the work, with terminal docks at New Orleans and East St. Louis, and while it falls short of all that is needed, is so important a move in the direction of better transportation that it will create a feeling of great confidence. It will meet, to a marked extent, the chief weakness in river traffic—the task of providing adequate terminals at which freight arriving by river can be transferred to the railroads and other transportation companies.

Mr. GOOD. When I stated yesterday that the point of order was badly taken, I meant to say that I think it is badly taken as to the main items of the provision. I was not at that time taking into consideration the provision that made the appropriation available until expended, nor the item for mooring facilities, which was not fully explained.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Would the gentleman withdraw his amendment for a moment and allow the Chair to rule on the proposition?

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman wants to offer an amendment, he may do so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask this question, with all due deference to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]: Just how far does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations think he ought to go when the entire Committee on Appropriations has directed a report to this House with a recommendation that this particular appropriation be placed in the bill? With all due deference to the gentleman, I do not think it is within his province, without first consulting and conferring with the members of that committee, to offer as a committee amendment an amendment which has not been approved by the committee. I think the gentleman should stand by his bill as the committee ordered it reported to the House.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the question arises in the House whether or not in discussing a point of order it is proper to lecture the chairman as to the amendment he has offered. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired. The point of order comes too late, as discussion has been had. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the section as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to make the point of order now. The paragraph has been agreed to, and discussion had been had before the gentleman made his point of order.

Mr. FREAR. I made the point of order originally, and I never have withdrawn the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order which the gentleman made was conceded by the gentleman from Iowa and sustained. The gentleman from Iowa then offered an amendment in the nature of a new paragraph. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] obtained the floor and discussed the proposed amendment.

Mr. FREAR. I now make the point of order to the section as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the point of order comes too late. The amendment has been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph as adopted.

Mr. GOOD. But we have already adopted the paragraph.

Mr. DYER. The section has been agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no section. The whole bill is a section.

Mr. FREAR. This whole paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The paragraph went out on a point of order, and a new one has gone in by way of amendment.

Mr. FREAR. I will say this, that it is just as important to discuss a proposition of this kind as it is a fountain in Du Pont Circle.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, the gentleman has been here long enough to know the ordinary rules of the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, the Clerk will read.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. When would it have been the proper time to make the point of order against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. When it was offered.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] to immediately make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not rise from his seat to make the point of order when the paragraph was offered as an amendment.

Mr. GOOD. And the gentleman from New York knows he did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is out of order. The Chair has answered the parliamentary inquiry, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Central Branch, Dayton, Ohio: Current expenses: For pay of officers and noncommissioned officers of the home, with such exceptions as are hereinafter noted, and their clerks, weighmasters, and orderlies; chaplains, religious instruction, and entertainment for the members of the home, printers, bookbinders, librarians, musicians, telegraph and telephone operators, guards, janitors, watchmen, fire company, and property and materials purchased for their use, including repairs not done by the home; articles of amusement, library books, magazines, papers, pictures, and musical instruments, and repairs not done by the home; stationery, advertising, legal advice, payments due heirs of deceased members: Provided, That all receipts on account of the effects of deceased members during the fiscal year shall also be available for such payments; and for such other expenditures as can not properly be included under other heads of expenditures, $62,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I take it that it will be upon this bill.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DYER. To move to strike out the last word. In the matter of the soldiers' homes, for which we appropriate from year to year, I want to know if the chairman of the committee has any information on the subject with reference to the management of the homes and who is responsible directly for the management and expenditures in respect to the national homes for which we appropriate a great deal of money from year to year. To whom can we look for the proper and efficient management of the homes and the fair treatment of the inmates, the soldiers who are the charges of the Government?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, as I recall there are 10 branches, and they are all under the management of a board of managers. I do not recall the provision of law with regard to their appointment. The matter has been discussed on the floor of the House a number of times, but I do not recall just exactly the length of their term. I think, without question, that the Committee on Appropriations, which considered the estimates of the board of the soldiers' homes, is of the opinion that there is not a department or agency of the Government that has been administered more in a businesslike way than the soldiers' homes have been administered, in the last few years, at least. During the year they have transformed two of the soldiers' homes into homes that are more in keeping with hospitals, the one at Johnson City, Tenn., and the other at Marion, Ohio, the former for tuberculosis patients and the latter for treating nervous patients.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman speaks, no doubt, only from knowledge he has obtained as a member of the Committee on Appropriations from what he has heard.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that we have had men come to us who have been detailed to go to the soldiers' homes for the very purpose.

The members of the committee have gone through some of the branches of the home and the very best kind of treatment has always been accorded the old soldiers. And in these new homes and the one at Dayton, where they are securing the very best medical skill that money can hire, there is no question but what the soldiers who will be treated there will be given a very superior kind of treatment entirely.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to offer any criticism of the Committee on Appropriations for this item of more than $5,000,000 annually for the management of the soldiers' home without having more testimony, but I have received and do receive numerous letters—I received several within the last couple of weeks—from soldiers who are in some of these homes, and they are complaining bitterly of the treatment, and complain not only that they do not get the treatment which the Government provides through these appropriations, but that in appointments and in positions around the homes, where some of them could be appointed to do some kind of work, they are not given those positions, but civilians are brought into the home and given this employment. I think that is a matter to which the committee should give some investigation.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the paragraph. If I may have the consent of the committee, I desire to offer a brief expression upon the paragraph on page 65, transportation facilities on inland and coastwise waterways.

Mr. FREAR. I will concede that, if I may have 10 minutes on the same paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to discuss under the motion to strike out the last two words the provisions of the paragraph on page 65. Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. I wish to couple with that request——

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I object to that. I am obliged to object in the interest of orderly procedure. I dislike to do it.

Mr. SMALL. Of course, the gentleman will recognize that if I were minded to do so no time would be saved.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that; but the gentleman, I know, will not be minded to do it. We desire to get along with the consideration of the bill. We have been working two days on this bill, and we have not read quite as much as we ought to have. The gentleman will see that if we permit him to discuss a matter that has been passed we will have to permit the discussion of other matters after they are passed, and I hope the gentleman——

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman think he ought to take advantage of my disposition not to be retaliatory?

Mr. GOOD. I never take advantage of anyone, and I hope the gentleman will not put me in the position where I take advantage of the House.

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman propose in the future consideration of the bill to object to any discussion out of order?

Mr. GOOD. I hope to do so. I think I ought to do so. Does not the gentleman think I ought to do that?

Mr. SMALL. I am asking if the gentleman proposes to do so.

Mr. GOOD. That is my purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Regular order!

The Clerk read as follows:

Danville Branch, Danville, Ill.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $55,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word on page 72 in line 18 for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I am glad to have the word of the chairman of the committee that the present board of managers conducts these homes in a very businesslike and orderly manner and in this I agree with him, but I notice in reading the last report of the board of managers up to October 16, 1919, which is the last report, that in this Danville branch there were certain irregularities, and I had hoped that I might be able to speak in the presence of the gentleman who so honorably and long has represented the Danville district in Congress [Mr. CANNON]. I know he is in sympathy with the proper care of the aged and infirm soldiers. It appears by this report that in the Danville branch they had some one who was treasurer out there, and while these old soldiers had paid $1,697 on Liberty bonds by the partial-payment plan, it shows that he had only turned in $1,320, and on investigation he claimed to have a certificate of deposit for $365 payable to him, and he also was permitted to put in $12 in cash from the general cash box to his credit. It also seems that the Liberty bonds of members were kept in the treasurer's individual safe instead of the safe deposit box in the authorized depository. It shows that the general fund cash book was not kept with care. It shows that the general fund register of checks contained errors; that there were erasures, errors, and uncorrected mistakes. It was reported that a man without bookkeeping experience, who had been a plasterer, worked on this fund for a period of time and made changes in original pay rolls without changing the retained record. Now, all these things I call attention to for the purpose of showing that here we appropriate a great sum of money yearly for a highly proper purpose, and that is the care of these old soldiers of the Civil War primarily, although of course the situation now applies to soldiers of all American wars—but the Congress wants to be sure, I am positive, that the money goes to the right place that is for the benefit of these soldiers. And I desire to know if this inefficiency and bad practice in the handling of the soldiers' funds has been corrected. Just a year or so ago, as disclosed on page 9 of this same report, the man who was, unfortunately, president of the board of managers, bought some $41,633 worth of practically absolutely worthless bonds in a Kansas quarry or a Colorado quarry, paid $41,633 for them, and it now seems the money is being returned at the rate of $1,000 a month, but for $10,000 only. In other words, here is a fund in the hands of a president of the board of managers without responsibility, without bond, and that $41,633 of the public trust money for the care of these aged and infirm soldiers, was invested by him without any authority, simply upon his own belief, in practically worthless bonds——

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD rose.

Mr. GARD. In a moment. Now this is quite a sum of money, and I believe it is fortunate if we get back as much as $10,000. I first yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. I know about that case of which the gentleman speaks. It happened several years ago. Were those funds of the Government or of the old soldiers?

Mr. GARD. Both.

Mr. DYER. They have a post fund?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. It was not out of an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. GARD. It was a post fund, and, of course, the post fund is a fund which is made up by things coming from the operation of the laws affecting members of the home; that is, by effects of deceased members, accumulated pensions, and so forth, all from the property of these soldiers.

Mr. GOOD. It comes from gratuities of the old soldiers themselves.

Mr. GARD. So that it was a fund made up of money which was paid by the soldiers.

Mr. DYER. Which the Government ought to guard as sacredly as the money in the Treasury.

Mr. GARD. Absolutely; even more so, because this fund is made up by the accumulations of these men in the homes, the savings of these honorable men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARD. According to the report, all the Government gets back is $10,000, at the rate of $1,000 per month; so the post fund stands to lose a total of $31,633.45 without any accumulation of interest. This is simply an example of intrusting money to persons, who should take the greatest care of it, without proper governmental supervision. And in this connection I can only say that it seems to me it should be the expressed wish of this Government to make peremptory the care of funds, whether they come from Congress or are post funds. They are sacred and trust funds which are given to these persons who have charge of these matters and should be accounted for with absolute fidelity and honesty.

Now, there is another matter. These homes are to be enlarged in their scope. They were originally for members who were in the Civil War, and now the history of the United States in the next few years will be that these old men will be taken away by death, and that the homes will be populated largely by the soldiers of the Great War. And it seems to me that the policy of the Congress and the policy of the board of managers should be to so develop these national homes as to be for the best benefit of those who in the very immediate future need them most; in other words, to develop at least a number of these homes as hospitals of the highest merit in order to afford greater care for those who have acquired tubercular trouble, or who have been gassed, maimed, or injured in American service in this Great War, because these are the people who will populate the homes, and every possible thing should be done in them for the rehabilitation in health and spirit of the gallant boys who served and sacrificed. The care of the new men coming in, the care of those who fought in the great World War, is a care requiring the highest medical ability and absolutely the best and most complete treatment which science has been able to devise. Therefore it seems to me that the policy of Congress should be, and the policy of the board of managers absolutely should be, to increase the medical efficiency of these homes and give the required number of them to be so fitted, to be so equipped, that they can afford the proper medical relief to these soldiers of the Great War, and to separately maintain these homes for these soldiers—heroes who have so lately and so signally honored their country.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Board of managers: President, $4,000; secretary, $500; general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the board of managers, $5,000; chief surgeon, $4,500; assistant general treasurer, $3,500; inspector general, $3,500; clerical services for the offices of the president, general treasurer, and inspector general and chief surgeon, $19,000; clerical services for managers, $2,700; traveling expenses of the board of managers, their officers and employees, including officers of branch homes when detailed on inspection work, $14,000; outside relief, $100; legal services, medical examinations, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $1,700; in all, $58,500.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OSBORNE: Page 75, after line 3, insert the following paragraph:

"For the erection of a modern sanitary fireproof hospital at the Pacific Branch at Santa Monica, Calif., $500,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman withhold it for just a moment or two?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I will reserve it.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, this item, to provide for the erection of a sanitary fireproof hospital at the Santa Monica, Calif., home, is one that I have presented here in former years. A new hospital there is very greatly needed. That home has now about 2,500 old soldiers present all the time and a membership of about 3,500. The existing hospital was built 30 years ago. It is a wooden structure. The buildings are a couple of stories high, and some of them are three stories high, and those old men are kept in these inflammable buildings. There is a growing need for a good hospital there. We are liable at any time to have a fire, and it would be almost impossible at night to get all of those people out safely.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OSBORNE. Surely.

Mr. GARD. Are the buildings at Santa Monica all frame buildings?

Mr. OSBORNE. They are all frame buildings.

Mr. GARD. The fire risk is great out there, with all these frame buildings?

Mr. OSBORNE. It is very considerable, especially with respect to the hospital. The other men, in ordinary barracks, are in better condition, and could get out more easily. The buildings are all dangerous, but the hospital buildings are particularly so. I want to emphasize the importance and great necessity for a proper hospital for that home.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell us how many, on the average, are in the hospital?

Mr. OSBORNE. I am unable to give the exact figures.

Mr. BLANTON. Very few, relatively?

Mr. OSBORNE. I suppose nearly one-third of the members of the home are in the hospital. They are getting very old. The average age is now about 75 years, and a very large percentage of the membership are in the hospital.

There is just one other little point that I would like to call to the attention of the House, and I would like to have Members think of it. A couple of barracks are occupied by the soldiers of the recent World War. I visited the home when I was back there, and I have grave doubts as to the desirability of mixing the old soldiers of the Civil War with those of the recent World War. The conditions with respect to the men of the Civil War and those of the recent World War are so different, as to age and physical condition, that I think it would be desirable not to mix them but to have them separated. They would both enjoy themselves better if they were not put into the same institutions.

Mr. ROSE. Is there any truth in the statement that in many of these soldiers' homes the soldiers of the late war are actually displacing the soldiers of the Civil War? I have had a number of complaints from veterans, who seem to be familiar with the situation, and I shall be glad to be advised by the gentleman from California. Separate buildings should be provided.

Mr. OSBORNE. In this particular home there are two barracks from which the old men have been taken and which are occupied by the soldiers of the late war, but I do not hear many complaints about that.

I hope Members will take this matter under consideration and look into it themselves and see what they think about the proposition of mixing soldiers of the late war with soldiers of the Civil War. I think it would be a good idea if they could be accommodated separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I am satisfied that it will be necessary to make some additions to some of these soldiers' homes. It seems to me that the whole subject ought to be studied and a survey made of it, because they have the units there, and in many cases the soldiers could be better treated there. These homes, 10 of them, were acquired at great expense. The average age of the old soldiers of the Civil War in the soldiers' homes is over 77 years. In a few years these homes will be available entirely for the soldiers of the late war. While some additions to the homes will be required, I think it ought to be after a survey is made, and therefore I am compelled to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OSBORNE. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] is for the erection of a hospital not authorized by law. Furthermore it is not germane to the paragraph of the bill under consideration. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $5,984,800.

Mr. FESS. I move to strike out the last two words. I have had my attention called to certain objections to the administration of the national homes. I had not intended to mention the subject until it was opened up here. A gentleman recently came to my home to confer with me with reference to a certain practice in one of the homes. I asked him later to make a statement to me that I might lay before the Committee on Military Affairs. He made the statement under date of November 29, 1920. This statement is signed by the president of the United Veterans of the Republic, veterans of all wars, and the president is now an inmate of one of the homes.

I will say to the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] and to the Members of the House that this signed statement is very severe. I do not care to read it into the RECORD, because I have not verified it, and I do not know the basis for all the charges. They include those referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a moment ago, very much more in detail, however, than he gave them.

My attention was also called to the same situation by another gentleman who visited the home to make an investigation of this particular matter. He signed his name as the commander of the Paterson Unit, No. 1, United Veterans of the Republic.

I want to say to the membership of the House that these charges are a little too severe to pass over without attention. I submitted this statement to some members of the Military Affairs Committee. The members of the committee said the matter ought to be gone into, but that committee is a little tardy about taking up a matter of this kind. There is a question whether the management of these homes should not be turned over to the War Department. That, of course, is a mooted question. But I think the Congress owes it to itself to ascertain whether these complaints, which are very severe, are really based upon facts. I simply call the attention of the committee to the matter, and do not intend to ask to insert the statement in the RECORD, because the charges which it contains are so severe.

Mr. GOOD. I am sorry the gentleman did not call the matter to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. Six or seven years ago, when the loss of funds referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] came to the attention of the committee, the wires were used to call those men here immediately, and a hearing was had. We went into the whole matter, but the water was over the dam and the investment had been made.

I will say to the gentleman that I have personally written to a great many of the young men whom I know are in these homes to find out the character of the treatment they are receiving, and almost without exception they say that they have been in State hospitals, in municipal hospitals, and in Public Health hospitals, and that they have never received better treatment in any hospital or better food than they are getting in the soldiers' homes where they are.

These men, the veterans of the Civil War, are very old. I can understand that some of them are cranky. Some of them would not be satisfied anywhere. The gentleman knows that and I know that. Some of the soldiers of this war make complaints, and I have no doubt that in an institution composed of 10 homes, where about 15,000 persons are being cared for, there have been abuses and instances where they have not had the treatment perhaps that they ought to have; but where is the institution in the world that is perfect? It is not a man-conducted institution if it is perfect.

Mr. FESS. I will state to my friend, the chairman of the committee, that the writer says to me:

I am perhaps the most deplorably afflicted member of the National Soldiers' Home, taking everything into consideration, for I am constantly under the care of an attendant and have lost the use of both hands and both feet from disabilities received by disease contracted in line of duty during the War with Spain, for which I receive a pension which is my only income, and with which I pay for my own medication and from which I contribute to my three children.

I sympathize with the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] that we can not always get the exact facts by reading complaints.

I did not present this matter to the Committee on Appropriations, because I thought it ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the papers were in the hands of a member of the Committee on Military Affairs until this morning when I asked to have them returned to my office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs of buildings: For repairs of Patent Office Building, Pension Office Building, and of the General Land Office Building, including preservation and repair of steam-heating and electric-lighting plants and elevators, $30,000, of which sum not exceeding $8,500 may be expended for day labor except for work done by contract.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice this item does not appropriate an amount for the safe care of the documents. The last time I visited the office there were a great many very valuable papers on wooden shelves. We know there have been two fires in that building. I want to call the attention of the chairman to the importance of protecting these very valuable applications. I would ask the chairman if there was any evidence before the committee relative to the protection of documents? I also notice that there is $8,500 appropriated, and I would ask again if that is an elastic fund to be used by the commissioner as he deems proper.

Mr. GOOD. Not by the commissioner; that fund is administered by the chief clerk of the Department of the Interior.

The commissioner has nothing to do with the administration of that fund.

Mr. WATSON. Was the attention of the committee drawn to the condition of the files?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and the committee was impressed with the necessity for taking some action to secure additional file cases, but at the same time it was also called to the committee's attention that during the war the War Department required an immense number of files. They have been going through some of those files, and there is a great deal of material that is useless and will be destroyed. That is also true of other departments; and it seemed to the committee that it was wise to wait until there could be a house cleaning and see what files might be available.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think there is any other public building in the city in so much danger of fire as the Patent Office.

Mr. GOOD. Well, I think some of the temporary buildings are in more danger.

Mr. WATSON. I am speaking of the permanent buildings.

Mr. GOOD. That may be true.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $450,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, line 22, strike out $450,000 and insert $475,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have every confidence in the judgment of the Commissioner of the General Land Office who has occupied that position for the past eight years and who has labored faithfully and well in performing his duties. No greater industry or ability has been shown by any commissioner than that exhibited by Clay Tallman, of Nevada. I am sure that he knew what he was talking about when he stated at the hearings that the salaries and commissions of the registers and receivers at this time will amount to at least $462,000 a year and that $450,000 will not be sufficient to pay this expense. It will therefore be necessary to incur a deficit under the operation of this bill if the amount authorized is not increased. The business of the district land offices is increasing, the work must be done, and larger salaries and commissions will be earned. That is why I offer this amendment. I can see no advantage in not appropriating an ample sum of money when we know full well that otherwise there must be a deficiency appropriation made before the fiscal year is over.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to call attention to this fact: I have here a certification from Mr. Martin A. Morrison, president of the United States Civil Service Commission, dated January 3, 1921, giving me the following facts: Just before we entered the war, in the District of Columbia we had 38,227 civil-service employees. About the time of the armistice we had in the District of Columbia 117,760 civil-service employees. By reason of the fight that a few of us have been making in trying to get rid of the useless idle employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere since the armistice we have removed from the pay rolls 32,115 civil-service employees in the District of Columbia, but now on the 1st day of January, 1921, we still have here in the District of Columbia 85,645 civil-service employees, as against 38,227 just before we entered the war.

In other words, notwithstanding the number we have been able to get rid of, we still have in the District of Columbia 47,418 more civil-service employees than we had just before we entered the war.

Now, outside of the District of Columbia, not counting those in the District, but in the United States elsewhere, Mr. Morrison certifies that just before the war we had 398,054 civil-service employees. During the height of the war just before the armistice we had 800,000 in the United States. We now have on the 1st day of January, 1921, exclusive of those in the District of Columbia, 550,000 civil-service employees in the balance of the United States. In other words, in the United States, exclusive of the District of Columbia, we still have 151,946 more civil-service employees on the pay roll than we had just before we entered the war.

Of course, I know that some of these extra employees are necessary. But we do not need 47,418 extra employees now in the District of Columbia and we do not now need 151,946 extra Government employees elsewhere in the United States, and we must get rid of the surplus that is not needed.

After I had called attention to these conditions yesterday and after all my objections were voted down, the gentleman from Illinois got up and explained why the committee keeps on putting these appropriations in the bill. It is because they have been in every bill year after year that the departments prepare and hand over to our Appropriations Committee, and the Appropriations Committee continues to put in the bills for each fiscal year what appears in the preceding bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 12337) to provide for the relief of Anthony Sulik, former sergeant, United States Marine Corps.

The message also announced that in compliance with the provisions of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government the Vice President had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. HARRISON as members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, including the expenses of depositing public money; per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of clerks detailed to examine the books and management of district land offices and to assist in the operation of said offices, and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said clerks: Provided, That no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land offices except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $375,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 78, line 11, strike out "$375,000" and insert "$425,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is the amount asked for by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. We have here a Government service which last year collected $1,841,592, as against $1,405,254 the year before, an increase in collections of over $400,000 received from people who are seeking to obtain title to the public lands. Those who are acquiring this land, who are paying the full amount required under the law, are entitled to service. The only way that they can get the service for which they pay is to provide an adequate force in the local land offices to take care of the increase in business. This additional $50,000 would give them such service, in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Congress has recently enacted two laws which greatly increase the duties of this bureau. The first is the 640-acre homestead act, under which there will be about 30,000 entries this year, and the next is the mineral land leasing act, under which we have already collected $9,000,000 in back royalties for oil.

Leasing the public domain for mining purposes establishes a new policy which must be carried out by the district land offices. How can we expect to collect great sums in royalties and rentals without some additional administrative expense? Is it to be expected that the Government can obtain this increase in revenue and yet provide no additional facilities? It is extremely short-sighted on the part of Congress not to provide adequate funds, particularly when the money is not taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers, but is paid in by people who are anxious to obtain this kind of service. Such being the source of this revenue, why should not Congress pay decent salaries to the employees who collect it? A contented, well-paid, competent force will be sure to see that the interests of the Government are better protected than is now the case when experienced men and women are compelled to leave the service because they can not live on the small pay they are now receiving.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the bill is $25,000 more than the amount carried for 1920, and is the same as carried for the current year; but they ask for increases in pay, increases in travel expenses, and an increased force of 42. The committee felt that under all of the circumstances, inasmuch as they expended about $370,000 last year, the current appropriation would be sufficient.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman speaks of travel allowance in the Land Office. Has the travel allowance been changed so that it runs with the travel allowance for other services?

Mr. GOOD. We have not attempted to change the law in that respect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In other words, the Land Office man gets $3.50 as his travel allowance?

Mr. GOOD. We did change that amount, because that was 50 cents below what was authorized by law. In the hearings it developed that it was costing them more and we struck out the sum of $3.50 and left it at what the law provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, including not exceeding $15,000 for clerical services in bringing up and making current the work of the General Land Office, $500,000, including not exceeding $25,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of agents and others employed in the field service and for operation, maintenance, and exchange of same and for operation and maintenance of a motor boat: Provided, That the compensation of the chief of field service employed hereunder, including his services in the District of Columbia, shall not exceed $3,500 per annum and the compensation of all others employed hereunder shall not exceed $2,700 per annum each, except in Alaska, where a compensation not to exceed $3,000 per annum may be allowed: Provided further, That agents and others employed under this appropriation may be allowed per diem in lieu of subsistence, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, except when agents are employed in Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $5 per day each in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 78, line 21, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$650,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, from my own personal experience I know that the field service of the General Land Office is very much behind in its work because of the lack of necessary personnel. I am continually receiving letters from entrymen in Arizona, where the land in question must be investigated by some representative of the field service, who complain about the delay in issuing their patents. It often takes from six months to a year or more before the field service can possibly make the required examination. The entryman has fully performed his part of the bargain. He has done everything that is required of him by law, but to safeguard the Government against fraud all entries must be examined by some one in the field service. Until such an examination is made a patent can not be issued. The entryman suffers by this delay, although he has paid all the fees and commissions necessary to obtain title to the land. Why is he not entitled to promptly receive the service for which his money has been deposited in the Treasury of the United States?

In the mineral land leasing law there is a provision affecting all of the impounded oil, or cash deposited in lieu thereof, which was held for adjudication by reason of the withdrawals made several years ago. Over $10,000,000 is involved, and to do justice to the Government this whole matter must be carefully investigated by the field service. This bill provides the same amount of money to pay the same force of men, yet it is well known that the duties imposed on the field service have been greatly increased and that vast sums of money are involved where the interests of the Government must be protected. It seems to me that under such circumstances it would be sound business policy on the part of Congress to increase this appropriation, so that the rights of the United States can be amply protected. That is why I offer this amendment, which is the amount asked for in the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Do these delays apply to current efforts to secure land, or to land contests that have been running all of these years?

Mr. HAYDEN. The delays to which I referred apply to current business now pending, where the entryman has submitted his final proof. There may be some question as to the character of the land and it is necessary to send an inspector to see that the entryman is getting nothing more than that to which he is entitled. If there are not enough inspectors, the entrymen suffer, even though in the aggregate they have paid more money into the Treasury of the United States than it costs to conduct the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has it been the gentleman's experience that when it comes to an examination by an inspector there is usually one from the Agricultural Department, one from this service, if possible, one from the Geological Service, and also some map maker from some other service?

Mr. HAYDEN. There might be an inspection by the Agricultural Department if the land is in a forest reserve. If it was an enlarged or grazing homestead entry, the inspection must be made by the Geological Survey, but the ordinary examination is made by the field service of the General Land Office.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it not a fact that so many of these land examiners go to examine the land that they can not get together in any office and determine what ought to be done?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not know about conditions in the Northwest, but in the Southwest the members of the field service have been efficient, but so limited in numbers that they could not possibly do this work as promptly as it ought to be done. The only cause for inefficiency is that, owing to the meager compensation which they receive, many experienced men have been compelled to leave the service and their places have been filled by others not as competent or well trained.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the protection of the so-called Oregon & California Railroad lands and Coos Bay Wagon Road lands: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, with the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, as in his judgment may be most advisable, to establish and maintain a patrol to prevent trespass and to guard against and check fires upon the lands revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916, and the lands known as the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands involved in the case of Southern Oregon Co. against United States (No. 2711, in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit), $25,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to this item, Oregon and California fire protection, in the Interior Department. The statement was just made in discussing the previous matter that one department does not run over another. Now, here is an appropriation apparently in the Interior Department, and yet it says:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, or otherwise, as in his judgment may be most advisable, to establish and maintain a patrol to prevent trespass and to guard against said fires upon the lands revested in the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. GOOD. There are about 2,300,000 acres of Government land, estimated to be valued at $30,000,000, and the appropriation has always been about $25,000 to enable them to guard the forests against fire. It is true the Interior Department, as a rule, allots the money when it is necessary to the Department of Agriculture, because the Forest Service there is fully equipped to do the work. This is not a part of the national forest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why does not the Forest Service come and ask for the money?

Mr. GOOD. They would not have the power. They only have power in reference to forest fires in the national forests and this is not a national forest; it is part of the Government domain.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Suppose a fire occurs on the Federal domain, whose money will be used?

Mr. GOOD. This is for forest fires; this is all spent for fighting forest fires and protecting the forests——

Mr. SINNOTT. I think this grant is administered by the Interior Department and the Secretary of Agriculture officials in cooperation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is just what I charge, that in any number of cases the money is wasted in duplication and the overlapping of one department on another.

Mr. SINNOTT. Furthermore, this is in connection with land contiguous to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Separate tracts, individual tracts?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; Government forest lands in the grant and also contiguous to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Government forest land, but not forest reserve land?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; forest reserve land.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So there is some reason for having two men employed to run over the tract of land?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have seen them.

Mr. GOOD. They do not tell us that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All right.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have not the floor, but I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask a question. The gentleman stated that the reason for this particular appropriation was that usually every year they appropriated $25,000?

Mr. GOOD. No; the gentleman did not state that.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what he answered the gentleman from Washington, and I am quoting his words.

Mr. GOOD. I stated that the appropriations had been made in this form for a number of years. I do not know whether it makes any difference whether it is made here or made in some other bill, but so far as we can find out the money has been spent in an economical way. Just as the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] has said, there are forest lands contiguous to those, and perhaps some of it within the boundaries of the Oregon & California Railroad lands, but there are over 2,300,000 acres of this land that the Agricultural Department would not have authority to control under its appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Washington did not seem to impress the chairman very much with his suggestions and arguments, but he impressed me with the fact that this is another one of these duplications that the committee headed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] is to seek to do away with, and we have the promise of the gentleman from Nebraska at least that they were going to do away with these duplications in Government expenses, and every time a gentleman on this floor points out a duplication, why, the chairman explains it, because it has been heretofore appropriated, and that is the only argument we have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The real point to be made concerning joint appropriations in regard to the Agricultural and Interior Departments is this: Congress some years ago yanked the Forest Service up by the breeches and threw it into the Agricultural Department, where it does not belong. I assume this new service means——

Mr. BLANTON. But we are having two expenditures where, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Washington, there ought to be one.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have two departments to take care of public lands.

Mr. BLANTON. And there ought not to be but one.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. It is going to keep on until the gentleman from Nebraska gives us some relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 10, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, including lands in national forests, $330,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, line 13, strike out "$330,000" and insert "$425,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the Director of the Geological Survey asked for $600,000 for topographic surveys. My amendment will make the amount $425,000, which was the sum of money regularly appropriated for this purpose prior to the war. I seek nothing more than to get this work back to a peace basis. There is nothing more important to an engineer than a good topographic map, for only by using a flying machine can any man see both sides of a mountain at one time. We are building public roads and highways at great expense all over the United States, and there is consequently a tremendous demand for proper topographical maps for use prior to laying out and constructing these arteries of travel. This mapping should go on as speedily as possible, for it is essential to the proper development of a unified system of public roads. I know that the Geological Survey is short of funds for this purpose for I have been trying for some time to have more topographic surveys made in my State. I once obtained a promise from the director to have a certain area along the Mexican border surveyed, but the money was expended in a survey of a part of the Atlantic coast where some one in the War Department feared that the Germans might land after they had defeated our Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For geologic surveys in the various portions of the United States, $352,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 84, line 17, strike out "$352,000" and insert "$400,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am again trying to get the appropriation for this activity back to the amount that was allowed by Congress for this purpose before the war, namely, $400,000. Now is the time to put the country back on a peace basis and do things as we did before the war with Germany. I want to direct the attention of the committee to some facts prepared by Mr. E. B. Rosa, of the Bureau of Standards, showing how the appropriations made at the last session of Congress were apportioned. He shows that 68 per cent of the total appropriations were in payment of the expenses incident to the last war or previous wars. Twenty-five per cent of the total was appropriated for the future wars; that is, for the Army and the Navy. Only 3 per cent of the expenses of the Government are occasioned by the operations of the Congress and the departments in Washington, and only 3 per cent was expended for public works, such as public roads, rivers and harbors, and public buildings. Only $1 out of every $100 raised by taxation is expended for the scientific and educational activities of this Government. And it is upon that ultimate $1 that this committee is to-day practicing a cheese-paring variety of economy, because the work of the Geological Survey clearly comes within the last classification. Certainly the committee could find some other place, and it can be found, to reduce the monumental expenses of the Government. But why trim down a scientific activity such as this with a sharp knife to save a few dollars, which will, after all, be absolutely insignificant in the great total that is going to be appropriated by this Congress? There is no more important work performed by any bureau of the Government than that of the Geological Survey. It makes known new natural resources of the United States which materially aid in the progress and development of the country. It is no economy at all to stifle the activities of a great scientific bureau of this kind and then make vast expenditures for a great Army and Navy, as will undoubtedly be done by this Congress. Why not exercise greater care in making appropriations for purposes of destruction instead of so closely scrutinizing small items of expenditure, every dollar of which goes for a constructive purpose?

Mr. GOOD. We allow more than we allowed in 1915; more than we allowed in 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, or 1920—not very much more, but a little more. And inasmuch as this is to survey, and it is purposed to use it for surveying of coal and oil fields, it seemed to the committee to give them more money for next year would be at least right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of the investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska, $75,000, to be available immediately;

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $180,000, of which $25,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 85, line 7, strike out "$180,000, of which $25,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000, of which $40,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is according to the estimates presented by the Interior Department. In his testimony before the Committee on Appropriations the Director of the Geological Survey says that this appropriation is largely expended in cooperation with the several States, and that to his knowledge $200,000 is now available in appropriations made by the various State legislatures for cooperative work. When the State authorities ask the Geological Survey for assistance they are told that the appropriations made by Congress are so small that the survey can not meet them dollar for dollar to do such work. It seems but fair that if the States are willing to pay half of the expense the Federal Government should meet them halfway in carrying on investigations of this necessary character.

There can be nothing more important than proper and adequate stream measurements everywhere. There is much talk about water-power development, but no one will invest large sums of money in such enterprises unless a record has been kept for a long series of years—not 5, nor 10, but 20 and 30 years—so that it is well known whether there will be an adequate supply of water for power. The same is true of irrigation. There are numerous projects the feasibility of which is doubtful, because no consecutive record has been kept of the flow of the stream for an adequate period of time. One may see a stream in flood and say that it will irrigate many acres of land, but when the dry years come the project may prove to be a failure. The only safe way is to have accurate measurements made by the Geological Survey. If our country is to be developed, if we want to see water-power sites placed in use, if desert lands are to be irrigated, if the public-land States are to progress, this work of stream measurement must be vigorously prosecuted, because it is the only sound and scientific basis for all such enterprises. There has undoubtedly been a manyfold return to the Federal Government of all the money spent in investigations of this kind. It is poor economy not to continue the work on a scale much larger than the basis provided for in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GOOD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the item in the sundry civil appropriation bill on the subject of transportation facilities regarding inland and coastwise waterways, made this morning, and particularly to insert a short editorial from the New Orleans Times-Picayune on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Government fuel yards: For the purchase and transportation of fuel; storing and handling of fuel in yards; maintenance and operation of yards and equipment, including motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for inspectors, purchase of equipment, rentals, and all other expenses requisite for and incident thereto, including personal services in the District of Columbia, the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for these purposes for the fiscal year 1921 is reappropriated and made available for such purposes for the fiscal year 1922, and of such sum not exceeding $500 shall be available to settle claims for damages caused to private property by motor vehicles used in delivering fuel: Provided, That all moneys received from the sales of fuel during the fiscal year 1922 shall be credited to this appropriation and be available for the purposes of this paragraph.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNELL. I do so in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. How much is there of that unexpended balance of the appropriation for the purpose of purchasing fuel at Government fuel yards, and so forth?

Mr. GOOD. That was appropriated as a revolving fund. They have a total investment of $1,154,088, but a part of that may be invested in trucks and equipment.

Mr. SNELL. How are we running on that? Are we paying expenses or making money?

Mr. GOOD. They claim they are furnishing coal to the Government departments at actual cost, plus the administration charges, and that they are simply breaking even.

Mr. SNELL. The Government is getting its coal cheaper than ever before?

Mr. GOOD. That is what they claim, that the Government is getting its coal cheaper than ever before. It should save the dealers' profit at least.

Mr. SNELL. Are you satisfied that it is?

Mr. GOOD. A short time ago the Superintendent of the Capitol, who in my judgment is a very competent man and looks into matters of expense in all the activities he has charge of very closely, felt that he could purchase coal more cheaply outside than he could secure it from the Government fuel yard. But afterwards it seemed that there was some confusion with regard to certain charges that were made by the Government fuel yard. They had not been given credit for the fact that the cartage did not amount to anything for the coal that was furnished to the power people. The power plant is located, as I recall, on the tracks, and there is no charge there for cartage, and they were charging an excessive amount.

As I remember, the complaint was more along that line than it was that he could buy more cheaply from other sources. I think that is the only complaint I have heard, and I have no way of telling except by complaints.

Mr. SNELL. I suppose in making up those figures they make allowance for depreciation or interest on investment, or something of that kind?

Mr. GOOD. I think they do. They make a charge that will make good any of the wearing out or breaking down of the equipment. Of course, the Government fuel yards only furnish the fuel for Government institutions. It is purely an agency to distribute coal among the different departments that have a steam plant.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I supposed; and I was wondering whether it was the judgment of the committee that it was a success and that they were saving money by it.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, it is paying its way, and it should result in a great saving. During the last two or three years the price of coal has gone up; this year considerably more than it was last year. In all these estimates every department came and asked for an increase of from 20 to 25 per cent, and in some cases more, for their fuel, claiming that the cost was greater this year than last year by such percentages, and they felt that the cost would be still more next year. The Committee on Appropriations did not believe that that would be the case.

Mr. SNELL. For commercial purposes you can buy more cheaply now than you could last year. I know that as an actual fact.

Mr. GOOD. I understand so, and as to the amount we put in the bill we concluded that the cost next year would not be any more than it was last year, if as much. Personally I have thought that it will be considerably less.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Do the departments get all their fuel from this agency?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Under the law they are compelled to do so.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there a purchasing agent for all of them?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the Government Fuel Yards is such agency. They keep a large supply on hand.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. How much is there of this unexpended balance of the revolving fund?

Mr. GOOD. They have a total cash balance of $1,154,088.

Mr. TILSON. Does it take that amount of money to handle the coal here in the District? I mean does it take that amount of money to conduct the business? As I understand, it can be turned in when a part of the coal is utilized and made to revolve around and around.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe it would take that much, under the statements made at the hearings, if the departments did what they ought to do. If, when a department placed its order for coal, it would make an allotment or partial payment to the fuel yard, or would pay the bills when the coal is delivered and the bills are presented, that much would not be required. But instead of that they are slow in making payments. We are told by the officer in charge that it is necessary to use all of this fund because some of the departments are so slow in making payments.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] if this provision for a revolving fund is not a war-time provision? Was not that one of the provisions that was brought into existence during the war?

Mr. GOOD. It was intended as a permanent proposition. The gentleman will see that that is so if he will read the discussion at the time when Mr. Sherley presented the proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. It was during the war?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it was during the war.

Mr. BLANTON. And it was because of the war-time conditions that this was created, was it not?

Mr. GOOD. No. I suppose that if a baby were born during the war the gentleman would call it a "war-time baby." [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. No. I would not think of any such foolishness as that; but I say that now that the war is over these receipts should not be again spent and respent and kept in a permanent revolving fund, but should be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Not if the Government can purchase coal more cheaply than it would have to pay in procuring it from local dealers and operators.

Mr. BLANTON. I was wondering whether we should not abolish this war-time agency, and to that extent get back to a prewar-time basis.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1922 the head of any department or independent establishment of the Government having funds available for scientific investigations and requiring cooperative work by the Bureau of Mines on scientific investigations within the scope of the functions of that bureau and which it is unable to perform within the limits of its appropriations, may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, transfer to the Bureau of Mines such sums as may be necessary to carry on such investigations. The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer on the books of the Treasury Department any sums which may be authorized hereunder and such amounts shall be placed to the credit of the Bureau of Mines for the performance of work for the department or establishment from which the transfer is made.

In all, Bureau of Mines, $1,357,300.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose this is another of the war-time provisions which may have been essential at the time, and may still be; I do not know. How far does the gentleman think it is necessary to permit the departments, and not Congress, to determine what shall be done by the Bureau of Mines and the other departments? This authorizes the War Department, whenever an appropriation is made to the War Department, to turn the appropriation over to the Interior Department, to be expended by the Bureau of Mines. It may have been very essential. It may be very desirable now. I do not undertake to say that it is not, though I do not think it is a very good way of appropriating money.

Mr. GOOD. When this matter was presented to the committee several years ago it was found that both in the Bureau of Mines and in the Bureau of Standards a great deal of scientific work could be done if the other departments could send it there and have the work done and pay just what it cost to have the work done there and to make the payments as the work progressed. Before this legislation was enacted they could not pay for the work as the work progressed, and the bureau did not have the appropriation to carry on the work without such payment. A question often comes up in the War Department or in the Navy Department for scientific determination. The equipment for doing the work may be at the Bureau of Mines or it may be at the Bureau of Standards, but they do not have the appropriation with which to employ the men to do it. Now, this language was put in simply to give them authority to have the work done by a Government agency, where the Government agency was equipped to do it, and permit them to transfer the funds to have it done there as the work was being done. Otherwise they would have to go out and pay for the services and then pay for the overhead and for a profit, of course, on the capital invested. It seemed to us that it was a wise provision, and we granted that both to the Bureau of Standards and to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Theoretically, of course, it might be wise to say that we appropriate money for one department with authority to that department, if it chooses, to turn it over to some other department. Of course, that generally would be a rather sloppy way of making an appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, can the gentleman tell us—I do not know whether it was shown in the hearings or not—how much money was actually transferred under this provision of the law, or has been at any time?

Mr. GOOD. No. This matter was pretty thoroughly gone into a few years ago when we first placed the provision in the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was a war measure to provide for war activities.

Mr. GOOD. It was with reference to certain war activities, but it also applies to peace-time activities.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That may be; but the amount of money that would be turned over during the war would be no criterion of the amount turned over in peace times.

Mr. GOOD. That is very true; but I recall quite a number of items that were mentioned at the time, both by Dr. Stratton and Dr. Manning, where they were equipped to do the work and had the facilities for it if they could bring in some men to do it; but they did not have an appropriation to hire the men to do the work and carry the account. So it was simply provided here that where an appropriation was made for the War Department or the Navy Department or other departments to secure a certain thing—it may have been scientific information—they should allot that money or a portion of it to some of these scientific bureaus to have the work done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following sums are appropriated out of the special fund in the Treasury of the United States created by the act of June 17, 1902, and therein designated "the reclamation fund," to be available immediately:

For all expenditures authorized by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law, and all other acts under which expenditures from said fund are authorized, including salaries in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; examination of estimates for appropriations in the field; refunds for overcollections hereafter received on account of water-right charges, rentals, and deposits for other purposes; printing and binding, including a publication called the Reclamation Record; law books, books of reference, periodicals, engineering and statistical publications, not exceeding $1,500; purchase, maintenance, and operation of horse-drawn or motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; payment of damages caused to the owners of lands or private property of any kind by reason of the operations of the United States, its officers or employees, in the survey, construction, operation, or maintenance of irrigation works, and which may be compromised by agreement between the claimant and the Secretary of the Interior; and payment for official telephone service in the field hereafter incurred in case of official telephones installed in private houses when authorized under regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I notice that this paragraph proposes to provide specifically for the publication of the Reclamation Record.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I apprehend that in view of the present law on the subject of publications all of the bureaus will seek to have specific provisions inserted in the appropriation bills for the publications issued by their bureaus; but does the gentleman from Iowa think there is any warrant of law for making appropriations for this specific purpose?

Mr. GOOD. The Reclamation Record is a publication issued by the Reclamation Service, and the water users in the main subscribe for it, and they pay the subscription price. The money gets back into the fund. Now, unless there is authority to publish it they would have no right to publish it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They do not let a little thing like that stand between them. It has been published for years without authority, and I suppose will continue to be published in the future without authority; but in view of the law on the subject of publications I suppose all these bureaus would like to have specific authority now.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose so, but I think the gentleman will see that there is a big difference between this and the other matter. In this case the publication is paid for out of the reclamation fund, not out of the Treasury, and the members of the water users' association subscribe for it and pay an amount at least equal to the cost of the publication.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman does not mean to say that it is not paid for out of the Treasury?

Mr. GOOD. It is paid for out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, that is out of the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, that money, under the law, as the gentleman knows, is to be returned to the Treasury. It is a loan fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know, but it comes out of the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order against the language on page 92, lines 5 and 6—

Including a publication called the Reclamation Record.

There is no authority in the reclamation law—no express authority, at least—for the publication of this Reclamation Record.

Mr. GOOD. I think that is true. I concede the point.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FESS). The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have two large reclamation projects in my district, one of 140,000 acres and another of 155,000 acres, and I know that the farmers out there look upon the Reclamation Record with a great deal of interest. It seems to contain a lot of information not only of interest but matter greatly appreciated by the farmers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Colorado undoubtedly reads the Reclamation Record. I have read it myself, and I think it is about as valueless as any public document I ever saw in my life. It is mainly devoted to puffing somebody connected with the Reclamation Service. It is almost of no value to anybody. However, I do not apprehend that striking this out of the bill will affect the publication of the Record. It has been published for years in defiance of law, and probably will continue to be published regardless of law, although I hope it will not become the practice with the thousand and one publications issued by the different bureaus to ask for specific authority in each case for the publication of this sort. That will become the practice if we allow this to go in, in my opinion.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. From an irrigation standpoint and the standpoint of drainage and seepage it does contain a good deal of good information.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not say it does not, although I have read it for years to see if I could find anything worth reading.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let the gentleman come out on a reclamation project, and then perhaps he will be interested in it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, was the point of order sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boise project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $1,570,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 93, line 12, after the amount, insert a comma and add "together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this project for the fiscal year 1921."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Minidoka project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, with authority in connection with the construction of American Falls Reservoir, to purchase or condemn and to improve suitable land for a new town site to replace the portion of the town of American Falls which will be flooded by the reservoir, and to provide for the removal of buildings to such new site and to plat and to provide for appraisal of lots in such new town site and to exchange and convey such lots in full or part payment for property to be flooded by the reservoir and to sell for not less than the appraised valuation any lots not used for such exchange, $1,735,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Facetiously, if not seriously, with the change of the rules, why should not the Committee on Irrigation have jurisdiction of a subject of this sort and report upon it? Why should the Committee on Appropriations, with all its great work of holding down expenditures of the Government, undertake to tell whether they shall move a town site and build a new one, and how they shall operate it? What is the value of a Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands if every time a project comes up its details are to be worked out by the distinguished Committee on Appropriations? I thought when the gentleman from Iowa and other members of the Committee on Appropriations succeeded in changing the rules of the House they pledged the House that they would attend to their own work of appropriations and leave legislation to the legislative committees of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to answer for the chairman of the committee, who seems to be speechless.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Texas is never speechless. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman, who has pet projects in his State, knows more about the matter than the Irrigation Committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, it is not in the State of the gentleman from Iowa, and he has no pet projects. I will say that for him.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois will admit that this appropriation bill has far less of legislation in it than the sundry civil bill has carried for a great many years. It is always necessary, if we are to appropriate wisely, if we are to make efficient appropriations in a way that the money will be expended wisely, to carry some little legislation governing its expenditure. As far as this item is concerned, I do not believe a single member of the committee——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Knows anything about it.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they do know about it. We went all over the project. It is going to be necessary to move a town in order to get a reservoir. The men who are to take up the reclaimed land will have to pay for it. If they are going to utilize the water at the American Falls, they have got to flood the town.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is not that important enough to attract the attention of the proper committee on the subject? The Committee on Appropriations has to consider these things offhand, while the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands would spend a month on it.

Mr. GOOD. We have not passed on this matter offhand.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I say offhand; I do not mean to say without any consideration, far from it; and I think the sundry civil bill is perhaps as free from legislative provisions as any previous bill; but when it comes to moving a town, I should think that that was important enough to have the proper legislative committee give consideration to the subject. The State of Idaho has as bright men in the House as you will find anywhere in the country. They have been easy about this, because one of them is on the Committee on Appropriations. The proper procedure under the new rules of the House would be for the legislative committee to provide by legislation upon the subject.

Mr. GOOD. It is not a new rule; the same rule has been in operation in this House for a long time. The gentleman knows that it has been the rule of the House ever since he has been a Member that the Committee on Appropriations shall not bring in legislation. It is an old rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a new rule forbidding any other committee to bring in appropriations and thereby giving an inference in addition to the actual rule itself that the Committee on Appropriations will confine itself to appropriations.

The Committee on Appropriations brings in an appropriation bill. The Navy or the Army wants something in connection with an appropriation, and they will ask the Committee on Appropriations to give them the legislation, because that bill has to be considered in the House. It has the right of way. It can cut out all other legislative propositions, but if the Committee on Appropriations seeks to do that sort of thing and it gradually works into that practice, it will absorb all of the jurisdiction of the House.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I were not correct about it, or at least if I did not think so, I would not say so.

Mr. GOOD. There is no Member of the House who pays closer attention to matters of legislation and appropriation than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and yet the gentleman from Illinois would not have a great deal of the legislation that is in this bill stricken from the bill. He knows that it was put there as a general rule in order to save the money, in order to protect the money, and to properly administer the appropriation. Take this item. Here was a matter that came up, here was a large fund that came into the reclamation fund by the oil leasing act. They estimated the amount at over $10,000,000, and the time had arrived to do this work. A questionnaire was submitted to all those people out there, the water users, and almost to a man the people who are to pay for this, who are going to live on this additional unit, asked for it. The gentleman from Idaho wanted it, but if there is any objection to it from any source, as far as I am personally concerned——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, anyone can strike it out on a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. However, as I remarked when I started in, I raised the question facetiously and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his reservation to the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD: On page 98, line 2, after the amount insert a comma and add "together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this project for the fiscal year 1921."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not willing to let this item pass without a word—perhaps "protest" is too strong—but at any rate without a word to call attention to the tendency here disclosed which to my mind is going to be fatal to the new scheme of appropriations, viz, the placing of legislation on appropriation bills. I for one do not believe that it is impossible to get small bills through both branches of Congress. My experience has been that such bills go through very easily when they have merit. Therefore it is not a good answer to say that they will not get through at all unless they go through in this way. So far as small matters relating to just how the money under a certain item shall be expended are concerned, which carry no real substantive legislation, the objection is not so great; but, after all, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations has plenty to do without going outside of its own jurisdiction to investigate legislative matters. The total of appropriations recommended by this committee is, of course, as we all know, very large. The number of items which have to be considered by this committee is perfectly enormous. To turn aside from the consideration of appropriation items and devote the time of the Appropriations Committee to the consideration of legislative matters, when there are a number of legislative committees in this House with plenty of time on their hands capable of taking care of these things seems to me to be a great mistake. I am not willing to let this instance pass without calling attention to it. I fully concur in dead earnest with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says he said facetiously. It is a matter of real concern to the better conduct of business in this House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My facetious remarks are usually the most serious I make.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. In formulating this bill it was the intention of the committee to very scrupulously observe not only the new rules but the old rules of the House, the rule that has been the rule ever since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] came into the House; that is that no legislation on an appropriation bill is in order. Whenever we have done it in matters of this kind it is with the spirit that it would bring the item to the attention of the House. If any one desired to do so he could strike it out. We frankly admit that this is new legislation and as such may be eliminated from the bill by a single Member. We did not go out and seek a single item. This matter was brought to us by the Reclamation Service. To include such an item would be notice, then, to the Committee on Reclamation that here at least was a matter that ought to be investigated if it went out, and the feelings of no one on the Committee on Appropriations will be hurt if points of order are made to items of that kind where we have attempted to legislate. If they go out, then the Committee on Appropriations has discharged its duty in calling the attention of the House to matters to which the committee's attention was called and for which relief was sought. We do not desire in any respect to usurp any of the functions of any committee. When I see the number of bills that are piling up in some of the legislative committees of the House, I doubt very seriously that some of them will have a chance of being considered or if the committees have thought seriously enough of many of them to consider reporting them out.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I notice on page 95, lines 4 to 5, not yet reached, the following item:

Deschutes project, Oregon: For beginning construction and incidental operations, $400,000.

Is not that new and unauthorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it is new, but it is authorized by law. Under the law the President has the power to approve projects, and after the approval by the President then the appropriation is authorized. The President has already approved this project, and it would not have been inserted in the bill if it had not been approved.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do this for the purpose of adding a further word to the suggestions that have been made with respect to bringing in legislation on appropriation bills. When this new rule was prepared I know that it was the intention that there should be no legislation of any character brought in on an appropriation bill. The committees that had the power of bringing in appropriations were very reluctant to yield that privilege, and, as was said here a few days ago, if legislative powers are to be assumed by or yielded to the Committee on Appropriations, then the other committees of the House will become absolutely useless.

I have these suggestions to make to all of the legislative committees of the House and to the members of the committees having jurisdiction over matters of legislation. If they will scrupulously watch these appropriation bills and be prepared to make points of order on every item of legislation contained in them, I am sure that the presiding officer will sustain the point of order, and then the legislative committees will have not only the right but upon them will be imposed the duty of bringing in the legislation in question.

I think this should be done by the Committee on Appropriations, if I may make the suggestion, that when persons interested in matters of legislation bring such matters to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations they should be told at once that that matter should be called to the attention of the appropriate legislative committee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I say, so far as the subcommittee that had charge over the details of this particular bill are concerned—and I am sure it is true of the other committees—that just that course was followed. It is true on this bill one or two items of legislation were given, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, but I do not want the gentleman or the House to understand that we put in this bill all the legislation that we were requested to put in. There were innumerable requests that came to the committee in the form of estimates that were frequently told by the chairman of the committee at the time that they could not go in, although we recognized it was proper legislation for which they were asking, but should go to the proper legislative committee. I think that should be said.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I know that it is true for many years many appropriation bills have carried items of legislation, and when such matters have gone out on a point of order they asked for a special rule to make such legislation in order. I hope it will not be necessary for the Committee on Rules to deny a request for such legislation in the future.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I rise in pro forma opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas. I want with all respect to bring to the attention of the House once more what doubtless has suggested itself at different times in your experience, that the possibility of the Committee on Appropriations bringing in a positive proposition of legislation is not all the mischief that lies in this matter. There is another mischief in it, and that is that, after certain legislation has been passed and becomes authorization of law for an appropriation, then the Committee on Appropriations may utterly withhold that appropriation and thus indirectly legislate by a repealing amendment in effect, or it may so diminish the appropriation as to make it practically of no avail to carry out the intent of the legislation itself. Moreover——

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, the House will have its remedy when that may come on the floor. It could move to increase it, so after all it will be a question to be decided by the House.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But the odds have passed in favor of the Committee on Appropriations. The control is no longer in the hands of the legislative committee. The offensive has passed, in military parlance, from the committee that proposed the legislation and made it a law and has come into the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, which can thus defeat the enterprise.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, it could be brought before the House in a perfectly legitimate way and an orderly way.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; that is true; but we have other rules and practices in the House which are more honored in the breach than in the observance. Theoretically one has the right, but practically it amounts to nothing.

Another phase, it seems to me, and peculiarly important, is that after perhaps months of study on a particular question relating to the interior administration of a department, for instance, or a bureau, the committee that has given years of study to that speciality in legislation may determine as to the relative values and merits of two active agencies within that department and have intended by some legislation to increase the activities of one and perhaps to diminish the activities of the other. Yet when representations are made by the persons interested to the Committee on Appropriations, such legislation may be utterly defeated in its purpose, because those parties in interest may see that the appropriations are reversed in their character and amount and the one that it is intended to give the most to is diminished in appropriations and the other one that is of less value relatively is intensified in its activities by reason of an increased appropriation.

There is here a constant subtle opportunity for an upset of all legislative propositions that become final law after months or years of study by people who are especially intrusted with such study.

I only take this occasion to invite attention to this and also the attention of the House to the fact that we are playing with something here under the substance and form of a budget that will eventually turn out to be a veritable Pandora's box of mischief.

I favor the budget idea heartily, but I think a solution of the question briefly and broadly stated might be an allowance to each one of the former Appropriations Committees of a lump sum out of the budget as a maximum expenditure for the session or the period of the fiscal year, and then those committees who are more familiar with the interior relative values of agencies and of departments may apportion sums of money within that given it for the several agencies as a whole according to its best judgment. Thus they will have served all the purposes of economy; will not have gone beyond the sum allotted by the budget or appropriating committee; will be able to say from their best efforts and special study whereabouts in the interior branch these several sums of money are to go; and thus legislation of a direct character relating to specialized operations and special bureaus will not be defeated, hindered, or hampered by men who with whatever honest intent—and I am sure that there is nothing else—are driven by the pressure of time to determine the expenditure of enormous sums of money without the opportunity to have special knowledge of or give special attention to many of these details.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired: all time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Okanogan project, Washington: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $33,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 95, line 20, after the amount, insert a comma and add: "together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this project for the fiscal year 1921."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All moneys hereafter received from any State, municipality, corporation, association, firm, district, or individual for investigations, surveys, construction work, or any other development work incident thereto involving operations similar to those provided for by the reclamation law shall be covered into the reclamation fund and shall be available for expenditure for the purposes for which contributed in like manner as if said sums had been specifically appropriated for said purposes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

There is a bill pending in the House, under a special rule of the House, proposing to authorize individuals to turn money over to the Treasury as a fund to survey and make an examination of private lands which may be sold, and I heard the other day when the bill was under discussion for a short time so many suggestions from Members against the idea of the Government accepting money from an individual and paying it to a Government employee to do some work, that I supposed, of course, that when this item in this bill was reached there would be a dozen Members on the floor making a point of order against it, as it is clearly subject to a point of order. And yet that is all it does; just authorizes an individual or a corporation to turn over money to the Treasury to do identically the same thing that is suggested to be done by the bill that is pending, and which very likely will not have a chance to pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the item here was asked for by the Director of the Reclamation Service to take care of just such cases as were under discussion a few minutes ago with regard to the American Falls, where the State or municipality, or an individual or a corporation, would be benefited, perhaps, by making a donation to get the exchange or something of that kind, that they could receive the fund and the money would go into that fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The money is to be paid out to a Government employee.

Mr. GOOD. Paid out, of course, in the building of these works.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, the gentleman did not understand I was objecting to the provision, but I wondered when so many people were objecting to the same thing in another bill they were asleep when this bill came along.

Mr. GOOD. I am not objecting to the Government receiving money when somebody wants to pay it to them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The members of the Committee on Appropriations were having cat fits the other day when the other bill was up, and yet they all reported this item in this bill, and when they knew it was in the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If they knew it was in the bill, it was not consistent.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the usual camouflage.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the Reclamation Service, $20,277,000.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this bill there is a proposed appropriation for the Reclamation Service of $20,277,000 for one year's projects. Can the chairman inform the committee how much money has been expended by the Government for the Reclamation Service and how much money has been received by the Treasury from persons who have occupied or purchased land that the Government has reclaimed?

Mr. GOOD. The total amount appropriated to date, or in the revolving fund, as I recall, is about $122,000,000. At the present time under the law there is being returned to the Treasury out of that fund every year $1,000,000. Now, that money is not all appropriated for new development work, but a large part of it, not the largest part, but a goodly part of it, is appropriated for operations. At each one of these projects the Government operates the entire works. The Government takes care of the dams, makes the improvements on the canals and the laterals, and looks after the water. The money is expended, first, for operations, and then for extending the laterals and extending the main canals and bringing additional land under cultivation. The reason why it is so large this year is because the oil leasing act which we passed here some time ago provided that 70 per cent of the royalties—leases already executed—should go into the reclamation fund, and, as I recall, 52½ per cent of the royalties for future leases should go into the reclamation; that is, 70 per cent on former leases and 52½ per cent on leases made after the enactment of the law.

Now, that has created in the Treasury a fund of something over $6,000,000 that is available for reclamation objects under the law and can not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the gentleman anticipate that the money to be received by the Treasury will reimburse the United States Government eventually for the amount of money expended, or will it continue to be an expense upon the Government? In other words, the ground recovered by means of reclamation will ultimately become a source of income to the United States, so that the Treasury will finally be reimbursed for the amount of this appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. The loss is very small. Very, very few of the projects have been failures.

Mr. DUNBAR. In other words, this development as it progresses will finally reach the point where the Treasury of the United States will be reimbursed for the amount of money which we are now expending?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. Take some of these projects, the people living on them are very prosperous. I do not know just what the receipts are for a project like the Yakima project, but I understand the annual value of the crop is more than the total cost of the project.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaskan Engineering Commission: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1914, as amended, $4,000,000, to continue available until expended.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKINLEY: Page 98, line 24, after the word "expended," insert: "Provided, That no one individual shall be paid an annual salary out of this fund of more than $10,000."

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, some eight years ago Congress passed a law proposing to build 600 miles of Government-owned railway in Alaska at a cost of $35,000,000. That would be at a cost of about $60,000 per mile.

Take it in our thickly settled country. Most people hardly realize that a large amount of the cost of a railroad is in the terminals. Take, for instance, the Pennsylvania terminal at New York, which cost about $150,000,000, which would build 7,500 miles of railroad at $20,000 a mile. The principal items in the construction of a railroad out in the country are the ties and the rails and the ballast and the grading. On an ordinary standard-gauge railroad on a given average in the country the requirement would be for about 3,000 ties to a mile. From the time of the commencement of the construction of this road in Alaska ties could be obtained very easily at $1 apiece, or at a cost of $3,000 per mile. A 75-pound rail is a very good rail for average construction, which, at the prevailing price when this railroad was commenced, would be about $30 a ton, which would entail a cost per mile of about $4,000 for the rails, or about $7,000 as a base proposition. The estimate at that time was $60,000 per mile for the construction of the road. There has been about 410 miles built at a cost of $41,000,000, or a cost of $100,000 per mile.

I make that statement simply to show that I do not think there has been any great amount of saving in the construction of this road. When the law was passed the President was given a rather free rein. He could appoint a commission as he pleased. He could fix their salaries as he pleased. Originally there were three commissioners, two of them civilians and one an Army man, and originally the President fixed the salaries of the commissioners at $10,000 per year.

The civil commissioners have drifted out for some reason or other. The construction now, practically, is in charge of the Army, of an Army engineer, a lieutenant colonel, who in the Army would receive perhaps a total salary of $4,500 a year. Up to perhaps six or eight months ago he received a salary of $10,000 per year as the commissioner in charge of this construction of a railroad building at a cost of $100,000 per mile, and in some way or other the President has gotten rather liberal in the last few months and has increased his compensation to $15,000 per year—for a $4,500 lieutenant colonel. The object of my amendment is to restrict the salary to $10,000 per annum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLANTON. It is to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment offered by Mr. MCKINLEY: Strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I called attention the other day to the number of salaries that we provide for in this bill that are either equal to or over $7,500. In other words, we provide for 5 commissioners of the Federal Trade Commission at $10,000 a year each in this bill; we provide for 11 members of the Interstate Commerce Commission at $12,000 a year each in this bill; for 9 members of the Railroad Labor Board at $10,000 a year each in this bill; for 7 members of the Shipping Board at $12,000 a year each in this bill; for 6 members of the Tariff Commission at $7,500 a year each in this bill; and now the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] seeks to make the limit of salary up in a far-away country at $10,000, or $2,500 a year more than he himself receives.

I want to submit that there is no more responsible position in the United States Government than there is right here in the seats of this House and in the seats of that body at the other end of the Capitol, and creating these high salaries is merely paving the way for an effort which is to come a little later on, either at this session or in the next session, to increase the salaries of the membership of the House and of the Senate up to either $10,000 a year or $12,000 a year. It is paving the way for that measure that would have come up at the last session if some of our friends had not been afraid that there would have been a record vote and that they would have had to go down on record on that proposition.

I say now it ought not to come up in this Congress, and we ought to stop this habit that we are getting into of fixing these salaries up to $8,000 and $10,000 and $12,000 a year. There is not a man here in this House whose place can not be filled by somebody to-morrow if he will resign at the salary, $7,500. Every two years there is always some fellow trying to get our places, and they succeed sometimes, and they spend money to get these $7,500 positions. You may say that they may not be more than $7,500 men, but you spend money here every year to hold your positions. There are men in this House who would spend almost the amount of their salaries sometimes to hold their positions. I want to say right now that we ought to stop paying these high salaries. The time ought to come when we ought either to be willing to work for our salary or to quit, and we ought not to fix somebody else's salary in the Government a little higher than ours and then later on use it as an excuse for raising our own salaries. I voted against each one of these raises above referred to, and shall vigorously oppose any and all attempts that may be made to raise our own salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am rather glad to note that my colleague [Mr. MCKINLEY] has introduced this limitation as an amendment fixing at $10,000 a year the maximum compensation of the commissioner who is charged with the responsibility of building the Alaskan railroad. I recall when this legislation was first before the House for consideration, and authority was being sought to build the road, I suggested that it would cost $150,000 a mile. Everybody on the other side of the case said it could be built within the amount authorized, $35,000 a mile. Everybody said that we were building a railroad into a new El Dorado; that we were going into the Matanuska coal fields; that we were going to supply the American Navy with cheap coal. We were then buying coal from Wales at something like $25 to $30 a ton. They said the Matanuska coal had a heating power greater than the coal down here in the Virginia fields; that it could be produced in quantities without end; that we were going also into a great agricultural region from which we would be able to get freight enough to pay for the railroad in no time.

We have not found the coal, and I have not seen any of the agricultural products. Sometimes they say that if you want to get down to where the earth is up there you have got to dig through 70 feet of ice. Now, I do not know whether this railroad is being built on the ice or not, but one section of the road, 25 miles long, was laid in a place where it was washed away within a week after it was laid. That shows the qualities of the engineering forces up there. We had two civilian commissioners cooperating with the military commissioner, neither of whom had ever seen a railroad except when they rode on it. They were getting $10,000 a year. They did nothing for their compensation. They had 47 per cent of the men employed in the overhead force and only 53 per cent of those employed who were doing actual construction work. I think it has been one of the most scandalous enterprises in a small way—for we consider $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 now a small thing—that I have ever known. We have just begun to build the railroad—only 410 miles built out of 600.

You know it was said before this railroad was authorized, and while it was under consideration, that the Guggenheims owned some of the railroads there, that they were stealing Alaska, that they were criminals. I suggested then that if they were criminals they ought to be arrested and put in jail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I said, "I suspect that the first thing they will do with this money after they get it will be to buy the railroad from these criminals that you are talking about." And that is what they did. I understand they bought the railroad at a reasonable price; that the Guggenheims were glad to get rid of it. They did not have any use for it. There were several other railroads being built up there, and some of those were taken over; and now we are on the edge of a situation that calls for more money and more money to continue the construction of a railroad in the clouds. We have no freight to carry there. Nobody has seen a pound of the coal that we were going to bring down in large quantities to Seattle. Half the American Navy is in the Pacific Ocean. They are burning oil or buying coal from England, but they are not getting any of it from Alaska, and yet this expense is going on. Now, you know an Army officer is not the best kind of a man to put in charge of economical expenditure. He never knows what money means. I recall very well when I was on the Appropriations Committee a great many years ago I went to Panama. Col. Gorgas was on the witness stand for several days, and I inquired from him what it cost to do the sanitation work on the Isthmus. He had spent several million dollars. He did not know much about costs. At the end of the examination I said: "I suppose, Colonel, that you are recognized as the greatest sanitary scientist in the world. I am willing to admit that; but if I had my way I would let you write the prescription and then I would let somebody fill it who knew how to spend the money. You do not know how to spend it." I said to him: "You remind me of a little boy that my niece left when she died. We had him on the farm with us. He used to go six miles and a half to meet me at the train. One day my daughter gave him money to get his hair cut. He was in the automobile when I got off the train, and his hair was cut. I said, 'Hello; you got your hair cut.' He said, 'Yes.' I said, 'How much did it cost?' He said, 'I don't know. I gave the barber all the money I had.' I said, 'How much money did you have?' He said, 'I don't know. I don't know money yet.'" [Laughter.] Now, that is just exactly the situation of the Army officers. They do not know money, and do not care as long as it does not come out of their pockets.

I am glad this limitation has been placed on the compensation to be paid to this Army officer. Ten thousand dollars is a good compensation. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] should apply, limiting it to $7,500, it would still be a good compensation. I hope that the amendment providing a limitation will prevail, and I hope that some day we will find somewhere in America some civilians who are qualified to act as commissioners to build the rest of this railroad, and that when they are appointed they will go on the job and know how to conserve the public money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I see no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. He is accustomed to deal with men in this kind of construction and is better qualified than I to pass upon the adequacy of their compensation.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have only two minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. We will get the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does this Army officer who is to get this salary also draw a salary as an officer of the Army?

Mr. GOOD. No. The position of the committee was this: Here was a big project costing $52,000,000. They have completed more of the road than the gentleman from Illinois has indicated. There are only 83 miles of the main line remaining to be built and a part of that is graded. It was the thought of the committee that no one should ever be able to say if a failure existed that it was owing to the fact that Congress had crippled them in giving them insufficient salaries. I think that to live up in that country and administer a great property, that cost the Government $52,000,000, a salary of $10,000 is not excessive. I am willing to take the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois on that matter. There is only one man that receives more than $7,500, and that is the chief engineer to whom the gentleman referred; the assistant engineer gets $7,500 a year. Those are the only annual salaries, and there are no monthly salaries in excess of $500 except one. There was one monthly salary of $833 last year, but none estimated for next year.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois and supported by his colleague, but I do not know whether to congratulate the gentleman on his foresight or to express wonder at his lack of confidence in the administration that is to be. [Laughter.]

The gentleman has pointed out that it is within the power of the President of the United States to fix the salary of these commissioners in such sums as he desires with an absolutely free hand. Of course, that applies to the next fiscal year, and at that time there would be another President, who will have the exercise of that power. Perhaps the gentleman is exercising wisdom and great foresight at the beginning of his own administration. [Laughter.] I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I can see no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I exceedingly regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is scandalized by the railroads. He probably arrived at that conclusion because of his absolute ignorance of the situation. [Laughter.] I do not know that the gentleman has ever been to Alaska or seen the railroad, or he would know that not a dollar of appropriation made so far has been spent toward getting coal for the Navy. But Congress did make an appropriation, and facilities are under way by which the railroad which is laid to the mine will deliver coal to tidewater, and the coal can be thus made available for the United States Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I have been dreaming of.

Mr. MILLER. Dream a while longer, but do not explode. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, it is a wild country through which the railroad is being constructed. It is a country if the people of the United States knew more about they would not stand aghast at the terrible expenditure, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. There are other places outside of the great State of Illinois——

Mr. MADDEN. Not many. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. I am afraid that is a correct survey of the mental horizon of the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. There are none outside east of the Mississippi and south of Ohio.

Mr. MADDEN. That territory does pay 84 per cent of the taxes.

Mr. MILLER. Some people, from ignorance, are easily scandalized. Mr. Chairman, I know something about this railroad. I only wish that Members of the House could see it and see the country through which it goes. Alaska is the greatest asset held by any nation in the world. There is not a mineral known to mineralogy but what is produced in Alaska. It contains the greatest gold mines on earth, through which this railroad runs, and coal and copper, and when these minerals are produced in fabulous quantities which are useful in peace and useful in war it will not scandalize the gentleman from Illinois.

I am content with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] to fix the salary at $10,000 or not to exceed that sum. But I do want to see that road completed, my colleagues. It means a great thing for the American people, and at no distant day you will see the great Pacific Fleet using some of the finest coal produced in the world right from the district tapped by this railroad which is now condemned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Authority is granted to purchase during the fiscal year 1922, from the appropriation made for the construction and operation of railroads in Alaska, articles and supplies for sale to employees and contractors, the appropriation to be reimbursed by the proceeds of such sales.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I desire to inquire of the chairman what this refers to.

Mr. GOOD. They carry stores there for the working force, and this is to give them the authority to purchase the supplies.

Mr. DOWELL. Supplies for the stores?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; absolutely. They have a sort of a commissary there.

Mr. DOWELL. And it is only for that purpose?

Mr. GOOD. That is all.

Mr. DOWELL. The next paragraph refers to turning it back. Is that for money paid for the original articles placed at these stores?

Mr. GOOD. That provision is just the same as carried in the present law.

Mr. DOWELL. Why is this carried back into the fund for the construction of the road instead of into the Treasury?

Mr. GOOD. This is condemned property that they have no use for, and when they salvage it the money is covered into the appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. But why should it be covered into the appropriation made by Congress for the construction of the road?

Mr. GOOD. Because they need it.

Mr. DOWELL. But we have made the appropriation on the estimate of what it would actually cost, and this is additional.

Mr. GOOD. No; this is property that has been acquired in the construction of the road for some purpose, and when there is no need for it further they sell it and then use the funds in the construction of the roads.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is a limit on the cost of the road, and if they use property for temporary purposes and then can sell it, it is perfectly proper that should not be taken out of the limit of cost. That is the purpose of this.

Mr. DOWELL. That is what I am inquiring about. The temporary structure is purchased out of the fund appropriated for the construction of the road.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And is a part of the same appropriation, and that is returned to the appropriation fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If they sell that property, salvage it, that money is returned to the credit of the appropriation for the construction of the road. It is not taken out of their limit of cost.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Park Service: Director, $4,500; assistant director, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; editor, $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; draftsman, $1,800; accountant, $1,800; clerks—2 of class four, 3 of class three (1 transferred from Secretary's office), 1 of class two, 1 of class one, one $1,020, two at $900 each; messenger, $600; in all, for park service in the District of Columbia, $31,020.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the following item:

Editor, $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; accountant, $1,800; clerks—2 of class 4 (1 transferred from Secretary's office).

These items are not authorized by existing law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is, though I may be in error, that the law creating this bureau did not create any specific force.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the gentleman's attention to the act approved August 25, 1916, and especially to the proviso, which is to the effect that not more than $8,100 annually shall be expended for salaries of experts, assistants, and employees within the District of Columbia, not herein specifically enumerated, unless previously authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. I do not remember just what positions were specifically enumerated.

Mr. BLANTON. None of these items are authorized by any existing law. They are all extra.

Mr. GOOD. Do these items aggregate more than $8,100?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. How much more?

Mr. BLANTON. The items which have always been carried, which were carried under the original law, are for the director, at $4,500; assistant director, $2,500; clerk, $2,000; and this is in addition to the $8,100 limitation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not included in the $8,100.

Mr. BLANTON. No; but there are other items that aggregate more than the $8,100. These items are: Editor, $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; accountant, $1,800; and clerks—two of class 4, and the one that was transferred. All of these are in addition to the $8,100 authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it for a moment.

Mr. GOOD. In regard to these items, as I stated in the beginning, there is but one increase in salary in the bill as I recall. These persons are already there. They have been loaned to the department. They have to have a law clerk and a lawyer to pass on titles. Last year Mr. Mather secured gifts through the National Geographic Society of large areas of land in the national parks where there were private holdings, absolutely given to the Government, that cost the donors, through the Geographic Society, a great deal of money. They are constantly making contracts with concessionaires, and the gentleman can see it is necessary to have some one to go through those title contracts. This lawyer is loaned to them. I do not believe the gentleman wants to cripple the service.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If some generous hearted donor attempted to give the gentleman from Iowa a tract of land, I know that before he accepted the deed he would not stop to employ a lawyer to pass on the title.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; I might.

Mr. BLANTON. He would accept the deed and take the chances on the title being good.

Mr. GOOD. There might be some liability running with the land that I would not want to take on at all.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman admits that these items to which I have directed the point of order are not authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. No; I have not admitted that.

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact they are unauthorized by law. The gentleman stated awhile ago that he was going to help Congress adhere to this new rule, that this new appropriations committee shall not put any more legislation on appropriation bills, and I am just seeking to help the gentleman carry out that promise.

Mr. GOOD. As I stated when I took the floor, I have not had opportunity to look up to see whether these places are specifically authorized or not. I would like to know just exactly which ones the gentleman says are not authorized by law, if he has looked into it.

Mr. BLANTON. First there is the editor at $2,000.

Mr. GOOD. That was carried last year.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the necessity for an editor at $2,000?

Mr. GOOD. The National Park Service last year took in almost $500,000 in concessions and fees.

Mr. BLANTON. Was it necessary to have an editor to do that?

Mr. GOOD. I do not suppose there were a great many of those people who would have been induced to go to the national parks if in some way attractive literature advertising the parks had not been prepared.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, every time a man gets money enough to take a trip in the summer time, he goes to some of our national parks—if he does not go somewhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I am sure the gentleman would rather have him go there than go abroad.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but he does not need any more advertising.

Mr. GOOD. This does not advertise the gentleman, it advertises the park.

Mr. BLANTON. The people of the United States know about the national parks, and if the gentleman does not believe that, he will do well to open some of these letters coming from some of the good women around the country who are protesting against the possibility of some of them being commercialized. He will find that they know something about these parks, after all.

That they are positions unauthorized by any existing law; an editor at $2,000, a law clerk at $2,000, an accountant at $1,800, two clerks of class 4, then one in parentheses (transferred from the Secretary's office) which the chairman said had been loaned—Congress has never made any provision for loaning out clerks to this service.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, yes; there is a general law on that; it is the Overman Act.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean as to this particular service.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman makes the point of order against the editor and accountant?

Mr. BLANTON. Editor at $2,000; law clerk at $2,000, accountant at $1,800, and then two clerks of class 4.

Mr. GOOD. It is barely possible that the point of order is good as to the editor and accountant and law clerk, but it seems to me that the others may well come within the $8,100.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will look back he will find that he is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have been trying to find out how many clerks are authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on certain language in the pending paragraph, and as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa, in the act of August 25, 1916, creating this service it is specified:

That there shall be a director at $4,500 a year, and also the following assistants: An assistant director at $2,500, chief clerk at $2,000, draftsman at $1,800, and messenger at $600, and in addition thereto such other employees as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem necessary: Provided, That not more than $8,100 annually shall be expended for salaries of experts, assistants, and employees within the District of Columbia not herein specifically enumerated unless previously authorized by law.

The Chair would think that under that proviso it might be necessary to determine whether the editor was an expert or an assistant.

Mr. BLANTON. I will call the attention of the Chairman that under this act it provides for a director at $4,500, an assistant director at $2,500——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just read that language.

Mr. BLANTON. I am reading from the bill. It provides for a director at $4,500, an assistant director at $2,500, chief clerk at $2,000, draftsman at $1,800, and then three of class 3, to which there is no point of order taken at all; then one of class 2, one of class 1, one at $1,020, two at $900 each, and so on, which aggregates more than the $8,100 provided for in the proviso, and these others are extra and additional to the $8,100 provision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, under the law it seems to me that the gentleman from Texas might have made a point of order against the paragraph on the ground that the appropriations carried in the paragraph exceed $8,100 for officials not specifically authorized by the law, but is it within the province of a Member of the House to pick out the office which he thinks should be excluded? Suppose the gentleman from Texas made a point of order against the editor at $2,000 and I had made a point of order against the other provisions for salaries. Who would determine whether the editor——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Should go out or the other officers should go out in order to reduce the appropriation to $8,100?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. In discussing the point of order, to save the other point, I now make the point of order against the paragraph before there should be any argument on the question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that is the way to get at it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order on the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order on the paragraph——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas please permit the Chair to make a ruling upon the point of order that is lodged against certain items in the paragraph?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair permit me to state——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas please answer the Chair's inquiry?

Mr. BLANTON. I will do so. Had I been permitted to explain the position of the gentleman from Iowa, the ruling of the Chair would have been obviated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appreciates the indulgence of the gentleman. [Applause.] The Chair was about to state that the first point of order lodged by the gentleman from Texas seems to make it necessary for the Chair to determine whether certain officers or employees designated in the paragraph to which he made the point of order came within the proviso of the act cited. The Chair would be unable to say just which one should be eliminated under that point of order and intended and does overrule that point of order. The gentleman from Texas now makes the point of order against the entire paragraph on the ground, the Chair assumes, that it provides for more than $8,100 worth of expenditure annually for salaries of experts, assistants, and employees within the District of Columbia not specifically previously authorized by law.

Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that this item may be passed over that we may return to it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The item has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If this is an amendment with these items cut out, there will be no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Then I withdraw that. I offer the following amendment:

National Park Service: Director, $4,500; assistant director, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; draftsman, $1,800; accountant, $1,800; clerks—3 of class 3 (1 transferred from Secretary's office), 1 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 1 at $1,020, 2 at $900 each; messenger, $600; in all, for park service in the District of Columbia, $27,020.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, and if the gentleman from Iowa will permit, the Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he follow the wording of the amendment, to be sure that the Clerk has got it correctly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD:

"National Park Service: Director, $4,500; assistant director, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; draftsman, $1,800; accountant, $1,800; clerks—3 of class 3 (1 transferred from Secretary's office), 1 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 1 at $1,020, 2 at $900 each; messenger, $600; in all, for park service in the District of Columbia, $———."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to put in the amount later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Clerk will fill in the total if the amendment is agreed to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "chief clerk, $2,000," the words "law clerk, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 102, line 18, after the figures "$2,000," insert "law clerk, $2,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. If it were added to the amount which the gentleman from Iowa has already included in his amendment, it would make more than the $8,100 authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman stated awhile ago he had already exceeded that.

Mr. BLANTON. I made no objection to the other clerks, because I thought they were needed, but I did object to this clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the $8,100, as the Chair reads the statute, does not include the officers provided for on August 15, 1916.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that; but the other employees provided for in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] do, exclusive of those other officers, exceed $8,100.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Surely; and the amendment was subject to the point of order on the same ground that the original provision of the bill was stricken out on, but the bill not being subject to a point of order and a point of order not having been made, is now subject to any germane amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I consider this was a kind of gentleman's agreement between the gentleman and myself who were opposing the matter, otherwise I should have made the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I supposed that was the case, but the gentleman's agreement did not take me in. And I do not know as it takes in anybody else in the House. The fact is that the law clerk is very much needed. The National Park Service is doing exceedingly good work. The original limitation of the amount of expenditure was probably one of those foolish things which people sometimes agree to. But under the present head—the director, as he is called, of this service, a man of wealth himself, I believe, who is devoting his great ability to the National Park Service—it has afforded facilities and has interested thousands of people who, notwithstanding the opinion of my friend from Texas, did not know enough about national parks to go to them. And I am in hopes that an editor may be continued who will be able to write such glowing articles about the national parks that I will be induced to go through some of them myself some day. My wife has urged me to do so for years, but I never got excited enough to go. Now, if I can read glowing enough descriptions written by the editor, maybe I will go, but meanwhile I think there ought to be a law clerk. It is a great deal better to have a law clerk in the bureau than to have one transferred from the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Have we not a legislative committee ready and willing to grant a law clerk where the departments need them?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Undoubtedly; but they grant the appropriation. All I am proposing is an appropriation for the law clerk.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will suggest to the gentleman that he might make provision for the others in his amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee if this amendment should be agreed to it will still be in order to move an additional amendment for the editor and for the accountant.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman had such great success in putting this thing in that I think he ought to do so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not want to impose on the House too far. I will let somebody else offer those amendments if mine is agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. After the words "chief clerk, $2,000," insert the words "editor at $2,000," and after the words "draftsman, $1,800," insert "accountant, $1,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 102, line 18, after the figures "$2,000," insert "editor, $2,000." And in line 19, after the figures "$1,800," insert "accountant, $1,800."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for this purpose: The National Park Service is now provided with these particular places. They came before the committee with a greatly increased estimate, asking for an increase of clerks. It has been necessary down there to detail clerks at times in order to enable them to get along with the business, but they have been notified to return, and as a matter of fact these clerks have been taken from them. I am satisfied from the statement made by the director of the service that it will be impossible for that service to function as it ought to function and to maintain these parks as they ought to be maintained without these additional officials. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 102, line 20, after the word "clerk," insert "2 of class 4."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, before we go any further I think we ought to have a quorum to pass on this matter. I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-four Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ayres	Emerson	Kreider	Riordan
Babka	Evans, Nev.	Lampert	Robinson, N. C.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 282 Members answered to their names, and he submitted a list of absentees for insertion in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the names of the absentees will be printed in the RECORD. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] was about to offer an amendment.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAGEE: Amend the amendment as follows: After the word "clerk," on page 102, line 20, insert "2 clerks of class 4."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the total, "$31,020."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the amendment as amended has not yet been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to correct the total "$31,020."

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all the totals of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to the first request of the gentleman from Iowa, but not to the second.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from Texas objects to the first request. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] asks unanimous consent to correct all the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Hot Springs Reservation shall be known as the Hot Springs National Park.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will confess that the term "national park" to me means, perhaps not a definite thing, but a great piece of scenic ground. I wish it were confined wholly to that kind of a park. Now, I suppose the National Park Service would like to have everything under it termed "national parks"; but what other reason is there for calling the Hot Springs Reservation the Hot Springs National Park? So far as I have ever understood, it has nothing that would connect it with the ordinary scenic national park, and the term "reservation" is well known.

Mr. GOOD. What the gentleman has said is largely true with regard to the Hot Springs Reservation. A great many people, however, think there are some very beautiful spots in the Hot Springs Reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, I do not doubt that.

Mr. GOOD. And I assume that it has some great scenic attractions. A few years ago Congress passed a law changing the names of some of the national parks, including the Hot Springs Reservation. The bill went to the Senate, and as I recall it, one of the Senators from Arkansas objected to Hot Springs Reservation being called a national park because the receipts would be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and would not go to the park service fund for use on this reservation. Therefore it was left out. It is offered only for the sake of uniformity. I have no opinion about the matter. It was requested on account of uniformity, and the committee saw no objection to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You would think that the last thing on earth that the National Park Service would want would be uniformity. What earthly good would parks be if they were uniform?

Mr. GOOD. I refer to uniformity in language.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is because of their entire lack of uniformity that they are interesting.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman voted once to make it a national park, and we thought the Members wanted to vote that way again.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That being the case, I want to preserve the attitude of consistency by making a point of order, and I make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I was going to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he would not waive that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the point of order has been sustained, and it is now too late.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am willing to reserve the point of order if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois has reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman from Illinois if he made the point of order, and the Chair understood him to say that he did.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did make the point of order, and when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] took the floor I said I was perfectly willing to reserve it if I might.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] is recognized. The Chair understood that previous to the gentleman from Arkansas asking for recognition the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] had said, in response to the Chair's inquiry, that he had made the point of order, and the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is all undoubtedly true, and that was before the gentleman from Arkansas rose.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I will ask the gentleman now if he will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I say I am perfectly willing to if I may.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the point of order that the Chair having once ruled, it is not now in order to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is correct, that the point of order has been sustained, and there is nothing before the House to which the motion to strike out the last word would apply until a new paragraph has been read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lafayette National Park, Me.: For administration, maintenance, protection, and improvement, including not exceeding $600 for maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for use in administration of the park, $25,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I direct my remarks especially to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and ask him if he will not consent to waive the point of order which he has just made?

The Hot Springs is one of the seven wonders of the world. I have the honor to represent the district in which they are located. There are 47 of these hot springs. At least 15,000 people of the United States are to-day at Hot Springs, seeking relief from disease. The people of the Nation own these waters. There is hardly a State in the Union that has not some of its afflicted people there to-day. This is the only Government reservation or park that is self-sustaining. It pays its way. The gentleman from Illinois asks, why change it from a reservation to a national park? My reply is that in consideration of the fact that thousands and thousands of people visit these springs annually for relief from disease, people not only from the United States, but from the world over, we feel that it should be dignified at least to the extent of being called a national park instead of a mere reservation.

People who are not informed think that a reservation means a place located somewhere in the United States that is occupied by uncivilized Indians and refrain from taking the great benefits which God Almighty has given to the world by these wonderful healing waters. Instead of its being uncivilized the city of Hot Springs is filled by as fine people as any city in the United States.

Now, no appropriation is asked for here, it is a mere change of the name of the old reservation to a national park. That is all that is desired by the people of that city and by the people of Arkansas. Why continue the name "reservation" longer? I recognize the fact that a point of order may be well taken, because of its being legislation upon an appropriation bill, but why insist upon it? Why should a special bill be introduced to have this change made when by this bill, which is now before the House, it can be so easily done.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the House that the language to which the point of order has been made may be restored to the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the language to which the point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois and sustained by the Chair be restored to the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas to whom I always listen with interest and pleasure. I can not quite agree with him about it and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

National monuments: For the administration, protection, maintenance, preservation, and improvement of the national monuments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $12,500.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered a number of amendments to this bill, but the House has been hard-hearted and none of them have been agreed to. In view of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations has increased this item for the care of national monuments by $4,500, I shall not attempt what is obviously impossible at the present time by offering an amendment further increasing this amount to $27,000 as estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior, even though I am convinced that $12,500 is inadequate for the proper administration of all the national monuments.

There are 24 national monuments under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and it is not only vain but foolish to expect that they can be administered, protected, maintained, preserved, and improved at an average annual cost of a little over $500 each, as is provided by this appropriation. Six of these monuments are located in Arizona and are annually visited by increasing numbers from all parts of the country. The visitors to the Casa Grande Ruin increased from 3,067 in 1919 to 7,720 in 1920. But $4,000 has been expended for the repair and excavation of this "Great House," built by a prehistoric race, of which the present Indian tribes have no tradition, and which was found as a ruin by Father Kino, the Spanish explorer, in 1694. The amount appropriated herein will provide practically nothing but the salary of the custodian.

Montezuma's Castle is another national monument which is sadly neglected and suffering from vandalism. A custodian should be appointed to protect this wonderful cliff dwelling on Beaver Creek, which is three stories high and contains 16 rooms. The Navajo National Monument is located in such an out-of-the-way place that but little damage has thus far been done by vandals, but with the opening up of an automobile road to these ruins there is now greater need for its restoration and protection.

A custodian should likewise be appointed for the Tumacacori Mission, which is threatened with destruction by those who have from time to time dug up its floor and undermined its foundations in search of gold and silver which, according to tradition, was buried there by the Spanish priests. About $100 was heretofore made available each year for the care of this monument, which is wholly insufficient to prevent even the damage caused by the elements. Unless an ample appropriation is made, this mission, founded about 1730 by Father Kino, will fall into complete ruin. Over 5,000 visitors inspected this ancient mission last year, but the National Park Service has been in such straits for funds that $600 was accepted as a contribution from the Nogales Chamber of Commerce to aid in its temporary improvement.

The 2,000 acres included within the Saguaro National Monument between Phoenix and Tempe should be resurveyed and the boundary lines established by cement posts. Branch roads should be built from the State highway so as to make this monument more accessible to visitors. In passing I might say that a very interesting publication describing the birds of this monument has just been issued by the National Park Service.

In the estimates $3,500 was included for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Puerco near Adamana to provide access to the Petrified Forest National Monument. This river is often impassable because of flood conditions and quicksands, and many visitors are thereby prevented from leaving the railroad station after making a long journey to see this forest which has turned to stone. There remains much work to be done in improving the roads, and a salaried custodian should be appointed to prevent depredations. Last year over 30,000 people visited this monument and during the height of the season it is estimated that from 1 to 2 tons of petrified wood was carried away each day by these tourists, which the Park Service was powerless to prevent.

I thank the committee for this extremely modest increase because it shows that at last some slight consideration is being given to the needs of our national monuments, but I hope that in the future something more substantial will be accomplished. At least $1,500 on the average should be appropriated for the care of the 24 national monuments or a total of $36,000. The Director of the National Park Service has asked for but $27,000, and I sincerely regret that the Committee on Appropriations did not recommend the full amount for the preservation of these long neglected natural wonders and antiquities.

The Clerk read as follows:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees, and trustees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice or the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, including not to exceed $200,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government, and including a Director of the Bureau of Investigation at not exceeding $7,500 per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $2,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for advances to be made by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice when authorized and approved by the Attorney General, the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That for the purpose of executing the duties for which provision is made by this appropriation, the Attorney General is authorized to appoint officials who shall be designated "special agents of the Department of Justice," and who shall be vested with the authority necessary for the execution of such duties.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman from Iowa inform me if any provision is made for an appropriation to the Department of Justice for the prosecution of profiteers?

Mr. GOOD. This item would be available for the purpose, and if the profiteer violated the antitrust law another item of the bill would be available for that purpose.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is my impression that some time during the previous year there was a special fund set apart for the Department of Justice for the prosecution of violators of the Lever Act. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GOOD. No; it was used out of the regular appropriation. That would be for prosecution under that act. This fund would be available for that purpose.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I merely called attention to the item because I think a good deal of the money that has been expended by the Department of Justice in investigating violations of the Lever Food Control Act has been wasted. Right in my own State, for example, there have been several investigations made with absolute proof furnished to the Department of Justice of the grossest kind of profiteering—in sugar, for example. I have in mind one particular case where a cooperative association formed of farmers and workingmen, called the Cooperative Wholesale Society of America, purchased 145 barrels of sugar at $14 and some cents a hundredweight. In less than one month's time they sold it to the St. Paul Cooperative Store, another cooperative concern of workingmen, at $25 per hundredweight. There was a profit by a so-called cooperative society of almost 100 per cent and a turnover inside of less than 30 days with hardly any expense whatever, and yet up to this time, so far as I have been informed, there has been no prosecution by the Department of Justice, notwithstanding the fact that investigators of the Department of Justice have those facts. I am only citing one of several such instances which have come to my attention.

I make the inquiry to ascertain if more money is to be used and expended needlessly by the department in that way?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman appreciates that the appropriation is, fortunately, for the next fiscal year.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is correct; and we hope to have a complete turnover.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 270 copies each of 2 volumes, Nos. 257 and 258, of the Supreme Court Reports, to continue the sets now in the hands of certain officials, at $1.75 per volume, $945.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] inform me as to just why it is that the Government seemingly is paying about 33⅓ per cent more for the printing of its briefs at the Government Printing Office than it was paying before they were prohibited from having them printed in private printing shops? I notice in the hearings that the statement is made that it costs the Department of Justice about 33⅓ per cent more to print in the Government Printing Office than in a private shop.

Mr. GOOD. The committee brought in a provision about a year ago permitting the departments to secure their printing outside of the Government Printing Office when they could secure it more cheaply than they could at the Government Printing Office. Some of the departments testified before the committee that they could have their work done for one-half of the amount paid the Government Printing Office for the same kind and character of work. When the committee brought the bill before the House and that provision was under consideration, which was before we changed the rules about the Appropriations Committee, somebody made the point of order and the provision went out. Notice has been given for over a year to the legislative committee having charge of the matter, and nothing has been done.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So that to-day the Department of Justice must print its briefs at the most expensive place?

Mr. GOOD. Under the law they must have them printed at the Government Printing Office. And the taxpayer, who pays the bills, waits in vain for the legislative committee to act. Here is a real job for some legislator.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question in reference to the paragraph appearing at the bottom of page 115:

Protecting interests of the United States in suits affecting Pacific railroads: To enable the Attorney General to represent and protect the interests of the United States in matters and suits affecting the Pacific railroads, and for expenses in connection therewith, $5,000.

Does that include the question of the reservation of the mineral claims of the Union Pacific Railroad, which the Union Pacific people have disregarded?

Mr. GOOD. I think not. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that there are one or two old claims in which the Government is interested against the Union Pacific Railroad. There is one lawyer who has been employed in such cases. He is now receiving $9,000 a year. His work is practically ended. When the committee learned that, it thought that instead of carrying $10,000, as had usually been carried for this one attorney, $5,000 would be ample. It practically all goes to pay for the services of one man. I do not remember whether we went into the cases or not.

Mr. MILLER. Is there any provision in the bill carrying any appropriation to enable the Attorney General to contest those legal matters in the interest of the United States, looking toward the preservation of the mineral interests which are reserved in the Union Pacific Railroad grant?

Mr. GOOD. Looking this matter up in the hearings, I find that one case is a suit in which some Indians are also interested, and their rights are being protected there. Then there are two other suits in the southern district of California, involving rather minor matters, one involving a large area of land patented to the railroad company, which is alleged to be of value for white limestone deposits worth a million dollars. There is also involved another suit in California involving a small tract of land alleged to be valuable for marble.

Mr. MILLER. Then there is no appropriation in the bill looking toward the Attorney General appearing and preserving the rights of the United States in the mineral land reserves in the Union Pacific grant, if I understand the gentleman correctly.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I think the item here for the assistants to the Attorney General and to the United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases could be used for that purpose. In fact, I see no reason why any of these appropriations could not be used to protect the interests of the United States where they should be protected.

Mr. MILLER. That is the reason I asked the question. This one item of $5,000 excited my curiosity.

Mr. GOOD. The only reason that we keep that there is that it has been carried for a long time and involves only a few cases, and we cut the appropriation in two, believing that next year we would see the end of it entirely, and that if we put this man on regularly and gave them $9,000 additional perhaps we would never get rid of him at all after those cases were disposed of and that he would then take up other work.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES COURTS.

For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the office expenses of United States marshals in the District of Alaska, services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, services in Alaska and Oklahoma in collecting evidence for the United States when so specially directed by the Attorney General, and maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles used in connection with the transaction of the official business of the office of United States marshal for the District of Columbia, $2,160,000. Advances to United States marshals, in accordance with existing law, may be made from the proper appropriations, as herein provided, immediately upon the passage of this act; but no disbursements shall be made prior to July 1, 1921, by said disbursing officers from the funds thus advanced, and no disbursements shall be made therefrom to liquidate expenses for the fiscal year 1921 or prior years: Provided, That there shall be paid hereunder any necessary cost of keeping vessels or other property attached or libeled in admiralty in such amount as the court, on petition setting forth the facts under oath, may allow: Provided further, That marshals and office deputy marshals (except in the District of Alaska) may be granted a per diem of not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, instead of, but under the conditions prescribed for, the present allowance for actual expenses of subsistence.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman why the word "Oklahoma" is in line 6, page 116. Is that because it was in an old statute and so carried?

Mr. GOOD. What is that?

Mr. HASTINGS. For services in Alaska and Oklahoma in collecting evidence, and so forth.

Mr. GOOD. That is language which has been carried for a number of years.

Mr. HASTINGS. I imagine it was before statehood perhaps. Well, I just wanted to call the attention of the chairman to it. I do not want to move to strike it out unless he thinks it ought to be eliminated. There is no reason for its being there.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman sure there is no reason for its being there? The wording of that section is quite long and my attention was not called to the word being there until by the gentleman. If the gentleman is sure there is no need of it; it was placed there when Oklahoma was a Territory——

Mr. HASTINGS. I imagine it was, but I do not know.

Mr. GOOD. I have no objection to its going out.

Mr. HASTINGS. I shall make no motion to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, and including not to exceed $30,000 for clerical help for such assistants, and for payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases (such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States), $600,000, to be available for expenditure in the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 117, line 23, after the word "cases" insert "including $200,000 for assistant attorneys to enforce the national prohibition act."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I think there ought to be a provision of this kind in the law. There has been a great deal of trouble in securing the enforcement of this act and in many instances I have been told when application has been made for action they simply said they did not have the money. It seems to be that something should be set aside for this particular purpose. I do not think it is necessary to make any particular speech in favor of it. I think we all realize that if it stays upon the statute books means ought to be provided, and there ought to be something in the law so parties who are not willing to enforce it can not make use of lack of legislation as an excuse.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does not increase the total appropriation; it simply directs that part be used for that specific purpose. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON to the amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Strike out the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is no longer a question of whether we are in favor of prohibition or against it. It is no longer a question of whether we are prohibitionists or antiprohibitionists; it is simply a question of whether we are law-abiding American citizens who believe in the enforcement and the upholding of the Constitution of our land which is the fundamental law of this country. We have adopted an amendment which makes it unlawful to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquor. How on earth are we going——

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I know the stand of the gentleman on the question. I know what he would say to me—I anticipate him—and having such a little time I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use of placing such a law in the Constitution of the land and directing the enforcement of a statute such as the Volstead law if we are not going to give the Attorney General sufficient machinery and sufficient money to enforce it? Now, our friends who are against this law are trying to ridicule it and to criticize it because it is not enforced and because in many drug stores you can go there and get alcohol in large quantities. In many drug stores in the land you can find prescriptions which are already signed by doctors, specially prepared for customers. Why, my good doctor friend from Delaware shakes his head. He does not seem to know what goes on in some drug stores in some sections of the country.

Mr. MONDELL. Where does the gentleman acquire this information? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I get it from some of the druggists themselves, who happen to believe in enforcing the law of their country, and they say for God sake give the Attorney General money enough to enforce this law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I understand the Attorney General asks for $300,000, and there is nothing in this bill providing specifically for the enforcement at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Absolutely nothing in this bill. And whenever you pass this bill as the Appropriations Committee has framed it you absolutely tie the hands of the Attorney General's department, and we leave him almost helpless in enforcing this law. The chairman shakes his head, but that is the fact.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Does the gentleman believe that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] would countenance any such action as he has described?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Iowa is all right, and a good prohibitionist, but is sometimes influenced by other influences than agriculture and reclamation projects. Some other influences, sometimes even from Boston, seem to kind of get in the way of proper appropriations for the enforcement of the prohibition statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Justice asks for $300,000 for the enforcement of the prohibition act. Of course, it would not be in the interest of economy, I am sure, to appropriate $200,000 more for this purpose than the department estimated it would require. The committee has given rather a liberal allowance for this amount in the $600,000 for special assistants. In addition to that, the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes, amounting to $2,600,000, would also be available for such prosecution. I do think it would be a mistake to take $500,000 of this when the Attorney General asked for only $300,000. But, personally, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. I am sure they will spend at least that amount in such prosecution.

Mr. BLANTON. With that statement I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment, and the gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 12.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-six gentlemen, including the Chair, are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MEAD, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence, on account of illness.

RESIGNATION OF MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

1089 COMMONWEALTH AVENUE,
Boston, Mass., January 3, 1921.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as the Representative in the Sixty-sixth Congress from the ninth congressional district of Massachusetts, such resignation to take effect on the 5th day of January, 1921.

Respectfully, yours,

ALVAN T. FULLER.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Referring to the resignation of my colleague from Massachusetts that has just been read to the House and has been made directly to the Speaker, is it necessary that any action be taken by the House accepting that, and relieving an anxious Nation as to what will be done with reference to this vacancy?

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds the precedents are to the effect that when a person resigns he generally resigns to the governor of his State and notifies the Speaker, although there are precedents where a person has resigned directly to the Speaker; and in that case, at least in one instance, the House has adopted a resolution ordering the Speaker to direct the Clerk to notify the governor of the State. The Chair does not think it necessary that that be done. The Chair presumes the governor of the State will also be notified by the gentleman himself.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has been elected to a State office?

The SPEAKER. To a State office.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the governor may discover him filling that office.

Mr. MADDEN. A parliamentary inquiry in connection with this. Is it necessary to notify the Speaker at all when a Member of the House is about to resign?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not suppose it is necessary, but it is the custom.

RECOMMITTAL OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 415—SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I ask unanimous consent that House joint resolution 415, known as the Edmonds resolution, suspending the penalties for payment of certain taxes, be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means. And by way of explanation of this request, I will say the committee has discovered that in considering this resolution it was so worded inadvertently that it does not express the intention of the committee nor of the mover of the resolution, and we ask that it be rereferred. The resolution as it stands is altogether too broad.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object for a moment, did I understand the gentleman to say that his request was made by direction of the committee?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. By direction of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. The minority members have been consulted?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; the whole committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman the reason for his request?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to conclude the sundry civil bill to-morrow if we can meet an hour earlier.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I might say to the gentleman that the hearings on the tariff question begin to-morrow before the Ways and Means Committee, and most of us desire to be here in the discussion of the latter part of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, it would be necessary for the gentleman from Ohio to be here late in the afternoon in any event, whether we met at 11 o'clock or earlier, I assume, under those circumstances.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall not object under these circumstances.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not see present the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], the chairman of the Committee on Water Power. He has called a meeting of the committee to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and has notified the members and a number of Government officials of the meeting, to consider the bill concerning a question which relates to the use of water power in national parks. Those people will be present, and the bill in question ought to be disposed of and a hearing had upon it, and we shall have just got started when the House meets, if the hour of meeting to-morrow should be placed at 11 o'clock. I suggest to the gentleman to let it go over until we can dispose of these matters, including the bill I have referred to as pending before that committee.

Mr. MONDELL. I just made the request in order to ascertain the temper of the House. I thought it would be better to-morrow if we could meet an hour earlier, and that we would be more certain to complete the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Wyoming that I hope it will not become a custom to ask the House to meet at 11 o'clock unless it should be necessary on certain days in order to complete the business before the House. The Committee on Ways and Means is composed of 25 Members, and if we are to conduct the hearings from now until the 16th of February it will inconvenience us very much if the House should be in session, and we can not be in two places at the same time.

Mr. MONDELL. It has been suggested to "the gentleman from Wyoming" by a number of gentlemen that we should adopt a resolution to meet regularly at 11 o'clock each day, in order to expedite the business before the House, but I have not thought that that was wise. On the other hand, I had thought that from now on, when we had reached a point where we could conclude the consideration of a bill by meeting an hour earlier, it would be well to do so if it did not inconvenience the Members. However, in view of the situation suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I will withdraw my request.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman should understand that I did not intend to object to this request.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from California and the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Ohio have suggested conditions that might be embarrassing to gentlemen, and I have no disposition to do anything that would cause them embarrassment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not want this to be considered a precedent. I do not object to this request.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 6, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

293. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of the Coosa River, Ga. and Ala.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

294. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of proposed legislation to establish the grades of pay clerk, chief marine gunner, chief quartermaster clerk, and chief pay clerk in the United States Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

295. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting statement of expenditures in the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce.

296. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting a list of useless papers in that department and requesting their disposition; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

297. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimates of appropriations required by the Navy Department, for the fiscal year 1920, and for prior years, on account of the Naval Establishment (H. Doc. No. 953); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

298. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Navy Department to complete the service of the current fiscal year on account of the Naval Establishment (H. Doc. No. 954); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. McFADDEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4683) to amend section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1160), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14975) granting an increase of pension to Caroline Haines Willis; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14596) granting a pension to Ackley R. Plumstead; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 15523) making an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 15524) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 15525) to provide for the establishment on the Mississippi River, in the State of Wisconsin, of a fish-rescue station, to be under the direction of the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CROWTHER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 436) making June 1 a legal holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) repealing the tariff act of October 3, 1913, commonly known as the Underwood tariff measure, and reenacting the act of July 24, 1897, commonly known as the Dingley tariff measure; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SINCLAIR: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 438) requesting the President of the United States to protest against the retention of the French colored troops in the occupied area of Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES (by request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia): Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 439) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1921; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KAHN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 440) directing the Secretary of War to cease enlisting men in the Regular Army of the United States, except in the case of those men who have already served two or more enlistments therein; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VOLK: Resolution (H. Res. 632) to investigate the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 633) authorizing the consideration of a new section in House bill 15441, a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOIES: A bill (H. R. 15526) granting a pension to Sarah M. Youngs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 15529) granting a pension to Charles W. F. Hamilton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 15530) for the relief of Ephraim Lederer, collector of internal revenue for the first district of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 15531) to authorize the payment of a certain amount for damages sustained by collision with a motor truck of an automobile owned by W. F. Payne, El Paso, Tex.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HULINGS: A bill (H. R. 15532) to correct the military record of Thomas W. Duerner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 15533) to validate the war-risk insurance of Warren O. Grimm, Ernest Dale Hubbard, Arthur McElfresh, and Ben Casagranda, who were murdered while parading in the uniform of the United States Army at Centralia, Wash., November 11, 1919; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 15534) granting a pension to Amelia C. Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15535) granting a pension to Fedilia Avery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 15536) granting a pension to Julia A. Kelsey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 15537) granting a pension to Amanda Kenney; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15538) granting an increase of pension to Wyman Cottle; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 15539) granting a pension to Juliaette Boon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 15540) granting an increase of pension to Wood C. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 15541) granting a pension to Fred J. Griffin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 15542) granting a pension to Julia A. Gardner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MANN of Illinois: Resolution (H. Res. 631) appointing Henry N. Couden chaplain emeritus of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4825. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the United Commercial Travelers' Association, favoring 1-cent drop-letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

4826. By Mr. IRELAND: Petition by various women voters of Peoria, Ill., opposing the passage of House bill 10925; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4827. By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce, favoring Mexican immigration for farm labor, same to be provided for in the pending immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

4828. By Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin: Petition of American citizens of Polish descent of Lublin, Wis., regarding the Polish question; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4829. Also, petition of Local No. 2210 of United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, requesting repeal of war-time sedition law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4830. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of International Union of Steam and Operating Engineers, Local No. 670, 589 Ninth Avenue, New York City, urging an appropriation of $5,472,900, as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the operating force for public buildings; to the Committee on Appropriations.

4831. By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Petition of the women voters of Salida, Colo., protesting against the maternity bill (H. R. 10925); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4832. By Mr. ZIHLMAN: Petition of Ladies' Cooperative Society of Silver Springs, Md., favoring the Sheppard-Towner bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 6, 1921.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we bless Thee for every expression of Thy mercy and for the continuance of Thy providence toward us in richness and blessing. Regard us this morning, we beseech of Thee, and help us so to fulfill the day with the tasks appointed that when the evening hour comes we can be assured of Thy benediction. We ask it for Thy great name's sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 390. An act for the relief of Peter McKay; and

S. 2371. An act for the relief of Kathryn Walker.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

UMI

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Heflin	McNary	Smoot
Ball	Henderson	Nelson	Spencer
Beckham	Hitchcock	New	Sterling
Calder	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas

Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard	Warren
Glass	McCumber	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Harris	McLean	Smith, S. C.

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] are engaged on business of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on account of illness; also the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] on official business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PETITIONS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Ottawa, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a 1-cent drop-letter postage rate, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the fifteenth annual session of the International Farm Congress, held at Kansas City, Mo., favoring a more restricted immigration policy, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4794) to amend sections 216 and 223 of chapter 18 of the United States Statutes at Large, being the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4795) granting an increase of pension to John B. Senecal; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 4796) for the relief of Emma J. McKusick; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4797) for the relief of Hans P. Guttormsen (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

SEATS AT INAUGURAL PARADE.

Mr. PHIPPS. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 239) prohibiting the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from obstructing the parks, reservations, streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, prohibited from encumbering, or permitting the encumbering, with stands, platforms, seats, benches, or other obstructions, any of the parks, reservations, streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District, during the period from February 28, 1921, to March 10, 1921, both inclusive.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby prohibited from encumbering, or permitting the encumbering, with stands, platforms, seats, benches, or other obstructions, any of the public parks, reservations, streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said District during said period.

Provided, That the foregoing provisions shall not apply to the White House Grounds nor to Jackson or Lafayette Squares.

Provided further, That permits may be granted, in the discretion of said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the erection of stands to be used for viewing the parade of March 4, 1921, on the following conditions, viz: That no seats shall be reserved, and no charge exceeding $1 in cash for each seat shall be made. That no tickets shall be sold, but sales of seats shall be made only to those who are willing to occupy them at the time of purchase; and no return checks shall be issued to anyone desiring to leave said stands at any time.

SEC. 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this resolution shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $1,000, or by imprisonment in the District of Columbia Jail for a period of not less than three days or more than 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, the joint resolution which I have introduced follows the general line of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], with an additional provision which I believe will make it possible for visitors coming to the District for Inauguration Day to be furnished with proper seats in suitable localities without being submitted to extortionate charges. To avoid trading in tickets and speculating it seems to me necessary absolutely to prohibit the use of tickets so that those desiring seats should take their chances, coming in turn on the principle of first come, first served. If for any reason they desire to leave their seats at any time the parade is passing or before they have finished the use of the seats, it will be only necessary for them to pay an additional charge for readmission, which would be limited to the amount of $1.

I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed.

ATMOSPHERIC NITROGEN.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ANNIVERSARY OF LANDING OF PILGRIM FATHERS (S. DOC. NO. 351).

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, some time ago in pursuance of a joint resolution passed by Congress, approved May 13, 1920, the Vice President appointed a committee of the Senate to cooperate with a committee of the House at the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. The committee consisted of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING], and myself. The three hundredth anniversary was celebrated in December, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], as chairman of the Senate committee, delivered the address. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed as a Senate document. It was an occasion of national interest and the address was one to meet it, and I think it should be preserved as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHANNEL TO CHARLESTON NAVY YARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3395, being Order of Business 331.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have the bill for which the Senator from Delaware asks consideration stated, in order that we may know what it is. I could not tell from the Senator's request, as he merely referred to the bill by number.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill by title.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3395) to discontinue the improvement to provide a channel extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Delaware will not press his motion for the consideration of the bill this morning, for the reason that I have asked the Navy Department to furnish me with the data as to what has been done since the adjournment of Congress which bears directly on the subject matter of the bill. The information for which I have asked includes facts as to the width of channel now being dredged from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard; under what appropriation that dredging is being done; and what work, if any, has been done upon the dry dock at that place which was not begun previously to the adjournment of Congress. I was informed just previously to coming to the Senate Chamber this morning that the department will perhaps by to-morrow noon have this information available for me.

It is very important that the Senate should have all the facts in the proper form in order that a subject of so much magnitude not alone to the South Atlantic but to the whole country may be thoroughly and fairly discussed on the floor.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I think the senior Senator from South Carolina has had ample time to secure all the information in reference to this bill which he desires. As for the necessity of the Senate having information, I can state exactly the amount which has been spent for this work from the appropriation. At the time this bill was being considered the Naval Committee unanimously passed a resolution requesting that no money be expended from the appropriation until the matter could be investigated. I delayed calling up the bill at the request of the senior Senator from South Carolina during the second session of the present Congress, but I notified the Senator early in this session that I was going to call the bill up at an early date.

I had written to the department, not knowing that they had expended any of the money after having been requested by the committee not to do so, but I find they have expended of the $1,500,000 appropriated for this new project about $1,200,000 up to the 1st of November last. Since that time they have expended a part of the remaining $300,000; I do not know how much.

Mr. President, unless it is the intention to build a dry dock 1,000 feet in length at Charleston, the dredging of that channel for 22 miles to a 40-foot depth and a width of 1,000 feet is simply a waste of public funds. There is already there a channel 30 feet in depth and 500 feet in width, which is ample for any draft of vessels that the dry dock now at Charleston can accommodate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Delaware yield for a question?

Mr. BALL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Would the Senator be interested in stating what is his objection to waiting until the information for which the Senator from South Carolina has asked is furnished to the Senate?

Mr. BALL. I have no objection to waiting until that be done if it is not merely a method of delay. I requested the senior Senator from South Carolina four weeks ago to obtain whatever information he desired.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from South Carolina has just stated that the information will probably reach him by noon to-morrow; and I merely desire to suggest to the Senator from Delaware that, perhaps, in view of that statement of the Senator from South Carolina, no good would be accomplished by pressing action before that information shall have been received. I, for one, should like to have it.

Mr. BALL. I wish to give the Senator from South Carolina every opportunity to secure whatever information he desires, and if he will permit the bill to be called up and disposed of as soon as he obtains the information, I shall be perfectly satisfied that it will be perfectly proper to yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state to the Senator from Delaware that I have no disposition to delay the bill, nor have I come here with anything like a subterfuge in order to gain any time. The Charleston project is a great one; it involves great issues; and I have asked the Navy Department to furnish me with certain data of which I believed the Senator from Delaware is not possessed. The department is getting up that data for me now with all proper dispatch. I am not inclined to delay the consideration of this matter. The fact is that it seems to me now is about as good a time as any for us to decide what we are going to do. When the information comes in I shall be very glad to lay before the Senate all the facts relating to the project, the relation of the project to certain other projects; and whether the Senate sees fit to take up the bill to-morrow or to postpone its consideration, I am quite sure the Senate will extend me the right which it has always extended to every other Senator to prepare himself to discuss a matter that is not only of interest to his State but to the entire country.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from South Carolina will receive the information within a few days in order that this matter may be speedily disposed of. A large sum of money is involved, and it is a question either of wasting that money or, if the project is to be continued and the dry dock is to be built, then proceeding with the work in a proper manner. I object to expending money on that channel unless the dry dock is to be built. As matters now stand, there is simply a waste of $1,200,000; and, of course, an additional waste is involved if this matter is to continue from session to session, as it seems to be the disposition of some Senators to carry it along.

I have no objection, Mr. President, to granting a reasonable time to enable the senior Senator from South Carolina to secure the information which he deems proper.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware a question. I understood the Senator from Delaware to say that he has the information already in his possession.

Mr. BALL. I have the information obtained from Admiral Parks, the Chief of the Bureau of Docks and Construction. The figures which I have given are his figures.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator has that information, it seems to me it would not take more than an hour for the Senator from South Carolina to receive the same information.

Mr. BALL. That is a question for the Senate to decide.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have stated to the Senate—and it is not necessary for me to repeat—that I am not trying to postpone this question for the purpose of causing unnecessary delay. There are, however, certain facts which have been sent me by the Navy Department to be used here and which are not in the possession of the Senator from Delaware. Those facts are official, and for that reason I am reserving the right, which is the privilege of any Senator here, of securing the desired information.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator from Delaware if he had the information that the Senator from South Carolina has asked for, and he replied that he had.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But there is additional information which will come in connection with this matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Delaware has withdrawn his motion.

Mr. BALL. I have not withdrawn my motion and will not unless there shall be a reasonable time fixed for the consideration of this matter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am not likely to ask for any unreasonable time. I simply am waiting upon the Navy Department to furnish me the information. When it is here, I shall be glad to have the Senator from Delaware call up this matter.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion to consider a bill before 2 o'clock subject to debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion to-day, with the understanding that I shall renew it to-morrow. That will give the Senator from South Carolina an opportunity to secure the information within 24 hours, and I am sure that it will only take a very short time to obtain it.

DISPOSITION OF EUROPEAN RELIEF FUND.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the question has arisen here upon the floor as to the disposition of certain relief voted by the Congress in the year 1919, and I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement and to have certain information placed in the RECORD, in order that the matter may be cleared up. The appropriation was made by Congress in 1919——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator refer to the $100,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I refer to the $100,000,000 appropriation. Mr. President, the facts of the case are that Congress in 1919 appropriated $100,000,000 for the purpose of furnishing food and other relief to the starving people of Central Europe. This work was placed in charge of Mr. Hoover. He used as his fiscal representative the United States Grain Corporation as a business proposition, and he also used such agencies as the Red Cross, Army officers, and others in the actual distribution of the relief.

On the 25th of September of the present year a formal report was made to the President of the United States on the disposition of the amount of money which Congress had appropriated, and, as the report is rather brief and is signed by Mr. Edward M. Flesh, the vice president and treasurer of the Grain Corporation, I will read it. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., September 25, 1920.

His Excellency WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The United States Grain Corporation, having under Executive order acted as fiscal agent of the American Relief Administration covering European operations, has prepared an accounting as of to-day on the $100,000,000 appropriation which was approved by Congress February 25, 1919 (Public 274, 65th Cong.), and we are forwarding herein statement of account showing proper evidence of expenditure furnished to and approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury in the amount of $94,929,246.77, and a list of cargoes and cost of service covered by the above expenditure.

A large part of the foodstuffs supplied under this appropriation was furnished to the various Governments in central and northern Europe, who have undertaken to give obligations for repayment at the cost thereof, in the amount of $84,014,527.92, which includes the sum of $9,170.28 remaining to be collected, as shown by certified statement attached. This statement also shows an expenditure in the amount of $10,923,889.13 for child feeding and other charitable services, for which no obligations of repayment were taken. The signed obligations of the various Governments are inclosed herewith.

Please note that these obligations exceed in amount owing by the various Governments on account of our having taken the obligations as security during the delivery of the foodstuffs and at a time when definite values could not be relied on. These excess obligations amount to $13,141,324.24, and are being returned herewith for disposition.

We still have outstanding claims amounting to approximately $100,000, which will be billed against the comptroller on the appropriation just as soon as paid vouchers can be obtained, being the evidence the comptroller requires before reimbursing the Grain Corporation. We hope shortly to be in a position to forward a further statement as to evidence of the $100,000 expenditure referred to, thus closing the entire matter.

Yours, very truly. EDWARD M. FLESH,
Vice President and Treasurer.

Mr. President, that in brief gives the business summary of what was done with the $100,000,000. That is to say, the Grain Corporation, acting as Mr. Hoover's fiscal agent, paid out approximately $95,000,000, and took from certain Governments obligations amounting to $84,000,000. The remaining $10,000,000 was devoted to child relief, and was a donation, being actually distributed largely in milk and child foods to the peoples of those countries.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. The information the Senator is giving us is very interesting. I should like to ask him whether he has any statement from the Grain Corporation or from Mr. Hoover as to the amount of money that it was presumed, when we appropriated that money, could be provided from the profits of the Grain Corporation and added to the $100,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was a subsequent matter, and was handled in the year 1920, when Congress authorized the Grain Corporation to distribute $50,000,000 worth of flour; and I am not taking that up now, because I do not want to confuse the two. I am dealing now simply with the $100,000,000 that Congress appropriated; and if the Senator will permit me, I should like to finish, so as to show what the disposition of that was.

Mr. WARREN. I have no disposition to interrupt the Senator. I simply wished to know if that appropriation was accompanied in any amount by any other fund.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all. That is a subsequent matter, as I am stating.

Mr. President, I also ask leave to put in the RECORD at this point, without reading, a communication of Mr. William R. Grove, formerly a colonel of the United States Army, addressed to Hon. JAMES REED, United States Senator, and published in the Herald of this date or yesterday, in which he shows that 11,000 tons of milk and other foodstuffs were shipped from the United States and contributed to the children's fund to the value of approximately $4,700,000. This food was distributed directly under his supervision, as stated, through hundreds of kitchens, canteens, and asylums created for that and other purposes. This charge was borne by the $100,000,000 fund. I will put this letter in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENIES EUROPEAN RELIEF FUND FED POLISH ARMY—OFFICER IN CHARGE OF FOOD DISTRIBUTION WIRES SENATOR REED THAT ONLY SURPLUS ARMY STOCKS SOLD.

NEW YORK, January 5.

Denials that American funds contributed for European relief had been used for supplying the Polish Army, as charged by Senator JAMES REED, were telegraphed to REED to-day by William R. Grove, formerly in charge of food distribution in Poland.

Surplus supplies of the Expeditionary Forces were sold the Polish Army, Grove said, but this had nothing to do with the $100,000,000 congressional relief fund.

Grove's telegram follows:

Hon. JAMES REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

From the press account of your statement this morning in respect to the use of a portion of the $100,000,000 relief appropriation which expired in June, 1919, for the purposes of the Polish Army, I am convinced that you have been misinformed.

I was in charge in Poland of the distribution of all food under the $100,000,000 relief appropriation, acting under Mr. Hoover's general direction. There were three distinct activities in Poland which may have led to confusion in your mind:

First. About 11,000 tons of milk and other foodstuffs were shipped from the United States and contributed to the children's fund to the value of approximately $4,700,000. This food was distributed directly under my supervision, through hundreds of kitchens, canteens, and asylums created for the refuge of the children by the children's fund, which was also participated in by public charity.

The above charge was borne by the $100,000,000 appropriation and represents a gift from the American people.

Second. Approximately 266,000 tons of food of the value of about $50,000,000 was shipped to Poland from the United States and was distributed strictly to the civil population. This food was provided from the $100,000,000 relief appropriation, but the Polish Government was charged with the cost thereof and has given treasury notes in payment therefor, so that this item will be recovered to the American people. Thus the only loss to the American people amounts to the $4,700,000 children's service mentioned above.

Despite the undertaking of the Polish Government to pay for this food, my instructions were to see that this food was strictly distributed to the civil population, and this was rigorously carried out under the direction of American Army officers. I may mention that the Polish Government paid the entire cost of distribution and no American money was ever given the Poles, the whole service being in commodities purchased in the United States.

Third. The Army liquidation board, over which the relief administration had no authority, sold to the Polish Government many thousands of tons of surplus American Army rations and supplies, again in return for Polish Government obligations, and some portion of this foodstuff was used for the Polish Army. It had, however, nothing to do with the congressional relief appropriation. The other allied Governments also supplied some food to Poland during this period.

In the broader aspects of the whole question, I may mention that if the whole Polish Army, as it stood during this period, had been supplied with such imported commodities as could be incorporated in their ration, which was not the case, it could have consumed less than 9,000 tons, or probably less than 3 per cent of the totals imported.

In any event, it is of much more importance to note that the objective of the American Government was to preserve life in the midst of famine and to reestablish order and to undermine the stimulus to anarchy and bolshevism then running rampant through a starving country. If Poland had not received this food, and if Poland had not had an army in the winter and spring of 1919, it would have gone bolsheviki, thus joining the bolshevik activities of Germany and Russia, and plunging Europe into irrevocable chaos.

I am sure you will correct this misimpression you have given.

WM. R. GROVE,
Former colonel, United States Army.

105 HUDSON STREET, New York, N. Y.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. President, I want to show in a tabulated statement which I produce, furnished by Leslie, Banks & Co., chartered accountants, exactly how this relief was distributed; and I shall ask leave to insert it in the RECORD. I think I can read the whole thing, however:

UNITED STATES GRAIN CORPORATION.

Acting as fiscal agent of the American Relief Administration. Account of receipts from the United States Treasury out of the $100,000,000 appropriation fund, segregated according to country to which relief was furnished.

For commodities delivered and services rendered to European Governments for which obligations of repayment were taken:

Armenia	$8,028,412.15
Czechoslovakia	6,348,653.56
Esthonia	1,785,767.72
Finland	8,281,926.17
Latvia	2,610,417.82
Lithuania	822,136.07
Poland	51,671,749.36
Nonbolshevist Russia	4,465,465.07

For this total of $84,014,527.92 the national obligations of the countries named were taken and turned over to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. What part of Russia does the Senator have reference to when he says "nonbolshevist Russia"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume it was that part of Russia which at the time was in the hands of various generals who at various times opposed the Lenin-Trotski government. I do not know anything further than that about it. It was such parts of Russia as those relief associations had access to, and of course they could not very well have had access to soviet Russia.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that they have securities from nonbolshevist Russia also to the amount which they expended?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I judge so, to the extent of $4,465,000.

Mr. BORAH. I was interested to know how they could get them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They were undoubtedly issued by the de facto governments or military officials who were in charge. They had about the same authority that the soviet government had in the rest of Russia, which is the authority of force, or de facto.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, then, for commodities delivered for child feeding and for other charitable services for which no obligations of repayment were taken——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator. I can wait until he finishes reading.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I think I ought to put this in consecutively. I shall put it in the RECORD, and I will not read it in detail; but it shows that in Czechoslovakia something over $2,000,000 was distributed as relief.

For commodities delivered for child feeding and for other charitable services for which no obligations of repayment were taken:

Czechoslovakia	$2,261,229.96
Esthonia	376,621.73
Finland	560,275.75
Latvia	493,575.52
Lithuania	279,721.53
Poland	4,743,147.07
Rumania	414,286.43
Nonbolshevist Russia	373,873.72
Serbia	1,035,407.59
Freight on Red Cross supplies	275,287.23
Freight on typhus equipment	110,462.60

The total of those items is $10,923,000, distributed without taking back any governmental securities; in other words, a contribution of the American people.

I shall put that in the RECORD, Mr. President, but I have read this much for the purpose of showing the amount distributed to each country under the direction of Mr. Hoover and by various agencies which he employed.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LESLIE, BANKS & CO.,
Chartered Accountants.

NEW YORK, September 25, 1920.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. If I may ask the Senator a question, I notice that a pretty large amount—in fact, a very large amount—of this distribution went to Poland. Was that before Poland engaged in war? And is the Senator able to tell us whether any portion of that was either contributed for or used by Poland in the war?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is as capable of fixing the dates as I am. The appropriation was made early in 1919, so the distribution was made almost entirely in 1919 and the winter of that year.

Mr. WARREN. What I wish to know is whether that distribution has been made at different times up to date, or whether it was made prior to some specific date, which I think the Senator has not yet given.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have given the date of the report. I do not know the dates of distribution. It was chiefly in the year 1919.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Is this in the nature of a report to Congress?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, sir. This is an effort to set before the Senate the fact that this $100,000,000 fund has been distributed in the most effective, most efficient, and most economical way, in accordance with the orders of Congress. It is intended to put before the Senate the fact which should be put before it, that this great trust has been most admirably administered, and that, instead of giving away this vast sum of money, Mr. Hoover, as the representative of the United States, has done exactly what Congress intended that he should do. He has given the relief. Where it was possible to secure back the bonds of the country he has taken them. Where that was not possible he has made it as a contribution, which was in effect carrying out the intention of Congress, as we all remember from the discussion at the time. Many at that time expected that there would be no return at all to the United States, and nobody now is able to tell what we will realize from the $84,000,000 of securities in the Treasury; but the fact is that the distribution has been most admirably done, largely under the supervision of officers of the United States Army, largely through the cooperation of the wonderful organization of the Red Cross, through the Quaker societies, and through the various other ones of which I shall give the names in a few moments; and not only has that been done, but a most careful accounting has been rendered by chartered accountants to show the exact distribution and the exact destination of all those reliefs.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to finish this report.

Mr. PHELAN. I understood that the Senator had finished the report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. PHELAN. I should like to hear it. I am sure the Senator is speaking of his own knowledge when he indorses all these transactions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do indorse them most fully. To my mind, Mr. President, Mr. Hoover to-day stands as the greatest benefactor of civilization. I think his services in contributing to saving the lives of 6,000,000 European children entitle him to be ranked as one of the great benefactors of the world; and I think we here in the Senate should give him credit, as Europe gives him credit, for the great work he has done and the businesslike way in which the matter has been transacted.

Mr. PHELAN. Do I understand, Mr. President, that these transactions have been questioned, that Mr. Hoover has been accused?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know, of course, what the Senator is referring to. I am saying that it has been charged here, and it has been charged elsewhere, that Mr. Hoover misused the funds of the United States which were put at his disposal; and I am endeavoring now to state the facts as they are.

Mr. PHELAN. I was not aware that he had been accused. I am very glad to hear that there is some raison d'être for this matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, I hold in my hand Table A, consisting of a report of the United States Grain Corporation, acting as the fiscal agent of the American Relief Administration, giving a summary of the commodities delivered and the services rendered to European countries under the $100,000,000 appropriation fund. I will not repeat the names of the countries. I shall ask leave to insert this tabulated statement in the RECORD. It shows that of breadstuffs this organization distributed to the countries which I have already named a total of 404,000,000 tons, 9,000,000 tons of rice, 13,000,000 tons of beans and peas, 26,000,000 tons of meats and fats, nearly 7,000,000 tons of milk, 1,000,000 tons of cocoa and sugar, 5,700,000 tons of cotton, 449,000 tons of miscellaneous supplies, or a total of 468,379,284 tons of these commodities of relief, almost all of them being purchased in the United States and being shipped over there. I could also give the details of how they were shipped, but I deem that not necessary.

In Table B, which I shall ask to have inserted in the RECORD, we find a summary of the total of children's relief deliveries paid for from the congressional fund, for which no funds or securities were taken up; in other words, 3,446,000 tons of breadstuffs, 4,000,000 tons of rice, 4,600,000 tons of beans and peas, 1,500,000 tons of meats and fats, 15,000,000 tons of milk, and 5,000,000 tons of cocoa and sugar.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is it not pounds instead of tons?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; tons.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Fifteen million tons?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Metric tons. It is a perfectly huge affair, and we have no conception of the enormous relief that has been rendered. This organization has actually saved the lives of 6,000,000 children, and Mr. Hoover is engaged at the present time in a gigantic effort to raise $33,000,000 in this country to give relief. He is heroically at work through a number of organizations to raise $33,000,000 to bring needed relief this winter to children in the countries of central Europe and eastern Europe, and I am stating these facts at this time in order that the Senate may have some appreciation of the tremendous energy this man has put into operation and the wonderful cooperation he has secured from all of the great charitable organizations of the world.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not want to seem to detract from anything Mr. Hoover has accomplished, but 15,000,000 tons of milk is much more than a ton of milk per child.

Mr. POMERENE. Two and a half tons.

Mr. REED. Two and a half tons per child for 6,000,000 children.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It must be pounds.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it go at pounds.

Mr. GRONNA. It is probably as accurate as Mr. Hoover's statement with reference to the cost of grain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall have to verify the figures, of course. What I hold is a tabulated statement, which just came to me; and it would be an easy matter for an error to be made. Even great Senators here upon the floor make statements equally ridiculous, and I presume that these figures are subject to correction, like everything else.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator if he is speaking for the farmers of his State in making this statement here?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not understand the Senator's question. I am speaking in the interest of fairness and justice in order that this man, who has carried out the mandate of Congress to bring relief to these children of Europe, should not be misrepresented.

I think if Congress thought enough of this matter to appropriate $100,000,000, and if the people of the United States think enough of this matter, after their resources have been so largely drawn upon, nevertheless to enter upon a great cooperative effort to raise $33,000,000 more, the Senate ought to take enough interest in the matter to accept a business statement from the man who is charged with the distribution of this money and this relief.

Mr. President, in the summary of what I have attempted to present I may say it is shown that the whole of the purchase, shipment, and financial operation under the $100,000,000 relief appropriation of February, 1919, was carried out by the United States Grain Corporation in accordance with Executive order. Attached hereto are the items I have presented:

(a) Covering letter of final report to the President from the Grain Corporation.
(b) Audited statement of receipts from the Treasury of expenditures, allocated to the different countries concerned.
(c) List of cargoes and expenditure vouchers which were lodged with the approval of the Comptroller of the United States Treasury.
(d) Statement of the destination and character of commodities delivered.

The comptroller's office contains the complete vouchers for all expenditures, and the files of the Grain Corporation contain the vouchers proving the delivery of the commodities to their distribution destinations. The general policy in determination of the volume of foodstuffs to be supplied to different nations under the relief was determined by Mr. Hoover, in cooperation with other officials of the Government. The assurance that the civil populations in these countries received these supplies in accordance with their needs were secured by officers of the United States Army.

It will be observed that a total of $94,929,000 was expended from the appropriation, and that obligations for repayment of $84,014,000 of this were taken, the balance having been almost wholly devoted to children's relief.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] calls my attention to a mistake which I made in reading the tabulated statement, which may relieve some of the anxieties of the Senators who have become alarmed lest too much milk was sent to the children of Europe. He calls my attention to the fact that I mistook a comma for a period, so that the total of milk distributed should be 6,911 tons and eight hundred and fifty-nine thousandths, which probably explains the discrepancy.

The fact is, Mr. President, that there never has been in the history of the world a more careful investigation by men charged with the responsibility of charitable relief. There never has been in the history of the world a more careful organization to see that that relief got to the right individuals; and there never has been a more prompt report of what had been done under that than we find in this particular case.

The statement which I asked to have inserted in the RECORD, contained in a report from Col. Grove, of the United States Army, as set forth in his letter to Senator REED, contains this statement:

Despite the undertaking of the Polish Government to pay for this food my instructions were to see that this food was strictly distributed to the civil population, and this was rigorously carried out under the direction of American Army officers. I may mention that the Polish Government paid the entire cost of distribution, and no American money was ever given the Poles, the whole service being in commodities purchased in the United States.

Third. The Army Liquidation Board, over which the relief administration had no authority, sold to the Polish Government many thousands of tons of surplus Army rations and supplies, again in return for the Polish Government obligations, and some portion of this foodstuff was used for the Polish Army. It had, however, nothing to do with the congressional relief appropriation. The other allied Governments also supplied some food to Poland during this period.

In other words, Mr. President, this fund of Congress was used solely for the purpose of distributing relief directly to the civilian population of Poland, particularly to the children of Poland, and it was done by Army officers of the United States, under Col. Grove, some 50 or 60 in number.

Those who have confused the use of American supplies by the Polish Government and the Polish Army have made the mistake of assuming that it came from this relief, whereas it simply came from certain surplus military supplies which the United States sold to Poland, just as it sold to other countries in Europe, France among them. They were sold as a business proposition, because they were over there, and it was cheaper to sell them than to attempt to bring them back. Whether we will get paid for them at an early date we do not know, but the obligations of the Polish nation were taken in pay for them, and when Poland had paid for them they belonged to Poland, to be used in any way. They were not intended as relief. They were sold to Poland as a business proposition, and Mr. Hoover's organization had no control over them whatever.

Now, Mr. President, I hope Congress will do more than it has done. I think the Congress of the United States, which has already been liberal with the people's money, should adopt a resolution such as has been introduced by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], which is now before the Committee on Foreign Relations, indorsing the great work of charity relief which is now being carried on in Europe without any Government support. I am not in favor of appropriating more Government money out of the Treasury at this time for that purpose, but I do think the Congress of the United States should give its moral support to this great work. It is not finished. There are still starving children over in Europe by the millions, and those countries in Europe are not able to provide for them altogether. Their moneys are so depreciated that they can not buy the supplies necessary for charitable distribution.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand an appeal to the American people. It is signed by the American Relief Administration, by Herbert Hoover; the American Red Cross, by Livingston Farrand; the American Friends Service Committee—the Quakers—by Wilbur K. Thomas; the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, by Felix Warburg; the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, by Arthur J. Brown; the Knights of Columbus, by James Flaherty; the Young Men's Christian Association, by C. V. Hibbard, international committee; the Young Women's Christian Association, by Miss Mabel Cratty, of the national board; and I want to take the time of the Senate to read this brief appeal. It is as follows:

AN APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

Three and one-half million children in eastern and central Europe have no alternative to disaster between now and next harvest except American aid. For months, because the needy were so numerous and the available funds so limited, these most helpless sufferers in the track of war have been admitted to American feeding stations only if tragically undernourished, and have received American medical aid only if desperately threatened by death from disease.

Winter is closing down. The money of many nations is valueless outside of their own boundaries. Economic and crop conditions, aggravated over considerable areas by actual warfare last summer, make famine, with its terrible train of diseases, a certain visitor until next harvest. Inevitably the helpless children will suffer most. No child can grow to health and sanity on the pitiful makeshifts for food with which millions of European adults must content themselves this winter. It is obvious that the remedy can come only from outside.

America saved 6,000,000 European children winter before last. Normal recuperation cut the need nearly in half last year, but unusual conditions have resulted in scant shrinkage of child destitution during the twelvemonth just past. The response of America must now decide whether 3,500,000 of these charges, in acute distress, shall begin to be turned away in January from more than 17,000 asylums, hospitals, clinics, and feeding stations dependent on American support. There would be no tragedy in history so sweeping or so destructive of those who can deserve no evil.

The undersigned organizations, working among every race and creed, many engaged also in other forms of relief, agree unanimously that the plight of these helpless children should have complete priority in overseas charity until the situation is met. This is an issue without politics and without religious lines. There can be no danger of pauperization, for the $23,000,000 for child food and the $10,000,000 for medical service that we seek will relieve only the critical cases. The medical supplies, of course, must be an unqualified gift, but for every American dollar used in child feeding the Governments and communities aided furnish $2 in the form of transportation, rent, labor, clerical help, cash contributions, and such food supplies as are locally obtainable.

America has not failed in the past in great-heartedness. She has never had a more poignant call than this. Contributions should be turned over to the local committees which are now being formed for this national collection or sent to Franklin K. Lane, treasurer, Guaranty Trust Co., New York City.

Mr. President, the fact stated that 3,500,000 children are in distress is not a mere surmise nor a guess, but is the result of a careful investigation. The Rockefeller Foundation makes this statement, and that is an organization which has been very businesslike as well as very charitable:

The secretary of the Foundation spent the summer of 1920 in central and eastern Europe, making a first-hand study of the situation. He was deeply impressed with the efficiency of the organization which has been created under Mr. Hoover's auspices.

I may say that no American who has visited Europe, and I doubt whether a man from any other country, has failed to be tremendously impressed with the wonderful efficiency of the organization which Mr. Hoover has used as his agency in distributing relief. One thing everyone says who comes back here after an inspection is that the efficiency, the energy, and the care of his relief association is beyond all parallel, and even the worst enemy that Mr. Hoover has, I am confident, will come back with the same story if he visits those countries as Americans have already done. I have talked with a good many men who have been over there and they all say that Mr. Hoover's name is a name to conjure with when all things else fail, because of the deep impression he has made, not only upon the leaders of Europe, but upon most of the European people.

The statement continues:

It represents the maximum of self-help on the part of the countries concerned and a minimum number of salaried American administrators. Every penny of American money is expended for food. It is a satisfaction to contribute to a work which is so wisely and effectively administered.

The trustees were further influenced to contribute to the children's fund by the conviction that at this time the American people have an opportunity to demonstrate their genuine interest in the welfare of children who are the victims of a catastrophe for which they can in no wise be held responsible. In the midst of sharp differences of opinion about economic and political policies, it is possible for all Americans to unite in preserving the lives or safeguarding the health of 3,500,000 European children in both allied and former enemy countries.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I ask it in perfect good faith and not in the way of criticism. In what particular countries are those 3,500,000 children supposed to be, and what particular countries are we leaving out?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be very glad to answer the question fairly. They are as follows:

In Poland, 1,500,000. Now, the Senator knows, and we all know, that probably Poland suffered more, and more frequently, than any other country in Europe. First, the Russian armies tramped over Poland with their destructive and ruinous spoliation. Then the German armies tramped over Poland, driving the Russians back. Then again the Russians returned over Poland and Germany again threw them back. Poor old Poland was a mere doormat over which those great countries of Europe fought and was reduced by successive spoliations not only to well-nigh absolute ruin but to such starvation that the children were compelled to get down on the ground and eat the very roots of trees to maintain life. Poland still has 1,500,000 children in need of help. This fact is not a mere loose estimate, but it is an estimate made by those who have been on the ground and who know the facts for which they vouch.

Hungary, 100,000 children; Czechoslovakia, 250,000; Austria, 500,000; the Baltic Provinces, 200,000; Germany, 700,000; Russian refugee children, 200,000; total, 3,450,000; and medical service and clothing to more than 300,000 children of Serbia and other European countries, where food is not so greatly required.

The other day I talked with a man who had recently come back from Germany. He is a German-American, a good American citizen. He came back heartsore, not only because he found his own relatives over there in such desperate plight that they could not even ask him to dinner, because they were ashamed to show him what they had to eat. He told me repeated instances of sickly, half-starved children, little skeletons, whose parents were not able to give them the necessary food to keep them in anything like a healthy condition. He said that this extends up even to the classes that ordinarily have plenty. He spoke, for instance, among other cases, of a man who is a chemist, accustomed in ordinary times to earn a good livelihood. He described his two little girls, whom he saw, frail, sickly little children, and the chemist told him, "I can not even afford an egg a day, which the doctor says this little girl ought to have. An egg costs 2½ marks. I can not afford that egg a day which that child ought to have."

I say that under these conditions and confronted by this situation, not only in the countries that were friends of the United States but in Germany, that was our enemy, it is the American duty to give what relief we can, not so much to the adults, who can survive, but to the children, whose whole future life will be blighted if they are not given the necessary food to enable them to grow and develop.

As to the great work which has been undertaken by the charitable associations that are representative of the whole country and which have been placed in charge of Mr. Hoover, because he has had unheard-of success in the past, I say it is the duty of Congress at least to give its moral support to the raising of the $33,000,000. I understand that something like $11,000,000 has already been raised, but that it needs the help of Congress to secure the balance. I sincerely hope that the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] will be acted upon.

My attention is called to the fact at this moment that in reading one of the tabulated statements I made the mistake of using in all cases the term "metric tons." The figures in the statement are in thousands of metric tons, but the last three figures in decimals of metric tons, which I am sure will relieve the minds of those Senators who thought they saw a mare's-nest in a perfectly plain business statement.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I simply wish to direct the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the passage of a resolution bearing upon this subject, of which he perhaps is not aware, not having referred to it in his discussion. The Senate on Monday last unanimously agreed to a resolution calling upon the State Department to secure by wire such information as they do not already have and to furnish promptly all possible information, so that the country may be officially informed, so far as that is possible, of the conditions existing on the other side to which the Senator has referred.

I feel that it is our duty, in no way in the world questioning the statements that have been made, to secure all the official information—and when I say "official" I mean through the service of our own diplomatic and consular departments—that it is possible to obtain in a matter where requests are made for millions and millions of dollars from the American people. If the conditions are as appalling as the Senator from Nebraska has outlined, and I have no reason to question it, then there is absolutely no doubt in my mind as to the response of the American people notwithstanding urgent appeals at home. But certainly no harm—quite the contrary—can follow the adoption of the resolution to secure all available information.

If the conditions are as reported by the Rockefeller Foundation and the other societies, then the mere fact that the Government, through its investigation, so gives that much additional establishment to the fact and so reports to the Senate and the country, will, in my judgment, act as a stimulant in raising the money and will make it official in a way; while, on the other hand, if the reports from those countries show that the situation has been to some extent exaggerated and that the countries on the other side are not doing such part as they should in this connection, which information is also asked under the resolution, then the American people should likewise know that. I am entirely in sympathy with the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, but I feel that we should ascertain all the facts in the meantime and that such is our duty to the American people.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suppose that the very eloquent and interesting speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is probably in part occasioned by the fact that I made a remark on the floor of the Senate a couple of days ago to the effect that a part of the money which had been appropriated by the American people had been employed to benefit the Polish armies. I stated, when I was interrogated about it, that I expected to lay the facts before the Senate at an early date. I have been trying to get some information. Partly because the information has not been forthcoming and partly because I have been incapable of doing any consecutive work in the last two days, I was not prepared to make the statement this morning, and I am not prepared now to make it. But I shall do so in the very near future, and as far as the facts are obtainable I intend to lay them before the Senate.

I wish to say now that late last night I received a long telegram from a gentleman calling my attention to what he claimed was a misstatement. I had intended to put it in the RECORD, but I think it has been furnished to Mr. Hoover's defender here this morning, and he has already read it.

I will state one reason why it is difficult to get at the facts, and I am only going to take a moment now. I do not propose to make a reply just at present to the speech which has just been made. The resolution under which the $100,000,000 was appropriated in 1919 expressly required that a report of the receipts and expenditures and an itemized statement of such receipts and expenditures made under that appropriation "shall be submitted to Congress not later than the first day of the next regular session."

This resolution was passed on the 25th day of February, 1919. I should like to see that itemized statement. There has been filed here a document, which I think the Senator read, which merely states that they had expended $57,000,000 in Poland. Then follow gross sums aggregating $88,750,000 of the money that has been expended, for which notes were received. The remainder, they state, was given away. There is no itemized statement, so far as I have been able to find, and if the Senator from Nebraska has an itemized statement that was filed here with Congress, he will confer a favor upon me if he will tell me where I can get it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any knowledge of any such itemized statement. So far as I know, the report was made to the President of the United States. Whether or not that has been transmitted to Congress, I do not know. I will say that the report may have been made to Congress, though I do not know.

Mr. REED. If there was such a report, an itemized statement, made to the President of the United States, I should like to see that. Does the Senator from Nebraska know that any such report was made?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is substantially what I put into the RECORD to-day.

Mr. REED. That is the condensed statements which the Senator has just put in?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They were tabulated statements. I did not read them in full.

Mr. REED. Were they ever filed with Congress?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Nebraska tell me where he was fortunate enough to find them?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They were brought to my office by interested parties.

Mr. REED. By Mr. Hoover or some of his associates who have never given the public the benefit of their contents?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know. They may have been published for aught I know. They date back to last September.

Mr. REED. I think when you look for a vindication of Mr. Hoover you will have to find it in his private archives; he has not yet put it in the public archives.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I stated that the report was made to the President of the United States by chartered accountants, furnishing not only a statement of the obligations of the various Governments but furnishing a detailed statement and containing the vouchers which were satisfactory to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Nebraska and I might differ on what is a detailed statement. If one can put a detailed statement of an expenditure of $100,000,000 on a sheet of paper of the size the Senator has here, he is capable of condensation that, like Mr. Hoover, has never yet been equaled in the history of all the world.

The Secretary of the Senate reports that the document which I hold in my hand, which is House Document No. 449, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, is all that he has on file with reference to the expenditure of the $100,000,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is it not the Senator's understanding of the act of Congress of February 25, 1919, that the money was voted to the President for this purpose, and that the President is the one to make the report of Congress?

Mr. REED. Possibly that is true; but Congress ought to have the report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does the Senator from Missouri deny that this is a detailed statement?

Mr. REED. I absolutely deny that it is any such detailed statement as is contemplated by the act of Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The tabulated statements contained in this report are evidently quite elaborate. They show the wheat flour, cereal flour, rye, barley, rice, beans and peas, pork, lard, lard substitutes, milk, cocoa, sugar, soap, cloth, cotton, and miscellaneous which were purchased and sent to foreign countries. That is shown in considerable detail, and I should call it a detailed statement.

Mr. REED. Well, I should not. If all we have is a detailed statement of that kind we could no more tell what they have done with this money, we could no more check them up than I could be checked up if I had a hundred million dollars of your property and I said that I spent a part of it for beans, a part of it for corn, a part of it for hay, a part of it for cattle, and a part of it for advertising myself. It is not an itemized statement. The language of the act is:

That for the participation by the Government of the United States in the furnishing of foodstuffs and other urgent supplies, and for the transportation, distribution, and administration thereof to such populations in Europe, and countries contiguous thereto, outside of Germany, German Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Turkey: Provided, however, That Armenians, Syrians, Greeks, and other Christian and Jewish populations of Asia Minor, now or formerly subjects of Turkey, may be included within the populations to receive relief under this act as may be determined upon by the President from time to time as necessary, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, in the discretion of the President, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $100,000,000, which may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1919, and which shall be audited in the same manner as other expenditures of the Government: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall be reimbursed so far as possible by the Governments, or subdivisions thereof, or the peoples to whom relief is furnished: Provided further, That a report of the receipts, expenditures, and an itemized statement of such receipts and expenditures made under this appropriation shall be submitted to Congress not later than the first day of the next regular session: And provided further, That so far as said fund shall be expended for the purchase of wheat to be donated preference shall be given to grain grown in the United States.

There was submitted to Congress the document which I have in my hand, which is not an itemized statement within the contemplation of that statute.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the document to which the Senator refers show the cost of distribution, what salaries were paid, and items of that kind?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. I will hand it to the Senator, and when he gets through with it he will know just as much about it as he does now, not that he would not be capable of appreciating it if the facts were set forth, but even his acute mind can not elicit much from a vacuum.

Now, there was another appropriation made in this form: On March 30, 1920, a resolution was passed reading as follows:

That, for the participation of the Government of the United States in the furnishing of foodstuffs to populations in Europe and countries contiguous thereto suffering for want of food, the United States Grain Corporation is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to sell or dispose of flour now in its possession, not to exceed 5,000,000 barrels, for cash or on credit at such prices and on such terms or conditions as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to relieve populations in the countries of Europe or countries contiguous thereto suffering for the want of food.

That is directed to the United States Grain Corporation. The following proviso was added:

Provided, That an audited, itemized report of the receipts and expenditures of the United States Grain Corporation for the purposes authorized by this act shall be submitted to Congress not later than the first Monday in December, 1920.

And here is that report. I think the Senator from Nebraska has put it in the RECORD, and it is not necessary to cumber the RECORD again; but it shows the receipt of Government obligations in part, and among those Government obligations are $24,013,695.99 from Poland. It shows flour expenditures, and among the flour that we shipped it shows the shipment to Poland of $24,013,695.99—the same amount as that for which they received the obligations of Poland. There is nothing in this report except the items of flour; that is to say, the different shipments of flour made to Poland.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, can the Senator tell us whether the statement covers items in addition to the distribution under the $100,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. REED. They are entirely different.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Amounting to $27,000,000 more?

Mr. REED. Let me state it correctly—amounting to $24,013,695.99. The only itemization of the flour is that they give us a list of the vessels by which it was shipped, and the only statement that is made in regard to the destination is that it went to Poland or went to some other country. The only certificate we have is this:

Having audited the above report of receipts and expenditures of the United States Grain Corporation, covering the sale of flours authorized under the act of Congress approved March 30, 1920, we hereby certify that, in our opinion, the said report has been correctly prepared so as to show a full accountability of the flour sales in question, and that it is in agreement with the records of the United States Grain Corporation of this date.

So that what we get is this sheet of paper prepared by some public accountant instead of the itemized statement of receipts and expenditures which was to be filed with Congress and not filed some place else.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator understand that the Grain Corporation distributed the flour to the various consumers in Poland?

Mr. REED. No; I do not understand anything of the kind.

Mr. KELLOGG. Or that the corporation could give any account of the detailed distribution of it in that way?

Mr. REED. No. The Senator does not understand me.

Mr. KELLOGG. The resolution did not require the Grain Corporation to distribute it.

Mr. REED. The Senator did not understand me to say that I expected that if they fed a child we were to have the name of the child given. An itemized statement implies that there shall be shown the organizations or the societies and the amounts given to such societies, and that there shall be fairly laid before the Congress what they did with this material and voucher receipts filed with it. The statement gives us no information. Does the Senator claim that it would be an itemized statement for me to say, "I had $50,000,000 and I sent $24,000,000 of it to Poland"?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the flour was sold to the Government of Poland in bulk and shipped to it, I suppose that would be the only itemized statement that the Grain Corporation would be able to make. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. REED. That may be a matter of opinion; but if it is we will have to find some new method if we are to get any information by which we can check up anybody.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I notice from reading this statement that it says on its face that it is not an itemized statement, and it gives this excuse for not making one:

These delays, together with the complicated nature of the accounts, make it impossible to present an itemized statement of receipts and expenditures for some little time. At that time the final and complete report will be filed. The totals will not, I believe, vary materially from those given in this report.

This report was made on November 24, 1919; has there been no subsequent report?

Mr. REED. There has been no subsequent report; at least inquiry at the proper places fails to disclose any.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, is that the report under the $100,000,000, or under the $50,000,000?

Mr. REED. The $100,000,000.

Mr, President, I do not intend to discuss this question to-day. I think we will find some complications in it; and yet I think the circumstantial evidence will point to a particular result with absolute certainty and bear out every statement that I made and every implication from it. But since we have had this rhapsody about Hoover, another outbreak of Hooveritis, let me remark that the mental equipoise and the mental atmosphere—if I may use that expression—of some Senators on this question is well illustrated by the fact that when the Senator from Nebraska read that 15,000,000 tons of milk had been sent to 6,000,000 children, and his attention was called to it, he stood valiantly by his figures and wanted to know who would challenge a statement of that kind. If it had been fifteen thousand millions I have no doubt he would have assumed the same attitude. Anything that comes with this odor of sanctity and with the proper British accent is accepted immediately. It was in the record, as he thought, as 15,000,000 tons of milk, 2½ tons for each child, and when his attention was called to it he asserted that it was all right because it was in the record. When he afterwards discovered that he had misread the figures, then they were all right as they were correctly read. Whatever there is in this document filed by Mr. Hoover comes to the Senator from Nebraska as a "Thus saith the Lord." I can understand that perfectly since his speech during the League of Nations debate in which he said that the British people had a freer government than the people of the United States of America.

Now, Mr. President, just this one word:

Not by way of an argument, but merely by way of showing that there is another side to this shield, I want to read only a few words from the testimony of Mr. Hoover, given before the House Committee on Ways and Means on January 10, 1920. I am reading a part of an answer, that I may give the context:

In the case of Poland, we had at one time—and have to-day, for that matter—1,200,000 children being fed in this manner. We calculated the costs at about $1 per child per month for imports, and the internal costs are approximately the same amount.

Mr. GREEN.—

A Member of the House and a member of the committee—

What country got most of this $100,000,000?

Mr. HOOVER. Poland.

Mr. GREEN. You found it necessary to apply the most of that in Poland?

Mr. HOOVER. Poland will be represented by approximately $55,000,000 of obligations on account of major supplies.

A little later this gentleman testifies further, as follows—I am reading from page 65 of the report:

Poland's is one of the most appealing situations in Europe. The Poles, until the treaty was ratified the other day, have had no real access to the sea for commercial traffic except such as existed by the convention that I created with the German Government for the use of the railways and rivers, under American supervision, pending the ratification. That has been a very limited use, and because of this and other limiting factors Poland has not been able to make a very great recovery in exports of such commodities as she produces.

Beyond these minor questions, however, Poland is maintaining a front of some 1,600 miles against the bolsheviks. They have over 700,000 men under arms. Those troops are suffering fearfully from inadequate clothing and supplies.

If Poland should collapse from a bolshevik invasion, as has been the recent case of south Russia and Siberia, it is the most direct menace to the whole civilization of Europe. It involves the whole stability of Europe itself. It is a matter, therefore, of first importance to all the other Governments of Europe. It is a case where I am convinced there is a necessity which requires that we join in support, for we alone have a food surplus, and Poland's first need is food.

A little later—I do not pause to read it all—he speaks of the staff over there that is engaged in distributing food, and at the head of it, he says, is Col. Barber.

Those men have made a close study of the necessities of Poland, and they represent to us that Poland needs somewhere in the neighborhood of 700,000 tons of breadstuffs in order to pull through and keep its army and the civil population in the large cities even modestly supplied.

Mr. President, that is the testimony upon which Mr. Hoover asked this appropriation. The argument was that Poland must keep her 700,000 men in the field. I do not care, when they turned this food over to Poland, whether they stipulated that it should feed the population that Poland would have had to feed if we did not do it, and, having thus relieved herself of the burden of taking care of her own civil population, she could take an equivalent amount of food and use it on her army. Whether we went through that form and that pretext or not, there is no man who can read that testimony and read it candidly who does not know when he gets through that the purpose was to bolster up Poland and enable her to carry on her war.

Mr. President, that may be all right; but before the money of the American people is employed for the purpose of sustaining any Government in time of war with a friendly power, Congress ought to have something to say about that particular question. Of course, if somebody had been back of the German lines during this war, relieving the German Government of all the duty of caring for its own impoverished people, Germany's armies upon the front would have been as directly sustained as though food had been sent to them.

With this remark I propose to yield the floor, and I intend to discuss this question at a later time. In the meantime, with trade relations with Russia cut off, with armies sent into Russia without any authority, I am informed—and I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska has left the Chamber—that the Treasury Department has refused to mint the gold of Russia sent here to purchase merchandise. The Senator from Nebraska was asked to investigate that, and I thought he was doing so. Perhaps the former Secretary of the Treasury, who is here, can tell us as to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is no dispute about the fact that the Treasury Department has refused to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the explanation which attends the action of the Treasury will modify the criticism which is implied in the remarks of the Senator.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to have their explanation.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me to intrude upon his observations for a moment, I think I can submit a partial explanation at least.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the bolshevik government stole the Rumanian gold which was in Russia.

Mr. REED. No; I do not know anything about it.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator is not as well advised concerning European matters as I thought he was.

Mr. REED. I have heard statements of that kind. I do not know whether they are true or not.

Mr. KING. The Government of the United States, well knowing that the bolshevik government was in possession of gold to which it was not entitled—gold which belonged to Rumania, gold which it had stolen from private individuals and melted up—has refused access of that gold to the mints of the United States; and the Senator knows that if we coined that gold and purchased it or acquired it there might be some liability on the part of the Government of the United States if the owners of the gold should make demand upon the Government for restitution. It has only recently been held by a judge in Great Britain, where property was vended which had been stolen by the bolshevists, and suit was brought by the owner of the property, that the person who vended the property could not maintain his title, for the reason that it was clearly shown that the bolshevik government had deprived the owner of that property. So I think the Government of the United States ought to close its mints to the gold of the bolshevik government, because the bolshevik government does not own the gold and because a large portion of that which is in its possession has been stolen from private individuals and from the Rumanian Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am glad to have that explanation. It is about the one I anticipated the Treasury Department would make. But let us follow it a minute. The old autocratic government of Russia failed, the most cruel and bloodiest government that existed anywhere in the world at the time of its fall. The Czar of Russia was an absolute autocrat, and his predecessors in office had incarnadined every hill and valley of Russia with the blood of the people. Until comparatively recent time 70,000,000 of the population of Russia were serfs, attached to the soil and passing with the title to the real estate. Something like 80 or 90 per cent of those people can not read or write, because learning was almost as dangerous a thing in Russia as direct treason, so that that government stood with its brutal, autocratic hands clutching the throats of 180,000,000 people.

The picture was blacker than that which existed in France in the days of Louis XIV and Louis XV. Just as in France, the people, reduced to ignorance and poverty, and taught the lessons of brutality and crime, rose and waded through almost oceans of blood, so in Russia there have been outrages unspeakable, and there is no man in this Chamber who believes more than I believe that practically every principle of the bolshevik government is destined to bring misery upon that people, and I hold no brief in defense of anything approximating bolshevism.

But they have established a government that has stood for three years against attacks from within and assaults from without. The soldiers of Great Britain have undertaken their overthrow. The soldiers of France have invaded their soil. Japanese hordes have been turned loose upon them, and American soldiers have been sent there to fight against those people, who were our allies in this war, and who lost 6,000,000 men upon the field of battle. If they had not been upon the field of battle, France and England would have been crushed by the German military machine before America ever got into the war. There is not a student of that war who will dispute that statement.

They undertook to set up a government. They set up a very bad one, in my opinion, just as France set up bad governments after the revolution; but they were struggling in an experimental stage, and we sent our troops in there to help destroy them.

It is said that this people, when they rebelled and overthrew their Government, got some money out of banks, confiscated it, and that they got some money from Rumania. But here she is, three years afterwards, with comparative peace in her country. She would probably have been at peace long ago except that Poland invaded her territory for 300 miles, in direct defiance of the orders of the heads of the great European Governments, and in direct disregard of the line which had been drawn upon the map to indicate Polish territory. The wrongfulness of that invasion has been declared by British statesmen and by French statesmen, and I think even by our own statesmen. She had 700,000 troops upon the field.

Coming back to the gold, I agree to the principle of law that if property is stolen and can be identified it may be taken away from the man in whose possession it is found. Of course, we all know that. But are you going to apply the principle to a Government, under such circumstances as existed here, that when any foreign Government proposes to buy something in America we shall make them furnish an abstract of title with each $10 gold piece they lay down; that we are to institute an inquiry before we will trade with them or permit their money to be minted; and, of course, the United States Government would not be responsible under those circumstances for minting the gold.

What has been the effect of it? The effect has been to deny our merchants and our producers a market in Russia. In the meantime, what is going on? England is trading, and there is not any official English conscience that will be horrified by taking some gold that is handed to him by the Russian Government. France is opening up trade relations. Italy is opening up trade relations. Canada is opening up trade relations—all the other Governments of the world—but the gentlemen down here at the Treasury propose to say that because some Government took some gold from some people at some time—they do not know how much, or when, or where, or what it is—they will not take any gold from that country. It is another piece of official stupidity, of official arrogance, and of official usurpation that has been all too frequent in recent times.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me I wish to call his attention to a telegram from London which appeared in the New York Herald of yesterday morning. It is as follows:

BRITONS COMBINE FOR SOVIET TRADE—LONDON GOVERNMENT SAID TO BE READY TO BACK $50,000,000 COMPANY—RUSSIA SUBSCRIBES TOO—PROTESTS EXPECTED BY CONCERNS WHOSE PLANTS WERE CONFISCATED BY LENIN.

LONDON, January 5.

Proposals for the formation of a corporation capitalized at $50,000,000 for the purpose of facilitating trade between Russia and Great Britain, which it is understood had been approved by the Government and Leonid Krassine, Russian Soviet representative, is announced by the London Times. The plans await the action of the Russian branch of the London Chamber of Commerce on January 12.

The corporation, the capital of which will be subscribed equally by Russia and Great Britain, the Times says, will be controlled by a board of governors selected by both countries, the Russian organization operating as a department of the soviet government. The expenses of administration will be met by the collection of small percentages upon purchases and sales and upon fiscal operations.

The British Government, the Times adds, is prepared to advance a special credit fund equal to half the British capital as a loan, free of interest, for 10 years. The corporation would buy from and sell directly to British manufacturers and traders at competitive prices, the privilege to be open to all firms whether members of the corporation or not.

I simply thought that that information, just coming from London, would be interesting in connection with the discussion the Senator has presented.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I have seen that and similar articles. Great numbers of them can be produced; but that is a very illuminating one.

Information was given the other day that we had just driven a man out of this country, with the result that millions of dollars worth of contracts were canceled and that immediately he went over to Canada and made $5,000,000 of contracts over there. That is the substance of the statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, it appears, therefore, that yesterday morning, or within the past 48 hours, the London Times announced that the British Government, with the soviet government, had subscribed to a $50,000,000 corporation which was to be backed by additional English money, by a loan from the Government, to facilitate trade and purchases from Russia by the soviet government in England. That is the definite statement that I presented.

Mr. REED. Exactly; and, Mr. President, that is the difference between the hard-headed, practical business sense of British statesmen and the tearful sentimentalism of some American Senators. An Englishman will receive a representative of the bolshevist government and receive his gold and will send him back goods at a good round profit. An American will kick the representative out, refuse his gold, have his goods upon his hands, and discharge the labor of the country which would be manufacturing other goods if the market was open. It exactly illustrates what we have been doing here for a long time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. The Senator may have said, or he may have intended to say, but I wish to call it to his attention so that he will not overlook it, that the very day our Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, gave out his statement in regard to the deportation of Mr. Martens, the Russian representative, the president of the British Board of Trade entertained the Russian representative to Great Britain at a dinner party. I think his name was Leonine Krassin.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rose to talk two minutes, and having talked this long I am going to mention something else.

A good many things have been suggested to benefit American trade and American economic conditions. Anybody who has any sense at all recognizes the fact that when you go through a great war of this kind, when you unsettle the ordinary machinery of trade and commerce, no matter how wisely the war is conducted, no matter how prudently men may act, there is going to result a period of economic distress and readjustment which is bound to be serious to any country, however well managed or financed. The business of government is to reduce to a minimum the disturbance which may come.

Naturally, many people have the idea that the Government should step in and, by direct interference, rectify the evils, make up the losses, and act as a sort of a sister bountiful to the entire country. With people of that type of mind I have no quarrel, except that I do not agree with them that we can do very much in that way. But with the people who interfere with the natural processes of trade and commerce, which would heal the wounds and lessen the blows of war, I have a very serious quarrel.

We have talked here some—and I am not going to debate the question—about helping out by special tariff acts. I am not going to debate it. I simply think it will not do any good. I make that remark in passing. We passed the other day over the President's veto the joint resolution reviving the War Finance Corporation, which was protested against by the Secretary of the Treasury. I suppose he prepared the veto. That may do a little good, and it may not; I do not know. But one thing I do know is this, that if you are to have a great and continuing remedy, you are going to find it in increased production, which gives work to everybody, so that they will have something to buy with. You can not have all that increased production and a market for it and then arbitrarily close the markets of the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production; and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. When any man undertakes to close the markets of 180,000,000 people, a population almost twice as great as that of the United States, and to refuse to accept their gold on the ground that they have not got an abstract of title with each dollar, and then at the same time proposes that we shall carry our goods over there and transmute them into shinplasters, he is a very poor kind of an economist.

My own humble judgment is that the only way to heal the wounds of war is to put into operation the healing processes of peace. If we have a shortage of wheat in the world, transform the battle fields into wheat lands and raise a crop as quickly as we can. If we have a shortage of boots and shoes and enormously high prices, make two pairs of shoes where one is needed and the prices will go down. If we want to pay the debts incurred during the war, manufacture and raise stuff and sell it to somebody for money. If we can have the world for a market, we can start many a spindle and many a wheel in this country that is now idle.

Let us see what our policies have led to. We have certainly encouraged the war of Poland with Russia. We have denied ourselves the market directly of 180,000,000, refusing to take any gold from Russia, whether it was Rumanian gold or Russian gold, and, of course, refusing their shinplasters because they are worthless.

We have maintained for two years, aye, for two years and over a month, a condition of technical war with Germany, and trade has been circumscribed and in some cases prohibited. There are 66,000,000 to 68,000,000 more people that the wise policy of the Government has denied us the opportunity to trade with freely by delaying peace. In the meantime we do not do this because of hatred, but because while, when we appropriated the first $100,000,000 for charity or aid in 1919 we excluded Germany and Austria, yet in the $50,000,000 appropriation made in 1920 we included Austria and Hungary.

If we are giving people a part of $50,000,000, we are not desiring to punish them or starve them any more. The day of starving people and hating people seems to be partially past. Why should not we have opened up every kind of trade and commerce with them nearly two years ago? England has been doing it, France has been doing it. Germany has been invading Russia and selling her goods in Russia. Now, all this, it seems to me, in a large way accounts for some part, a considerable part, of our present economic disturbance.

I want not to be put in the light of refusing the hand of charity to suffering peoples, but I would not send food to sustain the civil population of a country that was using its resources to maintain a battle line 1,600 miles long unless I was ready to directly enter that war. It is just as long as it is short whether we sustain the family while the old man goes out on the battle field and fights, and thus leave the resources of the family to be all turned over to him, or whether we sustain him directly. I have not any doubt if it had not been for this backing up, this support that we gave to Poland, if Poland had not expected aid—indeed her musical premier, Mr. Paderewski, declared that Europe had abandoned them, the Allies had abandoned them, and I think he included us—if it had not been for that they never would have invaded Russia and we probably would have had much earlier peace in Europe.

I think the thing to do is to get peace with all parts of the world, open up trade with all parts of the world, take good money that is handed us from all parts of the world. Then when these nations have settled down to peace and are trying to help themselves, if we can send them a little additional aid, if we can give clothing for children either out of private funds or public funds, I am ready to contribute and cooperate.

I have taken so much time that I apologize for it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate only for a moment. I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that the United States should encourage and expand its foreign trade. We must remember that our balance of trade last year approximated $4,000,000,000, and the foreign commerce of the country was about $14,000,000,000, the largest, I think, by something like $8,000,000,000 that any country ever had in the history of the world prior to the war. Unless we maintain some considerable portion of that foreign commerce we will not be able to find a market for our farm and manufactured products.

I agree that we ought to have declared a state of peace with Germany—I voted for it—and that we ought to have resumed our diplomatic, consular, and trade relations with Germany. All the other Allies have done it and are trading with Germany to-day, but the only trade we have with Germany is carried on through the license of the President. What the world needs is peace and the resumption of business conditions. What we need is to encourage as far as possible our foreign trade to establish a market for the surplus of our farm and manufactured products.

However, I shall not discuss the condition of Russia or Poland or the state of war. I would like to say a word on the subject of the expenditure of the $100,000,000 appropriation and the $50,000,000 worth of flour which we subsequently appropriated to aid starving Europe.

I wish to say here that I am sure that Mr. Hoover and the Grain Corporation officials who shipped these products to Europe and handled them did not misapply them. I believe they were applied as the act of Congress intended they should be applied, honestly applied and efficiently applied.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. In that case, does not the Senator think that it is proper that Mr. Hoover should render an itemized accounting that anybody can understand, or that any reasonable person could understand, showing what has been done with this large amount?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly. I did not know until this morning that a complete accounting of the details had not been made. Until the Senator from Tennessee read it, I supposed it had been made. But the duty is upon the President to make the accounting, and if he wants to call for more details than have been furnished he should do it. I have no doubt Mr. Hoover will furnish every detail that is within his knowledge.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. I understood from the reading by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that the report of the Grain Corporation was made to the President of the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. The money, however, was appropriated by Congress. It was my purpose, if I secured recognition of the Chair this morning, to have moved that it be referred for investigation to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or some proper committee, because I am personally aware that the Grain Corporation, under Mr. Barnes, made an injudicious purchase of Japanese beans, to the great injury of the bean industry of my State. The farmers there have petitioned me to bring the matter up on the floor of the Senate to determine the culpability of those in charge of the very Grain Corporation whose virtues are being extolled. I know it to be a corrupt purchase through the agents of the Grain Corporation, because I have seen the evidence in the office of the Attorney General.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know anything about the purchase of beans in California. The Senator can air it and talk about it all he pleases. I do know Mr. Barnes, and I know he is not corrupt; I know he is an efficient and able administrator of the Grain Corporation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I am speaking now and I decline to yield further. I want to make a brief statement and then the Senator from California can speak the remainder of the afternoon, if he so desires.

Mr. President, we must remember that the hundred million dollars was appropriated by Congress, and the circumstances of the appropriation were as follows: The President cabled here a message asking Congress to appropriate $100,000,000 for the aid of certain countries, excluding the belligerant countries. The President was authorized to expend the money for the benefit of the people in those countries and to make a report to Congress. We voted that money. If it should not have been voted, Congress ought not to have voted it.

I do not believe that that money was expended other than according to the terms of the act of Congress, or that it was expended for the armies of Poland. I do not understand that Mr. Hoover's testimony, which I have heard read, and which was the first time I had ever heard it, contradicts that statement. It is true Mr. Hoover spoke about the armies on the front of Poland with 700,000 men engaged, and that, of course, did not tend to relieve the distress of Poland. We knew the condition of Poland and her armies when we voted the money. If Congress did not wish to vote it, they should not have done so.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Minnesota will read Mr. Hoover's appealing testimony, he will have no difficulty in ascertaining why we did it. It was because Mr. Hoover asked for it.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman who distributed this fund in Poland said it was not furnished to the army, but to the civil population.

So far as the $50,000,000, which was subsequently voted, is concerned, the Senate will remember that that was voted in flour. The Grain Corporation was authorized to sell $50,000,000 worth of flour. It sold that flour to foreign Governments, as it was authorized to do, and received the obligations of foreign Governments. We understood when we made that appropriation the conditions under which it was made, and that we might take a good deal of risk as to whether or not those obligations would be paid. I do not know that there are any details further that could be reported, but I am sure that if the Grain Corporation has any other details and Congress wants them, it will be very glad to give them. It may be that the flour was simply sold to the Government of Poland and the other Governments for a lump sum and their obligations taken for it; it is quite likely that was the case. If that was the case, of course this Government had nothing to do, and the Grain Corporation had nothing to do, with distributing the flour in those countries; I am not advised as to that. I do not believe, however, that the gentlemen who had to do with the distribution of this money, which was voted for charity, misapplied it in order to carry on war in Europe.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], replying to my observations on the Grain Corporation, said that he personally knew Mr. Barnes, who was the president and in control of that organization, and that he would not believe any ill of him. I have made no accusation against Mr. Barnes, but I reiterate what I said, or intended to have said, that at a time when the warehouses of California were filled with beans which had been raised by our farmers an agent of the Grain Corporation, representing that corporation, I believe, in the State of Michigan, which is a bean-growing State, contracted through a broker in San Francisco for the purchase of Japanese beans. It developed that there was a corrupt arrangement between these two men, one representing the Japanese bean owners and the other representing the Grain Corporation. Mr. Barnes's attention was called to the matter and he was very much distressed, but that did not cure the situation. There was no exposure and no prosecution, so far as I am aware.

My constituents communicated these facts to me at the time, and I learned that an investigation had been made which verified all that I have stated. I was confidentially permitted to read the findings deposited in the Department of Justice. It is now time for investigation and for the bringing out of their hiding places all those who have perpetrated fraud upon the Government or upon the people. I now state, believing that no confidence is being violated by me, that the report in the possession of the Department of Justice shows that there was such a corrupt agreement. As a result, our bean farmers, who are very numerous in California, were unable, as they might reasonably have expected, to sell their beans to the Grain Corporation for foreign relief because they were purchased from Japan. Whatever may have been the economy in the transaction, I know nothing. I do not think this was material to the traffickers. A corrupt agreement between the agent of the corporation and the representative of the owners of the Japanese beans existed to the loss of our farmers who had been encouraged to grow beans. I think it is a reflection upon the administration of the Grain Corporation that this matter was not ventilated in order to protect other farmers against such practices, vain promises, and consequent betrayal. Why help Europe, and incidentally Japan, at the cost of American distress? "Look to your own home" would be a good motto for charity mongers. The plight of American farmers should be an object also of solicitude.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the information to which the Senator from California refers was furnished to the Department of Justice, I suppose the Department of Justice was the one to prosecute, was it not?

Mr. PHELAN. I am impartial in my condemnation of recreant public officials; if they failed to prosecute, they deserved the blame; but I think that the purpose of the Grain Corporation was not to stir up a matter of that kind at a time when we were at war, thus shaking the confidence of the people. And as I recall, there was no prosecution.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the Senator does not claim that Mr. Barnes was the man who did it?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not; but he was the head of the Grain Corporation, and it was his agent who was involved.

Mr. KELLOGG. He had no knowledge of its being done at the time, had he?

Mr. PHELAN. I should be very sorry to believe that he had; I do not think so; I am making no accusation against Mr. Barnes; but, inasmuch as he was the head of the Grain Corporation, he should have prosecuted or have provided a remedy. Then the farmers asked him, in order to make some reparation, to buy their beans, to take their product off their hands, because they had raised the beans at the instance of the Food Administration, in order to supply the needy mouths of Europe, and having produced them under that stimulation they were denied and defrauded.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to corroborate the statement of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN]. I desire to say that Mr. G. A. Turner, a prominent and respected citizen of the Senator's State and president of the Bean Growers' Association of the State of California, came to this city and appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. He made a statement with regard to the production of beans and with regard to the promises made by the Food Administration if the growers of beans in California would go into the industry and produce as large a quantity of beans as they possibly could. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point excerpts from the statement of Mr. Turner, which was printed in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. G. A. TURNER, STOCKTON, CALIF., PRESIDENT OF THE CALIFORNIA BEAN GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

We produced last year more than twice the quantity of beans that was ever produced in California and came into the market in a very disastrous season as to weather, with a shortage of help that all farmers encountered, and no market for our product, due primarily to the regulations of the Food Administration, and the trade embargoes on export and other regulations.

The business offered us, the only available business, was through the Food Administration or Grain Corporation, and the first business that was offered us occurred in December. Our crop was harvested in September, October, and November, and the first business was offered through the Food Administration's branch in San Francisco. We were invited to participate in it and questioned as to the prices we wished for our commodity. We told them we had a huge amount of beans and were very anxious to sell them and would be very glad to cooperate with the Government on any reasonable basis; that we felt the price should be regulated by the price that the same variety and quality of beans could be purchased at in the open market. On that basis we furnished something like 4,000 tons to the Food Administration.

We made inquiry to ascertain what the reason was that we were not selling beans when there was such a huge demand for food, and it developed that our Government was purchasing, at prices in some instances above those that the American product could be bought for, oriental beans. These beans were all furnished to the Belgian relief and other reliefs, and it develops in the sale of this surplus Army food that our own Army was supplied with oriental beans, while the American farmers' beans remained on their hands. We still have a huge amount of beans in California that are practically unsalable.

The market was doing very well just before this agitation to reduce the cost of food, but since it started the buyers have ceased to make purchases, and the result is that we are loaded up with a lot of 1918 beans, with a new crop coming on.

An investigation was held at New York by the Grain Corporation in reference to these oriental purchases, and it developed there that some undue influence was used to divert that business to the foreign product without the knowledge of the executives of the Grain Corporation. Mr. Barnes was so exercised over the developments that the chiefs of the bean-purchasing departments were removed. But we still have our American beans.

More than half of the California crop was actually sold below the cost of production. What the remaining crop will be sold at is yet to be determined, but the result of this action has reduced the acreage in California fully 40 per cent. Unseasonable weather will reduce the yield further, and I am confident that we will not produce half as many beans this year as we did last year.

A very, very disastrous situation has developed among the poorer farmers, many of them are renters who have been compelled to give up their ranches and have gone to work for daily wages.

The bean growers have repeatedly offered these goods to the Government, and have done everything they could to cooperate with them, but the situation is just as I have expressed it. It seems, for some reason that no American I have met can justify that American money was spent for the oriental products, and the American product remains in the hands of the producer.

Senator WADSWORTH. By any chance was the oriental bean cheaper?

Mr. TURNER. Not generally. There never was a time when the Government could have presented to the growers an order that we would not have underbid on against the cheap oriental labor when we sold our beans. We never had an opportunity to figure a price in competition with them. If the ruling price in the market was above what the Japanese product was sold to them at, it was because the American producer did not know the business was available and did not have a chance to bid.

Representative VOIGT. Were the 4,000 tons that were sold sold above the oriental price, or do you know?

Mr. TURNER. I would not be able to tell you that. I do not think they were; in fact, I do not think they were as high.

I think there were purchases made in December of oriental beans at prices in excess of what the California beans sold for. We sold beans according to variety, at 5 cents a pound, 6 cents a pound, 7 cents, and 8½ cents. There were lots of oriental beans bought at 8½ cents.

Senator WADSWORTH. Were those oriental beans shipped into this country and then shipped abroad, or were they shipped direct from the place where they were raised?

Mr. TURNER. No, sir. There were lots of those beans brought in here in bond, and the American product was deprived of the protective tariff by virtue of their having been brought in in bond and shipped to Belgium and other reliefs without paying duty here. Of course, that worked, perhaps, to reduce the cost to the Food Administration, but it did not protect the American product by any means, because they exercised that method of depriving the Government of the revenue on imports, and also placed the oriental bean more keenly in competition with the American product.

We do not claim that the Americans can produce beans as cheaply as the orientals, and we feel that with this huge production, which was far beyond any possible domestic consumption, we were entitled at least to the cost of production even if our price was higher than the oriental product.

Representative HEFLIN. Did you offer to sell your beans to Mr. Hoover?

Mr. TURNER. Why, repeatedly. I was in consultation with the Food Administration almost daily.

Representative HEFLIN. What answer did they make to you?

Mr. TURNER. That there was no business at present. That evidence is all tabulated, and I think the findings of that investigation are now before the Department of Justice.

Representative HEFLIN. How many beans do you say you have on hand now?

Mr. TURNER. Personally I have over 600,000 bags in the association.

Representative HEFLIN. If you could get them on the market now, it would help the food situation, would it not?

Mr. TURNER. Very materially. Within the last 30 days I have sold beans to the trade at 3 cents a pound that last year sold for 10 cents a pound—good, wholesome food. We have beans there ranging from—well, the cheap beans are all sold; the 3-cents-a-pound beans are all cleaned up. We have beans at 7 cents and 8 cents, and the 8-cent variety was commandeered by the Government last year at 11½ cents a pound.

Representative HEFLIN. You have no fear, then, that you will be reached in the prosecution of the profiteers?

Mr. TURNER. I have not any fear in the world as to that. If they will only agree to reimburse our loss, they can take them all.

* * * * * * *

Representative HEFLIN. I do not want to see anything done that will injure the producer in any way, and I am in favor of his having a fair and reasonable price, and I think he ought to be encouraged all along the line. You said a little while ago that the Food Administrator bought oriental beans, destined for the Allies, at a time when you were offering to sell your beans?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Representative HEFLIN. And that you would have sold them your beans more cheaply than they bought the oriental beans?

Mr. TURNER. If we had had an opportunity.

Representative HEFLIN. When you offered to sell him your beans at the time he was buying oriental beans, what reason did he give you?

Mr. TURNER. He bought the oriental beans before we knew they wanted them. They kept telling us they did not want any beans, and we never had an opportunity to compete.

Representative HEFLIN. What is your idea of the reason for that step on the part of the Food Administration in your State in buying the oriental beans instead of beans produced in that State?

Mr. TURNER. I would suggest that you get the evidence that was taken at that investigation. I think that will answer the question.

Senator FRANCE. Where can that be obtained?

Mr. TURNER. We had an investigation at the Grain Corporation of that transaction and the evidence is available there.

Representative HEFLIN. Could you tell us in a word just about what that evidence showed?

Mr. TURNER. I would prefer not to. There are newspaper people here and we were told that evidence was not to be given publicly, and while I think you folks ought to have it, I do not feel that I am at liberty to state it.

Representative HEFLIN. I think the country ought to know if the Government has discriminated against an American industry in favor of an oriental industry.

Mr. TURNER. You can certainly get that evidence. There are a thousand pages of it.

Senator FRANCE. It has been printed?

Mr. TURNER. It is typewritten and it is available.

Senator KENYON. Who ordered that it be kept secret?

Mr. TURNER. It was at the suggestion of some of the officials in the Food Administration.

Senator KENYON. Oh, it is in the hands of the Department of Justice, is it?

Mr. TURNER. I believe it is now.

Representative JONES. You did mention, I believe, several gentlemen who were relieved of their duties?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Representative JONES. Who were they?

Mr. TURNER. I would prefer not to mention their names. Personally, I am very anxious that you get access to all those findings, but there has been quite a little excitement over this. Certain papers endeavored to get the evidence and publish it, and I know they are eager for the story.

Senator RANSDELL. Have you any practical suggestions to make to Congress? We are all trying to arrive at a solution of these troublesome questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Pardon me a moment; I want to follow this up. At whose request were those hearings held that you refer to?

Mr. TURNER. Well, it emanated from the Michigan bean jobbers, I think. They started the investigation. I came on while it was in session, and Mr. Moore, of the Grain Corporation, invited me to sit in, and I was present for several days.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was it held?

Mr. TURNER. At the Food Administration's offices at 42 Broadway.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there charges made against certain individuals or corporations who were buying beans from your people for speculation, or were there Government officials involved? I do not care to have you mention any names.

Mr. TURNER. None of the officials were involved, but there was a grave question as to the regularity of the actions of some of the personnel of the bean-purchasing department.

The CHAIRMAN. But whatever beans were purchased were purchased for the Government?

Mr. TURNER. For the Government; that is their business.

Representative HEFLIN. Can you tell this committee what reason they gave you for buying oriental beans instead of buying your beans?

Mr. TURNER. The only tangible reason was that certain consumers, or certain interests that they were buying for, specified oriental beans; but we were financing those operations with American money and dictating in large measure what we would give them, and it seems to me, and always has seemed to me, that if the parties who were filling those orders had the American producer in mind, inasmuch as this was American money they were using, they could very easily have used our beans.

Representative HEFLIN. I think they should have purchased American products where they could. But the reason they gave you was the people in Europe, our allies, who wanted beans, designated the kind of beans they wanted?

Mr. TURNER. Yes.

Representative HEFLIN. And that they purchased those beans for them?

Mr. TURNER. According to instructions.

Chairman HAUGEN. Have you any knowledge of any prosecutions in your part of the State?

Mr. TURNER. No, sir; I believe not. There has been a lot of extravagant talk about contemplated prosecutions, but there has never been any definite information to that effect brought to my notice.

Chairman HAUGEN. I think we have it as a well-established fact that the high cost of living is largely due to profiteering.

Mr. TURNER. I have not any doubt of it.

Chairman HAUGEN. We have a statute making it possible to prohibit profiteering, and have had since the 10th of August, 1917. You know of no prosecutions?

Mr. TURNER. Not definitely; no.

The CHAIRMAN. Judge Eames stated before the committee yesterday that the President had had the power from the time the law was enacted. The department has had the information from the Federal Trade Commission, continued in its letter to the President and its report of June 29, pointing out the gentlemen that are responsible for the high cost of living.

Mr. TURNER. I do not know of any definite case.

Senator KENYON. How long has the department had this information concerning the beans?

Mr. TURNER. This investigation was in February.

Senator KENYON. And when was it completed?

Mr. TURNER. It was completed in February, as far as the taking of testimony of various people that were involved, but there were further investigations carried on after we went home. When they terminated the investigation I can not tell you. It was a very intricate proposition, involving lots of side lines, and it is quite illuminating. I think you will have a very good picture of the whole situation once that evidence is before you.

Mr. GRONNA. It is true, Mr. President, that Mr. Turner stated that large quantities of beans had been imported—I think he said from the Orient; at any rate, from some foreign country—when it was known to everybody that the warehouses of the bean growers of the State of California were filled with that product and that they had been promised that their beans would be purchased by the men whom the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and other Senators have lauded here this afternoon for the splendid work they have done.

Mr. President, I could cite many instances, if I wanted to take up the time of the Senate, where delegations composed of men whose honesty is not and can not be questioned, representing agricultural associations and cattle raisers of the country, and many others in addition to the bean growers and the wheat growers, have condemned in the strongest terms the action of the Food Administration. It is true that statements have been made before committees of Congress by men representing these industries that not only unfair treatment had been accorded but grave injustice had been done to the producers, not only of the State of California but of the entire country.

ACQUISITION OF OIL LANDS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on Monday last I introduced a bill, being Senate bill 4747, in reference to the exportation of petroleum. That bill, generally speaking, provides that oil shall not be exported to those countries which decline to permit American oil producers, or, rather, American nationals, to own and acquire oil land in such foreign countries. I may say that I was led into an investigation of this question in this way: During my investigation of the subject of England paying to us the past-due interest on her loans I found that she was spending enormous sums to acquire control of the petroleum supply of the world. She, it seems, has plenty of money to invest in petroleum companies; she has money to invest in petroleum lands and to acquire petroleum fields throughout the world, but she does not have enough money to pay the interest on the debts she owes the United States on account of great sums of money which had been loaned to her for the purpose of protecting her Empire. In making this investigation I found that since the war the British Nation had acquired oil rights in Persia, in Mexico, in the United States itself, in Mesopotamia, in Palestine, in Venezuela, in Rumania, and she was attempting to acquire oil rights in Russia and in various other parts of the world. In other words, wherever in all the world she could acquire oil rights the agents of her Government and her nationals, with her aid and help, were attempting to acquire those oil rights.

I found further that while she was thus attempting to acquire oil rights, and while she was acquiring oil rights in this country, at the same time she was excluding American nationals and the nationals of other Governments from prospecting for oil or acquiring any oil rights in practically all of her Provinces, her dominions, colonies, mandatories, or her spheres of influence. Wherever she had control Americans were excluded from acquiring oil rights.

I found that this was not the result of accident, but that it was the result of a plan which had been adopted by her statesmen looking to the complete and early control of the oil supply of the world, realizing as she did and as they did that the control of the oil supply of the world means her dominance in the commercial affairs of the world.

I found, further than that, that she had recently made a treaty with Persia by which she had acquired oil rights in some 500,000 square miles of territory—indeed, it was the whole of Persia, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] suggests—and Americans were promptly excluded from acquiring any rights there. I found that she had acquired and was enlarging the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. for the purpose of controlling the supply of oil and the distribution of oil.

I found that she had acquired a majority ownership in the Royal Dutch Shell Co., which owns enormous properties in the United States and elsewhere. It is believed that that company owns one-third of all the enormous supply of oil in California. It owns vast supplies of oil in Oklahoma and in Texas. It is one of the great oil-producing companies of the world. It is backed by the British Government, by money furnished by the British Government. At this time, when it is claimed for her that she is too poor to pay the debt that she honestly owes the United States, or even the interest on it, yet she has the money to invest in oil fields and in oil companies for the purpose of controlling the supply of oil of the world.

I found that last summer she and France had entered into an agreement, known as the San Remo agreement, from the little place in Europe in which it was made, by which she alone was to exploit and control the oil in Mesopotamia and Palestine, of which she had but recently become a mandatory, and she was to give France 25 per cent of it, and she herself was to keep 75 per cent of the oil supply in those countries, believed to be one of the greatest oil fields in the world. At the same time in that connection I found that an American company had got a concession from the Turkish Government to go there and prospect for oil, and it had already built a railroad for the purpose of carrying supplies in order to do the prospecting in Mesopotamia; but as soon as England became a mandatory for that country that work was stopped, and the American company was not allowed to proceed with it, and it has not proceeded with it yet.

Thus it will be seen, Mr. President, that our nationals have been excluded from the rich oil territories controlled by Great Britain, and at the same time Great Britain is getting more than 50 per cent of her oil supply from the United States, and is being allowed to buy and own and produce oil in our country just the same as our own citizens are permitted to produce oil in our own country.

More than that, I found that she was buying oil in Atlantic ports at from $1.75 to $2.25 a barrel, and in Pacific ports at from $2 to $2.55 a barrel, hauling that oil to her supply stations all over the world, I am told, at a cost of about 50 cents a barrel, and whenever American ships had to have that oil in eastern ports they had to pay from $7.75 to $12 a barrel for the same oil, American oil, that England bought at $1.75 to $2.50 a barrel—some four times as much.

I found, further, that England does not permit American supply stations to be built in territories or dominions controlled by England. For more than a year America has been undertaking to have a supply station at Ceylon for the purpose of supplying our ships with oil. Our ships can not take a supply sufficient to go around the world. They have to renew their supply when they take such long voyages as voyages to India and to other parts of Asia, and it is absolutely necessary that we should have supply stations over there; but England has been holding up those supply stations. An application for a permit at Ceylon that was made by the Shipping Board, as I understand, more than a year ago, has never been acted upon; but it has been suggested that we could have a supply station at some out-of-the-way place where our vessels would have difficulty in getting to.

In other places in English territory she has refused and declined to permit oil stations to be established. I am told that our ships frequently carry cargoes to Egypt and other English territory—especially to Egypt, which my information is about—and that those American ships can not bring back cargoes, because England has prescribed that goods exported by Egypt must be exported in British bottoms and not in foreign bottoms, and that the United States even has to buy sand as ballast in order to bring her ships back home.

Mr. President, this discrimination against American trade and commerce—this discrimination about a product as to which America produces over 60 per cent of the entire production of the world—is a monstrous discrimination. It is a discrimination that this Government ought not to stand for. As early as last March the Undersecretary of State, Mr. Frank Polk, formally complained of it, but nothing was done, and a month or six weeks ago, Mr. Colby, our Secretary of State, formally complained, but England has not listened to the complaint; and she will not listen to the complaint until this Government takes those steps that she ought to take, because the United States has the whip end of the handle, and she is able to make England come to terms if she uses American oil; and she must use it.

Mr. President, the bill that I have introduced simply provides for a reciprocal agreement. I am sure it will be declared a fair bill. All that it states is that other nations must do unto America precisely as America permits other nations to do unto her.

In other words, American oil fields are free to all the world, with the one exception of oil on territory belonging to the Government itself. There is some little modification of that open-door policy on lands closed by the Government, but I understand that restriction is not being adhered to; but virtually all American oil fields are absolutely open to the nations of the world and to the nationals of every nation of the world, whereas all British oil fields are closed to all America. That is a condition that no self-respecting nation should stand for for a moment, as it seems to me, and especially about a matter that is so vitally important to our trade and commerce as oil is.

Mr. President, my only purpose in calling this matter to the attention of the Senate and the country is that American rights might be protected. I have no feeling against England. Some of my forefathers were Scotch and the others English. I admire England. I admire the English character and the English tenacity of purpose. I admire her attempts to obtain control of the oil supply of the world. But I do not think we will be good Americans if we stand idly by and let her gobble up the oil supply of the world if we can prevent, and we can easily prevent it. She is producing, as I understand, in the only well that there is in England, some 32 barrels of oil; and yet this nation, having in her own territory only one well with a product of 32 barrels, is undertaking to control absolutely the oil supply of the world. It seems to me to be a gigantic task under such circumstances, but if she can do it, all honor to her; but I do not want her to do it at the expense of the American people and of American commerce, and that is my justification for bringing these matters to the attention of the Senate and the country at this time.

Mr. President, the petroleum situation in the United States is of vital importance at this time to our whole country and to the world. The oil resources of the United States are nothing like as large as is commonly believed. According to experts we own only about one-sixth of the oil supply of the world. It would thus appear that it would be just a question of time when our oil resources will fail unless we take measures to conserve them, because while we own only one-sixth we are producing some 70 per cent of the whole supply of oil.

We are large consumers ourselves, but practically all the nations in the world that use oil in its manifold uses are dependent largely upon the United States and Mexico for their supply of oil.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very much interested in the Senator's statement, and if he will pardon me for making just a brief statement, I want to say that the State which I in part have the honor to represent is, of course, deeply concerned over this question of oil.

During recent years what we call tractors have been sold in large numbers in the western country. To a large extent the work has been done by petrol power. But I am frank to state that so far as my State is concerned we are compelled to go back to the old system of using horses or mules. We can not afford to pay 38 cents a gallon for gasoline, which is the price which we had to pay last year. We can not, I say, afford to operate the tractors and pay 38 cents a gallon for cheap gasoline. The cost of gasoline affects not only the farmer but it affects the manufacturers of the tractors; it affects the manufacturing industry just as much as it affects the farmers. I am quite sure that I am correct in making the statement that not one-half as many tractors will be used in my State in the future if the price of gasoline is kept up to the high figure which we paid last year. At least one-half, perhaps more than that, will be compelled to use either horses or mules to operate their farms.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator is correct about the restriction on the uses of machinery in this country due to the high price of oil, and I am glad to have the Senator bring those facts before the Senate.

It will be remembered that other nations are using our oil without let or hindrance and conserving theirs; and when I say other nations I mean principally Great Britain, because Great Britain is rapidly gaining the control of the oil supply of the world.

The demand for oil by our Navy and by our merchant marine and by the navies and merchant marines of the world is constantly increasing. Naval vessels burning oil are enabled to travel about 3 knots per hour faster than vessels of the same kind using coal. Merchant ships using oil can travel faster than those using coal. They can go longer distances. It is more easily carried; it is more easily fed. Therefore it is of the greatest value, and any nation without it is going to be at the most serious disadvantage in the future.

English statesmen realize this fact, and they are perfectly willing for the United States, their only real rival in the commercial world, to use her oil up as rapidly as possible, when they will fall back on their supply and let us have just what they desire us to have.

I say use our supply as rapidly as possible, because the experts of this country unite in stating that if the United States continues to produce and use oil as rapidly during the next 15 years as it has the last two or three years the entire supply of this country will be exhausted. So, if we are going to take our proper place among the nations of the world, if we are going to keep the defense of a great navy, if we are going to have a great merchant marine, as I pray God we will have, to carry our wonderful products to every port in the world, one of two things must come to pass, either we must conserve our own supply or our Government and our nationals must be permitted to obtain and own oil anywhere in the world; and it is that last proposition to which I wish to address myself particularly.

Our supply is being rapidly removed. I want to call the attention of the Senate at this time to the oil resources of the world.

Mr. Eugene Stebinger, formerly of the United States Geological Survey, gives the following figures as the petroleum wealth of the world:

	Barrels.
United States and Alaska	7,000,000,000
Canada	995,000,000
Mexico	4,525,000,000
Northern South America, inclusive of Peru	5,730,000,000
Southern South America, inclusive of Bolivia	3,550,000,000
Algeria and Egypt	925,000,000
Persia and Mesopotamia	5,820,000,000
Southeastern Russia, southwestern Siberia, and Caucasus	5,830,000,000
Rumania, Galicia, and western Europe	1,135,000,000
Northern Russia and Saghalien	925,000,000
Japan and Formosa	1,235,000,000
China	1,375,000,000
India	995,000,000
East Indies, controlled almost entirely by Great Britain	3,015,000,000
Total	43,055,000,000

Mr. President, it is not believed that this is all of the supply. Mr. David White, also of the United States Geological Survey, adds to that when he says this:

The evidence as to the probable presence of additional oil reserves in the areas just reviewed is in most cases insufficient to serve as a basis for more than the wildest forecast. However, these forecasts, or geological guesses, formulated conservatively, with the probability that deficiencies will be very much more than compensated by excesses, lead me to conclude that there are probably 20,000,000,000 barrels of oil available in the world in addition to the 43,000,000,000 barrels contained in the regions covered by Mr. Stebinger's estimates quoted above, or as much, in round numbers, as 60,000,000,000 barrels in all. Mr. Stebinger's estimate of the oil may be roughly distinguished as oil in sight; that of 60,000,000,000 as total recoverable oil. This estimate of the world's total recoverable petroleum resources, in which Mr. Stebinger concurs, may differ very widely from estimates by other geologists, but we regard it as fairly conservative. It will, we believe, fall considerably within the ultimate recovery of natural petroleum now remaining in the world's underground storage.

England and her nationals own a tremendous interest in Mexican fields, in oil fields in the United States, in German fields, in Russian fields, in Chinese fields, in East Indian fields, and West Indian fields. These, together with the supply mentioned in the foregoing figures, will give her control of nearly one-half of the world's resources. The oil wealth of America, as compared with the rest of the world, is small. On the other hand, the oil industry or production in America is tremendous, and at the present time she is supplying the rest of the world with 70 per cent of what it uses.

Since the war England, both through her Government and her nationals, has been taking energetic steps to secure as large a part of the oil supply of the world as possible. She has, indeed, gone into the oil business herself. She has obtained large grants in Persia, has taken over mandatories containing oil fields, has organized companies in England, and, above all, has prohibited the nationals from any other country acquiring oil rights in any lands over which she has control. Contemplating our own tremendous production, it is evident that our Government should likewise take steps to guarantee our future oil supply. Our nationals should have the right to acquire oil lands and produce oil wherever it may be found, and if they are not given these rights, then we should shut off from our own supply the Governments and their nationals refusing to give us those rights.

In a statement made by Mr. George Otis Smith, Director of the United States Geological Survey, of November 18, 1920, he said:

Accepting the Stebinger-White distribution of the oil reserves, we may roughly set down the continents in order of wealth in oil as North America, Asia, South America, Europe, Oceanica, and Africa. In terms of regional distribution more than half the world's oil reserves are believed to be concentrated in two intercontinental areas. One of these oil-rich provinces includes the North American and South American countries bordering the Caribbean Sea and the other includes the countries of west Asia and southeastern Europe, with the Caucasus as an axis. On these two areas, comprising about 2 per cent of the earth's surface, and each containing about 30 per cent of the world's future supply, is focused the attention of the great nations most in need of oil.

Mr. President, at this point I offer also, and ask unanimous consent to have included in my remarks, another statement by Mr. Smith, which I shall not read.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Our present knowledge of the facts of the world's supply and demand is amply sufficient to warrant us in continuing to advocate the open-door policy. Much can be gained for all nations by pooling the world's resources of so essential a raw material as petroleum. With about 60 per cent of the world's future supply concentrated in two regions, while by far the greater part of the demand arises outside those oil-rich regions, there must be a world's commerce in oil. The United States has given to all comers, whatever their nationality, opportunity to acquire oil lands within its territory, and the new leasing law puts no limit upon foreign participation in operating public oil lands unless there is absence of reciprocal treatment. Of course, any nation realizes that the adoption of the open-door policy need not involve throwing away the key. Not only has the United States been generous in welcoming foreign capital to our domestic fields, but it has been prodigal in marketing the products of American wells and refineries. Whatever our motive has been in winning so large a share of the world's oil trade, the record of the past fully justifies the United States in asking for reciprocity in the future from all other nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have given the oil supply. I want to give the production, to show the way in which we are going in our use of oil, and what we are doing with it. The United States comes first. I give the production of petroleum from 1857, about which time it became a commercial commodity, down to 1918, as follows:

	Barrels of 42 gallons.	Per-centage of total.
United States	4,608,571,719	61.42
Mexico	285,182,489	3.80
Russia	1,873,039,199	24.96
Dutch East Indies	188,388,513	2.51
Rumania	159,332,023	2.02
India	188,143,000	1.41
Persia	14,036,063	.19
Galicia	154,051,273	2.05
Peru	23,587,000	.33
Japan and Formosa	38,498,247	.51
Trinidad	7,482,391	.10
Egypt	4,848,435	.07
Argentina	78,600	.06
Germany	16,664,121	.22
Canada	24,425,770	.33
Venezuela	475,546	.02
Italy	973,002	.02
Cuba	19,167	.02
Other countries	240,000	.02
Total	7,503,147,138	100.00

I call attention to the fact that the United States has produced 61.42 per cent of all the oil that has been produced. She is producing to-day 70 per cent of all the oil that is being produced, and she is producing it here in the United States, and she is being excluded from producing it anywhere else in the world except Mexico.

By the way, in that connection let me say that I was talking about this matter to a gentleman who had recently been to South America. He had been to the Republic of Venezuela. He said that while there he learned of vast oil deposits and he undertook to buy some oil lands in Venezuela. He soon found that he was competing with the English Government in buying those lands. He said that he had spent large sums of money for Liberty bonds, the money from the sale of which had been loaned to England, and he found by his actual experience in Venezuela that he was coming into competition with the very money that he had paid out for those Liberty bonds to help England win the war.

That was one of the reasons why I thought we ought to collect our interest from England. If she has money to go into the markets of the world and buy up the oil supply of the world, surely she has the money to pay the interest on her debts, on loans that were made to her for the purpose of protecting and defending and preserving her empire. It is wrong, morally wrong and governmentally wrong, for her to be permitted to use the money that is rightfully due our Government for any such purpose as this.

The figures I have given show the oil production of the world. I come now to the oil production of the United States.

OIL PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Formerly, Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio produced the greater portion of oil mined in the United States, but the production in New York and Pennsylvania has fallen off from 30,053,500 barrels in 1882 to 8,726,483 barrels in 1915. In Ohio the yield has fallen from 23,941,069 barrels in 1896 to 7,825,326 barrels in 1915. On the other hand, the production of oil in California and Oklahoma has tremendously increased. In 1909 California produced 8,786,330 barrels and in 1915 produced 86,591,535 barrels, while Oklahoma produced 10,000 barrels in 1909 and 97,915,243 barrels in 1915.

By the way, companies in which the English Government is the largest stockholder own 33⅓ per cent of this enormous production in California, and probably quite as much in the State of Oklahoma and in the State of Texas.

Mr. J. Ellis Barker, writing in the Contemporary Review, has the following to say about the production of petroleum in the United States:

The petroleum industry is one of the glories of the United States. It has developed from insignificant beginnings and has become a world-dominating force. American petroleum production has increased in the following extraordinary manner:

	Gallons.
1860	21, 000, 000
1870	220, 951, 290
1880	1, 104, 017, 166
1890	1, 194, 590, 024
1900	2, 672, 062, 218
1910	8, 801, 404, 416
1917	14, 083, 255, 242
1918	16, 000, 000, 000
1919	17, 500, 000, 000
1920	18, 900, 000, 000

That is an enormous increase. England got nearly one-third of the production from those fields, shutting us out at the same time from acquiring oil properties not only in her kingdom but in every dominion, in every mandatory, in every sphere of influence in the world that she controlled.

Mr. Barker continues:

The full significance of these figures becomes apparent only if we endeavor to convert them into more understandable measures. The mind can not easily grasp the meaning of millions and billions. The United States produce at present more than 50,000,000 tons (now 70,000,000) of oil per year. To transport it simultaneously in oil tankers, taking on an average 5,000 tons, a fleet of 10,000 ships (now 14,000) would be required. If the entire British merchant marine consisted of oil ships, it could not transport the yearly output of oil of the United States on a single journey. As a matter of fact, the yearly oil tonnage of the United States is considerably greater than the tonnage of the merchant marine of the entire world. If we convert the yearly oil production of the United States into carloads of, let us say, 10 tons, or into trainloads of 200 tons, and if we imagine all these oil trains standing on a single line of rails stretching over an incredible distance, we shall be able to realize the gigantic yearly production of the great Republic.

American petroleum production has expanded prodigiously since 1860. Its vastness may be gauged by the fact that entire forests were cut down merely to provide the barrels needed for transporting the oil.

In the United States there are over 100,000 miles of main pipe lines alone. They vary in diameter from 8 inches to 12 inches. The main pipe lines have a mileage which is fully four times as great as the entire mileage of the British railways and about four times as great as the circumference of the globe.

In a bulletin from the United States Geological Survey of date December 11, 1920, it is said, on the subject of production:

During the first 11 months of the year 409,000,000 barrels of petroleum were produced in the United States, as compared with 345,000,000 barrels during corresponding months of 1919. It seems assured, therefore, that 450,000,000 barrels will have been produced in the United States during 1920, an increase of over 70,000,000 barrels in the output of 1919. The figures for 1918, 1919, and 1920 are as follows:

1918	356, 000, 000

It is just a question of about 15 years of that kind of production when the United States will be going, with her hat in her hand, to England to get the necessary oil to lubricate her engines, if we continue this production without getting any more of the world's supply.

I digress long enough to say that we have been talking in the Senate to-day about the Russian situation. The statement has been made that England is now dealing with the Russian Government, and I have no doubt she is. She entered into an agreement with France last summer by which it is provided that whatever oil England or France is able to get in Russia, or whatever property they are able jointly to acquire, shall be used on a fifty-fifty basis to the exclusion of other nations. Russia is one of the greatest oil fields in all the world. She has quite as much oil in her boundaries as the United States has in hers and England has set out to obtain it.

While we are quibbling over trifles in this country England is looking after the main chance. She is entering into agreements to-day to acquire the lion's share of the oil in Russia—one of the richest oil fields in all the world. She has already acquired the rich fields of Persia. She has already acquired an immense interest in the oil fields of Rumania. She has already put everybody else out of the rich oil fields of Mesopotamia and Palestine. She has the largest holding in Mexico. She had Lord Cowdray there for years acquiring these holdings. She has the richest holdings, except one, in this country. She is acquiring oil lands in all the world and whenever and wherever she does get them it is to the exclusion of the United States. Wherever she gets it she has got control of the trade and commerce of the world for all time. No nation can take it away from her with her holding the oil supply.

I call attention to the fact that since the war was over, British statesmen in Parliament have said that she was going to control the supply of oil by 1922.

These enormous acquisitions show that they know what they are talking about, and that they mean what they say. We can not blame them. If we, the richest oil people in the world, sit idly by and let her take charge of them, what excuse can we offer? If we had been a member of the League of Nations, we could have prevented the San Remo agreement, we could have prevented the exploitation of oil in Persia; but we were not willing to take our place in that body, so what is left to us? There is but one way to do it and that is, before letting England take our oil, to require her to open to our Government and to our nationals the oil fields that she controls. It is time that vigorous measures were being taken to conserve our supply of oil.

I wish now to call attention to a very wonderful statement of the oil situation by Mr. Franklin K. Lane, former Secretary of the Interior, and a great oil expert, as to the importance of the uses of oil:

It draws railroad trains and drives street cars. It pumps water, lifts heavy loads, has taken the place of millions of horses, and in 20 years has become a farming, industrial, business, and social necessity. The naval and the merchant ships of this country and of England are fitted and being fitted to use it either under steam boilers as fuel or directly in the Diesel engine. The airplane has been made possible by it. It propels the modern juggernaut, the tank. In the air it has no rival, while on land and sea it threatens the supremacy of its rivals whenever it appears. There has been no such magician since the day of Aladdin as this drop of mineral oil. Medicines and dyes and high explosives are distilled from it. No one knows whence it cometh or whither it goeth. Men search for it with the passion of the early Argonauts, and the promise now is that nations will yet fight to gain the fitful bed in which it lies.

In the report of 1919 Mr. Lane further says:

In 1908 the country's production of oil was 178,500,000 barrels, and there was a surplus above consumption of more than 20,000,000 barrels available to go into storage. In 1918, 10 years later, the oil wells of the United States yielded 356,000,000 barrels—nearly twice the yield of 1908—but to meet the demands of the increased consumption more than 24,000,000 barrels had to be drawn from storage. The annual fuel-oil consumption of the railroads alone has increased from sixteen and two-thirds to thirty-six and three-fourths million barrels; the annual gasoline production from 540,000,000 gallons in 1909 to 3,500,000,000 gallons in 1918.

Fuel oil, gasoline, lubricating oil—for these three essentials are there no practical substitutes or other adequate sources? The obvious answer is in terms of cost; the real answer is in terms of man power. Whether on land or sea, fuel oil is preferred to coal, because it requires fewer firemen, and, back of that, in the man power required in its mining, preparation, and transportation the advantage on the side of oil is even greater. So, too, the substitute for gasoline in internal-combustion engines, whether alcohol or benzol, means higher cost and larger expenditure of labor in its production.

WHY THIS DISCUSSION OF OUR OIL?

But, Mr. President, it may be asked, why this discussion about oil? What interest has the United States in it other than glorying in her marvelous production of it? Why should we concern ourselves in the supply and production of oil in other countries when we produce three-fourths of all the oil used in the world? Why should we worry about it?

There are two main answers and many less ones. First, our supply at our present rate of production will be gone, according to the experts, within 15 years, certainly within 30 years; and, secondly, Great Britain, while obtaining almost unlimited supplies of oil from the United States for her own use, prohibits the United States or its nationals from buying oil lands or producing oil in her own dominions or those of any of her protectorates or mandatories. What is the proof for these two statements?

I have already given the proof that our supply is being rapidly diminished by tremendous production. I now offer the proof that Great Britain is excluding America from obtaining oil in her dominions.

I have already given the reasons why this is an important matter for us to determine at this time. We have just built a stupendous merchant marine all at once, so to speak. It has been built during the war. It will be useless, almost, if we permit Great Britain to acquire control of the oil supply of the world and shut us out. There is no reason why this should be done. There is every reason why it should not be done.

BRITISH DISCRIMINATION.

I wish now to show something about Great Britain's discrimination. It is an interesting fact that the price paid by English companies and other nationals for fuel oil averages from $1.75 to $2.50 per barrel at Atlantic and Gulf ports and from $1.80 to $2.50 per barrel on Pacific ports. As more than 75 per cent of the oil produced in the United States is produced in the mid-west field, it means transportation to either the Pacific or the Atlantic ports, in excess of 1,500 miles. Of course, that is done by pipe lines.

This should be considered in dealing with this question when we consider the price paid by English companies for fuel oil at American seaboards.

On the other hand, oil produced by the British nationals in Persia and other foreign countries and transported a similar distance is sold to the United States Shipping Board, Navy, and other American shipowners at prices ranging from $7 to $12 per barrel, or more than four times the price charged in the United States to British shippers for fuel oil.

Mr. President, I have taken from an oil publication in London a statement showing what the British Government is doing in the matter of oil. The Royal Dutch Shell Co. and its subsidiaries, in which the British Government has the controlling interest, are capitalized as shown in the statement which I desire to insert in the RECORD. There is therein given the capital both of the parent company itself and its subsidiary companies. It is second only to the Standard Oil Co. in this country. Its largest holdings are in this country and in Mexico, and if we permit it to go on it will control the oil supply of the world.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROYAL DUTCH AND SHELL.

An interesting list of subsidiary companies of the Royal Dutch and Shell group, as well as of companies controlled by that group which are not, strictly speaking, subsidiaries, has been issued by a stock exchange firm; and as this is a matter upon which we receive numerous inquiries from time to time, we append the list, which our readers will probably find useful to keep as a reference:

Mr. MCKELLAR. I also ask to insert in the RECORD a statement of the petroleum imports into the United Kingdom taken from the Oil News of November 13, 1920. It shows that somewhere between 80 and 90 per cent of the oil which England is to-day using is obtained from the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Petroleum imports into the United Kingdom, supplied by order of His Majesty's commissioners of customs and excise for the week ended Nov. 8, 1920, excluding any imports that may not be disclosed.

Mr. McKELLAR. What evidence have we that England is discriminating against us? A resolution passed the Senate on March 19, 1920, requesting the President to give the Senate information as to the restrictions on American petroleum prospectors in certain foreign countries. On May 17, 1920, the President furnished a report as to those restrictions, and I want to read very briefly from that report:

In general each dominion and colony has its own legislation on the subject of the petroleum industry.

The policy of the British Empire is reported to be to bring about the exclusion of aliens from the control of the petroleum supplies of the Empire and to endeavor to secure some measure of control over oil properties in foreign countries. This policy appears to be developing along the following lines, which are directly or indirectly restrictive on citizens of the United States:

1. By debarring foreigners and foreign nationals from owning or operating oil-producing properties in the British Isles, colonies, and protectorates.

2. By direct participation in ownership and control of petroleum companies.

3. By arrangements to prevent British oil companies from selling their properties to foreign owned or controlled companies.

4. By orders in council that prohibit the transfer of shares in British oil companies to other than British subjects or nationals.

It is understood that the British Government has a controlling interest in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co., and that it has also assisted in the development of the Papuan oil fields by bearing one-half of the expense and contributing experts.

It may be of some significance that by general license of September 1, 1919, prohibited transactions under the regulations of the defense of the realm act were again permitted, except as such transactions might relate to oil-mining property. (Cablegram from London, Oct. 18, 1919; consular reports from London, Oct. 21, 1919, Nov. 8, 1919.)

According to recent reports, prospecting for petroleum is lawful in the United Kingdom only by the board of trade or the minister of munitions or persons authorized by them. Similar regulations apply to working a petroleum property. The only drilling now going on in the United Kingdom for petroleum is being done by S. Pearson & Son (Ltd.), as petroleum development managers to the Government.

It is said to be unlawful for a British citizen, without the consent of the board of trade, to transfer to an alien or to a foreign-controlled company any interest in a company controlling an oil field in the United Kingdom. (Defense of the realm act of 1915, as amended Oct. 23, 1917, regulation No. 30BB.)

The message of the President shows that the United States and its nationals are excluded in the following British possessions: Australia, British East Africa, Uganda, German East Africa (occupied), British West Africa, Canada, British Guiana, British Honduras, India, British West India, Barbados, and Trinidad.

Great Britain already owns and is operating the Anglo-Persian Co., which controls the entire Persian supply. She has already made her arrangements to take over the Mesopotamian and Palestine fields. Of course, she owns the Egyptian fields and large interests in the Mexican fields. She owns the Canadian and Indian fields and the East Indian and West Indian fields. She now controls the Royal Dutch Shell Co., which has acquired large producing properties in California and in the mid-continent field. She also controls the Mexican Eagle Oil Co. In 1917 she bought from her alien property custodian the British Petroleum Co., the Homelight Oil Co., and the Petroleum Steamship Co., which had been previously held by the Deutsche Bank, of Germany. It is claimed by no less a person than Sir Charles Greenway that by 1922 the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. will be in position to supply 80 per cent of Great Britain's present requirements for gasoline. She now gets 80 per cent of her gasoline from the United States. If it was not for the oil fields of the United States and Mexico, England could not run a ship.

Practically all of the two Americas, northern Europe, and northern Asia, with the exception of Japan, is open to oil prospectors of the United States, but all the British fields, including those in dependencies and mandatories, are closed to the United States and its nationals.

It is quite marvelous that England, which does not produce any oil, is trying to control the oil of the world.

THE SAN REMO AGREEMENT.

Last summer at San Remo, in Italy, representatives of the French and British Governments entered into an agreement with reference to Mesopotamian oil fields, a part of which agreement is as follows :

Mesopotamia: The British Government binds itself to concede to the French Government, or the representative appointed by same, 25 per cent of the net production of crude oil at the current market price which his British Majesty's Government may draw from the Mesopotamian petroleum regions in the event of those regions being made productive by virtue of Government exploitation; or in the event the Government has recourse to a private company to exploit the Mesopotamian petroleum regions the British Government will place at the disposal of the French Government a participation of 25 per cent in the same company. The amount to be paid for a participation of this kind should not exceed the amount paid by any other participant in the said petroleum company. It is also agreed that the said petroleum company is to be under the permanent control of Great Britain.

Showing Great Britain's designs upon the Russian oil fields, it is further provided in the San Remo agreement:

In the territories belonging to the former Russian Empire the two Governments will give their joint support to their respective dependents in their common efforts with the view to obtain petroleum concessions and facilities for export and to assure the delivery of petroleum supplies.

It must be remembered that Russia has about one-eighth of the oil supply of the world, and perhaps more. The agreement further provides as to the Rumanian fields, which are the largest known oil deposits in Europe west of the Black Sea, as follows:

Great Britain and France will lend their aid to their respective dependents in all negotiations which are to be started with the Rumanian Government for:

(a) The purchase of oil and petroleum concessions, shares, or other interests owned by former subjects or companies (of enemy origin) in Rumania which have been sequestered—for instance, the Steaua Romana, Concordia, Vega, etc., who constituted in said country the petroleum group of the Deutsche Bank and the Disconto Gesellschaft—at the same time as all other interests which it may be possible to take over.

(b) The concession of petroleum fields owned by the Rumanian State.

In the House of Parliament the Right Hon. Walter Runciman, president of the British Board of Trade, as early as January, 1916, stated that the future policy of Great Britain would be not only to control the coal of the world but the supply of oil as well, and recently Mr. Walter Hume Long, first lord of the Admiralty, in an address in London, stated that England must acquire all available oil lands, and that the nation must "take care to occupy the house or others would take it and with it the key to future success."

The Anglo-Persian Oil Co. now has a capital of $100,000,000, and the British Government itself owns two-thirds of the voting stock. For a number of years Lord Cowdry, formerly Sir Weetman Pearson, has been at the head of the English oil interests in Mexico and has accomplished wonders there. Recently the British Government appropriated $5,000,000 and turned it over to Lord Cowdry to prospect for oil in the British Isles.

BRITAIN'S PRESENT DEPENDENCE UPON AMERICA FOR OIL.

But while Great Britain is thus trying to gobble up as much of the oil territory of the world as possible and at the same time excluding American oil prospectors from her territory, what is her situation relative to American production of oil? It is one of almost absolute dependence upon the American supply. Thirty-four per cent of her naval ships are oil-burning ships, and 54 per cent burn oil and coal. This does not include 140 oil-burning submarines. It is believed that half of her merchant marine also burns oil. She is dependent upon America for at least 80 per cent of her supply. Under these circumstances, what is our remedy?

Of course, if we had been in the League of Nations, we could have vetoed the agreement between France and England dividing up the Mesopotamian and Palestine fields and shutting out American prospectors who were already on the ground, but not being in the league, have we any remedy left?

Some time ago Secretary Lane, who is an expert on the subject of oil, presented to a board of geologists, engineers, and economists in his own department the question of what was to be done. I ask permission to print in my remarks his remedy, which is the same as that which I have already proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

This board recommended the following program of action:

First. To secure the removal of all discriminations, to the end that our nationals may enjoy in other countries all the privileges now enjoyed by other nationals in ours: (a) by appropriate diplomatic and trade measures; (b) by securing equal rights to our nationals in countries newly organized as mandatories.

Second. To encourage our nationals to acquire, develop, and market oil in foreign countries (a) by sure, adequate protection of our citizens engaged in securing and developing foreign oil fields; (b) by promotion of syndication of our nationals engaged in foreign business in order to effectually conduct oil development and distribution of petroleum and its products abroad.

Third. Governmental action through special agency or board, (a) through the organization of a subsidiary governmental corporation with power to produce, purchase, refine, transport, store, and market oil and oil products; (b) through the formation of a permanent petroleum administration.

Fourth. To assure to our nationals the exclusive opportunity to explore, develop, and market the oil resources of the Philippine Islands, provided discriminatory policies of other nations against our nationals are not abandoned or satisfactorily modified. (Report of Secretary of the Interior, 1919, p. 23.)

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the program herein stated is an excellent one, and in furtherance of that program I have offered the following bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That deposits of oil or oil shale, or the manufactures or refined products thereof, in the United States or its Territories or dependencies, or any land containing such deposits, or any stock or bond interest in corporations owning such land or deposits, or contracts for the purchase and development of the same, when the purpose is to export such products or otherwise to use them in foreign commerce, shall hereafter not be acquired or owned by any foreign Government or by the nationals of any foreign Government whenever the United States or its nationals having a like purpose are prohibited from acquiring such lands or rights or deposits or manufactured or refined products thereof owned or controlled by the Governments of such foreign countries, directly or by their dominions, dependencies, mandatories, spheres of influence, or otherwise, or the nationals of such Government or foreign countries: Provided, That in all cases where the Government of the United States or its nationals is permitted to acquire such lands or deposits, or manufactured or refined products of same, or contracts for the purchase or development of the same, under foreign Governments or their dominions, mandatories, or dependencies, a like privilege to such foreign Governments or their nationals shall be accorded by the Government of the United States.

SEC. 2. That oil or oil shale and the manufactured or refined products of same shall not hereafter be exported to any foreign Government or to the nationals of any foreign Government in any case where such foreign Government, its dominions, dependencies, or mandatories refuse to permit the United States or its nationals to acquire and ship the said deposits or the manufactured or refined products to the United States or otherwise to use the same in foreign commerce; or where the vessels of the United States or the vessels of the nationals of the United States are discriminated against by any foreign Government or its nationals in the furnishing of oil or oil facilities or in the acquiring of oil supply stations in the territory of such foreign Government, or its dominions, dependencies, protectorates, mandatories, or spheres of influence.

SEC. 3. The Shipping Board of the United States is hereby required to report on or before July 1, 1921, what foreign Governments, dominions, dependencies, protectorates, or mandatories, if any, are violating this act, and thereafter no oil or oil shale or the manufactured or refined products of same shall be exported to any foreign Government or its nationals so reported by the Shipping Board to be violating said act. Should said Shipping Board by resolution of its members duly spread upon the minutes report any Government, dominion, mandatory, or dependency as violating said act, the President, under and by virtue of this act, shall at once issue his proclamation declaring an embargo against shipping any of said products to such foreign Government or its dependencies, mandatories, or nationals; nor shall any of said products be exported to any foreign Government or its nationals until the Shipping Board reports that such Government or its dominions, protectorates, or mandatories are no longer violating this act, in which case the President shall issue his proclamation removing the embargo.

SEC. 4. Whenever an attempt is made to export or ship or take out of the United States any oil or oil shale or the manufactured or refined products of same in contravention of this act, and after the President has issued his proclamation as aforesaid, the provisions hereof shall be enforced by the same officers with like forfeitures and penalties and under like proceedings provided in title 6 of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1917, being an act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, etc., and known as the espionage act

REASON FOR THE BILL.

Mr. President, my reason for introducing this bill is that apparently diplomatic measures have failed. As I have already stated, Mr. Polk protested against the San Remo agreement last spring and Mr. Colby has recently even more vigorously protested against it, and all without effect. In my judgment, there is but one way to bring about an adjustment of this matter, and that is along the lines set forth in this bill. If Great Britain is not permitted to get oil from this country, her navy will be severely handicapped and many of the ships of her merchant marine will be put out of commission. She will be obliged to come to terms. We have the power. It lies within our hands. We ask for nothing but what is right. We seek no advantage. We simply desire that our nationals shall be treated by Great Britain in the same way that we treat hers. We want them to enjoy the same privileges in our country that we want in theirs, but in justice to ourselves we must deny to Great Britain and her nationals just what she denies to the United States and our nationals. My bill is a reciprocal agreement. It is absolutely fair. If it is not fair, we must make it fair, but American rights in oil must be upheld.

Mr. President, the people of Great Britain themselves do not believe in this oil-gobbling scheme of their Government. The Oil News of November 27, 1920, representing the oil interests of Great Britain, protests against the San Remo agreement. They say it must be abrogated, and that Americans should have the right to prospect for oil in Mesopotamia and Palestine just as the subjects of Great Britain have in this country. At this point I will print in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a quotation from the Journal referred to, if there be no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THAT "BLESSED WORD" AGAIN.

The Mesopotamian position appears to be the source not only of friction between the United States and Great Britain but of an obscurity which is in some respects even more to be deplored. The first ray of light let in on this subject during the past few months was Mr. Lloyd-George's statement in the House of Commons (reported in last week's Oil News) to the effect that the Allies were awaiting the establishment of an Arab government in Mesopotamia which would deal with the very troublesome subject of the oil prospecting concessions in that country. Nevertheless, the public in general have not grasped the position fully, as is evident by the visits we have had from representatives of well-known daily papers who were in search of some elucidation of the present obscure position.

LATEST AMERICAN NOTE.

Another aspect of this matter is indicated by the Exchange Telegraph message from Washington of November 20 stating that the United States has sent a note to Great Britain protesting against secret agreements between the Allies for the exploitation of former Turkish territories. This is stated to be the second of a series of notes on this matter; and it is evident that the United States, at the instance of the Standard and possibly other important groups, are not going to take the Mesopotamian situation lying down.

NOT WORTH A DISPUTE.

Where the rights and wrongs lie in this case we are not prepared to say. We are a British oil journal, but there are wider aspects of the Mesopotamian oil problem than are indicated by a dispute between John Bull and Uncle Sam as to who is to develop the potential oil fields of this remarkable district. Our own view, for what it is worth, is that the possibilities are here so vast that Great Britain, even with the help of France as a 25 per cent partner, is not able herself to prospect and exploit them fully.

A NEW WAY OUT.

Consequently it would be well to consider how far the European Allies can legitimately go in satisfying the aspirations of United States capital to a share in the risks and possible eventual profits of the Mesopotamian oil region. Good will, peace, and harmony are assets worth paying a long price for, even if the purchase consideration is payable in undeveloped oil lands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in conclusion I desire to answer a question which was raised by a Senator in discussing the matter as to whether or not a bill of this kind would be constitutional. I do not think there can be a particle of doubt about that, since the decision in Field against Clark, in 143 United States Reports, 650, excerpts from that opinion which sustain the constitutionality of an act of this kind I have prepared, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave to do so will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL.

Repeated decisions of this court have determined that Congress has the power to exclude aliens from the United States; to prescribe the terms and conditions on which they may come in; to establish regulations for sending out of the country such aliens as have entered in violation of law; and to commit the enforcement of such conditions and regulations to executive officers; that the deportation of an alien who is found to be here in violation of law is not a deprivation of liberty without due process of law and that the provisions of the Constitution securing the right of trial by jury have no application. (Chae Chan Ping v. United States, 130 U. S., 581; Nishimura Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S., 651; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S., 698; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S., 538; Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S., 228; Fok Yung Yo v. United States, 158 U. S., 296; Japanese Immigrant case, 189 U. S., 86; Chin Bak Kan v. United States, 186 U. S., 193; United States v. Sing Tuk, 194 U. S., 161; Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S., 289.)

The authority conferred upon the President by section 3 of the act of October 1, 1890, to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes (26 Stat., ch. 1244, pp. 567, 612), to suspend by proclamation the free introduction of sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides when he is satisfied that any country producing such articles imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States which he may deem to be reciprocally unequal or unreasonable, is not open to the objection that it unconstitutionally transfers legislative power to the President. (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 650.)

The plaintiffs in error contend that this section, so far as it authorizes the President to suspend the provisions of the act relating to the free introduction of sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, is unconstitutional, as delegating to him both legislative and treaty-making powers, and, being an essential part of the system established by Congress, the entire act must be declared null and void. On behalf of the United States it is insisted that legislation of this character is sustained by an early decision of this court and by the practice of the Government for nearly a century, and that, even if the third section were unconstitutional, the remaining parts of the act would stand.

The decision referred to is the brig Aurora. (7 Cranch, 383, 388.) What was that case? The nonintercourse act of March 1, 1809 (c. 24, secs. 4, 11), forbidding the importation, after May 20, 1809, of goods, wares, or merchandise from any port or place in Great Britain or France, provided that "the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized, in case either France or Great Britain shall so revoke or modify her edicts as that they shall cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States, to declare the same by proclamation"; after which the trade suspended by that act and the act laying an embargo could "be renewed with the nation so doing." (2 Stat., 538.) The act of 1809 expired on the 1st of May, 1810, on which day Congress passed another act (c. 39, sec. 4) declaring that in case either Great Britain or France, before a named day, so revoked or modified her edicts "as that they shall cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States, which fact the President of the United States shall declare by proclamation, and if the other nation shall not" within a given time revoke or modify her edicts in like manner, then certain sections of the act of 1809 "shall from and after the expiration of three months from the date of the proclamation aforesaid be revived and have full force and effect, so far as relates to the dominions, colonies, and dependencies, and to the articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the dominions, colonies, and dependencies of the nation thus refusing or neglecting to revoke or modify her edicts in the manner aforesaid. And the restrictions imposed by this act shall, from the date of such proclamation, cease and be discontinued in relation to the nation revoking or modifying her decrees in the manner aforesaid." (2 Stat., 605, 606.) On the 2d of November, 1810, President Madison issued his proclamation declaring that France had so revoked or modified her edicts as that they ceased to violate the neutral commerce of the United States. In the argument of that case it was contended by Mr. Joseph R. Ingersoll that Congress could not transfer legislative power to the President, and that to make the revival of a law depend upon the President's proclamation was to give that proclamation the force of a law. To this it was replied that the legislature did not transfer any power of legislation to the President; that they only prescribed the evidence which should be admitted of a fact, upon which the law should go into effect. Mr. Justice Johnson, speaking for the whole court, said: "We can see no sufficient reason why the legislature should not exercise its discretion in reviving the act of March 1, 1809, either expressly or conditionally, as their judgment should direct. The nineteenth section of that act, declaring that it should continue in force to a certain time and no longer, could not restrict their power of extending its operation without limitation upon the occurrence of any subsequent combination of events." This certainly is a decision that it was competent for Congress to make the revival of an act depend upon the proclamation of the President, showing the ascertainment by him of the fact that the edicts of certain nations had been so revoked or modified that they did not violate the neutral commerce of the United States. The same principle would apply in the case of the suspension of an act upon a contingency to be ascertained by the President and made known by his proclamation.

To what extent do precedents in legislation sustain the validity of the section under consideration, so far as it makes the suspension of certain provisions and the going into operation of other provisions of an act of Congress depend upon the action of the President based upon the occurrence of subsequent events, or the ascertainment by him of certain facts, to be made known by his proclamation? If we find that Congress has frequently, from the organization of the Government to the present time, conferred upon the President powers with reference to trade and commerce like those conferred by the third section of the act of October 1, 1890, that fact is entitled to great weight in determining the question before us.

During the administration of Washington Congress, by an act approved June 4, 1794, chapter 41, authorized the President, when Congress was not in session and for a prescribed period, "whenever, in his opinion, the public safety shall so require, to lay an embargo on all ships and vessels in the ports of the United States, or upon the ships and vessels of the United States, or the ships and vessels of any foreign nation, under such regulations as the circumstances may require, and to continue or revoke the same whenever he shall think proper." (1 Stat., 372.)

Congress passed and President Adams approved the act of June 13, 1798 (ch. 53, sec. 5), suspending commercial intercourse between the United States and France and its dependencies, and providing that if the Government of France, and all persons acting by or under its authority, before the then next session of Congress, "shall clearly disavow and shall be found to refrain from the aggressions, depredations, and hostilities which have been and are by them encouraged and maintained against the vessels and other property of the citizens of the United States and against their national rights and sovereignty, in violation of the faith of treaties and the laws of nations, and shall thereby acknowledge the just claims of the United States to be considered as in all respects neutral and unconnected in the present European war if the same shall be continued, then and thereupon it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, being well ascertained of the premises, to remit and discontinue the prohibitions and restraints hereby enacted and declared; and he shall be, and is hereby, authorized to make proclamation thereof accordingly." (1 Stat., 565, 566.) A subsequent act, approved February 9, 1799 (ch. 2, sec. 4), further suspending commercial intercourse with France and its dependencies, contained this section: "That at any time after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, if he shall deem it expedient and consistent with the interest of the United States, by his order, to remit and discontinue, for the time being, the restraints and prohibitions aforesaid, either with respect to the French Republic or to any island, port, or place belonging to the said Republic with which a commercial intercourse may safely be renewed; and also to revoke such order whenever, in his opinion, the interest of the United States shall require; and he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to make proclamation thereof accordingly." (1 Stat., 613, 615.) Under the latter act the President issued, June 26, 1799, and May 21, 1800, proclamations declaring it lawful for vessels departing from the United States to enter certain ports of San Domingo. (Works of John Adams, vol. 9, pp. 176, 177.)

By an act of Congress, approved April 18, 1806 (ch. 29), it was made lawful to import, after November 15, 1806, into the United States from any port or place in Great Britain or Ireland, or in any of the colonies or dependencies of Great Britain, articles of which leather, silk, hemp, flax, tin, or brass was the material of chief value; woolen cloths, whose invoice prices exceeded 5 shillings sterling per square yard; woolen hosiery, manufactures of glass, silver, and plated wares, hats, nails, spikes, ready-made clothing, millinery, beer, ale, porter, pictures, and prints. (2 Stat., 379.) The operation of this act was suspended by the subsequent act of December 19, 1806 (ch. 1, sec. 3), until July 1, 1807. But the last act contained this section: "That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized further to suspend the operation of the aforesaid act, if in his judgment the public interest should require it: Provided, That such suspension shall not extend beyond the second Monday in December next." (2 Stat., 411.) Both of these acts received the approval of President Jefferson.

An act of March 3, 1815 (ch. 77), approved by President Madison, provided that so much of the several acts imposing duties on the tonnage of ships and vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States as imposed a discriminating duty on tonnage between foreign vessels and vessels of the United States, and between goods imported into the United States in foreign vessels and vessels of the United States, be repealed, so far as the same respected the produce or manufacture of the nation to which such foreign ships or vessels belonged, such repeal to take effect in favor of any foreign nation "whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the discriminating or countervailing duties of such foreign nation, so far as they operate to the disadvantage of the United States," had been abolished. (3 Stat., 224.) Satisfactory proof having been received by President Monroe from the free city of Bremen that from and after the 12th of May, 1815, all discriminating or countervailing duties of the said city, "so far as they operated to the disadvantage of the United States," had been abolished, he issued July 24, 1818, his proclamation, stating that the acts of Congress upon that subject were repealed so far as the same related to the produce and manufactures of that city. Similar proclamations were issued by him in respect to the produce and manufactures of Hamburg, Lubec, Norway, and the Dukedom of Oldenburg. (3 Stat., App. I, pp. 792, 793, 794, 795.)

By an act approved March 3, 1817 (ch. 39), prohibiting the importation into the United States, in any foreign vessel, from and after July 4 of that year, of plaster of Paris, the production of any country or its dependencies, from which the vessels of the United States were not permitted to bring the same article, it was provided that the act should continue in force five years from January 31, 1817, provided "that if any foreign nation or its dependencies which have now in force regulations on the subject of the trade in plaster of Paris, prohibiting the exportation thereof to certain ports of the United States, shall discontinue such regulations, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to declare that fact by his proclamation, and the restrictions imposed by this act shall, from the date of such proclamation, cease and be discontinued in relation to the nation or its dependencies discontinuing such regulations." (3 Stat., 361.) Proclamations in execution of this act were issued by President Monroe relating to our trade with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. (3 Stat. App., pp. 791, 792.)

By an act concerning discriminating duties of tonnage and impost, approved January 7, 1824 (ch. 4, sec. 4), it was provided that "upon satisfactory evidence being given to the President of the United States by the Government of any foreign nation that no discriminating duties of tonnage or impost are imposed or levied within the ports of the said nation upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States, or upon merchandise, the produce or manufacture thereof, imported in the same, the President is hereby authorized to issue his proclamation, declaring that the foreign discriminating duties of tonnage and impost within the United States are and shall be suspended and discontinued, so far as respects the vessels of the said Nation, and the merchandise of its produce or manufacture, imported into the United States in the same; the said suspension to take effect from the time of such notification being given to the President of the United States, and to continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, and merchandise as aforesaid, thereon laden shall be continued, and no longer." (4 Stat., 3.) A similar section was embodied in the act of May 24, 1828 (ch. 111), relating to the same subject, which is substantially preserved in section 4228 of the Revised Statutes. (4 Stat., 308.) In execution of these acts, proclamations were issued by the Presidents of the United States, as follows: Adams, July 1, 1828 (4 Stat. App., 815); Jackson, May 11, 1828, June 3, 1829, September 18, 1830, April 28, 1835, and September 1, 1836 (4 Stat. App., 814, 815, 816; 11 Stat. App., 781, 782); Polk, November 4, 1847 (9 Stat. App., 1001); Fillmore, November 1, 1850 (9 Stat. App., 1004); Buchanan, February 25, 1858 (11 Stat. App., 795); Lincoln, December 16, 1863 (13 Stat. App., 739); Johnson, December 28, 1866, and January 29, 1867 (14 Stat. App., 818, 819); Grant, June 12, 1869, November 20, 1869, February 25, 1871, December 19, 1871, September 4, 1872, and October 30, 1872 (16 Stat. App., 1127, 1130 to 1137; 17 Stat. App., 954, 956, 957); and Hayes, November 30, 1880 (21 Stat., 800).

A subsequent statute of May 31, 1830 (ch. 219), repealed all acts and parts of acts which imposed duties upon the tonnage of ships and vessels of foreign nations, provided the President of the United States should be satisfied that the discriminating or countervailing duties of such foreign nations, "so far as they operate to the disadvantage of the United States," had been abolished. (4 Stat., 425.) This provision is preserved in section 4219 of the Revised Statutes.

Pursuant to the act of Congress of August 5, 1854 (ch. 269, sec. 2), carrying into effect the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of June 5, 1884, President Pierce issued his proclamation, December 12, 1855, declaring that grain, flour, breadstuffs of all kinds, and numerous other specified articles, should be admitted free of duty from Newfoundland, he having received satisfactory evidence that that Province had consented, "in a due and proper manner," to have the provisions of the above treaty extended to it, and to allow the United States the full benefits of all its stipulations, so far as they were applicable to Newfoundland. (10 Stat., 587; 11 Stat., 790.)

By an act of Congress approved March 6, 1866 (ch. 12), the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from any foreign country into the United States was prohibited, the operation of the act, however, to be suspended as to any foreign country or countries, or any parts of such country or countries, whenever the Secretary of the Treasury should officially determine, and give public notice thereof, that such importation would not tend to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States. The same act provided that "the President of the United States, whenever in his judgment the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle may be made without danger of the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States, may, by proclamation, declare the provisions of this act to be inoperative, and the same shall be afterwards inoperative and of no effect from and after 30 days from the date of said proclamation." (14 Stat., 3.) These provisions constituted sections 2493 and 2494 of the Revised Statutes until the passage of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 489, ch. 121, sec. 6). And by the tariff act of 1890 the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from foreign countries was prohibited; but authority is given to the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend the operation of the act as to any country whenever he determines that such importation will not lead to the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious diseases among the cattle of the United States. (26 Stat., 610, ch. 1244, sec. 20).

"In execution of section 4228 of the Revised Statutes, President Arthur issued a proclamation declaring that on and after the 1st day of March, 1884, so long as the products of and articles proceeding from the United States, imported into the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, should be exempt from discriminating customs duties, any such duties on the products of and articles proceeding from Cuba and Porto Rico under the Spanish flag should be suspended and discontinued. (23 Stat., 835.) President Cleveland, by proclamation of October 13, 1886, revoked this suspension upon the ground that higher and discriminating duties continued to be imposed and levied in the ports named upon certain produce, manufactures, or merchandise imported into them from the United States and from foreign countries in vessels of the United States than were imposed and levied on the like produce, manufactures, or merchandise carried to those ports in Spanish vessels. (24 Stat., 1028.)

By the fourteenth section of the act of June 26, 1884 (ch. 121), removing certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encouraging the American foreign carrying trade, certain tonnage duties were imposed upon vessels entering the United States from any foreign port or place in North America, Central America, the West India Islands, Bahama Islands, Bermuda Islands, Sandwich Islands, or Newfoundland; and the President was authorized to suspend the collection of so much of those duties on vessels entering from certain ports as might be in excess of the tonnage and lighthouse dues, or other equivalent tax or taxes imposed on American vessels by the Government of the foreign country in which such port was situated, and should, upon the passage of the act, "and from time to time thereafter as often as it may become necessary by reason of changes in the laws of the foreign countries above mentioned, indicate by proclamation the ports to which such suspension shall apply, and the rate or rates of tonnage duty, if any, to be collected under such suspension." (23 Stat., 57.) In execution of that act Presidents Arthur and Cleveland issued proclamations suspending the collection of duties on goods arriving from certain designated ports. (23 Stat., 841, 842, 844.)

It would seem to be unnecessary to make further reference to acts of Congress to show that the authority conferred upon the President by the third section of the act of October 1, 1890, is not an entirely new feature in the legislation of Congress, but has the sanction of many precedents in legislation. While some of these precedents are stronger than others in their application to the case before us, they all show that, in the judgment of the legislative branch of the Government, it is often desirable, if not essential, for the protection of the interests of our people against the unfriendly or discriminating regulations established by foreign Governments in the interests of their people to invest the President with large discretion in matters arising out of the execution of statutes relating to trade and commerce with other nations. If the decision in the case of the brig Aurora, as given by so many acts of Congress and embracing almost the entire period of our national existence, should not be overruled, unless upon a conviction that such legislation was clearly incompatible with the supreme law of the land. (Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch., 299, 309; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304, 351; Coolen v. Port Wardens, 12 How., 299, 315; Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S., 53, 57; the Laura, 114 U. The authority given to the President by the act of June 4, 1794, to lay an embargo on all ships and vessels in the ports of the United States "whenever, in his opinion, the public safety shall so require," and under regulations, to be continued or revoked "whenever he shall think proper"; by the act of February 9, 1799, to remit and discontinue, for the time being, the restraints and prohibitions which Congress had prescribed with respect to commercial intercourse with the French Republic, "if he shall deem it expedient and consistent with the interest of the United States," and "to revoke such order whenever, in his opinion, the interest of the United States shall require"; by the act of December 19, 1806, to suspend, for a named time, the operation of the nonimportation act of the same year "if in his judgment the public interest should require it"; by the act of May 1, 1810, to revive a former act as to Great Britain or France, if either country had not, by a named day, so revoked or modified its edicts as not "to violate the neutral commerce of the United States"; by the acts of March 3, 1815, and May 31, 1830, to declare the repeal, as to any foreign nation, of the several acts imposing duties on the tonnage of ships and vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States, when he should be "satisfied" that the discriminating duties of such foreign nations, "so far as they operate to the disadvantage of the United States," had been abolished; by the act of March 6, 1866, to declare the provisions of the act forbidding the importation into this country of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle, to be inoperative "whenever in his judgment" their importation "may be made without danger of the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious disease among the cattle of the United States," must be regarded as unwarranted by the Constitution if the contention of the appellants in respect to the third section of the act of October 1, 1890, be sustained.

That Congress can not delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. The act of October 1, 1890, in the particular case under consideration, is not inconsistent with that principle. It does not, in any real sense, invest the President with the power of legislation. For the purpose of securing reciprocal trade with countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, Congress itself determined that the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, permitting the free introduction of such articles, should be suspended as to any country producing and exporting them that imposed exactions and duties on the agricultural and other products of the United States which the President deemed—that is, which he found to be—reciprocally unequal and unreasonable. Congress itself prescribed, in advance, the duties to be levied, collected, and paid on sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides produced by or exported from such designated country while the suspension lasted. Nothing involving the expediency or the just operation of such legislation was left to the determination of the President. The words "he may deem" in the third section, of course, implied that the President would examine the commercial regulations of other countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides and form a judgment as to whether they were reciprocally equal and reasonable, or the contrary, in their effect upon American products. But when he ascertained the fact that duties and exactions reciprocally unequal and unreasonable were imposed upon the agricultural or other products of the United States by a country producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, it became his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the suspension as to that country which Congress had determined should occur. He had no discretion in the premises except in respect to the duration of the suspension so ordered. But that related only to the enforcement of the policy established by Congress. As the suspension was absolutely required when the President ascertained the existence of a particular fact, it can not be said that in ascertaining that fact and in issuing the proclamation, in obedience to the legislative will, he exercised the function of making laws. Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the lawmaking department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. It was a part of the law itself as it left the hands of Congress that the provisions, full and complete in themselves, permitting the free introduction of sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides from particular countries should be suspended in a given contingency, and that in case of such suspension certain duties should be imposed. (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 681–693.)

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in hearing the Senator from Tennessee discuss the oil situation with respect to British monopolistic tendencies. I may repeat what he has said, that I have great admiration for many of the characteristic traits of the British people. The British Government in the minds of most Americans seems to be something apart, however, from the British people. The situation might be described as being another case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. The British people in their amiable and sympathetic views of American aspirations, their love of freedom and personal liberty appeal to us, whereas when matters of policy become practical questions before the British Government the sentiments of the British people evidently are lost sight of. We are now dealing with the policy of the British Government, to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred.

It is the policy of the British Government to acquire the oil supply of the world. I had the pleasure and satisfaction of showing that to the Senate more than a year ago in presenting the report of Mr. Van Manning, the Director of the Bureau of Mines of the Interior Department, which report I had elicited by submitting to him a questionnaire. It was a very valuable report, and I had much difficulty in getting it from the department to which it was first submitted, although the report was made at my instance; and when I submitted it to the Senate I found a reluctance on the part of the Committee on Printing to print it as a Senate document, and it was not printed in its entirety as a Senate document—for what reason I know not—but I managed under the rules to read it into the RECORD at that time, so that it is in the possession of the Senate. In that report the Director of the Bureau of Mines of the United States showed very clearly by citing facts that the British Government was acquiring oil in all the countries of the world, and at the same time was ignoring the claims of the United States and United States nationals everywhere, denying them participation and access to the soil.

They went so far as to dismiss from their service American citizens. I believe they were taught a lesson by the Germans, who prior to the war were in possession of very valuable natural resources of Great Britain in Australia and her other colonies, and even had great plants in the "tight little island" itself; and they, taking that page from the German book, decided to invade other countries and get their natural resources, in addition to holding strenuously on to their own. I consider it a very good policy for Great Britain if it will work. But it will not work.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PHELAN. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Right there, I omitted to state that while England was utterly unable to pay the interest on the debts that she owed the United States, she had enough money to appropriate this last year $5,000,000 to be turned over to her agent, Lord Cowdray, for the purpose of prospecting for oil in England itself; and they found one little well that, I think, produces about 32 barrels a month, or a year, I have forgotten which. They can throw away their money for the purpose of even prospecting for oil, but they are entirely too poor to pay the interest on their debts to this country; and, by the way, England is buying those oil rights in every nation at the same time. She has spent countless millions of dollars upon acquiring oil property to be used to the disadvantage of American commerce, while declining to pay the interest on the debts that she owes America, and when we are taxing our people to the utmost by reason of those loans.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct, so far as the information which I possess on this subject would lead me to believe, that Great Britain on the one hand wears the Mr. Hyde aspect, putting on the poor mouth of national necessity and excessive taxation and tremendous cost of the war, by reason of which she can not pay her debts, and at the same time she takes that money which the United States supplied her with for the purpose of prosecuting the war—because otherwise her own money would have gone for that purpose—and uses it for the acquisition of oil fields throughout the world, in fear of the commercial and naval rivalry of the United States.

They have taken a feather from the pinion of the American eagle and turned it against that noble bird.

> So the struck eagle, stretch'd upon the plain,
> No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
> View'd his own feather on the fatal dart,
> Which wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in his heart.

It is hardly as bad as that. So far their dart has not been fatal; but England, being a "tight little island," with a large colonial empire, has to assert itself upon the seas. The United States is a great producing country, and in pursuit of its national prosperity must prosecute business upon the seas, because a country's wealth and a country's happiness is derived primarily from the exchange of commodities, which is trade and commerce. Therefore, in pursuance of our policy, we created a great merchant marine, and our ships are now restored to the seas, which has caused great alarm in the commercial circles of Great Britain, which does not interest us, nor should it interest us very much. I believe there is room enough in the world for both Great Britain and the United States, as I believed there was room enough for Germany and Great Britain in their commercial enterprises; but Germany made the fatal mistake of trying to subjugate the world by arms when she was on the way of doing it by trade.

Great Britain, therefore, is taking the oil supply of the world. The Senator has referred to subjects which I did not intend to bring up at this moment; but he says that at the very time we loaned them $4,000,000,000—an inconceivably large amount—they were taking their own money, or our money—it is immaterial; it was all turned into their treasury—for the purpose of acquiring the oils of the world, because, as he well explained, oil is necessary in the operation of ships.

It is an economical use. It gives a wider steaming radius, gives economy in consumption, gives economy in space, and no coal burner can compete with an oil burner in the merchant marine nor in the Navy. The nation that is in possession of the oil is in possession of the trade and in possession of the seas, and that is the thing we have to keep in mind. If there were enough oil for all, we might not resent Great Britain's greed; but there is not enough oil for all, and we are now consuming much more than we produce in this country.

I am not speaking idly when I say that Great Britain has pursued that policy diligently, even at a period of time during the war when she had her back, as she said, against the wall, and she would have been impaled to that wall had it not been for the American Expeditionary Forces. At that time so strong was her trade instinct—almost as strong in her as the instinct of life—that she was acquiring oil then, looking forward to the day when she would have to meet competition upon the seas. Mr. William Denman, who was then head of the American Shipping Board as its first chairman, has given very valuable testimony recently to that effect; and I submit here a letter from Mr. Denman, of which I will read a part, in which he describes the conditions in the spring of 1917, when the Balfour mission came to the United States. The Balfour mission was in the United States for the purpose of wheedling, by those diplomatic graces in which the British are skilled and trained, four billions of dollars from the Treasury of the United States; and at that time, Mr. Denman being a part of the conference at which sat not only Mr. Balfour and Mr. Denman but Secretary Lansing and Mr. Polk, this colloquy occurred:

Mr. Denman, speaking to Mr. Balfour, said substantially:

"I trust you will not misunderstand my frankness about certain conditions prevailing in Congress. Much of your public life has been spent as a parliamentarian, and I may feel assured of your sympathetic appreciation of the difficulties under which I am laboring in attempting to procure drastic war legislation. There is a strong anti-British sentiment in certain groups in the Congress. I believe I can help hold this in check if I have your assurance that there will be a full disclosure of all the agreements between the Allies affecting the interests of the United States and general world shipping conditions. I will not disclose any of these matters to them, but my position will be strengthened if I can assure them that we know all."

Mr. Balfour replied to this that that was the very purpose of the conference, and that all such matters would be fully disclosed to the American conferees.

He never redeemed his promise.

Mr. President, I ask that this entire letter may be printed as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOUR BILLION DOLLARS TO THOSE WHO SECRETLY HELPED DESTROY GUAM.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 1, 1920.

DEAR SIR: In the spring of 1917 the Balfour mission to the United States secured for Great Britain a loan of upward of four billions of dollars. It was a willing transaction between liberal America and liberal Britain. Had the deceptions used in procuring it been known to our Government, the consideration for the loan probably would have had less of good will and more of substantial security for our national interest in the Pacific.

Great Britain is now seeking to renew this loan and substitute distant payment notes for its maturing obligation. This seems a timely opportunity to point out a typical case of that duplicity and lack of candor in Britain's foreign representatives, which have placed a barrier between the liberals of both countries. They have partly destroyed the sympathetic relationship toward the creation of which Mr. Bryce and men of his spirit have so much contributed. They have gravely hampered the similar task of Ambassador Geddes and our quiet but ever-helpful friend Mr. Broderick. The attempt to defeat the Diesel motorship project and the Cunard ship incident, disclosed before the Walsh committee, are similar links in an almost continuous chain.

It is perhaps well that the testimony, which is here offered concerning the negotiation of this loan, comes from one of English antecedents and not sustaining any blood relationship to those now suffering under the atrocities in Ireland.

Mr. Balfour arranged for these moneys in the month of May, 1917. His protestations of deep friendship for the interest of the United States filled our press and warmed his auditors in the Halls of Congress and at the tables, where our hospitality was extended to him. While he was making them the ink was scarcely dry on the last of the three notes constituting the so-called secret Shantung treaties, which, from a naval standpoint, destroyed the island of Guam, probably our most valuable naval base in the Pacific. By their terms Japan, our rival in the Pacific, was, by agreement with Great Britain, confirmed in the possession of the Marienne group of islands, which placed an unsurmountable barrier between us and the North Asiatic coast and the Japanese islands. Great Britain's price for this was the British control of the islands of the South Pacific, which, in the event of the hostilities to which such diplomacy inevitably tends, isolates Guam from the Philippines.

Britain's action is comparable to a treaty between America and Germany, say 30 years ago, whereby, for a price, we agreed secretly to assist her secure the island of Helgoland.

It is obvious that Mr. Balfour owed to us the disclosure of the existence of these agreements. Why he did not requires no further explanation than his quest of the four billions of dollars.

It will help liberal England to understand the growing mistrust of America toward her to know that there was active deception, in addition to suppression of the facts, at the time the loan was negotiated.

At the first session of the conference between the Balfour mission and the American conferees the latter consisted of Secretary Lansing, Mr. Polk, and the writer. On that occasion the following colloquy occurred between Mr. Balfour and the latter. This came after Mr. Lansing had, in a general statement, outlined the scope of our deliberations, when the writer addressed Mr. Balfour substantially as follows:

"I trust you will not misunderstand my frankness about certain conditions prevailing in Congress. Much of your public life has been spent as a parliamentarian, and I may feel assured of your sympathetic appreciation of the difficulties under which I am laboring in attempting to procure drastic war legislation. There is a strong anti-British sentiment in certain groups in the Congress. I believe I can help hold this in check if I have your assurance that there will be a full disclosure of all the agreements between the Allies affecting the interests of the United States and general world-shipping conditions. I will not disclose any of these matters to them, but my position will be strengthened if I can assure them that we know all."

Mr. Balfour replied to this that that was the very purpose of the conference, and that all such matters would be fully disclosed to the American conferees.

He never redeemed his promise, and our faith in him led us to believe we knew all. Instead he continued his protestations of friendship, which, with his great personal charm and rhetorical gifts, created a confidence so warm and so profound that it strains our imagination to believe the underlying deception.

The testimony on this, so far as Americans are concerned, is irrefutable. Our President has told us that it was not until months after that he learned of these secret treaties, which not only destroyed the value of our Pacific naval base but at the same time inserted her bitterest enemy into the heart of China, America's real friend in the Orient. Mr. Lansing made a similar statement to the press many months after Mr. Balfour's departure. My own experience, which related to the ship provisions of the secret treaties, is equally clear on the issue.

Liberal America should permit the renewal of the loan of the four billions, for we should be generous with liberal England in spite of her diplomats' methods. However, it should not be with that naïve trustfulness which makes so painful the disclosure of its simplicity.

Very faithfully, yours,

WILLIAM DENMAN.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PHELAN. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. In this connection I call the Senator's attention to the fact that when Mr. Balfour was here in this Chamber, in speaking with him he said that England's position in the war was extremely perilous, and that the entry of the United States into the war had saved England; and now they are not even paying the interest on the loans we made them!

Mr. PHELAN. So much for duplicity; so much for Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde; and so much for the traditional reputation of Great Britain, "perfidious Albion," that she denies her own faith; that she makes promises which she never redeems; and that she is treating little Ireland to-day with greater rigor and severity than ever Cuba was treated by Spanish conquestadores or Belgium by the hated Hun.

Until that is understood by the American people, England will be allowed to slaughter men, women, and children in Ireland for the purpose of exterminating a race which they can not subjugate; and even then the Irish dead seem to have a way of rising even from the grave, as is evidenced by their long history, in order to meet again their powerful foe. An Irish martyr fights eternally!

I must confess to a little feeling in the matter. I love liberty and justice. I hate to see my country made the victim of British blandishments. These gentlemen come over here, are feted and dined, and they tell the conference, which the Secretary of State himself attended, that they will hold nothing back. At that very time they had in their pockets secret treaties which destroyed the powerful and strategic position the United States possessed in the ownership of Guam in the Pacific. They bartered the Mariana, the Caroline, and the Marshall Islands to Japan by secret treaties, and the United States, surrounded by Japanese territory by the grace of Great Britain, something which had been consummated practically at that time, was, having been left in ignorance of this duplicity, led to contribute $4,000,000,000 to save "Merrie England" from the wrath of the Hun. The English are not a humorous people, but this is the time when they must have laughed.

It was not a brotherly or a neighborly act, but in these transactions of state that side of England which is barbarous and cruel and perfidious developed itself again, and the United States is the victim. Now they ask that the interest on their debt be remitted or that the payment be deferred.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator say that England is asking for a remission of interest, and by that does he mean that she is asking to be excused entirely or relieved from the payment of interest?

Mr. PHELAN. No. I understand that at her instance the United States Government has deferred, for a period of three years, the payment of interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. In view of the legislation under which these loans were made, acts of Congress of 1917 and 1918, does the Senator know of any authority in the executive officers of the United States to defer the payment of interest for three years?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am not aware that there is any authority in the State Department or the Treasury Department, or in any other department of the United States, to defer the payment of interest. Perhaps the Senator is better informed. It seems to me there have been very many loose methods introduced into the departments by reason of the laxities which have sprung from the war conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will just say that the acts under which these loans were made are very specific. They direct that long-time bonds, not for a longer time than American bonds issued at the same time, and at the same rate of interest, be taken for these loans, and that these are to be interest-bearing bonds, in the same way that our bonds are issued and in the same way that our bonds bear interest, and with like periods of payment. There is no rule better settled in law than that a legislative authority must be strictly carried out by the executive officers of the Government. They can not proceed beyond and they can not make agreements that are not authorized by the act.

My reading of those acts leads me to believe that there is not a sign of authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to do anything except to take long-time bonds, with interest-bearing coupons, such as are provided in the act. He has no authority whatsoever in that act, or any other act that I have been acquainted with, to defer payments or to extend the time of payments.

I wrote the Secretary of the Treasury just before Congress convened, asking him to furnish me information as to what had been done about these loans. He wrote me a letter, in which he stated that the information would be in his report, which came out December 8 last. When the report came out there was no such information in it, and I am rather surprised at the Senator's statement that an agreement has been entered into between our Government and England by which the payment of these debts is postponed for a period of three years, because the acts do not provide for any such postponement.

Mr. PHELAN. The payment of interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no such provision made about the interest, and the Secretary of the Treasury can not go beyond the acts under the law.

Mr. PHELAN. It was my information, which I derived only from the newspapers, that there was an understanding by which the payment of interest should be deferred for three years.

The papers are the great source of all our information, exhibiting a certain degree of accuracy, possessing information which should be in the possession of the legislative bodies, but which only seeps to the legislative bodies through the press; so I am not apologetic for quoting the press. They say that there is now on the way here from Great Britain a gentleman, whose name they give, not associated with the British Government, coming for the purpose of negotiating for a settlement of the debt due to us by Great Britain, intimating that there may be some obligations which we owe to British subjects growing out of the war which might be used in part as an offset, and intimating further that the money was given for the purpose of prosecuting the war in which we were all interested, and that it might be pleasing to the gracious Secretary of the Treasury to make the payment of the English debt to us dependent upon the collection by England of debts due her by France; and there are a great many points which might be debated over a dinner table by which American rights might be bartered away in order that a better understanding should remain between "the great English-speaking nations, which have so much in common," a sentiment that has been worn threadbare by abuse.

I should say it would be the duty of the Treasury under the law to require the payment of the debt, making such terms as would be advantageous, if you please, not in the oppressive sense, but advantageous to American interests; and one effect would be to require her to pay her debts, and at the same time abandon her world policy, emulating the Hun, of corraling and monopolizing the natural resources of the world, especially oils. Our diplomatists would see that that was no hardship in requiring a rich country to pay her debts, as it merely means a burden of taxation a little heavier upon her people; and if they were wise they would see that by requiring her to pay her debts they would accomplish in a most gentlemanly and courteous way the great purpose which American statesmen should have in mind, of preventing British aggression and of protecting our interests upon land and sea, of protecting the merchant marine and the Navy, whereby the merchant marine and the Navy may get oil supplies at stations anywhere throughout the world; or American nationals may, under the full protection and without the opposition of this world empire, develop oil to be sold in the markets of the world and not withheld from American ships.

In my own State, one of the great oil-producing States of the country—which makes me more or less familiar with this oil situation—Great Britain has quietly purchased our oil lands after they had been developed—the proven oil lands—and Great Britain, as ought to be well known by this time, is operating under the name of the Royal Dutch Shell Co. The Shell Oil Co. of California, a branch of the Shell Trading & Transportation Co., and the bigger Royal Dutch Shell Syndicate, is one of the British owners, while another is the Alexander Wier Syndicate, of London, which owns a large block of stock in the Union Oil Co., of California, and which at one time actively controlled the General Petroleum Co. of the State.

Now, they are acquiring the stock of the Union Oil Co., and I noticed recently that they have transferred some English properties to that California corporation, which they in turn own, and that grows out of the fact that there is proposed in the California Legislature a bill barring from ownership of the land any alien person or corporation; that Great Britain having taken the oil of Mexico, Syria, Belgium, Palestine, and Mesopotamia, California is attempting to protect herself. Talking about sovereignty, the Federal Government has limited sovereignty except when it abandons the constitutional means and declares a war emergency. But the Federal Government was asked to impose an export tax. It was said that it could not be done, because the Constitution barred it. It was asked to impose an embargo, but it was said by some that was not tolerated by our law in time of peace. What can the Federal Government do to prevent Great Britain from taking the oil of California?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to interrupt the Senator, there is no inhibition in our Federal Constitution against an embargo, and under the uniform practice of this body, beginning with President Washington's administration and coming on down to President Wilson's administration, embargoes have been uniformly placed whenever this Government saw fit; and since the Aurora case, in 7 Cranch, I believe, one of the early reports of the United States Supreme Court, it has been held constitutional. There is no reason in the world why an embargo can not be placed upon the export of our oil whenever Congress desires that it be done.

Mr. PHELAN. I am very glad to have that assurance from the distinguished lawyer from Tennessee. I remember only last year moving that the President be given power to impose an embargo upon the shipment of oil from this country, as an amendment to the leasing bill, and some Senators observed that there was no authority, as I understood, for Congress conferring that power upon the President, except as a war measure; and, on the other hand, it was objected to on the ground that it might provoke retaliation. We are the persons who are being discriminated against in the world, and the party of the other part is the aggressor. They have denied Americans the privileges of exploration and development in other lands, and if we impose an embargo, or put that power in the hands of the President, we are simply retaliating for injuries that have been done us.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I was interested in the statement made by the Senator that his State is contemplating, as I understood him, the passage of a law to prevent aliens from acquiring lands within the State of California. I hope the Senator will not give his support, by any implications to be derived from his statement to-day, to that proposition. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that we are a creditor nation, and it is obvious that we will be compelled to acquire holdings both real and personal in other countries by way of capital investments if we do any considerable trade with other nations. When we were a debtor nation other nations acquired large holdings in the United States and our commerce was extended by foreign investments. Railroads in the Senator's own State were built in part with money which came from across the seas, and many of our industries were developed with capital which was furnished by foreigners. We were benefited by the transactions, and other nations were benefited. I should be glad to see our trade and commerce extended and markets opened for our surplus products. Congress recognizes the vital necessity of finding foreign markets for our products, and is seeking to furnish credits to Europe in order that the surplus agricultural products of the United States may find markets. But if we develop our commerce to the extent essential for the highest prosperity we will be compelled to make some capital investments, whether we will or no, in the nations which buy our commodities. Our citizens will enter other lands and acquire property. They will in the future more than in the past become the owners of real and personal property in foreign countries.

Americans have farms and ranches and sugar plantations and mines and smelters and railroads and electric plants in our neighboring Republic, Mexico. American holdings there amount to more than $500,000,000. We have holdings in Central America and in South America. Thousands of Americans are visiting the Republics to the south of us, and also Canada and its various Provinces. Many are establishing homes in those countries and becoming interested in the industrial life of the people.

In my own State a number of corporations have been formed for the purpose of making investments in Colombia and Panama, and I am sure that a profitable trade will be developed between the United States and Colombia as the result of investments which are being made by Americans in Colombia. I am afraid that if the Senator's State passes legislation of the character referred to and that example should be generally followed by the other States of the Union, we would be met by reprisals from other nations and they would enact legislation forbidding Americans from acquiring property therein. If this resulted, might we not lose more than we would gain by prohibiting all aliens from acquiring property in the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. His resolution provides for reciprocity, I believe.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want to answer so much as I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. By the courtesy of the Senator from California?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator holding these views, I ask if he would not be in favor of a law establishing reciprocal relations between Governments; in other words, permitting other Governments and the nationals of other Governments to acquire oil in this country, provided that the United States and her nationals are permitted by such other Governments to acquire oil in the territories of such other Governments. Is not that a perfectly fair reciprocal agreement, and ought it not to be made in the interest of Americans and American rights?

Mr. KING. If I apprehend the question of the Senator, I would respond affirmatively. I believe in reciprocal trade relations between our Government and other nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what I thought the Senator believed.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall, without having, of course, in mind the subject now under discussion, the last speech delivered by President McKinley. He pleaded for reciprocity and advised his own party indirectly and the American people that the permanence of prosperity in our own country depended upon our trade with other nations. He recognized that the time had come for the modification of the tariff policies advocated by the Republican Party and for larger and freer trade relations between all the nations of the world.

I shall be glad to see reciprocal relations or agreements entered into between the United States and other nations owning oil property, by the terms of which, if they acquire oil possessions here, American citizens shall be permitted to acquire oil possessions there. At any rate, I think I should favor a policy which would preclude the nationals of any country from acquiring oil holdings in the United States if such country denied the right of Americans to secure similar rights in such country.

Of course, we have always to keep in mind the proposition that we have a dual form of government, and the rights of States, as suggested by the Senator from California, are not to be overborne by the Federal Government. There are certain powers which the States possess under our form of government that may not be abridged by the Federal Government. I would not favor the Federal Government taking any step, no matter how advantageous it might be generally, that might result in the abridgment of the rights of the States or the destruction of the prerogatives and powers reserved by the people to themselves or to the States, respectively.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from California will permit me to interject an answer to the Senator from Utah, I will call the Senator's attention to the constitutional situation in the case of Field v. Clark (143 U. S.), in which all the authorities are gone over.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that case.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator is. It is one of the most famous cases in our books. I suggest to the Senator that I have put in the RECORD so much of that opinion as bears upon the particular bill now under consideration by the Senate.

I will say to him also that in obedience to a Senate resolution of last March, in May of last year the President of the United States reported that certain countries excluded America and American nationals from acquiring oil properties, and those countries were virtually coextensive with the British Empire.

Those countries were given by name. There is a report to the Senate, which the Senator can examine, giving the laws by which Americans are excluded. I am sure, in view of the Senator's statement, that when he comes to examine the law in the case of Field against Clark and the report of the President, which I have mentioned, that he will support the bill which has been introduced.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from California pardon me a moment?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator from Tennessee state that England has attempted legislation which would exclude Americans from acquiring holdings, for instance, in Australia, or Canada, or South Africa, or New Zealand?

Mr. McKELLAR. England herself, and in each one of those countries that has been done. It has been done in England and each dominion has taken a like step. She has done it by what are known as orders in council, as the Senator will find.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether those orders in council are operative now and have been continued beyond the time when Great Britain became a party to the peace treaty with Germany?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. The President's report of the 17th of May last, as I recall, gives a detailed statement. I do not have it before me at this moment. I shall secure a copy of it and present it to the Senator, because I am sure he will find it interesting in view of the situation.

Mr. KING. Let me say in conclusion, if I may further trespass upon the time of the Senator from California, that if any nation, whether it shall be a dominion of Great Britain or Great Britain herself, or any other nation, enacts legislation that prevents Americans from acquiring holdings, whether they be oil holdings or any other form of property, within the limits of her territory, I would support any legitimate and proper measure that would place their nationals in a like situation in the United States.

We are entitled to fair treatment at the hands of every government, and if they seek to interdict our trade or seek to prevent Americans from making investments, capital or otherwise, in those lands, I see no reason why we should not apply the lex talionis and protect the rights of American citizens everywhere under the shining sun.

But I wish to add this: I am somewhat surprised at the statement of the Senator. I will not challenge its correctness, but it had not been called to my attention that Great Britain, which owes so much of her prosperity to her foreign trade and investments, should now adopt a policy which inevitably, if she shall long pursue it, will bring reprisals and will strike at the very foundation of her national prosperity and her commercial activity in the world. She will bring down upon her head the wrath of offended nations and her crown of primacy will be stripped from her, if it has not already been done by our Nation, the giant of the New World.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I may interject again, I will say that the same view that the Senator has just expressed was, as late as November 27 last, expressed by one of the leading oil journals of London, in which it was said that the policy which the British Government had undertaken in regard to oil, especially so far as its agreement to exclude Americans and others from Mesopotamia and Palestine, was a mistaken policy, and that the British Government ought to revoke it. It will be seen that even in England all of them do not approve—at least this particular journal, which is an organ of the trade—of the English policy.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator knows that Great Britain has no control over Canada or New Zealand or South Africa or Australia—I mean control for the purpose of determining the landed policy which they shall adopt, and those dominions may enact such legislation as they please, the effect of which might exclude Americans or Germans, or any other nationals, for that matter, from acquiring oil holdings or other property within their boundaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I understand that, but it is a little remarkable, and I think the Senator will admit that the President's report shows—there may be one or two exceptions to the rule—that practically only English dominions have barred Americans and others from obtaining oil lands in their territory.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah asked me a question concerning the law proposed to be enacted by the Legislature of California forbidding the ownership of any part of its soil by foreign nationals or foreign corporations. At first he deprecated the idea, but in the course of the debate, when better informed by the learned Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], saw the necessity of protecting American interests, because it is well known that Great Britain has practically forbidden the nationals of the United States from operating in British territory oil wells, either the exploitation or the development of them, and also, as I understand it, in the mandatory countries, mandates for which she has recently assumed in the Near East.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from California pardon me further?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. In anything which I said subsequently to the expression that I hoped that the Senator's State would not enact the legislation referred to, I did not intend to qualify or modify that general statement. I repeat that at the present time and in the light of present world conditions I would regard it as a mistake if the State of California or any other State should enact a general statute which in terms forbade the nationals of any other country from acquiring or holding property within that particular State or any State. I am not discussing the policy which should be adopted by any State or by the United States if a nation should prohibit Americans from acquiring or owning property within its borders. But as a general proposition, if the State of California or any State should now pass a broad statute forbidding the acquisition of property by an alien in that State, I would regard it as an unwise policy. Of course, I am speaking only of the present and have in mind the picture of the world's affairs at the present time and our relationship to such affairs.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, before answering the Senator I desire to call the attention of the Senate again to the message of the President of May 17, 1920, in response to the Senate's resolution of March 10, 1920, requesting the President, if not incompatible with public interest, to inform the Senate as to the restrictions, if any, imposed either directly or indirectly by France, Great Britain, Holland, Japan, or any other foreign country or dependencies upon the citizens of the United States in the matter of prospecting for petroleum, and so forth.

Referring to the British Empire, the President said:

> In general each dominion and colony has its own legislation on the subject of the petroleum industry.
>
> The policy of the British Empire is reported to be to bring about the exclusion of aliens from the control of the petroleum supplies of the Empire and to endeavor to secure some measure of control over oil properties in foreign countries. This policy appears to be developing along the following lines, which are directly or indirectly restrictive on citizens of the United States:
> 1. By debarring foreigners and foreign nationals from owning or operating oil-producing properties in the British Isles, colonies, and protectorates.
> 2. By direct participation in ownership and control of petroleum companies.
> 3. By arrangements to prevent British oil companies from selling their properties to foreign owned or controlled companies.
> 4. By orders in council that prohibit the transfer of shares in British oil companies to other than British subjects or nationals.
> It is understood that the British Government has a controlling interest in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. and that it has also assisted in the development of the Papuan oil fields by bearing one-half of the expense and contributing experts.
> It may be of some significance that by general license of September 1, 1919, prohibited transactions under the regulations of the defense of the realm act were again permitted except as such transactions might relate to oil-mining property.

They excepted oil-mining property from the liberal exceptions of their war legislation; oil-mining property would not be released; and foreigners should be debarred from interfering in anything that affected the development and the production of petroleum oil. We must bear in mind the importance of petroleum oil in order to understand the significance of the action of the British Government. The President continues:

> According to recent reports prospecting for petroleum is lawful in the United Kingdom only by the board of trade or the minister of munitions or persons authorized by them. Similar regulations apply to working a petroleum property. The only drilling now going on in the United Kingdom for petroleum is being done by S. Pearson & Son (Ltd.), as petroleum development managers to the Government.
> It is said to be unlawful for a British citizen, without the consent of the board of trade, to transfer to an alien or to a foreign-controlled company any interest in a company controlling an oil field in the United Kingdom. (Defense of the realm act of 1915 as amended Oct. 23, 1917, regulation No. 30, BB.)

That simply confirms what I have said, that the British Government is monopolizing the oil of the world and debarring foreigners from participation not only in Great Britain but in her dependencies, protectorates, and mandatories. So the fight is on. Shall we respond in the spirit of retaliation, or shall we submit to the injury without protest? California proposes to retaliate. Because the Federal Government has no power, California comes to the aid of the Federal Government. The Federal Government can not pass a statute by which the nationals of Great Britain can be barred from ownership of American soil. What is the poor United States going to do? The United States must appeal, in the spirit of reciprocity and reprisal, to the States of the Union severally to enact through their legislatures laws barring Great Britain or any other country that adopts such an attitude toward our Nation and our nationals. So California proposes to pass an alien land law, barring all aliens from the ownership of land, whether it be agricultural or mineral.

Last November California passed by popular vote an initiative law barring from the ownership of the soil those aliens who were ineligible to citizenship, which included the Japanese, the Hindus, and the Chinese. So now we have a good law upon the statute books, barring certain aliens from the ownership of our soil. It was intended by that act to protect the agricultural lands of the State from being monopolized by persons who were racially incapable of becoming citizens because they can not assimilate and make a homogeneous people. If I should analyze the question, it would be seen that to permit them to enjoy citizenship would be to plant the seeds of democratic dissolution, and we should have no democracy, for we can have none where we do not have real equality among our people, with the right to intermarry and to grow up as one family. We can not grow up as two families without having a divided house, and "if a house be divided against itself, that house can not stand."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator's statement to be that his State proposes now to enact a law which will prohibit all aliens from acquiring land, either mineral or agricultural, or any real estate holdings, I presume, within the State. Would he go so far as to prevent aliens from holding personal property?

Mr. PHELAN. No.

Mr. KING. The prohibition, then, will apply merely to real estate?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that there are many people from his State who have large holdings in Mexico, and those holdings are not limited to personal property, but consist very largely of real estate. There are a number of people from my State who have real estate as well as personal property in Mexico and also in South American Republics. And at the present time there are billions of dollars worth of property owned by American citizens in other countries, and in order to sell our surplus products Americans have extended to Europe during the past two years nearly four billions of credits. In some cases they have obtained European securities and perhaps in some instances have taken property—situate in Europe—in part payment.

I desire to ask the Senator as one who desires the welfare not only of his own State but of all the States and of all the people within the States whether at the present moment he justifies legislation of the character just referred to; and whether he does not think that such legislation may be seized upon by Obregon or by foreign Governments as the basis of a policy that will prevent Americans from acquiring property within such countries?

The Senator knows that in South America and in Central America to-day there are some people who distrust the United States. They think that we have sinister designs not only upon their Governments but upon their property; that we are now maintaining in the Panama Canal Zone a large number of soldiers not for the purpose of protecting the Panama Canal but as a sort of menace to and threat against Latin America. Does not the Senator think that if his State and other States in the Union should enact legislation of the character referred to it would provoke hostility from our neighbors to the south, whose friendship we so much desire, as well as the hostility of people in Europe and elsewhere; and that they might be led to legislate along the same lines, so that we should be precluded from making capital investments in other lands for the purpose of aiding our trade as well as for other legitimate and proper purposes?

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Utah does not, of course, include Great Britain, for I have just demonstrated to him that Great Britain has already barred Americans.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I was speaking of a general statute; I am not speaking now of a State passing a law by way of retaliation against some other nation that has precluded Americans from acquiring property within its borders. If the legislation to which he refers is leveled against Great Britain alone, and Great Britain has prevented Americans from acquiring real estate within her colonies and dominions and within Great Britain herself, another question is presented, and I might very heartily concur in legislation of that character; but a broad statute, aimed at the whole world, I think, would be a mistake, and we would suffer more, perhaps, than other nations.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator is aware that Great Britain is not the only offending country. I refer him to the President's letter and I also refer him to the report of the Bureau of Mines, where each country in turn is mentioned, and most of them have imposed either prohibitions or restrictions. It seems the policy of all these countries is to hold the oil—this newfound precious mineral—tight in their own possession. For that I am not disposed to blame them, but I want the same privilege for the United States. The Senator admits that there is no power in Congress to protect the United States; so the protection given to this country must be given by the several States themselves to prevent the depletion of our supply.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me, but I do not wish him to misinterpret anything that I have said. I have said nothing to indicate impotency on the part of the Federal Government to protect itself. I merely stated that the Federal Government could not interfere with the prerogatives and rights of the States; there are some things in which the States are supreme; there are some things in which the Federal Government is supreme. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee as to the power of the Government to lay an embargo. I discussed that question to some extent in 1917, when the question of embargo was under consideration here, and called attention to some of the acts that were passed by Congress in the time of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. PHELAN. As to the embargo, I again remind the Senator that I proposed such a provision as an amendment to the leasing bill, but received no support in the Senate. I considered at that time that it was the only Federal remedy possible. Granted that the power reposes in the United States to impose an embargo, then such action should be taken at once by Congress, because, as I stated at that time, by giving the President power to impose an embargo the foreigner would be deterred from acquiring American oil lands, for if he could not export the oil he would not seek the land. However, that remedy was denied, and since then large tracts have been acquired.

Mr. President, a very curious thing happened in Washington the other day. During the conversations between the Japanese ambassador and the State Department, I learn from the newspapers again, it was suggested as a measure of pacification to the Japanese that California, having by plebiscite denied them the ownership of land, it was now proposed by the legislature to enlarge that prohibition to include all other nations, and therefore the Japanese might go back to their people and say there is no discrimination against them; that the law is universal in its application. The Japanese took time to consider it, and after a day or two came back—having been visibly pleased, I am told, by the proposal—to say that they could not consider it at all; and I am again informed by the mysterious and underground sources of information, as well as by the public press, that there was some sort of a conference between British interests and Japanese interests, and that Japan was told not to accept that as a compromise because it would bear too hard upon her distinguished ally, Great Britain, which was trying to hold onto her oil lands in California and even to acquire more.

We are diplomatically unwise. We are foolish in our generosity. What has happened within the last two months in California? The Shell Oil Co., the British company, has sold to Japanese tankers, three of them—I think there is one in the harbor now—which have come all the way from Japan to take our oil, our California oil, of which there is an insufficient supply for our needs, and carry it over, I am told, to their great storage plants in Formosa. Two tankers took away, I am told, 86,000 barrels of oil, and I have since been advised that they paid for that oil to the British company operating in California and taking that fluid out of our soil $1.80 a barrel, whereas American industries in California, if they are permitted to buy it at all, have to pay $2.40 a barrel, and on top of that it is being rationed. They say who shall and who shall not have the privilege of buying it.

They are making little pretense of serving local interests, and it seems to me almost beyond belief that a foreign corporation could in any Government, even as loosely organized as our own and as generous as our own, be permitted to take out of the soil the essential fluid which can never be returned and give it to a possible enemy, who is storing it away against the day when it shall need that oil for the propulsion of its war craft.

Why, if we had that system, which is thought admirable in England, of issuing orders in council, the first act of a wise administration would be simply to interdict the exportation of any more oil from this country without a license or a permit, knowing its destination and ultimate use. But there we are. California, this fair land that produces everything in such abundance, is bleeding to death and losing its vital fluid; and where is it going? To support rivals in trade. Whether they be English-speaking or Japanese-speaking, they are rivals in trade; and certainly by no law are we obliged to facilitate the business of our rivals in trade or to build up an enemy which might ultimately destroy us.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it is true that the British Government and other Governments are trying to exclude American citizens from developing oil lands in their possessions. Is this Government taking any steps to protect American citizens or to procure by treaty rights for American citizens the same privilege to develop oil lands in foreign countries which foreigners have in this country?

Mr. PHELAN. I am not well advised as to that; but I read in the press again that the State Department had protested to England against the barring of Americans from participation in the development of the oil fields in the mandatory countries, in the Near East, Mesopotamia, Palestine, Syria, and also in Persia. That is the only step that I know that has been taken, and that is a matter of public knowledge.

Mr. KELLOGG. We have the power to retaliate and prevent them from doing so.

Mr. PHELAN. We have the power.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course. I will say to the Senator that that is the purpose of my bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Did I understand the Senator from Tennessee to say that he had written the State Department for information on that subject?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but I saw the protest of Mr. Polk, the Undersecretary of State, last March or April——

Mr. PHELAN. That is the one to which I refer.

Mr. McKELLAR. And then a letter of protest of Secretary Colby, four or five weeks ago. These protests seem to have been futile. As I understand the situation, an American oil company before the war—before we entered the war, at all events—secured permits from Turkey to prospect for oil in Mesopotamia, and probably built a railroad to carry the oil-digging machinery and supplies; but the war came on and stopped that, and when the American company proposed to continue under the Turkish permit England stepped in and said: "No; we are a mandatory for Mesopotamia, and you can not go in now," and the matter has been held up for some months.

That is the situation practically with all the English colonies, protectorates, mandatories, and even spheres of influence; and I will say to the Senator that the purpose of my bill is to require all countries that obtain oil rights here, or that obtain our oil in this country, to give American citizens exactly the same right to obtain and own and mine oil in their countries, and I think it is a perfectly fair proposition. It is in a measure retaliatory, of course, but it ought to become the law, and I hope it will become the law, and I hope the Senator will vote for it.

Mr. PHELAN. If there is no such resolution on the table, I shall introduce to-morrow a resolution asking the State Department what it has done in the matter of protecting the rights of Americans abroad in respect to the exploitation and development of oil; but whereas, as the Senator from Minnesota says, the remedy may be in the negotiation of treaties, still there is no such protection given American citizens, as I understand, in these matters, and we must, therefore, fall back upon statute law.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not say that that is the only remedy.

Mr. PHELAN. It is one of the remedies.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is one of the remedies, and the trouble might be that if the Federal Government should enter into a treaty which was contrary to the law of the State the treaty would be superior.

Therefore the Federal Government ought to try to protect American citizens by treaty rights.

Mr. PHELAN. That is another constitutional question; and I shall not enter into a discussion of the power of the Federal Government by treaty to override the act of a State acting within its legitimate jurisdiction on a subject which is not international in character. I do not know but that the ownership of land, the control of the land, the succession to the land, as we have always claimed in the discussion of the League of Nations, is a domestic question, and it is an impertinence for a foreigner either to demand admission to the country, which is our country, or to own its lands; and therefore these subjects are not international. It is an invasion by a foreigner into our domestic affairs, and, not being international, it might not be competent for the President and two-thirds of the Senate to set aside a statute of a State. That is a nice question.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator's argument. I quite agree with the Senator that we ought not to admit foreigners to become citizens of this country who will not amalgamate and make a homogeneous people. I think it is a vital question to the national life of this country. But the status as a legal proposition of a foreign citizen in any State, and his rights in those States as to ownership of property, is a Federal question which may be regulated by treaty; and when the treaty is made, if such a one should be made, it is superior to the laws and the constitutions of the States. The Supreme Court has settled that question. So I think it is important that such foreigners should be excluded by treaty, and that the Government at least ought to exercise all vigilance possible by treaty to protect the rights of American citizens in foreign countries.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think one statement of the Senator from Minnesota may be construed a little too broadly, and I ask for information. The Senator indicated, as I understood, that there ought to be a treaty for the purpose of determining the rights of aliens in the United States, and I agree with him; but I understood him to indicate that unless that were done it might lead to very serious complications. I did not quite understand the point of the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I did not say that. I said simply that if the Federal Government did by treaty provide what rights foreigners should have in this country, it was the supreme law of the land. That is all I said.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have been turned from a discussion of oil to immigration—a subject which I should like to discuss by itself, because I am intensely interested in the solution of the immigration question. The Senator from Minnesota states, however, that by treaty a State may be deprived of the power which in the absence of a treaty it would be entitled to enjoy, or that as against a State law the treaty would prevail. Doubtless in many instances that is so; but there is one consideration to which I will refer, and then I shall discontinue that part of the discussion.

The theory of that power—the power of the President, by and with the consent of two-thirds of the Senate, to make treaties—must have been based, in the minds of the Constitution makers, upon the fact that the States composing the Federal Union, being represented in the Senate, would be able to look after their own interests, and that there would be some comity between the representatives of the several States by which injury would be prevented which would apply to one State by reason of its peculiar resources and which would not apply to another State; and that is our condition in California. We come to the States of the Union, represented in the Senate, to protect us either by treaty or by statute against any danger which may affect the substantial interests of the people of the State, such statutes or such treaties not affecting at all the other States, because in the one instance they may not have among their resources oil, or in the other instance they may not be exposed to oriental immigration. So we are quite willing to come to the Senate for our protection; but the Senator from Utah says, as though it were a new matter, that we would excite the animosity of the world if we passed any laws barring as a general proposition foreigners from ownership of the soil. I call his attention to the Federal statutes which apply to the District of Columbia and the Territories. Here is a statute which apparently has been forgotten, by which no alien can own land in the District of Columbia:

CHAPTER VII.—ALIENS.

SEC. 396. Real estate: It shall be unlawful for any person not a citizen of the United States or who has not lawfully declared his intention to become such citizen, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States or of some State or Territory of the United States, to hereafter acquire and own real estate, or any interest therein, in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance: Provided, That the prohibition of this section shall not apply to cases in which the right to hold and dispose of lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties to the citizens or subjects of foreign countries, which rights, so far as they exist by force of any such treaties, shall continue to exist so long as such treaties are in force, and no longer, and shall not apply to the ownership of foreign legations or the ownership of residences by representatives of foreign governments or attachés thereof.

SEC. 397. Corporations: No corporation or association of which over 50 per cent of the stock is or may be owned by any person or persons, corporation or corporations, association or associations not citizens of the United States shall hereafter acquire or own any real estate hereafter acquired in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 398. Forfeiture: All property acquired or held or owned in violation of the provisions of this chapter shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the United States attorney for the district to enforce every such forfeiture by bill in equity or other proper process. And in every such suit or proceeding that may be commenced to enforce the provisions of this chapter it shall be the duty of the court to determine the very right of the matter, without regard to matters of form, joinder of parties, multifariousness, or other matters not affecting the substantial rights either of the United States or of the other parties concerned.

The United States, you will observe, has set the pace.

I understand that there is an act on this subject applying to and including the Territories of the United States, and I know that the State of Oklahoma, and the State of Arizona, and the State of Illinois, and the State of Washington have statutes barring foreigners from ownership of the soil, and that there are restrictions in other States, such as Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota.

So it is a matter of Federal policy, as well as in many States State policy, to bar foreigners from the ownership of the soil. It is established law. What injury can it possibly do? The injury might be in retaliation. But we find the world has already taken an aggressive stand against us. So our act will be retaliation.

We depend upon Mexico for oil. Is there the least danger of Mexico in good faith retaliating? No; because Mexico, having an abundance of oil of her own, is not seeking California oil. She does not bar anybody from the development of oil, so far as I know, but there have recently been imposed some restrictions, which have been rather burdensome to the oil operators, more in the nature of excess taxes, I should say, or legislation affecting the absolute ownership of the soil. But it is not done, certainly, in the spirit of retaliation, because Mexico is not barred through her nationals from coming into most of the States of the United States, and if barred, by a prohibitory statute, it would not affect Mexicans, because it is well known that they do not develop foreign countries; they do not develop their own country. Living in a poor country, without any capital, they are not going out into strange lands to explore for oil.

So, as a practical proposition, I do not see how the proposed law in California, if it is enacted, would operate except as retaliation against the countries which have already barred Americans.

But the advantages and benefits must be weighed by legislators. California has a great field of oil. We produce probably 280,000 barrels a day. That in itself is not large, but there is a great deal of oil land there which has not been developed and which should be tightly held, economically operated, and not wastefully used, because, after all, there is a limit. I am told that we have not exhausted more than 1 per cent of the estimated coal resources of the United States, but as to oil the experts say we have already used perhaps 60 per cent of the entire stored oil of the United States. So it is only a matter comparatively of a short time until we shall have exhausted our oil, and how, in the face of that, can the State legislature, conserving the interests of California and of the country, permit foreigners to come in there under any circumstances and take out this fluid and send it away to foreign lands for their use and benefit?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the experts say that it will all be exhausted in this country, at the present rate of production, in 15 years.

Mr. PHELAN. At the present rate of consumption.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of production, too. Of course, the production and the consumption are practically the same.

Mr. PHELAN. We can regulate both.

Mr. McKELLAR. At all events, at the present rate of production, or the present rate of consumption, it will be all gone in about that time.

Mr. PHELAN. If I were a member of the Legislature of the State of California, the question raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] would have to be very carefully considered. But reading the President's message and reading the report of the Bureau of Mines, and finding that as an actual fact Americans are barred now from operating oil wells and owning property in foreign lands, it would appeal to me as very good statesmanship to pass a blanket law barring nationals of these other countries from owning and controlling our California oil wells. As a matter of fact, it affects only Great Britain; but it would be better, I think, to make it general in its terms than to single out Great Britain as the one country because Great Britain is the one enterprising country that is going around the world looking for oil, with a view of perpetuating her primacy upon the sea.

So really this general law would affect in California only Great Britain. So it is a question of international courtesy, whether we should name the culprit, or whether we should make the law so general that it would include the culprit; and I am in favor of causing the least offense while accomplishing the greatest good. If it is true that the Federal Government has barred foreigners from owning real estate in the District of Columbia and, I believe, in the Territories, and that the States of Arizona, Illinois, Oklahoma, and Washington have such laws, the fact that California proposes to pass such a law, with such an excellent precedent, should not cause any surprise. But California has the precious fluid—that is the point—and a law there would be of some service. Furthermore, when we were liberal in giving these rights to foreigners, where we might have barred them from owning and developing the soil, it was at a time when we needed the foreign money, and the foreigner wanted a field for investment. Now, the scepter has passed from London to New York, and nobody is asking London for money, unless it be the Secretary of the Treasury, and he can not get it.

Everybody who has an enterprise goes to New York, the great money center. Therefore there is no reason—and when the reason ceases the law ceases—why we should have practically a law on the statute books of California giving Great Britain the very valuable privilege of taking our property away from us, property which we can ill afford either to sell or to give away, vital for our interests and our industries, by land and by sea.

Therefore I am of the opinion that the California statute should be enacted, and I will say that the California delegation day before yesterday in conference expressed as its opinion the desirability of enacting that statute. It will serve a double purpose there; first of giving a face to Japan. She can tell her people at home, who are clamoring in the market places for equality, that this law of California, passed by a wicked people, barring the Japanese from ownership of the soil, has now been broadened to embrace all people, and therefore Japan has been treated in terms of equality, because her disabilities are the common disadvantages of all.

The second reason is that Great Britain is under our very nose taking our oil and, which adds insult to injury, is actually shipping it in Japanese tankers to Japan. Must we tie our hands while this is going on? If the Federal Government had the power to help us, I would appeal to the Federal Government. I would be very glad, following the suggestions made here to-day, to submit a resolution to give the President power to impose an embargo, and I think that any President would, in these circumstances, impose an embargo. But in the absence of an embargo, there is no other remedy than that remedy which is possessed by the State of California, and which California proposes to use.

This is a period of international good will. We have been our brother's keeper, and the brother, having regained his freedom, is exercising it to the limit, and in the exercise of his freedom he has not exercised a very nice discrimination in serving friend as against foe. He trades with Germany, his hated enemy, in order to get in ahead of the American agents. We have been slow in concluding formally a state of peace, which should exist between this country and the nations of the world.

But our brother has not been neglectful of taking advantage of our absence from the council board. Because we did not sit in the council of the League of Nations, after having created it by our sword, the fruit of the prowess and the courage of our men, at a critical moment, they have denied us equal privileges in Mesopotamia and other mandatory countries, and they have, pursuant to the covenant of the League of Nations giving discretion, allocated to Japan and to Great Britain the mandates for the Marshall, Mariana, and Caroline Islands north of the Equator and German Samoa south of the Equator, from which they have turned our ships by preferential treatment of their own. There has been imposed a discriminatory duty of 7½ per cent by New Zealand against our merchantmen on the value of their cargoes, and in favor of British merchantmen, in German Samoa, when, during the 16 years of the occupation by the hated Hun, Americans enjoyed equal privileges with all other nations, as they did in the Marshall and the Caroline and Mariana groups.

The good President said, in his conference with the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, that there was an island over there—he did not recall the name of the island—that he would certainly get as a favor to an old servant. He would get for the United States the island of Jap—or, rather, Yap; there is a horrible significance in the similarity of "Jap" and "Yap." The island of Yap, it was testified by officials of the Government at the time, was vital for our communication between continental United States and our island possessions and Asia, a most important strategic point, a little island through which we could send our radios and lay our cables; but that, too, has gone the way of all flesh. Greed knows no friendship. The President has been undeceived. The Senate by resolution has asked in vain what has become of Yap.

Now, we have not been treated by these nations, bound in fraternal bonds, with any degree of consideration whatever, and, of course, it is reopening an old question, but the Senate of the United States is blamed for it. If the Senate had so provided, we would have had a representative on the council of the League of Nations, and we would have imposed conditions in the awarding of mandates, or we would have prevented an awarding of mandates as we saw fit, as it required unanimous action by the council, and we would have had our share of the rich oil fields of the countries in the Near East, which were disposed of by the council under the terms of the treaty. So, if it is any gratification to this side of the Chamber to know, the fault lies with the other side of the Chamber in refusing to give us representation in good season.

Now there is a change of administration, and I gather very clearly that there is going to be an international understanding by which we will participate in the settlement of Old World affairs, in the interest of justice, democracy, and humanity, and it will be a modification of the League of Nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. After the division of the spoils has been made.

Mr. PHELAN. I was going to add, we will come on there lagging, lagging superfluous upon the stage after the show is over and the doors are closed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, for the information of Senators if they should care to look into it, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on July 14, 1919, volume 58, Part 3, at page 2526, an address which I made when I was president of the American Bar Association, reviewing all the authorities upon the question of the supremacy of the treaty-making power. I did not attempt to discuss the question as to whether Japan had any treaty rights as to her citizens or not, but assuming such treaty rights, I discussed the question of the supremacy of any treaty to the laws of the States and the constitutions of the States respecting a foreign citizen's status in this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in a brief colloquy between Senators during the discussion of important questions one runs the risk of being misunderstood in respect to matters under discussion. I am not sure that I made my position plain when I interrupted the Senator from California and propounded a few questions and submitted a few observations. With much of what the Senator says I am in accord.

I did not intend to convey the idea in anything stated by me that I denied the power of the States to prohibit by legislation aliens from acquiring lands or other property within their borders. I do not question the right or the power of States, subject to the treaty-making power of the Federal Government, and perhaps other limitations, to enact legislation denying aliens the right to own real or personal property within their respective borders.

The Senator has directed attention to a law of Congress relating to the District of Columbia. I am familiar with that law and recall that a number of years ago, when I was in the House, I participated in framing a statute which imposed limitations upon the right of aliens to hold real estate within the District of Columbia. Nor am I unmindful of the acts of Congress which prohibit aliens from locating mineral lands of the United States; and I know that it has been the policy in the Territories to deny to aliens the same rights to own real estate as those enjoyed by citizens of the United States. I also am familiar with the fact that a few States have enacted similar legislation.

I repeat, it is not the question of the power of the States that I am discussing, nor am I challenging their inherent right to deal with their domestic questions, including the terms under which aliens may hold and enjoy property within the boundaries of the States. What I am questioning at the present moment is the wisdom of the policy of California, or any State, to pass laws which deny aliens the right to acquire and enjoy property, real or personal, or both, within their borders.

We can not be oblivious to the fact that the world is in an unsettled and unstable condition. Jealousies, suspicions, and profound distrust exist throughout the world. The failure of the United States to enter the League of Nations has unquestionably led some of the peoples of the world to question the sincerity of our Nation in its protestations of disinterested friendship for the oppressed peoples throughout the earth. Undoubtedly there are some nations jealous of the power and wealth and prestige of our country, and our every act, particularly if it is impressed with an international character, or affects directly or indirectly international matters, receives the most careful scrutiny in the chancellories of many nations and by many peoples throughout the world.

We insist that our Nation has given unmistakable evidence of its friendly interest in the welfare of humanity, and that it is now desirous of promoting the peace and happiness of the people of every land. The people of our Nation have rejoiced when freedom and prosperity have come to any part of the world. We have been glad when democracy supplanted autocracy, and when artificial barriers, erected at the demands of empirical statesmen or selfish groups to isolate nations and separate peoples, and interrupt legitimate trade and commerce, have been removed. We had believed that the peace of the world would be prompted by friendly commercial relations between the nations of the world. We have encouraged aliens to come to our shores and have welcomed them into the citizenship of our land. We have been glad, at a time when we were a debtor Nation, to have our creditors beyond the seas aid us in settling trade balances by acquiring property within the United States.

We not only offered no objections but earnestly sought for foreign investments in industrial enterprises and in various forms of property in our country. Billions of dollars of European capital found its way to the United States. At the time we entered the World War citizens of Germany owned property in the United States to the extent of approximately $1,000,000,000. The subjects of Great Britain had large investments in the United States, and the investments of citizens of Holland and France and Belgium and other nations of the world reached immense proportions. While there is a feeling upon the part of many in our country that we have sufficient resources here to absorb the interest of Americans, and that there is no occasion for them to seek homes or investments under other flags or in other lands, the fact still remains that thousands of our citizens have gone to other lands and by their thrift and industry have acquired homes and property of great value. I stated a few moments ago that Americans had invested in Mexico to the extent of more than $500,000,000. Indeed, the amount is very greatly in excess of the figures just stated. Thousands of Americans have gone into Mexico not to exploit Mexico but to aid in its development. They have contributed, by their efforts and their energies, to the wealth of Mexico, and have been benefactors of the Mexican people.

The American people realize that their prosperity is dependent upon the prosperity of the people of other nations. Efforts are being made to increase our foreign trade, and corporations are being organized for export trade. These corporations will operate in many foreign countries. American citizens will go to these countries, and thousands of them will acquire temporary, if not permanent, residences in foreign lands. The world is small, and nations and peoples are being brought into apposition, and the provincialisms, the cruel rivalries, and the crude and narrow and bigoted policies which obtained in past ages are yielding to a higher civilization and to nobler conceptions as to the relations which should exist between the children of men. International law is being rewritten, and higher standards of international justice are governing the world. This Republic now and in the future must be an example to the world. Our policies must be those of an enlightened and progressive nation. While America and her interests and the rights of American citizens must be protected and regarded as paramount, nevertheless this Republic must pursue a course in its dealings with other nations such as to command the respect and admiration and confidence and affection of all fair-minded and liberty-loving people throughout the world.

The world has not recovered from the Great War. The nerves of the people everywhere are on edge. People are jealous and suspicious of each other and nations view with distrust and alarm nearly every step taken by one another. The great work of the hour is the restoration of peace and confidence in the world. Any policy, even though it is justifiable and under most circumstances would be proper, but which may promote unfriendly criticism or dissension or suspicion, should, if possible, be avoided at this time. Efforts are made by misguided persons here and in other lands to provoke animosities and jealousies and bitter rivalries between nations. Harsh criticisms are indulged in against Japan and Great Britain, as well as other countries, and citizens and high officials in those countries undoubtedly indulge in denunciation of the United States as well as other countries. This is a time for toleration and friendliness and broad charity. I doubt the wisdom of a policy which announces at this time to the nationals of other countries that they can not acquire property within California and other States of the United States. I am afraid the psychology of it would be bad. The object of such legislation will be misinterpreted and a broader meaning will be attributed to it, and the belief will perhaps arise that such legislation was prompted by sinister and selfish and narrow nationalistic policies.

A little later, if there is manifest danger to our institutions or if there is any injury resulting from aliens acquiring and owning property in the United States, undoubtedly the States would take proper action, and their course would meet with universal approval in our country. My fear is, as I have suggested, that legislation of the character in question, if it should be at all general in the United States, would arouse antipathies and fears and antagonisms which might be lasting among peoples whose friendship we desire and for whose welfare we have a very deep concern.

It is human nature to act upon the evidences immediately before us and to deal with questions with which we come in contact, forgetting, or at least not fully appreciating that the contacts and apprehensions of the day disappear in the sunlight and the broader vision of the morrow. Our own interest should prompt a course that will be promotive of world friendship and such as will increase our foreign trade. There were many Americans whose distempered judgment led them to denounce the League of Nations and all forms of cooperation with our Allies and with the nations of the world. There was a demand upon the part of millions of Americans for national isolation. They did not see that our prosperity and welfare were inseparably bound up in the prosperity and welfare of the nations of Europe as well as those of the rest of the world.

But now the eyes of the people are being opened, and from all parts of our land demands are made that the avenues for international trade and commerce shall be created. Upon the other side of the Chamber, and among those who opposed the League of Nations, there has arisen a demand for legislation that will aid our export trade. They have insisted that the War Finance Corporation be revived, and that we extend credits to Europe to the extent of billions of dollars, in order that the people of Europe may purchase our surplus products. Europe is unable to pay for our products because of a lack of gold and because her production is so limited that she does not possess commodities in sufficient quantities for export in payment for the commodities which she desires to purchase. I am told that Americans have, since the armistice, acquired holdings in European nations, and that even in Germany the capital stock in corporations was acquired to such an extent as to arouse a fear upon the part of Germany that America would acquire control of many German factories as well as a great amount of German property.

As I suggested, there are many Americans who deprecate capital investments in foreign lands, but so long as we have commercial relations with other peoples, and as long as we are a vigorous and adventuresome people, we will engage in business in other lands and will acquire property therein.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suppose if there be one man on the floor who is pretty nearly a free trader and who believes thoroughly in untrammeled commercial relations between all the peoples of all the countries of the world, that person is I. I think with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that we ought to cultivate world trade, foreign trade, as an extension of our own trade, to take care of our surplus products which are the result of our surplus labor.

But the reason which the Senator has just given for his opposition to this immediate legislation seems to me to be thoroughly irrelevant to that thought. In the first place, denying to aliens the right to own your own soil or to own anything upon your own soil, is not an interference with international commerce or with international trade, or with any commerce, call it by what name you choose.

Then the Senator tells us that if we deny to aliens the right to own property and to be capitalists, owning corporations in America, we thereby incite them to legislation which will deny us the same right within their several boundaries. As for myself, I should welcome that. I would be glad to see it. I do not approve of American capital seeking employment in Germany at this time, or anywhere else with a foundation upon the soil of other countries. While I am glad to see absolute, untrammeled trade between Jan Schmid, of Germany, and John Smith, of England or of America, I am not glad to see American capital seeking other shores for the purpose of giving employment to foreign labor upon foreign soil, whereas we have a great country of our own needing capitalistic exploitation to the highest degree and needing the exploitation of American labor to the utmost ability of American capital to employ American labor.

Nor do I see that legislation passed by any country against another to prevent the ownership of lands within the boundaries of the country passing the legislation is in contravention of any right of any people from any other country may have. From the very beginning of time that has been with the States of this Union a principle, more or less deserted of late years. Very early in our history Virginia denied the right of aliens to own land, and that was followed up in very many of the States, though after a while there came an absurd worship of immigrants and immigration and an absurd kow-towing of politicians to the immigrant vote, and as a consequence of that most of those laws were repealed with the idea of flattering the resident voters of foreign countries, so as to get their votes for political purposes by extending privileges and favors to the foreigners of their nationality that were not justified upon any ground of our own ultimate good.

I believe it would be very well if American capital would stay at home, and very well if American capital would devote itself to the employment of American labor for the purpose of building up the American commonwealth and of making American labor and American capital close and fast friends. I believe that any man who puts his money in Germany when he could put it in America is just that far lacking in a certain spirit of patriotism and devotion to his own people. I believe that a man who does it because he can make a half per cent or 1 per cent more money is absolutely lacking in patriotism. He ought to be willing to suffer a loss of a half per cent or 1 per cent rather than build up those who have but recently been the enemies of our country, if he has to do it at our expense by diverting capital whose use we need.

Not that I would desire that the enemies of our country in the late war should be held in shackles by any means. I think we have gone, if anything, too far in that direction. We ought not to go any further certainly. We ought to remember that the natural state of man is peace and not war, and, looking toward his natural state, that our duty now is to cultivate friendship and not to keep alive enmity. But at the same time, when you talk about the right of controlling your own soil and buildings upon your own soil, or about your own schools, and those other things which are peculiarly of your own soil, that is a different matter. I may love you very much, I may have the very highest regard for your character, and the highest hope for your welfare, yet at the same time I may be absolutely opposed to making you a member of my family or to allowing you to set up a mill in my back yard or to run any other works of your own over which I do not possess full control, but which you put upon my land. I do not see the analogy between the two thoughts, both of which to a large extent I represent—certainly to the very largest possible extent in America, consonant with having a revenue for the Government—the idea of untrammeled free commerce between all the peoples of the earth. I place it in my own mind upon an equality almost with freedom of thought, freedom of expression, freedom of religion, and all the other forms of freedom which are generally attacked in days of emergency, or whose temporary weakening is always afterwards regretted.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, January 7, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 6, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, for the blessed promise that good shall at last overcome evil and Thy will be done. History and observation confirm the truth—

Oh, sometimes gleams upon our sight,
Through present wrong, the eternal right,
And step by step, since time began,
We see the steady gain of man.

That all of good the past has had Remains to make our own time glad,
Our common daily life divine,
And every land a Palestine.

Let this hope comfort us and in a common faith move forward to the glorious consummation through the promises and incomparable life of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. WOOD of Indiana presented the bill (H. R. 15543) making appropriations for the legislative, executive and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report thereon, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order.

CONFERENCE REPORT—OMNIBUS PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rule conference reports on the bills (H. R. 7775, 9281, 10515, and 11554) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The conference reports are, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9281) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 22, 28, 30, 34, 35, 40, 50, 55, 57, 61, 66, 79, 83, 85, 92, 98, 99, 102, 106, 112, 113, 127, 130, 142, and 148.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 31, 32, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 84, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 95, 96, 97, 100, 101, 103, 104, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 129, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Jason Adkins, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

STATEMENT.

The House recedes from amendments Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 31, 32, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 84, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 95, 96, 97, 100, 101, 103, 104, 105, 107, 108, 109, 110, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 129, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, and 161.

These are cases in which it is believed that either the provision of the act of May 1, 1920 (commonly known as the Fuller bill), and the act of June 5, 1920 (commonly known as the Sells bill), will give relief, or where they were simply corrections made by the Senate committee, except amendment No. 116, which the House conferees agreed to, the beneficiary having been pensioned by special act less than a year ago.

The items stricken from the bill in the above amendments are as follows:

H. R. 601, David S. Williams; H. R. 628, Joseph McClure; H. R. 656, Jesse A. R. Forbes; H. R. 668, Patrick H. Madigan; H. R. 672, Frank Shaw; H. R. 779, Otto M. Payton; H. R. 951, John McGinley; H. R. 8150, Daniel P. Myers; H. R. 8295, Noel M. Pursley; H. R. 8307, William Edwards; H. R. 8321, John F. Mulhall; H. R. 8332, Lester D. Parkton; H. R. 8368, William C. Shaffer; H. R. 8563, Michael W. Hurley; H. R. 8602, Benjamin F. Lamkin; H. R. 8644, Fritz Hintermeier; H. R. 8713, Donald E. Leslie; H. R. 8788, Peter W. Weber; H. R. 8814, Jefferson C. Smith; H. R. 8830, Walter L. Jewell; H. R. 8982, Edward J. Oeding; H. R. 8983, Robert S. Peterson.

The Senate recedes from its amendments striking out the following cases:

No. 4, John F. Campbell (H. R. 641): The beneficiary was allowed $17 per month by special act in 1910. The increase to $24 appears justifiable.

No. 22, Orville G. Willett (H. R. 1763): This man has leprosy. He was exposed to it in the Philippines. He is in quarantine now on account of the disease. The doubts are resolved in his favor and the pension of $50 per month recommended by the House is approved.

No. 28, Irving Wohl (H. R. 1963): The increase in this case from $8 to $12 per month appears justifiable in view of the fact that disease of lungs has been accepted by the Bureau of Pensions as due to service.

No. 30, Sarah E. Kiplinger (H. R. 2765): The claimant's husband served during the time of the early Indian wars and she is 80 years of age. A pension of $12 per month appears to be justifiable.

No. 34, Charles T. Durand (H. R. 2990): This man had the required service during certain Indian campaigns, and if he had reached the age of 62 years he would get $20 per month at the Pension Bureau. It is believed the committee is justified in waiving the few years in the age requirements.

No. 35, Charles P. Michener (H. R. 3008): The evidence fairly well shows that part of claimant's disabilities are due to his service. A pension of $12 per month appears to be justifiable.

No. 40, Pleasant D. Cooper (H. R. 3599): The beneficiary is over 70 years of age and was treated in service for malaria and still has malarial symptoms. The proposed pension of $12 per month appears to be warranted.

No. 50, Schuyler C. Pool (H. R. 5058): The beneficiary has to use a wheel chair in going from place to place, and in order to walk has to use two canes. The increase of pension to $36 per month appears to be justifiable.

No. 55, Robert S. Parker (H. R. 5197): The Fuller bill enacted May 1, 1920, will probably allow this soldier a rate of $50 per month, but there may be a question, and as he was wounded during the War with Spain, besides serving in the Civil War, the rate of $50 per month recommended by the House is approved.

No. 57, Harry Noel (H. R. 5366): The beneficiary was treated in service for headache and facial neuralgia. This was followed since service by disease of eyes. The small pension of $12 per month appears to be justifiable.

No. 61, James W. Mitchell (H. R. 5595): The soldier had almost seven years' service in Signal Corps, United States Army, before serving in the War with Spain. His disabilities, when considered with the record of treatment in service, appear to be largely due to his Army service, and the rate of $24 per month proposed is approved.

No. 66, Thomas D. O'Shea (H. R. 5976): The beneficiary might receive relief at the Pension Office under the act of June 5, 1920, but there is some doubt, so the case is approved.

No. 79, Charles M. Fink (H. R. 6480): The soldier served nearly three years and was then discharged on account of neurasthenia or nervousness, which, it was stated, existed prior to enlistment. It is believed the Government should be held to account in part for enlisting the man, as his condition appears to have been aggravated, so the pension of $12 per month is approved.

No. 83, Edward Hinman (H. R. 6713): The beneficiary is 79 years of age. He is pensioned as an Indian war soldier at $20 per month. The proposed increase to $30 per month is justifiable.

No. 85, William A. Waggoner (H. R. 6733): The beneficiary might be able to obtain relief at the Bureau of Pensions under act of June 5, 1920. There is some doubt, however, and the bill as passed by the House is approved.

No. 92, John T. Griggs (H. R. 6884): The son of the beneficiary died in the service of his country. The father has four small, motherless children to rear. It is believed that the small pension of $12 per month is proper, notwithstanding the income from the beneficiary's labor.

No. 98, Jane C. A. Porter (H. R. 7060): It is believed to be proper to waive the required 60 days' service for the allowance of this Mexican War widow's pension at the rate of $25 per month, in view of the fact that soldier only lacked 1 day of having the necessary 60 days.

No. 99, James I. Sloan (H. R. 7061): It appears that this soldier should never have been enlisted, but as he was accepted for service the small pension of $12 per month appears justifiable.

No. 102, Kate B. Horan (H. R. 7129): The beneficiary is afflicted with asthma, disease of heart, vericose veins of both legs, and is unable to work. She is pensioned as the widow of an Indian war soldier. An increase of pension to $20 per month seems to be warranted.

No. 106, Lillie P. Hinman (H. R. 7284): In this case the beneficiary is pensioned at the rate of $12 per month as a contract nurse in the War with Spain. She is in poor financial condition and afflicted with malaria, contracted in Cuba. The increase to $20 per month appears to be justified.

No. 112, Anna O'Brien (H. R. 7389): If the husband of beneficiary were living, he would now have a pensionable status under the act of June 5, 1920. His widow would appear to be entitled to similar treatment, so the pension in this case of $12 per month is approved.

No. 113, William E. Gault (H. R. 7420): This man will probably receive $30 per month at the Bureau of Pensions under act of June 5, 1920, but of this there is some doubt, so the increase of pension to $24 per month, as recommended by the House, is approved.

No. 127, Tebitha E. Cummings (H. R. 7579): The soldier's service as cavalryman probably had to do with subduing hostile Indians. He was pensioned in his lifetime for deafness, contracted in service. A pension of $12 per month to the widow is warranted.

No. 130, John H. Henry (H. R. 7668): The soldier had only 77 days' service during the War with Spain. He was discharged for disability. His present condition may be in part due to his service, so the rate of $12 per month proposed appears justifiable.

No. 142, William O'Bryan (H. R. 8046): The beneficiary is pensioned under the general law for malarial poisoning. He is unable to earn a living for his family, which consists of a wife and six children. An increase of pension to $24 per month appears to be warranted.

No. 148, Elizabeth A. Shull (H. R. 8309): The late husband of the beneficiary served in the early Indian wars. She is nearly 70 years of age and badly afflicted with rheumatism and other infirmities and has no property. An increase of pension to $20 per month, as proposed, appears to be warranted.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7775) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 8, 12, 16, 18, 19, 26, 28, 29, 30, 42, 43, 48, 67, and 73.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, and 74, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Sophie Reimuller, widow of George Reimuller, late of Company C, Forty-seventh Regiment New York Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said George Reimuller until he reaches the age of 16 years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Jean N. Roach, widow of Ernest S. Roach, late first lieutenant of Company A, First Regiment Oklahoma Infantry, National Guard, border defense, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Ernest S. Roach until they reach the age of 16 years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The House recedes from amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, and 74.

These are cases in which it is believed that either the provisions of the act of June 5, 1920 (commonly known as the Sells bill), will give relief or where they were simply corrections made by the Senate committee, except amendment No. 47, where the amount was increased by the Senate from $17 to $24, and amendment No. 50, which the House conferees agreed to, the case being considered of very doubtful merit.

The items stricken from the bill in the above amendments are as follows:

H. R. 611, James L. Buckler; H. R. 675, Charles W. Van Scoyk; H. R. 920, Carson Rummel; H. R. 921, John Bohntinsky; H. R. 1306, Charles Voos; H. R. 1732, Ernest Meyer; H. R. 1842, Marion P. Barnett; H. R. 1844, Joseph Roddy; H. R. 1847, John C. Graves; H. R. 1849, Schuyler Van Tassell; H. R. 1980, John J. Burke; H. R. 1998, John C. Koepplinger; H. R. 1999, Albert Beehler; H. R. 2447, William McBride; H. R. 2457, Wynn M. Mays; H. R. 2459, George W. Chandler; H. R. 2465, Walter Scott McQuaide; H. R. 2743, Barton E. Connor; H. R. 2751, Peter Beebe; H. R. 2826, Floyd J. Gaines; H. R. 2830, Joseph A. Beckmeyer; H. R. 2833, George F. Swob; H. R. 3071, Andrew J. Pohlman; H. R. 3208, Robert G. Phinney; H. R. 3266, Ulysus G. Hunt; H. R. 3268, Filen Whalin; H. R. 3582, Clem S. Kirkham; H. R. 3600, Howard M. Blakenship; H. R. 3606, James J. Shortell; H. R. 4015, John E. Schilling; H. R. 4021, Miller Kincaid; H. R. 4535, Fred J. Jahrries; H. R. 4536, George E. Lovin; H. R. 4544, Daniel B. Reddecks; H. R. 4734, William Mendenhall; H. R. 4960, Louis N. Hickey; H. R. 5075, Gilbert E. Donnells; H. R. 5106, Willard Kolp; H. R. 5396, Nathaniel Singletary; H. R. 5371, John Alford; H. R. 5776, William J. Linn; H. R. 6382, Cosam Julian Bartlett; H. R. 6482, Clemson Underwood; H. R. 6488, James E. Householder; H. R. 6734, George W. Willets; and H. R. 7515, Starling N. Caron.

The Senate recedes from its amendments, striking out the following cases:

No. 1. Hannah J. Clark (H. R. 574). The evidence filed shows that claimant is over 72 years of age, owns no property, is physically unable to work, and has no income but her pension, and it is believed the increase of pension to $20 per month is warranted.

No. 8. Rebecca Strouther (H. R. 949). This claimant is pensioned as a dependent mother of a soldier who served as a volunteer in the War with Spain at the rate of $12 per month. The evidence shows she is about 78 years of age, almost helpless physically, and has no income but her pension and what neighbors give her. An increase of pension to $20 per month appears to be warranted.

No. 12. Maria Kuehn (H. R. 1839). Pensioner is receiving $12 per month as the widow of an Indian war soldier. Evidence shows that she is over 75 years of age, very feeble, and has no income but her pension. An increase of pension to $20 per month appears to be justifiable.

No. 16. William E. Sloane (H. R. 1848). The son of claimant served during the entire period of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer uprising. While his death from disease of lungs was not accepted as due to service by the Bureau of Pensions, the evidence may be accepted by the committee as showing such to be a fact. The claimant is shown to be deaf and dumb and nearly 70 years of age. The facts presented appear to warrant a pension of $20 per month.

No. 18. Samuel W. Van Riper (H. R. 1858). The soldier served during certain Indian campaigns, but not in the zone of hostilities. He claims to have been wounded while in a skirmish with Indians. He is 84 years of age, and a pension of $12 per month appears to be justifiable.

No. 19. Reinhard Anschuets, alias Charles Reinhard (H. R. 1908). Soldier is pensioned as an Indian war soldier at the rate of $20 per month. Evidence submitted shows that he requires the personal aid and attendance of another person. An increase of pension to $30 per month appears to be justified.

No. 26. Martha Tyler (H. R. 2460). Claimant's first husband served in the early Indian wars, but as she remarried she has no title to pension in the Bureau of Pensions. She is 80 years of age, owns no property, and has no income. A pension of $20 per month does not appear to be excessive in this case.

No. 28. Narcissa A. Grant (H. R. 2474). This claimant is a remarried widow of a Mexican War soldier, whose last husband is dead. She is over 80 years of age and owns no property. Many precedents warrant the allowance of $20 per month.

No. 29. Lizzie Eaton Webster (H. R. 2475). As soldiers who served during the War with Spain are pensioned for disabilities not due to service by the act of June 5, 1920, it appears justifiable to now pension their widows, so a pension of $12 per month in this case is deemed justifiable.

No. 30. Thomas S. Garen (H. R. 2476). It is believed that a part of claimant's disabilities were contracted in service on the evidence submitted and a pension of $12 per month appears to be warranted.

No. 42. Caroline M. Anthony (H. R. 3270). Claimant contracted malaria in the service as a contract nurse. She is highly commended by Surg. Gen. Gorgas for services she performed. She is in a pitiable condition physically and financially. An increase of pension to $30 per month appears justifiable.

No. 43. William H. Brane (H. R. 3503). The evidence in the case is sufficiently strong to show that at least part of claimant's disabilities are due to his Army service, and the pension recommended by the House appears to be warranted.

No. 48. William B. Hendrick (H. R. 3841). This claimant now has status for pension under act of June 5, 1920, but there are reasons for believing that he might not be pensioned on technical grounds, hence aproval of the bill is acceded to.

No. 67. Mary Kirk (H. R. 6408). This is a case of a remarried widow of a Mexican War soldier. Her last husband is dead. She is 86 years of age, owns no property, and has no income. There are many precedents for the allowance of $20 per month, as recommended in this case.

No. 73. George S. Jenkins (H. R. 6986). Soldier is about 70 years of age and by reason of general infirmities is wholly unable to perform labor and has no income but his pension of $20 per month as an Indian war soldier. The increase to $30 per month seems justifiable.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10515) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 6, 12, 21, 22, 34, 53, 64, 66, 91, 94, 104, and 107.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, and 111, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Islay T. Pittman, widow of George L. Pittman, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment, North Carolina National Guard Infantry, border defense, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said George L. Pittman, until they reach the age of 16 years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Mary Furfey, widow of Edward A, Furfey, late Battery I, Seventh Regiment United States Artillery, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Edward A, Furfey, until they reach the age of 16 years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The House recedes from amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, 80. 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, and 111.

These are cases in which it is believed that either the provisions of the act of May 1, 1920 (commonly known as the Fuller bill), and the act of June 5, 1920 (commonly known as the Sells bill), will give relief or where they were simply corrections made by the Senate committee, except amendment No. 32, where the beneficiary had only recently been pensioned under the act of March 4, 1917; No. 44, where soldier has no title at the Bureau of Pensions under existing law; No. 59, where the dependent mother's claim was rejected at the bureau; No. 72, where claimant is deceased; No. 90. where claimant possesses property valued at $6,500; No. 95, where the beneficiary is receiving $12 per month by special act and is not shown to be more than one-half disabled; and No. 106, where the beneficiary has no title at the Bureau of Pensions.

The items stricken from the bill in the above amendments are as follows:

H. R. 770, James W. Hendrickson; H. R. 790, Charles E. Kingsley; H. R. 798, William H. Brooks; H. R. 801, Michael W. Murphy; H. R. 1333, William H. Miller; H. R. 1922, Philip Owen; H. R. 1933, Walter C. Tharp; H. R. 2736, Joseph E. Bivans; H. R. 2739, Eliza L. Ellis; H. R. 2836, William B. Stroope; H. R. 3506, Fred F. Bennett; H. R. 4055, John E. Root; H. R. 4935, Peter L. Johnson; H. R. 5786, John D. Andrews; H. R. 5856, William F. W. Gordon; H. R. 5892, Nellie L. Benton; H. R. 6394, George J. Cox; H. R. 6534, Joseph F. Smith; H. R. 6608, Alfred M. Graham; H. R. 6785, Mary J. Beard; H. R. 6817, David J. Hanger; H. R. 7048, Bert B. Hughes; H. R. 7080, Stephen Harder; H. R. 7178, Robert E. McCormick; H. R. 7179, Isabel Bertrand; H. R. 7274, Walter Sewell; H. R. 7276, William Olday; H. R. 7325, Nathaniel J. Smith; H. R. 7438, Everett A. Dibble; H. R. 7516, Samuel A. Berry; H. R. 7552, Robert Wilks; H. R. 7731, Martin K. Wright; H. R. 7761, John C. McDowell; H. R. 7818, Benjamin W. Clark; H. R. 7862, Harry W. Miller; H. R. 7956, Elmer S. Baker; H. R. 8129, Sarah E. Walker; H. R. 8270, Anton Casper; H. R. 8347, Lee Toms; H. R. 8411, Albert F. Knight; H. R. 8412, Thomas H. Coxe; H. R. 8517, Albert Yoder; H. R. 8569, Jacob Hicks; H. R. 8633, Roscoe Schutt; H. R. 8685, John J. Robinson; H. R. 8849, Pearl C. Holt; H. R. 9058, John M. Sexton; H. R. 9084, Margaret A. Storie; H. R. 9088, Charles H. V. Wiggin; H. R. 9104, Edmund W. Roderick; H. R. 9184, Sarah Adaline Youngblood; H. R. 9188, Mary Kinne; H. R. 9191, George T. Keith; H. R. 9260, James Duffy; H. R. 9329, Lafe Strickland; H. R. 9332, William E. McGee; H. R. 9334, Fred A. Safford; H. R. 9344, George V. M. Sommerhauser; H. R. 9429, John A. Shaw; H. R. 9455, Zadok K. Basden; H. R. 9460, Theodore L. Shaffer; H. R. 9482, Anna Kendrick; H. R. 9507, Charles I. Meck; H. R. 9518, Theresa Cloyd; H. R. 9576, Murray R. Marshall; H. R. 9588, Stanford Holmes; H. R. 9597, Harry L. Vance; H. R. 9685, Andrew H. Wegman; H. R. 10016, Abe Erlich; H. R. 10244, Sarah R. Fuller; and H. R. 10361, Emily E. McKee.

The Senate recedes from its amendments striking out the following cases:

No. 5. Peter Black, H. R. 999. This soldier had service during the War with Mexico not accepted by the Bureau of Pensions as having any connection with that war, but Congress recognized the validity of his claim and granted him a pension at the rate of $20 per month. He is now 91 years of age, and the proposed increase to $40 per month appears equitable.

No. 6. Dora F. Wilson, H. R. 1267. The soldier was discharged from the service on account of disability. He appears to have had some Indian war service not pensionable under existing law. It appears proper to grant his widow $12 per month.

No. 12. Peter F. Van Auken, H. R. 2446. The soldier was discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability after serving 59 days. The evidence indicates that at least part of his disability is due to his Army service, so a pension of $12 per month appears proper.

No. 21. Gus H. Weber, H. R. 5239. The beneficiary is pensioned for hernia, contracted in service, at the rate of $10 per month. His hernia becomes strangulated at times, so the increase of pension to $24 per month appears to be justified.

No. 22. Helen Cecilia Schaarman, H. R. 5319. The claimant's son had service in the Philippines, and his death may have been due to his service. The claimant is 83 years of age and dependent, so a pension at the rate of $20 per month appears proper.

No. 34. James C. Claxton, H. R. 6983. The beneficiary might secure relief under act of June 5, 1920, but in this there is some doubt, so the bill granting a pension at the rate of $17 per month is approved.

No. 53. Charles L. C. Sherwin, H. R. 7866. The beneficiary had no Indian war service pensionable under existing law, but he did serve on the Texas frontier, having the same duties as volunteers who are pensioned under existing law, so to pension him as an Indian war soldier at the rate of $20 per month appears justifiable.

No. 64. Mary Jane Graham, H. R. 8552. The beneficiary is the remarried widow of a soldier who served in the War with Mexico. Her last husband is dead. She is 90 years of age. A pension of $25 per month appears proper.

No. 66. Leroy Dunn, H. R. 8571. The soldier had seven months' service in the Regular Army. He was mustered into the service in time of peace, when the Government makes careful examination of those who enlist. His discharge on account of disease of lungs became necessary. The weight of the evidence is to the effect that he was sound at enlistment, so the pension of $17 per month is approved.

No. 91. Emma A. Esarey, H. R. 9496. The beneficiary in this case is 74 years of age. The evidence fairly well shows that her son's death was due to his Army service, so the pension of $12 per month is apparently justified.

No. 94. Teddy Sexton, H. R. 9547. The beneficiary's condition is in part due to his service, and his pitiable condition appears to justify the allowance of $30 per month.

No. 104. Mary A. Baldridge, H. R. 9739. This claimant is the former widow of a Mexican War soldier and is 86 years old. Her last husband is dead. In conformity with the law relative to widows of Civil War soldiers, the passage of the bill is believed to be proper.

No. 107. Martha Ann Welch, H. R. 9961. Claimant is former widow of a Mexican War soldier. She was remarried and her pension terminated. She secured a divorce from her last husband by reason of desertion, and is now 85 years of age. A restoration of pension appears to be justifiable.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11554) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 8, 9, 12, 14, 16, 39, 66, 67, 71, 76, 80, 85, 87, 91, 96, 97, 101, 111, 140, 151, 152, 156, 172, 192, 194, 196, and 197.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 78, 79, 81, 83, 84, 86, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 95, 98, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 153, 154, 155, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 193, 195, and 198, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Emma R. Foster, widow of Benjamin Foster, late of Company I, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of Charles H. Heimlich, alias Charles H. Henderson, late of Company E, Third Regiment United States Infantry, Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert:

"The name of May A. Sanders, widow of William J. Sanders, late of Company F, Thirty-fourth Regiment Michigan Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said William J. Sanders until they reach the age of 16 years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The House recedes from amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 13, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 78, 79, 81, 83, 84, 86, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 95, 98, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 153, 154, 155, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 193, 195, and 198.

These are cases in which it is believed that either the provisions of the act of June 5, 1920 (commonly known as the Sells bill), will give relief or where they were simply corrections made by the Senate committee, except amendment No. 52, where the amount was reduced by the Senate from $17 to $12; amendment No. 88, where the Senate reduced the amount from $17 to $12; amendment No. 90, where the Senate reduced the amount from $30 to $20; amendment No. 104, where the Senate reduced the amount from $17 to $12; and amendment No. 190, where the Senate reduced the amount from $25 to $20.

The items stricken from the bill in the above amendments are as follows:

R. 11242, George A. Cooper; H. R. 11287, Charles A. Rogers; H. R. 11415, Mary Stewart.

The other amendments in which the House receded from its disagreements are the two cases of Emma R. Foster (H. R. 9544) and Charles H. Heimlich, alias Charles H. Henderson (H. R. 9852), which were stricken out by the Senate, but after due consideration by the conferees were allowed to remain in the bill at a different rate as provided for when the bill passed the House. In the case of May A. Sanders (H. R. 10295) the same was restored to the bill by the conferees as it passed the House, but with change of provision providing for the payment of $2 per month additional to the minor children.

The Senate recedes from its amendments striking out the following cases:

No. 8. George W. Doney (H. R. 693), believing from the testimony shown that the rate allowed is warranted under the circumstances as set forth in the report.

No. 9. Julius A. Fuhrman (H. R. 763). It is believed that, giving the claimant the benefit of the doubt, a pension of $12 a month is warranted by the evidence shown in the report.

No. 12. David Dixon (H. R. 1808). Further evidence submitted to your conferees to the effect that this man is now almost totally helpless, requiring the aid and attendance of another person, warrants the increase.

No. 14. Jonas Bolen, alias James Bolen (H. R. 2759). This man served in the zone of Indian hostilities and took part in numerous engagements with Indians at different times, and while he may possibly not have served the 30 days required by law, yet his service for five years was connected with the Indian disturbances.

No. 16. Edward Gaines (H. R. 2764). This man was in the Regular Army and served in numerous Indian engagements. In conformity to practice in other cases, it is believed a pension of $20 a month is warranted.

No. 39. Charles H. Ricker (H. R. 5367). It is believed in this case that while the soldier might possibly secure relief by filing claim at the bureau, there might be some question, and his deplorable condition warrants the rate allowed.

No. 66. Charles A. Bills (H. R. 7853). The aged and helpless condition of this man and the fact that he served in the zone of Indian warfare, it is believed, warrants the granting of increase allowed in this case.

No. 67. Jacob Lyons (H. R. 7896). Additional evidence filed since the bill passed the Senate shows the man to be in an almost helpless condition at the present time, and it is believed that the Senate should recede and allow the $20 provided.

No. 71. John Kerns (H. R. 8135). Since the bill passed the House evidence has been filed showing the man to be almost blind, and in view of his age and helpless condition it is believed he should have the pension of $20 provided.

No. 76. Jerry Fitzpatrick (H. R. 9071). This man is now entirely helpless, requiring aid and attendance of another person, and it is believed that the increase to $30 is warranted.

No. 80. Walker Anderson (H. R. 9427). This man was discharged for disability incurred in the service in Indian wars, and if he had reached the age of 62 he could get $20 per month at the Pension Bureau. It is believed the committee is justified in waiving the few years in the age requirement.

No. 85. Nancy G. West (H. R. 9599). On account of the extreme age and present almost helpless condition of this nurse it is believed the amount of $12 should be allowed.

No. 87. Clara J. Sitton (H. R. 9658). In this case the service of the soldier was recognized by Congress and he was granted the pension allowed other Mexican War veterans, and it is believed similar recognition should be given his widow.

No. 91. Johanna Murphy (H. R. 9681). Giving the beneficiary the benefit of the doubt, it is believed that the pension of $12 per month, which she could have received had she been able to prove the death of her husband due to service, is warranted.

No. 96. James D. Smith, alias James Smith (H. R. 9829). The greater part of the soldier's service was in the zone of hostilities with Indians, and your committee believe they are justified in recommending he be given the rate allowed others who served in similar capacity.

No. 97. Thomas E. Sutton, alias Birt Sutton (H. R. 9842). This soldier is now helpless, and it is believed that the increase provided is warranted.

No. 101. Minnie Nordyke (H. R. 9892). The conferees are advised that the beneficiary is now in an almost helpless condition, and while Congress only recently gave her a pension of $12 per month the increase to $20 is recommended.

No. 111. Edith Payne Trimm (H. R. 10015). On account of helpless child in this case and the fact that part of her income comes from a church bounty fund, the committee recommend the allowance of $12, the amount provided for in the bill.

No. 140. Margaret Huling (H. R. 10392). After due consideration it is believed that the strict rule as to actual service should not be enforced, and therefore it is recommended that the usual widow's pension be allowed in this case.

No. 151. Louise Shoat (H. R. 10569). In this case there is an invalid daughter to be taken care of, and it is believed that the rate of $20 is warranted.

No. 152. Rhoda M. Gates (H. R. 10577). In this case she forfeited her pension by remarriage, which was shortly afterwards terminated on her own motion, and your committee recommend that she be granted the pension she would have received had it not been for her unfortunate marriage of short duration.

No. 156. Christopher L. Einkopf (H. R. 10633). The soldier served almost wholly in the Indian country and he was engaged in several Indian battles. On account of his extreme age it is believed that the $20 allowed is warranted.

No. 172. Horace B. Case (H. R. 10910). The man is now totally blind, and it is believed the increase is warranted.

No. 192. Susana Raines (H. R. 11285). Since the passage of the bill evidence has been filed showing that claimant is almost helpless from rheumatism and also the soldier was her main support. It is believed that the $12 recommended is warranted.

No. 194. Lewis W. Taft (H. R. 11288). Soldier is now totally helpless and bedridden, and the increase is believed justified.

No. 196. Guy Robison (H. R. 11374). It is believed that report will show that part of his disability at least was due to service and it is believed the amount of $17 per month is justified.

No. 197. Lucy E. Blue (H. R. 11402). The beneficiary is aged and destitute and, giving her the benefit of the doubt as to death of son being due to service, the $12 provided for in the bill is believed to be warranted.

SAM R. SELLS,
EDGAR R. KIESS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether any of these conference reports has any legislation in it?

Mr. SELLS. None whatever.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the address of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] delivered at the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, December 21 last. The Senator from Massachusetts is the chairman of the United States Tercentenary Commission and it is for that reason that I make the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has there been any printing of this address on the other side of the Capitol?

Mr. WALSH. There has not been, and I do not think it will be arranged for over there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELIZABETH R. MORSE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 618.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Elizabeth R. Morse, widow of Bryan H. Morse, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount not exceeding $250 to defray the expenses of the funeral of said Bryan H. Morse.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution passed on behalf of the widow of a deceased employee. Mr. Morse had been in the employ of the House since 1885 and died on December 5 last.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REV. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 631.

Resolved, That immediately following his resignation as Chaplain of the House of Representatives, Henry N. Couden be, and he is hereby, appointed Chaplain emeritus of the House of Representatives, with salary at the rate of $1,500 per annum, payable monthly, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman present that as a privileged resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is privileged.

Mr. IRELAND. It involves a payment out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. GARNER. It makes a permanent charge.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not going to oppose the resolution, but the matter of privilege is——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is clearly privileged. It is like all resolutions for the appointment of House employees to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Does it just provide for the remainder of this Congress or does it reach over?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, the effect of it would reach over, if Congress makes an appropriation, which I apprehend it will.

UMI

Mr. IRELAND. In all probability it will be taken up by the Committee on Appropriations henceforth.

Mr. GARRETT. I wish the gentleman would ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is clearly privileged, although I have no objection to that course being taken.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, as I understood the reading of the resolution, it provides for the creation of a new office, that of chaplain emeritus of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is like all of the resolutions for the special employees of the House. They are provided for under resolutions of this sort.

Mr. IRELAND. Admitting that to be true, would it not still be privileged? It is our opinion that it is.

Mr. GARRETT. I have not looked into that with any great care to determine whether it is privileged or not. I do not want any precedent set here. There is no objection to unanimous consent, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. IRELAND. I am willing to ask unanimous consent, if the gentleman prefers.

Mr. GARRETT. I wish the gentleman would. It really would make the act appear more gracious anyway.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I rise for the purpose of saying that it is not so very often that we are called upon to send many documents of one particular kind out of Washington to constituents in our own districts. We are called upon to respond to very few cases respecting one kind, while we do send a number of various kinds, but with respect to our Chaplain I want to say that I have had more calls from my district, from preachers and other people, for copies of his prayers——

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, which prohibits that, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask a question with respect to the reprinting of these prayers.

The SPEAKER. After the consent is given the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] will have the floor. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. IRELAND rose.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Illinois begins, if he has the data I wish he would put it into the RECORD to show just what Dr. Couden is receiving from the Government, or will receive if this resolution should pass, in addition to what it will carry.

Mr. IRELAND. I shall ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and prepare that data.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Dr. Couden receives a pension of $100 a month.

Mr. GARNER. And this will give him $225 a month?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. One hundred and twenty-five dollars a month additional, the same as he is receiving now.

Mr. GARNER. That record ought to show just how much he is getting from the Government.

Mr. IRELAND. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman whether or not any steps have been taken to have additional copies printed of the prayers which have been delivered by the Chaplain in the House? In other words, my supply is exhausted. I have demands for them frequently. Does not the gentleman think the matter is of sufficient merit and worth while to have additional copies printed?

Mr. IRELAND. Quite so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would come through the Committee on Printing. I suggest to my friend to introduce a resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. There has already been a resolution introduced by my friend here, and pending for months and no action taken on it. That is the reason I was inquiring.

Mr. IRELAND. I do not want to impose upon the time of the Committee on Appropriations; therefore I refuse to yield further. [Cries of "Vote!"] I may state that the much-abused important Committee on Accounts, to whom is directed much overconsiderate attention and penny-wise and pound-foolish criticism, finds itself in unanimous happy accord in presenting this resolution to the House. Dr. Couden has served the House of Representatives for something over 25 years, and I am now told desires retirement. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committeee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 31, line 19. An amendment was adopted with regard to employees' compensation fund.

The CHAIRMAN. When the House rose there was an amendment pending. Does the gentleman desire to return before that is disposed of?

Mr. GOOD. No; I had overlooked that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 117, line 23, after the word "cases," insert "including $200,000 for assistant attorneys to enforce the national prohibition act."

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate upon this amendment is exhausted. The question had been put, the point of no quorum was raised, and the committee rose.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the members of the committee who were not present when this amendment was under discussion last night that the only argument made in my hearing for the adoption of the amendment was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who stated that he was well aware that every drug store in his State held prescriptions on file from doctors who were not present in person when these prescriptions were handed out; that the casual customer could go and buy what he wanted if he secured one of these prescriptions. Such conditions do not prevail in Massachusetts, may I add——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; I did not go that far in my statement.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Furthermore, the chairman of the committee, in my judgment, has gone back on his bill in accepting this amendment. I simply wanted that to go in the RECORD; that is the real reason I have asked for this short two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GALLIVAN) there were— ayes 51, noes 11.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members are present, a quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 31, line 19. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask for what purpose?

Mr. GOOD. I ask to reconsider the motion to strike out certain language. At the time there seemed to be no objection, but since that time the department has called my attention to the fact that when the bill providing for compensation to injured

Government employees was being considered by the Judiciary Committee point was made of the fact that the money would have to remain available or otherwise it would cost a great deal more to administer the law.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not going to add any more appropriation or any more legislation?

Mr. GOOD. No; but I understand it would save a great deal in the administration of the law to make the appropriation in accordance with law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to page 31, line 19?

Mr. GARD. What is the amendment the gentleman desires?

Mr. GOOD. I ask to reconsider an amendment which was offered on page 31, line 19, which reads as follows:

To remain available until expended.

Those words were stricken out. The law provides that the appropriations made for making payment of compensation to Federal employees who are injured shall remain available until expended. Not only appropriations carried in the original act but all other appropriations. They state that the making of appropriations for the fiscal year will add very greatly to their work and make the administration of the law very difficult in keeping track of persons injured, and that matter, as I understand, at the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, was fully gone into when the law was passed, and for that reason I ask that the language be restored.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I offered the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN of Illinois (continuing). And I suggest, instead of asking to reconsider, the gentleman ask to reinsert the language that was stricken out by the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I so modify my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to reinsert certain language in line 19, page 31, previously stricken out by way of amendment, which language the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 19, reinsert the language stricken out, as follows: "to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the reinsertion of that language? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of clerks of United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, expenses of travel and subsistence, and other expenses of conducting their respective offices, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved February 26, 1919, $1,050,000: Provided, That provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix the salaries of the clerks of the United States district courts and to provide for their office expenses, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1919, shall be applicable on and after July 1, 1921, to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, excepting that said clerk shall be appointed as heretofore by said court in general term, and to the clerks of the district courts of the United States for Hawaii and Porto Rico: Provided further, That no clerk or deputy clerk or assistant in the office of the clerk of a United States district court shall receive any compensation or emoluments through any office or position to which he may be appointed by the court, other than that received as such clerk, deputy clerk, or assistant, whether from the United States or from private litigants.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph in order to inquire whether the change in the provision in reference to the appointment of the clerk to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, carried in the current law, by the chief justice to appointment by the general term is a change desired by the court?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; Chief Justice McCoy called attention to the fact that by the provisions of the current law the clerk was to be appointed by the chief justice, when the law provided that he should be appointed by the court, and he felt that it might look that he had asked for a change in the law. He did not desire to appoint in violation of the law, and this is to conform with the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Further reserving the point of order, the first proviso, beginning on line 9 and following, I was unable to understand, and therefore beg the indulgence of the gentleman who is chairman of the committee to ask just what difference this makes in the appointment of clerks in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. GOOD. In the District of Columbia?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The last sundry civil bill provided that the clerk in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia should be appointed by the chief justice of that court, while the general law provides that the clerk should be appointed by the court. Justice McCoy called attention to the fact that he did not as chief justice ask for that change in the law, and suggested that in this bill we provide for the appointment so as to conform with the provisions of the law, which we have done.

Mr. GARD. That is, appointment by the court?

Mr. GOOD. By the court instead of by the chief justice.

Mr. GARD. In general term?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. It will include the entire court as having a voice in the selection.

Mr. GARD. I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of jurors, $1,150,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 119, line 4, after the word "jurors," strike out the figures "$1,150,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$575,000: Provided, That hereafter until otherwise provided by law all petit juries for the trial of cases in the district courts of the United States, in both civil and criminal matters, shall be composed of 6 instead of 12 persons, as now provided by law, and the jury panels and the number of peremptory challenges which each party is entitled to in any criminal or civil case is hereby reduced by one-half the number now provided, except that in all cases in which the United States is a party the United States shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment reducing the amount appropriated for fees of jurors, by inserting a smaller amount, and couples with it a proviso changing permanent law with reference to the number of jurors who shall hereafter constitute a petit jury, and also providing that the panel shall be reduced one-half, and other changes.

The Chair assumes that the gentleman from Texas contends that under the so-called Holman rule the amendment is in order.

The Chair finds that a somewhat similar question arose on January 16, 1912, when the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], ruled as follows:

The Chair is of opinion that the Committee on Appropriations may not, under the rule, bring in as an integral part of an appropriation bill substantive legislation that, if introduced in the ordinary way in the House—that is, by bill or joint resolution presented by a Member—would go to another standing committee of the House for consideration and action; nor does the Chair think that any Member of the House may offer from his place on the floor any amendment carrying such substantive legislation, even though that legislation would retrench expenditures, unless that Member offer it as the report of a committee or as a member of a joint commission which would have jurisdiction of the subject matter under the rules of the House.

This amendment clearly reduces expenditures in this bill, but it provides for a very important change in the substantive law, which does not appear to be germane to the paragraph under consideration—that is, it seeks to amend existing law, and, furthermore, would seem to involve a proposition which the Committee on Appropriations might not itself have reported, nor the gentleman from Texas have offered, unless authorized by a committee. The Chair therefore feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I desire to ask a question for information. If the matter applied simply to the current fiscal year, that rule would not apply, as I understand it. I am familiar with the precedent cited by the Chair, but that was where it was permanent legislation, was it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment proposes permanent legislation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am going to offer one not in that form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 119, line 4, after the word "jurors," strike out the figures "$1,150,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$575,000: Provided, That for the current fiscal year all petit juries for the trial of cases in the district courts of the United States in civil matters shall be composed of 6 instead of 12 persons, as now provided by law, and the jury panels and the number of peremptory challenges which each party is entitled to in any civil case is hereby reduced by one-half the number now provided."

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes legislation on an appropriation bill, and is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JONES of Texas. As I understand the decision of the Chair and the precedents in matters of this kind, it is not legitimate to offer as an amendment a provision, even though it retrenches expenditures, which makes a change in the permanent law or makes a permanent change in the law; but that where it does retrench expenditures it may be offered as applying simply to the appropriation in question. Now, as I understand, this appropriation is for the current fiscal year. The amendment which I have now offered is limited in its application to the current fiscal year; in other words, is limited to this appropriation and to the disbursement of the very fund that is provided in this paragraph.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the rule to be that if the amendment changes existing law, it is not germane and not permissible. Would not the gentleman think his amendment limiting juries to six during the current year changes the existing law, which provides that they shall for the current year and all other years consist of twelve?

Mr. JONES of Texas. My amendment does not provide for all other years, but simply for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. As far as the question of germaneness is concerned, the question of whether it changes existing law or otherwise does not affect that question. Even though it should change existing law, it is germane to the paragraph and to the appropriation, for it is directed to the specific point and purpose mentioned in the appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does change existing law, does it not?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is perfectly proper under the Holman rule to change existing law, as I understand it, if you reduce or curtail expenditures. In fact, that is the very object and purpose of the Holman rule, and that is what the rule consists of. In other words, the Holman rule——

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think the Committee on Appropriations would have had jurisdiction of this, and could have offered it as a matter of substantive law and have escaped the point of order?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; I do not think they could have done that, but that proposition applies to permanent legislation, or to legislation which is not specifically limited to the particular appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but the decision of Mr. GARRETT when he occupied the chair, which decision has been read by the present Chairman, was bottomed upon that very principle.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; it was permanent legislation that was offered. He may have mentioned that in the course of his remarks, but that was not the point involved in the decision. The point involved in the decision and the burden of it was that it was changing existing law and making permanent legislation. He might have made some such remark in the course of his decision, but that was not necessary to the decision and was not the point at issue.

Mr. GOOD. It was the only point in the decision.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; that is what we call obiter dicta in the law, and it does not affect the decision in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the amendment offered, and while it does reduce expenditures and provide for legislation to make effectual the reduction of expenditures, it also embraces other legislation, which is a change of existing law, and it is not germane to the paragraph inasmuch as it affects the number of peremptory challenges to which the Government is entitled. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts: Provided further, That no such person shall be employed during vacation; expenses of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, as provided by section 259 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; meals and lodging for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court, and meals and lodging for jurors in Alaska, as provided by section 193, Title II, of the act of June 6, 1900; and compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $240,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 119, line 13, by striking out the figures "715" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "765." I do that because I think there has been a possible error. I have verified the number of the section from the Revised Statutes. Section 765 seems to be the one that is meant.

Mr. GOOD. I assume that if the gentleman has looked it up he is right about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 119, line 13, strike out the figures "715" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "765."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I heard the amendment to change the number of the section of the Revised Statutes with reference to the employment of persons to serve in the Federal courts, but I did not hear the explanation for the amendment. Section 715 is the number of the section now in the current law. Whether that was an error or not I do not know, but people are being paid under the appropriation made under that number. I think we ought to know whether we are changing it here so that they will not be paid.

Mr. GARD. I have before me Barnes's Federal Code, which I hold in my hand, the revised code, and it designates section 765 as being the section which authorizes the employment of deputy clerks who may be assigned as bailiffs. I may be in error about it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know. There is a copy of the Revised Statutes at hand.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that section 715 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

Circuit and district courts may appoint criers for their courts, to be allowed the sum of $2 per day, and marshals may appoint such number of persons not exceeding five——

And so forth.

Mr. GARD. If that is the proper section, then my amendment is not necessary, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General, for the United States courts and their officers, including so much as may be necessary in the discretion of the Attorney General for such expenses in the District of Alaska, and in courts other than Federal courts, $550,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. Why should this appropriation now provide for the payment of miscellaneous expenses in courts other than the United States courts?

Mr. GOOD. The committee went into that matter at the hearings, and Mr. Kennard, of the department, said that frequently cases in which the United States are involved are instituted in State courts, and that although they are subsequently removed to Federal courts the expenses already incurred must be paid to the officials of the State courts. He was asked out of what fund they were paid, and he replied that they were paid out of this fund, but only after it had been fixed by the Federal court and approved by the President. They are doing this now. They are paying the expenses when a case is remanded from the State court.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 4, 1921.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHTHOUSES, BEACONS, FOG SIGNALS, LIGHT VESSELS, AND OTHER WORKS UNDER THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Lighthouse vessels, general service: Constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, $1,000,000.

Mr. BRIGGS rose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I believe it is subject to the point of order. What is the reason for now bringing in a lump sum of $1,000,000 for constructing lighthouse vessels which have not been authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. A great many vessels have been authorized by law for which we have made no appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. An appropriation to construct vessels which have been authorized by law would be in order.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This appropriation would not have to be used for that purpose at all. This has nothing to do with vessels heretofore authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; it has. The estimate was made for $5,000,000 to construct vessels that have been authorized by law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Very well, and if that was the way the appropriation reads it would be in order and it would have to be used for that purpose, but there is no such limitation in this appropriation. This is for constructing lighthouse vessels, absolutely regardless of any which have heretofore been authorized by law. An appropriation would then be in order to construct those which have been authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. My understanding is that this is the same form in which appropriations have always been carried for lighthouse vessels when more than one was carried in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's understanding may be correct. I have watched the subject of lighthouse vessels very closely, and I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. GOOD. The estimate was made for the construction or purchase and equipping of lighthouse tenders and light vessels of the Lighthouse Service, $5,000,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But that is the estimate. The Lighthouse Service asks for from five to fifteen million almost any time for anything. They used to think that they were niggardly if they asked for anything less than $15,000,000 for new lighthouses—until I got hold of them. I told them that we would not report anything unless they themselves scanned their own estimates.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman wants the date of the acts when vessels have been authorized that have not been built, I can give him those dates.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If we are going to make an appropriation for lighthouse vessels, I want it so that it is confined to those vessels which have been authorized, so that the lighthouse board may not then construct vessels not authorized by law, and afterwards come in and ask for an appropriation for those which have been authorized.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, I can put the provision as authorized by law. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe the item is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has not been made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will make the point of order, and we will let the Chair rule upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The point of order is that this appropriation is not authorized by law. There is no limitation here. It is an appropriation "for constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, $1,000,000." If the appropriation be made in that way, it is an authorization for the expenditure of $1,000,000 for the purchase or construction and equipment of lighthouse tenders and vessels. It does not refer in any way whatever that this appropriation shall be for vessels heretofore authorized. Of course, if the gentleman wants to offer an amendment providing an appropriation for vessels authorized that is one thing, but that is not this. This is an authorization for new vessels to the extent of $1,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. The appropriation is to carry out in part the provisions of an act approved June 5, 1920, which authorized the construction of this kind of craft. There is only one-fifth of the amount here authorized. The committee did not think it was necessary here to give the date of the authorization, inasmuch as it was for a work that was authorized by law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the gentleman, I think, confuses the intent of the committee with the language of the committee. The accounting officers know nothing about the intent of the committee except as it is expressed. This language is not for the purpose of carrying out anything that has been authorized by law, but it is a clean new appropriation, and the officers must take it as it reads, without regard to what the intent might have been in the minds of the committee, which is not expressed in the language.

Now, we have been very careful in the past about authorization for revenue cutters, lighthouse tenders, which authorization came from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the appropriations therefor coming from the Committee on Appropriations. Here is no limitation as to what has been authorized.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, the limitation has been found in the act of June 5, 1920, and that, as I recall, has a limitation of $5,000,000 for this construction; at least that was the impression we gained from the hearings.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The fact is, formerly when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was not so very active in following its jurisdiction, it was the custom whenever they wanted a new lighthouse tender or a new revenue cutter to get an item inserted in the Senate and agreed to in conference, without regard to any authorization of law. This follows that same old practice, except here the committee comes in with an original item in a bill in the House without being limited in the authorization.

Mr. GOOD. There are a great many of these vessels, and it is impossible for the committee to tell which one of the vessels authorized by Congress is in the poorest state of repair or where the greatest need lies. It seems to the committee there was a question of administration. They claimed it was necessary to have four new ones.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is not for the repair of vessels.

Mr. GOOD. It is to replace.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is for new vessels.

Mr. GOOD. Certainly; this is to replace obsolete vessels.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You do not have to specify what vessels are to be replaced.

Mr. GOOD. No; you have to specify where the vessels are to be stationed; if it is a light vessel or a lightship. We did it last year down at Cape Hatteras.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will state that on June 5, 1920, the House passed an act to authorize aids to navigation and other work of the Lighthouse Service. It carried an authorization "for constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, $5,000,000." Then, there was a proviso that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and the Shipping Board shall report to the Secretary of Commerce such vessels as they might have which they were willing to dispose of, and which, with reasonable alteration, could be restored and utilized for the purpose of the Lighthouse Service in the Department of Commerce, and the sum authorized shall be available for such repairs and reduced by the sum saved by the use of such vessels. The language of the paragraph to which the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order is a new authorization, apparently. It is not confined to the authorization contained in the provisions of the previous act, nor does it refer to it in any way. In the view of the Chair it permits the expenditure of this $1,000,000 for the construction, equipment, or purchase of lighthouse tenders outside of the authorization contained in the act of June 5, 1920, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as follows: At the end of line 3, page 127, insert: "Lighthouse vessels, general service: Constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, $1,000,000, as authorized by the act of June 5, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 127, after line 3, insert: "Lighthouse vessels, general service: Constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, $1,000,000, as authorized by the act of June 5, 1920."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify that by putting in immediately before the figures "$1,000,000" "as authorized by the act to authorize aids to navigation and for other work in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, approved June 5, 1920, $1,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 127, after line 3, insert: "Lighthouse vessels, general service: Constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service, as authorized by the act entitled 'An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, approved June 5, 1920, $1,000,000.'"

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRIGGS: Page 127, between lines 6 and 7, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Improving Galveston jetty light station, Tex., including fog-signal station, $6,500."

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, this item was authorized in the lighthouse bill passed at the last session of Congress. It was then regarded as an emergency item by reason of being a very badly needed aid to navigation in Galveston Harbor. While it was then very greatly needed, it is even more needed now. The commerce through that great harbor has increased almost 100 per cent. Passing through there this year will be over 1,700 ocean vessels without fog-signal aid. It is an emergency proposition, and this is the only means of getting it. I do not understand that there will be any serious opposition from the Committee on Appropriations.

The two great rock jetties at Galveston project far out into the ocean—a distance of between 6 and 7 miles; and in times of heavy fogs, which are particularly frequent and dense in the spring and fall of each year, the vessels passing in and out of that harbor are endangered by the absence of such signal and are frequently prevented for periods of from 24 to 48 hours from sailing or entering such harbor by reason of the absence of such warning.

It may not be known to the Members of the House that the coastwise and foreign commerce through the harbor at Galveston in 1919 aggregated in value over $888,000,000, with 695 foreign and American ships engaged in the foreign trade alone; this does not include coastwise liners between Galveston and New York, which will average between three and five hundred throughout the year, or at least more than 360 additional ships, making over 1,000 ocean-going vessels passing in and out of this harbor in the year 1919.

According to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, for the first 10 months of 1920, 975 American and foreign ocean-going ships, engaged in the foreign trade, passed in and out of Galveston Harbor, and, according to the custom records, 243 ships in November and December, 1920, making over 1,200 in all, being an increase of about 550 steamships over the number in the year of 1919, irrespective of the regular liner vessels in the coastwise trade heretofore referred to and which in 1920 will equal, if not exceed, 500 steamers, bringing the number of ocean-going ships using Galveston Harbor in 1920 to over 1,700 vessels.

The figures show that American steamships engaged in the foreign trade alone outnumbered foreign vessels by nearly 5 to 1. Of course, the ships engaged in the coastwise trade are all under American register.

The increase of net tonnage of vessels engaged in the foreign trade for the first 10 months of 1920 exceeds by 793,098 tons the net tonnage of the vessels engaged in such trade for 1919, the total net tonnage in foreign trade for 1919 being 1,420,635 tons, while the net tonnage in the foreign trade for the first 10 months of 1920 amounts to 2,213,733 tons.

The total value of foreign exports for all of the year 1919 passing through the harbor of Galveston amounted to $469,699,216, while such exports for the first 11 months of 1920, according to the records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and customs house, already show exports amounting to $618,318,169, with an estimate of $61,000,000 for December, making the total value of foreign exports during 1920 the great sum of $679,319,169, an increase over 1919 of over $200,000,000. It will be borne in mind that the value of the coastwise commerce during the same year is not yet obtainable, but when based upon the amount of same for 1919 will undoubtedly bring the total commerce through the harbor of Galveston for 1920 up to more than $1,000,000,000.

All the commerce of the ports of Galveston, Texas City, Houston, and Bolivar passes through these jetties to the sea. A commerce that has given Galveston again her former rank as the greatest export cotton port in the world and the second greatest export port generally in the United States; that has also developed the splendid port of Texas City so that in 1920 526 vessels were dispatched, an increase of more than double the number of ships clearing from such port over those of the year 1919, when there were only 226, the increase in tonnage being over 1,000,000 tons. Houston and Bolivar have also enjoyed great growth and are continuing along with the other two ports to even further expansion and development.

These figures will, therefore, give you some idea of the importance and value to the whole country of this great channel and the immediate emergency need for the establishment at the light station on the end of the south jetty at Galveston, without delay, of this compressed-air fog signal to protect the great number of ocean-going ships, with their commerce, constantly entering and clearing through Galveston Harbor. Unless this amendment is adopted the money can not be obtained and the signal constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For retired pay of officers and employees engaged in the field service or on vessels of the Lighthouse Service, except persons continuously employed in district offices and shops, $75,000.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if under this item, which I presume it does, comes the experimental work now being carried on by the Department of Commerce in regard to the electrical buoying of channels by cables? What I mean by that is this: The chairman undoubtedly knows that in Ambrose Channel, leading into New York Harbor, there has been installed a sound-emitting device, consisting of an electrically charged cable lying at the bottom of that channel. This cable sends out signals at stated intervals, which are caught by a wireless apparatus on shipboard, so that a vessel can enter the port of New York in the thickest fog or in a blinding snowstorm, without depending on light or sound signals of any kind, by taking its bearings by a listening-in device installed on the bridge, by which the pilot can keep the vessel directly over the cable at the bottom of the channel, and so make all the turns without seeing a buoy or consulting a compass. I understand they are contemplating the installation of the same device through Long Island Sound and are also considering laying down the system in Boston Harbor and in Philadelphia Harbor and in other great harbors. Installing this device means much to the navigation of those important channels, and is, of course, costly. Does this appropriation take care of a matter of this kind?

Mr. GOOD. Not the item that was just read by the Clerk. That is the item for retired pay.

Mr. HICKS. I mean the whole section.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the Lighthouse Service has an appropriation of $4,200,000 that is available for doing work of that kind, but my understanding is that it is the policy of that service, where the expenditure is a large item, they do not feel that they can take their appropriation and make an expenditure out of it, but they usually come and ask for it as a separate item. Now, as to the item in regard to Galveston Harbor that just went in, when the committee refused to give that item, both last year and this year, there was some objection on the part of the Lighthouse Service that we had perhaps subjected navigation in the harbor to unusual chances and it might mean the loss of vessels and probably of human life unless something was done. And they said they could not take an item as large as that out of the general appropriation.

Mr. HICKS. I understand from the gentleman from Iowa that if the Department of Commerce wants to install this new listening device for the purpose of navigation of a channel, costing, of course, may thousands of dollars, they have to come before the Appropriations Committee and get a specific appropriation? They can not take it out of this item?

Mr. GOOD. If it costs more than $10,000, they will have to do that, because that is the limitation of law.

Mr. HICKS. That is the answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner's office: Commissioner, $6,000; deputy commissioner, $3,500; assistants in charge of divisions—fish culture $2,700, inquiry respecting food fishes $2,700, fishery industries $2,500; assistants—1 in charge of office $2,500, 1 $2,500, 1 $2,400, 1 for developing fisheries and for saving and use of fishery products $2,460, 1 $2,220, 1 for fishery food laboratory $2,000, 1 $2,000, 1 $1,800, 1 $1,600, 2 at $1,200 each; fish pathologist, $2,500; architect and engineer, $2,200; assistant architect, $1,600; draftsman, $1,200; accountant, $2,100; librarian, $1,500; superintendent of fish distribution, $1,600; clerks—4 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 1 to commissioner $1,600, 7 of class 2, 12 of class 1, 2 at $900 each (including 1 for Seattle office); statistical agents—1 $1,600, 2 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,000 each; local agents—1 at Boston $600, 1 at Gloucester $600, 1 at Seattle $600; engineer, $1,080; 3 firemen, at $720 each; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; 5 janitors and messengers, at $720 each; janitress, $480; messenger boy, $360; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $114,840.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 137, line 4: After the end of line 4, on page 137, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For the conduct of demonstrations and imparting of instruction in correct, cheap, and wholesome methods of preparing and cooking fish, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of materials and supplies, $15,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman reserve it a moment?

Mr. GOOD. I will reserve it.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to offer the following amendment, so that the two may be considered together. The latter is on the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that this latter amendment may be read and the two considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. I have no objection, but a point of order will be reserved as to both.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 137, line 4, after the end of line 4, on page 137, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For the conduct of investigations in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of Pacific coast fishes, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of material and supplies, $10,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the last amendment for the information of the House?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. The two go together. I just want to say this on the question of a point of order, and then I want to discuss the merits for a moment. I believe that they are in order under the law creating the Bureau of Fisheries. It is not as clear as it might be, but still it is in the same line as the law creating the work that the bureau has been doing. It conserves fish life, and, in addition to that, it provides for its use. Now, if you can get the proper use by getting less fish, you necessarily conserve fish life. So, to my mind, it is in order. But I will not take too much time on that, but will call the committee's attention to the hearings on page 1408 of volume 2.

I ask that I may insert those statements in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks certain statements. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the statements referred to:

FOR DEVELOPMENT, ETC., OF PACIFIC COAST FISHES.

The CHAIRMAN. Your next item is, "For the conduct of investigations in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of Pacific coast fishes, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of materials and supplies, $10,000."

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I made reference in my previous talk to the work we have done in regard to the canning and preserving of west coast fishes. Prior to the present fiscal year we operated a small plant at San Pedro, temporary in character, where we have tried to give the fishing industry material aid in solving the problems with which they are contending, but for which we have not adequate funds at present. The California State Fish and Game Commission, feeling that the work we had started ought to be carried on, undertook to carry that work through during the present fiscal year. We would like to take that work up again, to render the industry much needed aid. The canning industry in southern California is a tremendously large one. It has grown up very quickly, and you will find there some 50 or 60 canneries. If you go to them and study their methods, you will not find the same practices in any two of the canneries in the State. Much material has been wasted. They are having difficulty with the fry bath oil and the honey-combing of the fish. Those are problems that only trained scientific men can expect to solve. It is for this purpose of preserving and utilizing all their fishes and for the improvement of methods and standardization of methods that will yield a standard pack that we are asking this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will this be used entirely for field investigations?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. We really need it in the same way that the agriculturist would. Agriculture in each region has its own problems, and we feel that the California fisheries have certain problems which can only be solved there. We can do certain work here in Washington, but a good deal of the work has to be done upon the scene of the operations of an industry of this kind. We may want to continue this work for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. You would have to continue it for more than a year in order to get results, would you not?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Yes, sir. Certain problems would be completed in a year, and others initiated but not completed.

FOR DEMONSTRATIONS OF METHODS OF PREPARING AND COOKING FISH.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, you are asking $15,000 "for the conduct of demonstrations and the imparting of instruction in correct, cheap, and wholesome methods of preparing and cooking fish, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses, and the purchase of materials and supplies."

Mr. RADCLIFFE. During the period of the war the production and consumption of fishery products received considerable encouragement from governmental and other agencies as a war measure. That resulted in the expansion of the production or taking of fishes and the facilities for preserving and marketing of fish. Even though that expansion was continued during the year 1919, we found an actual curtailment in the catch.

It is unlike the conditions in agriculture. To cite specific illustrations, in the vessel fisheries centering at Boston, Gloucester, and Portland, there was a reduction in the catch last year of over 9,000,000 pounds, or some 4 per cent, and a reduction of about $3,000,000, or 28 per cent, in the price received by the fishermen. This year, during the first 10 months, there has been a further reduction of some 16,000,000 pounds, and a reduction of $600,000 to the fishermen. Out in the Puget Sound and Alaska region, in the salmon-canning industry, the pack this year is estimated at about 5,000,000 cases, which represents a falling off of about 3,500,000 cases, as compared with 1917. In the case of the cheaper grades of salmon, such as the pink and chum, the pack amounts to about 2,500,000 cases. In the case of the New England sardine industry, the pack of sardines last year amounted to 2,250,000 cases, and it is estimated that this year it will amount to only 1,500,000 cases. We found a very similar curtailment of production in southern California in the tuna and sardine packing industry, and also on the Gulf coast in production of groupers. During this period there has been a tremendous increase in the cost of materials and labor, but at the same time there has been this curtailment in production and reduction in the prices received. The real cause seems to be underconsumption.

Since the war period, when the people were encouraged to eat more fish and save meat, there has been a decided falling off in consumption, and even in spite of the curtailment of production, the falling off in consumption has been so great that the producers are hard hit. The solution of the difficulty seems to us to be to bring back the consumption by calling the attention of housewives to the value of fish, and it is for this purpose that we are asking this $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. If the price of those things did not go up so abnormally, would not that do more than anything else to bring about greater consumption?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. The prices, as I tried to point out, have been reduced. The prices received by New England fisheries last year were $3,000,000 less than they were in the previous year, and during the first 10 months of this year there has been a still further falling off of $600,000.

Mr. BYRNS. Is that due to a reduction in the actual price or value of the fish, or is it due to the fact that there is less production?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. There has been a falling off in production. The producers have not been able to find satisfactory markets. I was in New England this year and was told that they were selling haddock off the trawlers at 1½ cents per pound. I was told that some were sold to the salteries for 1 cent per pound, and that some were sold at even as low as three-fourths of a cent per pound.

Dr. MOORE. There has been a reduction in the unit price of some of those fishes, haddock especially.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been much reduction in the price of the retailer for the better quality of salmon and tuna fish?

Dr. MOORE. Not so very much reduction in the price of the retailer, because the consumer is asking for the more expensive kinds of fish. The consumer is not utilizing the fish that are available at low prices, like the haddock and pink and chum salmon. The whole purpose of this appropriation is to conduct demonstrations that will bring the usefulness and availability of these cheaper fishes to the attention of the consumer.

Mr. BYRNS. $15,000 would not go very far in an extensive propaganda of that sort.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. It is surprising how far it will go. During the war period we carried such demonstrations with only one unit, and that unit reached some 15,000 housewives directly. It is surprising how fast these things travel and how fast they are passed on to their neighbors. With the Government taking hold of it, we get a tremendous amount of advertising, such as no other organization can get.

Dr. MOORE. It got the very widest publicity, so that when the demonstration team visited a city it became immediately known throughout the city. One retail dealer in St. Louis told me that immediately after the demonstrations were undertaken there his sales of fish doubled, was it not, Mr. Radcliffe?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I think it was an increase of 25 per cent, and the increase stayed at that figure. One of the things we try to do is that our field men, when we go into these places, go around and visit the dealers and inform them that we are going to give demonstrations and take the matter of prices up with them, so that our work shall not be used as an excuse to suddenly raise prices. We are very anxious to see the prices kept at as low a level as possible.

Dr. SMITH. A very serious condition is confronting the salmon-canning industry on the Pacific coast owing to a large production of the cheap grades of salmon, which in the early days were neglected. These fish are entirely wholesome and nourishing, and their use is to be encouraged, because they relieve the drain on the better grades, and something like $30,000,000 worth of canned salmon is now in warehouses in Seattle awaiting a market. This consists mostly of the cheaper grades, which can be put on the market at a price that will appeal to the retail consumer if he knows about the merits of the product.

Mr. VARE. The Government would have to take steps toward breaking up some of the combinations if they are being held in warehouses for extraordinarily high prices.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. The producers are willing to sell them at less than cost. They are being offered for sale, according to a recent trade paper, at such a figure that pink salmon ought to retail with profit to the wholesaler and the retailer for 25 cents a can and chum at 20 cents.

Dr. MOORE. The difficulty with those fish is that they are not red in color like the ordinary salmon, and the average consumer when he opens a can of these cheaper grades, which have practically the same nutritive value, thinks there is something wrong with them because they are not red. They have been accustomed to the use of the deep red-colored fish.

The CHAIRMAN. If you go to work and demonstrate that they are just as good, then the canner will put the price up on the same level with the red-colored fish.

Dr. MOORE. I suppose when he gets the same sort of demand for them that he has for the red-colored fish he will do that; that is human nature.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I want to make one point in the case of the fishermen, unless they are able to market their product, most of them are not fitted for other employment and they have a rather hard time of it as it is. It is about as precarious and dangerous an occupation as we have.

Dr. MOORE. This would benefit not only the fisherman but it ought to benefit the consumer.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not understand just how you would expend the money. Would you have a demonstrator go into the stores?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. No, sir; the way we would do that is that we would have a demonstration unit, a demonstrator and an assistant and usually a publicity man. They would come here, say, to the city of Washington and would get in touch with the heads of the women's organizations, the housewives' leagues and that sort of thing, and get them interested in this work. They would arrange for a place in which to hold these demonstrations, which would be advertised in the papers, and the housewives would come there.

They are taught how to prepare the fish, and as the lecturer talks to them they are shown just how she prepares the fish for the oven, while telling them about these cheaper fishes with which most of the housewives are unacquainted, and teaches them to use the parts which they frequently throw away, the tails and the fins, and the heads which can be used to make soups and gravy. At the close of that demonstration she passes around these new fishes, which are really new to many of the housewives, and gives them a chance to try them out. She teaches the housewives how to prepare the fish in the home without so much of the fishy odor that so many of them complain about. In these ways we reach the home directly. I have attended some of these demonstrations and have seen the housewives, 100 or more of them, sitting there with a notebook in hand trying to jot down every bit of information that the demonstrator gave them, and it is really very interesting.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I have two letters here, and it is a misfortune that the whole matter was not presented to the Committee on Appropriations. The letters came too late for me to get them before the committee. The letters are from the executive officer of the California Fish and Game Association, Mr. Charles A. Vogelsang. These men have had varied and extensive experience in the culture and handling of fish and in the use of them for food. The first of these items, in particular, is necessary. It reads:

For the conduct of investigations in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of Pacific coast fishes.

They have had an experimental work carried on down at San Pedro in the preservation laboratory of the Bureau of Fisheries. They have done a wonderful work. They have demontrated the proper method of handling and canning these fish and the cooking of them and the use of them. As to the second item, the demonstration work has been such that good results have been obtained by that work. It is a cheap food. It shows the people how to use the white salmon, which is as nutritious as the red, and at the same time by its use we get a cheaper food product for our people than they have at the present time.

I would like to read this letter for the edification of the chairman of the committee, and on hearing it read I believe he will let this item go in. This letter is from Mr. Charles A. Vogelsang, and reads as follows:

FISH AND GAME COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, December 18, 1920.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It is our feeling that the fishing industry in California is experiencing an extreme crisis; this is especially true of the 1-pound oval sardine. There has been packed in the State since last July 1, approximately 525,000 cases of 1-pound oval sardines, and now with the season just ready to open practically no sardine canneries are operating. This condition is brought about by the general depression in the business world, by the prohibitive rates of foreign exchange, by the lack of knowledge of fishes and fishing products on the part of the people of the United States. The high rates of foreign exchange are stimulating production abroad and canned sardines from Norway, France, Portugal, Spain, and Italy can be laid down in the United States for prices a good deal less than they can be produced in the United States. It seems logical to think that Europe may be supplying sardines and other fish to American markets after the rate of foreign exchange has adjusted itself because of the advertising that these foreign goods receive at this time.

What can be done to create a market for our oval sardines? A tariff will probably raise foreign products to a comparative figure. There is no doubt that the California sardine is equal to and possibly a great deal better than the European fish, but on account of its size, particularly, the American housewife does not recognize it as a sardine. It will take practical demonstrations to teach the American housewife the way to prepare sardines as well as other fishes and consistent advertising to create a market within the United States for this particular product.

At this time there are over $35,000,000 worth of the cheaper grades (pinks and chums) of salmon held by Seattle warehouses, a great amount of east-coast fishes, including the fine fishes of New England, and a large quantity of California tuna and sardines on hand. The United States Bureau of Fisheries is seeking an especial appropriation for funds to conduct a demonstration in fish cookery on these species of fish. The amount sought by the Bureau of Fisheries is small, but a great deal can be done with this amount. The advertising will not be for to-day only but will be lasting.

This commission is very much impressed with the proposed demonstration work of the Bureau of Fisheries, and we would appreciate your support of their request. It would be very helpful, indeed, if you would appear before the House Appropriations Committee in the interest of this item.

We are inclosing a copy of the item requested of the Secretary of Commerce by the Commissioner of Fisheries.

Very truly, yours,

FISH AND GAME COMMISSION,
CHAS. A. VOGELSANG,
Executive Officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert that letter in the RECORD, and also another letter, of date December 30, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letters referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman does not mean to insert it in addition to what he has already read?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no. I left out a little of the head and a little of the tail.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman should be particular about not doing that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. That is what they have been throwing away, and it is valuable. It is what these people have been doing and will continue to do to save the American people if they are allowed to demonstrate how the full use can be got from the fish instead of throwing away a third of it or two-fifths of it. I read:

FISH AND GAME COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, December 30, 1920.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The fish and game commission is much interested in some of the 1920 estimates, as submitted to Congress by the United States Bureau of Fisheries. There is included in the estimates of the Bureau of Fisheries an item of $10,000 "for the conduct of investigation in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of the Pacific coast fishes." This money, we are advised, would be expended by the Bureau of Fisheries preservation laboratory at San Pedro.

This laboratory, you will recall, was established in 1919 for the purpose of directly aiding the fishing industry of California. Grave mistakes, due to ignorance and inexperience, were made by the packers of tuna and sardines. In the beginning it was thought that albacore was poisonous and unfit for food and it was unmerchantable. As late as four years ago albacore was offered in San Diego for $4 a ton. Then just before the war the public began to learn of the value of the albacore and tuna fish. A number of tuna canneries were opened and a large amount of money invested.

Less than four years ago, under stimulus of the war, when most any food product was salable, the sardine-canning industry was started. It was in the canning of sardines that many mistakes were made. You no doubt recall that some of the packers attempted to pack sardines in round cans, with the result that a most repulsive and indescribable mess was offered for sale. Many of the processes employed by the canneries were costly, and it is believed that no two canneries in the State, even at this time, are packing fish by the same method. Recently our attention has been called to the fact that retorting temperatures and times vary from one and one-half hours at 240° F. to three hours at 212° F.

It was seen at the outset, when the Bureau of Fisheries established its laboratory at San Pedro to help the industry work out some of its problems, that if the industry continued packing sardines and tuna by the methods that had been developed that a crisis would be met. The Bureau of Fisheries undertook in 1919 to develop methods for canning unused species of fish, hoping to find a product on which the canneries might center their efforts while the technique of tuna and sardine canning was being refined. It was also expected that methods would be developed for canning fish that were running when sardines and tuna were not available. At the same time the laboratory was studying the methods employed by the canneries in the canning of sardines and tuna, hoping to develop new methods for these species and to improve and reduce the cost of the methods that were being employed.

Most of the outlined work on the development of new methods of new species and the refining of technique has been completed, and much valuable data will soon be released.

The laboratory is now undertaking a most intensive study of each of the individual processes employed in the canning of sardines and tuna. At present a study of the fry-bath oils is under way, in which the laboratory is seeking to find a way of reclaiming the oil and to establish proper procedure to follow when frying.

We have dealt at length on the activities of this laboratory for we are thoroughly acquainted with all the work that they are doing. We feel that this work will be very valuable, indeed, to the fisheries of California, and that much will be contributed toward the development and standardization of their product. This commission and the Bureau of Fisheries have often cooperated on a number of things in this State, and we are very much concerned that the San Pedro laboratory be continued.

The Bureau of Fisheries is a conservation bureau, and the fish and game commission is directly interested in the conservation of fish. On the Sacramento River the Bureau of Fisheries and this commission have often cooperated on salmon investigations. The fish and game commission was so much interested in the laboratory of the Bureau of Fisheries in San Pedro and the work that it had done that in June, 1920, when Congress failed to provide funds for the laboratory, which would have meant the total loss of the work done and the money expended, this commission volunteered to finance the laboratory and cooperate with the Bureau of Fisheries until Congress would again provide funds for the continuance of the laboratory. The Bureau of Fisheries up until last July 1 had spent in San Pedro some $20,000, and it had under way some very valuable experiments in the canning of mackerel, bonita, barracuda, sardines, tuna, yellowtail, and smelt. The money expended and the work under way would have been a total loss had this commission not interceded.

The financing of this laboratory by the fish and game commission meant sacrificing some very important work that this commission had under way, the curtailment of some of the regular work of the commission, and serious financial embarrassment. The commission's revenue is planned to answer the immediate needs of the commission and no more, the program of the commission expanding as the revenue increases. This year, when unexpectedly the pack was very much reduced, our revenue is far below our own requirements. Our obligation to the Bureau of Fisheries will be met, but we can not do more for the support of the bureau's praiseworthy undertaking. We are particularly interested, therefore, that the Congressmen and Senators from California support the Bureau of Fisheries' request for $10,000 for the continuance of the San Pedro laboratory.

The fish and game commission could not agree to cooperate with the Bureau of Chemistry, which maintains a laboratory in San Diego, for the Bureau of Chemistry is interested in the exploitation of the fisheries without regard to the supply.

The fishing industry in California can, with sufficient Federal assistance, supply to the markets of the United States and to the markets of the world over 2,000,000 cases, forty-eight 1-pound cans each of sardines, which can be sold to the public at 20 cents per can. To-day 1-pound cans of fish are selling in the East for 35 cents each. The oceans hold a great, practically untouched, food supply that can by revised methods be brought to the American public for a nominal sum.

A few days ago we wrote you requesting your support of the supplemental appropriation of $20,000 requested by the Bureau of Fisheries for the conduct of a demonstration of fish cookery in the bureau's 1922 estimates; an item of $15,000 is included for the continuance during the fiscal year of 1922 of the demonstration work. The fish and game commission is interested that the proposed demonstration work be continued during the fiscal year 1922.

We would appreciate it very much, indeed, if you would get behind the Bureau of Fisheries' appropriation for the year 1922 and use your influence in the passage of these items.

Very truly, yours,

FISH AND GAME COMMISSION,
CHAS. A. VOGELSANG,
Executive Officer.

Estimates, 1922.

1. Divisional appropriation	$25,000
2. For the conduct of investigations in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of Pacific coast fishes, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of material and supplies (submitted)	10,000
3. For the conduct of demonstration and the issuing of instruction in correct, cheap, and wholesome methods of preparing and cooking fish, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of materials and supplies	15,000
4. Additional personnel:
Chief fishery technologist	3,000
Assistant fishery technologist, increased from $2,400 to	3,000
Assistant fishery technologist, increased from $2,000 to	2,500
Laboratory aid	1,600
Station agent, from $1,600 to	1,800
Station agent, from $1,400 to	1,800
Station agent, from $1,400 to	1,600
2 station agents, from $1,000 to	1,400

Supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Fisheries: For conducting demonstrations and imparting instruction in correct, cheap, and wholesome methods of preparing and cooking fish, especially kinds available in large quantities and at comparatively low prices, including the payment of salaries in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses, and the purchase of material and supplies, to be immediately available (submitted)	$20,000

I hope the chairman of the committee has absorbed the real meat of this letter, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order and let this go in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon what ground?

Mr. GOOD. On the ground that it is for work not authorized by law; that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. I was looking the matter up last night and spent considerable time on it, and I want to say that I offered this amendment at the beginning of this section, so as to test the remainder of the amendment. There are other items in the bill like this, and unless this provision is included, those other items ought to go out. I hope nobody will object to it. I thought possibly the committee would construe it as I have construed it for the Chair, under section 699 of the Revised Statutes, which is found on page 165 of Barnes's Federal Code, which reads as follows—and that is the only thing I can find on it:

> The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries shall prosecute investigations and inquiries on the subject with a view of ascertaining whether any and what diminution of the number of food fishes of the coasts and of the lakes of the United States has taken place; and if so, to what cause the same is due, and also whether any and what protective, prohibitory, or precautionary measures should be adopted in the premises, and shall report upon the same to Congress.

Now, it seemed to me a nice, easy construction would be permissible under this law, and particularly under the clause, "and if so, to what causes the same is due," and that it would be permitted to obtain as to this first item in particular, regrading the standardization and development of the fish industry, because by virtue of that you save the catching of the fish, because they have been destroyed in the way they have been handled, and by knowing their life and conditions we are in a position to continue proper fish culture.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, if we adopted that "nice, easy construction" for the first amendment, then the gentleman from California could very properly hang the second amendment on the "nice, easy construction" by which the first amendment was adopted.

Mr. RAKER. To be perfectly fair, that was my idea. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make a point of order on the amendment?

Mr. GOOD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steamer Albatross: Naturalist, $2,750; general assistant, $1,400; fishery expert, $1,400; clerk, $1,200; in all, $6,750.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure what Congress ought to do with regard to this item. The steamer Albatross carries 80 men and 8 officers. It is a naval vessel, and that steamer is used for some scientific investigations in regard to deep-sea fish. That vessel has been tied up for over a year, with 80 men aboard and 8 officers aboard, because they could not get the naturalists, and we have carried here an increase in the appropriation from $2,200 to $2,500 for the naturalist. The committee is in doubt as to what the best policy would be. I am not an expert on the subject of the Bureau of Fisheries. We feel that the bureau is costing more than ought to be expended for the purpose for which the appropriation is made, and we have tried to cut it down.

Here was an item for a boat with 80 men aboard, stationed there all the year, tied up to the wharf. I thought I ought to bring the matter to the attention of the House, so that the committee might determine whether we should cut out the item entirely and let the vessel go back into the Navy, where they might use it, or increase the appropriation for the pay of the naturalist to a point where one could be secured, and put the men to work. Now, we have assumed that it was one of the items that perhaps the committee might want to act upon. I am frank to say that I do not know enough about the results of investigations of this kind to say whether or not it is justifiable to go to the great expense of maintaining this project with 80 men and 8 officers to make these deep-sea investigations.

Mr. EDMONDS. I understand it is a naval boat?

Mr. GOOD. It is a naval boat.

Mr. EDMONDS. Would it be in commission anyhow, whether it was doing this work or other work?

Mr. GOOD. I have said it was a naval boat. I am not sure about how the boat was acquired. I know that it is officered by naval officers and manned by men who are paid out of naval appropriations.

Mr. EDMONDS. It probably would stay in commission anyhow, whether it was put on this work or other work.

Mr. GOOD. I am not sure as to that.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I am not acquainted with the particular item, but the gentleman is satisfied that the Bureau of Fisheries are doing a very important work generally speaking, is he not?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; I have no doubt about that.

Mr. FESS. I do not know about this particular item.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know just exactly what results have been accomplished by this deep-sea investigation. It must be very expensive, with 80 men and 8 officers, requiring a large expenditure from the naval appropriation bill to carry on this work. That is where the pay comes from.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Does not the gentleman think the Bureau of Fisheries are devoting a large amount of time and perhaps an unduly large amount of their time to the investigation of purely theoretical questions and not to the practical side of the fisheries industry? Representing a marine district I have had that complaint from the fishermen of my district. While they realize the benefits of this bureau, they feel that there is not enough practical work being done, that too much of it is theoretical. I want the gentleman's opinion about that.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman can get all kinds of opinion with regard to the Bureau of Fisheries. In some of the places where they are engaged in fish culture, as at Woods Hole——

Mr. HICKS. Where is that?

Mr. GOOD. That is up in the State of Massachusetts. Some very great men have come from that section of the country. It is a noted place.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman is joking, is he not?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is a noted place.

Mr. FESS. One of the most important research stations in the world.

Mr. GOOD. Some people claim that the money ought to be expended for fish culture, in order that the young fish may be placed in the streams and lakes, and thereby the food supply of the country increased. Others, who are more interested in the scientific side of the question, say that too much money is being expended for fish culture, and that we ought to have more for the scientific side. Now, the gentleman has the two sides of the argument. Congress has been quite liberal and has appropriated very generously for both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the steamer Albatross is ready now to resume service, or whether it is still tied up to the dock?

Mr. GOOD. It is tied up to the dock, because they have no naturalist. They can not get a naturalist for $2,200 a year, and because they have no naturalist the steamer is tied up there, and 80 men and 8 officers are loafing and drawing pay out of the naval appropriations.

Mr. GARD. Under this appropriation of $2,750, will it be possible to get a naturalist for that salary?

Mr. GOOD. I think that is what they claim. That was what they said it would require.

Mr. GARD. Is not that the answer, that if they get the naturalist they will put the boat into service?

Mr. GOOD. They will put the boat into service, and it seemed to the chairman of the committee that the matter ought to be submitted to the House and to the judgment of gentlemen who know more about the value of this work, whether it was of a character that would warrant the tremendous expenditure. It was a matter that the Naval Committee have investigated, I suppose, because for years they have appropriated the money for the officers and men.

Mr. GARD. Of course, this is not a contribution from any master mind, but it seems to me that if this boat is ready to resume service, why not give them the appropriation which will enable them to secure a naturalist and go to work?

Mr. GOOD. That is what the committee have done.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to strike out the last two words. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], I want to call the attention of my colleagues who live along the coast, where they can get a plentiful supply of fish and oysters, to the disadvantage which many people in the United States labor under who live away from the water, and who are not able to get fish except through this very institution of the United States Bureau of Fisheries. Many towns in the State of Texas situated away from streams have built artificial lakes, and they have stocked these reservoirs with fish which they have obtained from the United States Bureau of Fisheries, and now their people are able to go out there and enjoy the lucrative sport of catching a plentiful supply of good bass and trout and crappie and various other kinds of fish. I want to say that such privilege means a great deal to the people who live away from the ocean and from rivers which contain fish.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. HICKS. I did not intend to condemn the Bureau of Fisheries. I am a great believer in it. I believe in the practical work which the gentleman from Texas is now explaining. That is what counts. What I was criticizing was that, in my opinion, too much of the work is theoretical and not practical. I represent a big oyster industry, one of the most important activities of my district. The Blue Point oysters, among others, come from Long Island. For the last two or three years there has been some disease affecting oysters, so that they do not now propagate as freely as formerly, and do not mature as rapidly as they did. Our oyster fishermen tried to get the Bureau of Fisheries to detail a vessel to make an investigation of the matter; to go out over the oyster beds and endeavor to ascertain what was the cause of the diminution in the supply of oysters. The answer was that they had not money enough because they were using it for other work. That kind of practical investigation would have been in line with what the gentleman speaks of, because it would have increased the oyster supply if we could have determined the nature of the disease affecting the oyster.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; but I want to repeat that this particular institution is of great benefit to the people of the country.

Mr. HICKS. Oh, I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is hardly a week passes that I do not get applications for fish from my district.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not know for what purpose the steamer Albatross has been used during the past two years, but I do not think it is proper that the next administration should be jeopardized because of the fact that it has not been used to good advantage. The Albatross years ago was used in deep-sea explorations. That vessel has rendered valuable service to this country. It is officered and manned by the Navy, and in years gone by the naturalist on the Albatross received a salary of $1,800 a year. I notice in this item that it is $2,750. There is no good reason for striking out the item simply because one administration has not been able to secure the services of an effective individual at this salary. The Albatross could be used in a great many ways to good advantage, but in days gone by the appropriations have not been sufficiently large to enable it to always be used to advantage. The cost to the Fisheries Bureau has been slight. The Albatross was pressed into the service during the war. As I say, I hope the next administration will not be jeopardized on account of the fact that some other administration has not utilized that vessel to its best advantage, and that the item will be permitted to continue.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For developing by the Bureau of Fisheries in cooperation with the Bureau of Standards new aquatic sources of supply of leather, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1921 is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 144, lines 18 to 23, inclusive, strike out all of the language from the beginning of line 18 to line 23, inclusive.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation to authorize the Bureau of Fisheries in the Department of Commerce to experiment with the development of leather from aquatic animals was made at a time when green hides were selling freely around 30 and 35 cents a pound, and when, of course, leather was also very high. At the present time those Members of us who come from the live-stock districts know that the best green hides are selling freely at 4, 5, and 6 cents a pound, and, while there is general complaint at the high price of shoes and harness leather and all leather products, it is certainly not because of the high price of raw materials. I happen to know a little about the hide situation, because in the business in which I am interested we have handled hides for 20 years. Green hides are now selling lower than I have seen them sell in the last 20 years, except at one time. It would be a useless thing for us to continue an appropriation to enable the Bureau of Fisheries to experiment with the development of leather from shark fish, to compete with the hides from our live stock, when we are at this very time seriously concerned in doing what we can to protect the live-stock industry from collapse and ruin because of the conditions that face it. High leather can certainly be no longer attributed to high-priced hides. The supply of cowhides is overwhelmingly abundant, and the price of them is ruinously low to the producer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague stated that we have been doing what we could to safeguard that interest, and yet I call his attention to the fact that by the emergency tariff bill which we lately passed and which one of the great Senators has to-day agreed to permit to pass in the Senate, we left hides on the free list, as well as frozen beef.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad to state to my colleague that I have never thought that hides ought to be on the free list. I stated my attitude on the tariff question when we had the bill under consideration. I believe that on all of these products there ought to be paid a reasonable duty at the customhouse, but on the other hand, of course, without elaborating on that phase of the matter, I would not at any time vote for a tariff duty that I think would amount to an embargo.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What connection is there between the low price of green hides and the high price of shoes?

Mr. BLACK. I was just coming to that, and shall read from a letter that I received to-day, which calls my attention to the situation that does exist. The writer of this letter wrote it to a large printing concern in my district, and they call attention especially to this leather situation. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that either the price of shoes and harness leather and other leather products ought to come down to the consumer or else the producer ought to receive more for his hides, and it is up to us if we do not already have legislation to deal with this subject to provide legislation that does deal with it. As I say, this letter was written to a constituent of mine by a wholesale house that has a business at Shawnee, Okla., and I quote from the letter:

When a cow dies in this western country to-day the owner hauls it off and buries it hide and all.

That is true. All of us who live in the live-stock sections know that fallen hides are hides that are taken off animals that die without being slaughtered. There are very few fallen hides being sold to-day, because, as a matter of fact, the owner of the dead animal can not get pay for his labor in removing the hide, and the writer of this letter states the correct fact when he says that if a cow dies now they just haul it off and bury it, hide and all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. I continue to quote from the letter:

Ask him why he does not skin the animal and sell the hide, and his answer is there is no market for green hides at any price.
A cowhide usually brings now 75 cents to $1.50, if you can find a man who will buy them at all.
Yet the bookbinder pays 55 cents a square foot for a hide that brings the farmer about 2 cents a square foot.
It costs 3 cents a foot to cure and treat a hide, and leaves 50 cents a foot profit for the jobber and manufacturer.
Are you not tired of these profiteering prices?
Reasonable profit and profiteering are not one and the same thing.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated a while ago, I realize that in the cost of the manufactured product the cost of the raw material is by no means all of the cost, but it is undoubtedly true that either these leather products ought to come down to a reasonable price to the consumer or else the producer ought to receive a larger price for his hides. There is a disparity between the two which simply must be corrected. It is not a holding movement that our farmers and live-stock men need at the present time, it is a "moving movement"; and the reason that wool and hides are piled up in warehouses, and the reason that shoes and clothing are piled up in warehouses, is because the prices to the consumer have been made so high that he has withdrawn from the market and we have had what has been in effect a buyer's strike, and the articles of manufacture instead of moving out into channels of trade have been stacked up in warehouses and retail houses. We are encouraged to believe that retailers and wholesalers are now beginning to realize the unsoundness, not to say unfairness, of the position which they have sought to occupy, and are placing their goods on the market within the range of prices which the public is willing to pay. This movement is making the condition of trade much healthier and is bound to start the wheels of commerce going again, and consequently will revive the markets for the farmer's raw products and therefore will stimulate his price. It is in that way that the law of supply and demand will get into proper functioning again.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that the 4,000,000 pounds of wool that are now in storage in and around New York is not the fault of the buyers, but due to the fact the Federal Reserve Board, through its administration, has financed that wool and they are able to hold it?

Mr. BLACK. Most of the criticism against the Federal Reserve Board which I have heard lately has been because of its restricting credits. Of course——

Mr. KING. And have refused to extend to the farmer the same courtesy they have extended to the speculator?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not admit the correctness of that statement. I do not profess to have any personal knowledge of the facts about wool, and would therefore not volunteer any information of my own, but I can not accept that criticism of the Federal reserve banks because I have no idea it would be a just one. But now without carrying forward any further my remarks, I think with the knowledge that we all have that green hides are now selling at ruinously low prices, that it would be folly for the Congress to go ahead and continue an appropriation even in the small amount of $5,000 to develop leather from shark fish and put that into competition with hides which are not bringing anything like the cost of production.

Mr. MAYS. Does that include leather from the sharks who are profiteering on shoes?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not think they would be included. Something must be done, however, to get after them, if shoes and leather products do not get within a price range more comparable to the price of the raw hides.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a word in behalf of my colleague's amendment on this proposition. I represent a district that has a great many cattle, and last year thousands of carcasses went unskinned simply because the carcasses were not worth the skinning; these hides would not bring enough to justify the skinning of the carcass. So that it seems to me that it would not be worth while to spend money on the part of the Government to develop the making of leather from some other sources even though the leather were needed and even though this kind of an experiment were worth while. But in this instance the work has actually been completed, and it is just another of those instances where more money is appropriated than is needed and the people seem to feel they are under obligation to spend all the money that has been appropriated. It seems under the hearings that last year $10,000 was appropriated for this experiment. They have only spent $5,000 of it, and now they ask a reappropriation of the other $5,000; in other words, to make it available. If you read the hearings, pages 1393 and 1394, with reference to this appropriation, you will find that the department has already developed this process and has shown that it is practical and that there are a number of firms which are now using it. They simply want to continue the experiment further and see how long it will wear. Well, it seems to me if firms are already using this leather made of sharks' hides, and a number of companies have been organized to fish for sharks in order to use this leather, that there is little use of the Government spending $5,000 more to show whether or not the leather will wear. It does not seem to me that it is necessary to have an expert to find out whether leather will wear.

Those people desiring to enter the business, having gotten the benefit of the Government's experiment in such leather, showing that it can be used, can conduct their own experiments after this. The department wants to use $5,000 more of the sum appropriated last year. They do not want to turn anything back into the Treasury. The entire hearings on this particular item, covering just about one page, 1393 and 1394, show that there are some 23 companies who use this method of making leather, and so aside from the question of there being plenty of hides already that are practically worthless—not worth using—the experiment has been completed, and the appropriation carried from last year would be simply for the purpose of continuing a man in a job; that is all. For that reason the amendment ought to be carried, and the appropriation denied.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. Mr. Chairman, during the war we found ourselves in the position in the cities where we do not have any live stock that we had to pay enormous prices for leather. We were very glad, indeed, when we found the United States Government would investigate some other sources of leather to enter into competition with the leather we had gotten in the past from cattle on the western ranges. The department has succeeded in producing a very fine quality of leather from certain skins, like the shark, the whale, or the porpoise, and they desire further to experiment to find out the wearing qualities of this leather and also to find out how to remove certain oils, certain ingredients in the leather that do not seem to belong there if they are going to be used commercially.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is one thing certain, and that is it is a good thing to have in this country competition between commodities that are used generally by the people. I believe we would make a mistake in trying to disturb this experiment. I believe the results will guarantee a competitive market in leather in the future that will prevent any such profiteering as has gone on during the past two years.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman or some other eminent dermatologist whether the making of shark's leather, porpoise leather, and so forth, is going to reduce the price of shoes?

Mr. EDMONDS. I hope so.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should not this be done by private capital and private enterprise?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because it is only since the Government has carried out these experiments that private enterprise has attempted to come in.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, after we do this will the gentleman's friends—will not they monopolize and be still profiteering on the people with respect to the new kind of leather?

Mr. EDMONDS. I object to the remark of the "gentleman's friends," because I know nobody in the business; but I have seen the leather.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean up in his country?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have seen the leather coming from the Bureau of Standards, and I am very glad, indeed, to hear they are making a good quality of leather, and I think for the benefit of the people at large it is a good thing to have competition in a matter of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. OSBORNE: Page 144, after line 23, insert the following paragraph:

"Preservation laboratory at San Pedro, Calif., for the conduct of investigations in the development and standardization of methods of preservation of Pacific coast fishes, including the payment of salaries and traveling expenses and the purchase of material and supplies, $10,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is practically the same amendment that was offered by my colleague [Mr. RAKER] except that it specifies the location of the laboratory. The work that has been done there at this San Pedro laboratory, which is in my district, has been most valuable and has contributed very considerably to the increase in the amount of fish food that is produced. The fisheries there in the Santa Barbara Channel are comparatively new. They have learned only within the last four or five years that certain fish, which are abundant there, are really valuable for food. The albacore is one of them. Within the last 35 years I have caught, perhaps, tons of albacore just for fun, and have thrown them all away. It has been demonstrated that they are extremely valuable food, and this laboratory has done good work in demonstrating that fact and in respect to the packing of sardines.

In regard to the sardines, in a communication which I have from the California Fish and Game Commission, it is stated that the fishing industry in California can supply to the markets of the United States and to the markets of the world over 2,000,000 cases of 48 one-pound oval cans each of sardines which can be sold to the public for 20 cents. To-day the one-pound oval cans are sold in the East for 35 cents. This work is extremely valuable, and I am greatly in hopes that the chairman of the committee and the committee will find it consistent to allow this small item of $10,000 for this work. I think they would be consenting to a very valuable public service.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] insist on his point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OSBORNE. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, where are we reading now?

The CHAIRMAN. On line 24, page 144.

Mr. CANNON. That has not yet been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is about to read that. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of vessels: For maintenance of vessels and launches, including purchase and repair of boats, apparatus, machinery, and other facilities required for use with the same, hire of vessels, and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, and money accruing from commutation of rations and provisions on board vessels may be paid on proper vouchers to the persons having charge of the mess of such vessels, $120,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ought to have asked for recognition when lines 10 to 17 were being considered. I listened to the two gentlemen from Texas, and I listened to our friend as to the language in lines 19 to 23. The maintenance of vessels is related to the fishing industry. It seems to me that the same argument that is made to increase the price of hides, as in the next item also, would apply to this. When you seek to cut off the appropriation because meat is cheap in Texas and hides are worthless in Texas, and do cut it off, why should we have any vessels in order that we may handle more fish? There should be competition right along the line. I do not think the two former amendments ought to have been agreed to. But I am not going to make any motion about the paragraph that is under consideration now. Logically we ought to go out of the fishery business, because of the production of oysters, to please my friend from New York, and on account of the disease there. And we ought to cut off the production of leather in order to aid Texas and to aid Illinois. We have got a good cattle industry in Illinois. Why not let everything be utilized that can be practically utilized that brings food or clothing to the human family?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The main argument in favor of the amendment of my colleague from Texas was to prevent these leather profiteers from using the money of the United States Government to do their experimenting with.

Mr. CANNON. Now then, in reply to that, I wish to say that I listened to the distinguished gentleman when he spoke about the great demand for fish to be planted down in the inland waters of Texas, and I thought that appropriation ought to be increased. Well, it seems to me they all ought to stand or fall together, because as the sun comes up and the sun goes down, everything that is useful to clothe the human family or to feed the human family, it seems to me, ought to be encouraged and not discouraged.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there, if the gentleman will yield further.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The people get the benefit of the fish, but the people do not get the benefit of this experimentation made by the money of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. That is, people best go without shoes, and you might as well say they should go without food. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sponge fisheries: For protecting the sponge fisheries, including employment of inspectors, watchmen, and temporary assistants, hire of boats, rental of office and storage, care of seized sponges and other property, travel, and all other expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act of August 15, 1914, to regulate the sponge fisheries, $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to say to my friends from Texas and New York, in their zeal to serve their constituencies, that down in Mississippi and in Texas, and in all of the cotton States, I am informed, last year's cotton crop and this year's cotton crop will not begin to be sold for enough money to pay for the cost of production.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The very best grade of short staple cotton is selling at 11 cents, and other grades are being sold for as low as 5½ cents.

Mr. CANNON. Then I am right about it. It will not pay for the cost of production, and the two crops are unsold. Now, this is for sponges. The cotton industry also ought to be protected. It is a great industry. Cotton is used for towels, and for all kinds of underclothing, and that kind of thing. Now, the towels are used to wipe the face after washing it in water, and sponges are useful for the same thing. But here——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. We want to leave these sponges in here, because they are needed by the legislators above us just after they have taken those magnificent baths which they have lately provided themselves with.

Mr. CANNON. Does not that affect the cotton industry? They would use the cotton towels, you know. Let us be consistent. I am not going to make any motions about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF STANDARDS.

Testing of large scales: For investigation and testing of railroad track scales, elevator scales, and other scales used in weighing commodities for interstate shipments and to secure equipment and assistance for testing the scales used by the Government in its transactions with the public, such as post office, navy yard, and customhouse scales, and for the purpose of cooperating with the States in securing uniformity in the weights and measures laws and in the methods of inspection, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not observe in these items for the Department of Commerce any provision made for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. GOOD. That is not carried in this bill. That is carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, before leaving this division of the bill and passing on to this Department of Labor I would like, if possible, to correct a misapprehension that I think may be entertained here in regard to this leather business. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the ex-Speaker, suggested something that is perhaps more pertinent than anything else connected with this whole bill. That was his suggestion with reference to the distance between the raw hides of Texas or any other State and the finished product in the shape of shoes to the people of the East and North and West, or anywhere else.

Now, it is well known that the process of tanning—and there are many tanneries in my district—requires something like a year. I know of tanners in my district who made great fortunes during the war out of stocks that had been bought and put into process of tanning before the war. One man in particular I know who, having ceased operations, retained his fortune, less the excess-profits tax, if he did not commit suicide after he had made out his excess-profits tax return to the Government. [Laughter.] Another man that I know proceeded to stock up at the prevailing high prices, and he lost several hundred thousand dollars that he made. At least, he stands for a paper loss to-day.

Now, what actually stares us in the face is the utter absence now, about two years after the war, of the operation of the law of supply and demand. Some years ago I saw with great joy on an occasion the Wright brothers at Fort Myer overcome, temporarily at least, the action of the law of gravitation; and yet we sit here with definite knowledge of the ruination of the farmers of the West, so far as the raising of cattle is concerned, and of the enormous profits that the retailer is getting, and the disaster that has been wrought to so many tanners, and yet do nothing to bring about relief.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. With great pleasure.

Mr. MURPHY. I have heard the statements made on this floor about the great profits that the retailers are making.

Mr. FOCHT. Is the gentleman a retailer? He is, is he not?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I thought so.

Mr. MURPHY. I want to say now that your tanners made a great profit on their hides before they ever reached the retailer.

Mr. FOCHT. Very well. We will take a noted instance of a man in Washington who appeared before a committee here and admitted that before the war his profits were something like $15,000 a year, but as the European war progressed they doubled each year, until in the last year of the war in which we were involved he made a profit of $125,000. He is a retailer, and he admitted that he received as much as $12 and $14 a pair for shoes that cost him less than $6.

That is not a general statement, I will say to my friend from Ohio. That was under oath from a shoe dealer in Washington who appeared before a committee.

Now, there is no use in trying to get away from these facts. They are right up in Pennsylvania, they are here in Washington, they are everywhere, and it is a crime that ought to have been punished with something only a little less than hanging, this unconscionable profiteering in food and clothing. It is all a cruel outrage against the people who put up their money to prosecute the war and saw their resources and savings taken from them by these profiteers who charge these enormous prices for shoes and other necessaries.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Certainly.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I filed with the Committee on Agriculture a copy of a price list from the Edwin Clapp Shoe Co., showing that the trade paid $16.25 a pair for shoes. How does that square with that statement which the gentleman has just made as to the retailer?

Mr. FOCHT. That would depend upon the kind of business the gentleman is in.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will say to the gentleman that I have been in the retail business.

Mr. FOCHT. Yes. We want to get the viewpoint and the standpoint of each man, and get a broader vision as to these things. I am a purchaser of shoes. I see men wearing patched shoes. My own shoes are half-soled. I can not afford to wear those $20 shoes we once bought for $7.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes to further discuss this question of the shoe business.

Mr. McCLINTIC. What business is the gentleman in?

Mr. FOCHT. I am a publisher; also generally a Congressman.

Mr. MURPHY. And you deal in advertising, too?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; but we never attempted to raise the price 800 per cent.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Does not the gentleman have something to do with the coal prices that are charged to the people of the country?

Mr. FOCHT. No; but I have a lot to do in paying them, and I want to see any coal profiteers pilloried, the same as the shoe fellows. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the item in the bill.

Mr. FOCHT. Well, I will submit the question to the House as to whether I shall proceed for five minutes or not. But I have already received the consent of the House, and therefore I want to say, gentlemen, that——

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is not speaking to the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is not speaking to the item of the bill which is under discussion.

Mr. FOCHT. Let us see if I am not. May I make a statement to the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made a motion to strike out the last two words, and discussed that motion for five minutes, and then got unanimous consent to continue for five additional minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; and I insist on my rights.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be permitted to continue during the remainder of his five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, I stated to gentlemen on the other side of the House that I would make points of order on matters of this kind. My attention was not called to what the gentleman was discussing until we got into this uproar.

Mr. FOCHT. No uproar at all.

Mr. GOOD. I must object.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman objects, I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-nine Members present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, H. R. 15422, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 279 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he handed in the list of absentees for printing in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I might properly proceed strictly in order under this section and continue my observations concerning the high cost of shoes, by dwelling upon the interstate commerce traffic, but I appreciate the fact that the day has been set apart for this bill, and that it is of vast importance. I appreciate the indulgence of the House, and I am satisfied that on a yea and nay vote of the gentlemen present they would give me 15 or 20 minutes to finish what I had started to say; but I appreciate the ability of the gentleman in charge of this bill, and his tireless and ceaseless work, and the remarkable results which he has accomplished here as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore I will say nothing further on this subject to-day, although I believe it transcends every other question in importance, that it is paramount, that we find here a unanimity and harmony of spirit that has not manifested itself before since I came here more than 14 years ago. Finding the House agreed upon the great emergency measure to relieve the farmers, to which all opposition, I believe, has been withdrawn in the Senate, at least as far as Pennsylvania is concerned [laughter], we are all united, I am glad to say, and I know that the Pennsylvania Senator's approval means its passage, and I hope that you Democrats will see that the President signs the bill.

Now, just one thought and I am through, and will leave this matter to my good friend ex-Speaker CLARK to dwell upon at some time again. I only regret that our distinguished former Speaker of this House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who made the suggestion a while ago, did not amplify into a long speech on this question of highway robbery on the part of these shoe dealers and coal dealers and market men and storekeepers in Washington, that in the days of Charles III there would have been a long string of these merciless fellows hanging to the trees and lampposts along the highway. [Applause.] Now, my friends, I just want to conclude by expressing my high appreciation of the suggestion made by my old friend, former Speaker CLARK, and to say that he has a statesmanlike apprehension and vision and foresight, and I hope that some day he may take the floor and give us one of his exalting and illuminating and statesmanlike speeches on this subject. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an elevator in administration building, contagious diseases hospital group, including installation, $12,500.

In all, $55,000.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 147, strike out all of line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And for other needed work and improvements; in all, $250,000."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the department has requested an appropriation of $560,000 for this purpose. The Committee on Appropriations, in the desire to show a spirit of economy, has eliminated all of the appropriation asked for, except $55,000, in lieu of the $560,000 requested.

About two weeks ago, on the floor of this House, the Immigration Committee that investigated conditions at Ellis Island reported conditions existing there that were indeed deplorable. They reported that hundreds upon hundreds of unfortunate immigrants who under our law are permitted to come have been obliged to be detained for several days at Ellis Island under most distressing conditions because of lack of officials to conduct the inspection. These poor people have no place to sleep, no place to eat. Notwithstanding that report and notwithstanding the request of the department for relief to bring about a better condition, to improve conditions at Ellis Island, the Committee on Appropriations have refused to listen to those appeals and have refused to appropriate a sum large enough to enable the officials at Ellis Island to bring about such improvements and to provide such facilities as shall result in giving these unfortunate people humane treatment.

A little while ago we increased the appropriation by $200,000 to enforce the prohibition act. I did not vote against it. Any appropriation that is needed for enforcement of the law I am for. At the same time I believe we should not practice false economy, especially in view of the fact that the moneys that are being collected from these immigrants far exceed the appropriations requested. It is for that reason that I offer this amendment to increase the appropriation by $200,000 to enable the officials to provide such additional space as is needed for these men and women and children who are obliged to remain upon this island for two or three days at a time, so that it will not be charged that we have no feeling whatever for these unfortunates whom we permit to come under our present immigration law. It is for that reason that I offer the amendment, hoping that the amount will be appropriated.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's amendment has this language in it—and for other needed work and improvement.

That would call into play the discretion that might be entertained by one officer as against that of another. There is no law which authorizes the department to spend money according to their idea of what is needed in work and improvement. This is attempted legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the language—

and for other needed work and improvement—

would mean that within previous authorizations or within the provisions of existing law, and that it would not permit anything that is unauthorized by law. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, there were a great many items at Ellis Island that were estimated for originally. At the hearings a great many of the items estimated were withdrawn or waived. It is true that they asked originally for a very large sum. For example, they asked for a granite-faced sea wall, $250,000. That is one of the necessary improvements that could be paid for out of the gentleman's appropriation. Then they proposed to make some change down there with regard to the heating of the building, through the substitution of oil burners for coal burners. One of the great menaces in New York Harbor to-day is through the pollution of the waters there by the emptying of the oil tanks on steamers that use oil for fuel. They empty thousands and millions of gallons of refuse oil into the harbor, and it is becoming one of the great menaces to the harbor. It is proposed here to have a Government oil-burning apparatus, at an estimated cost of $100,000. The committee felt that so far as some of these things were concerned that service could be cared for and work postponed to a later date without injury.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to make some reference to the fact that they had not a place to sleep or to eat there.

Mr. SABATH. That is what I said.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And that this was intended to provide additional accommodations for that purpose.

Mr. GOOD. If that is the case the amendment is surely subject to the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that they made no estimate for any such purpose as that?

Mr. GOOD. There was absolutely no suggestion for anything of that kind. There was serious complaint with regard to some of these buildings. They do not have elevator facilities. There is an elevator shaft in one building, and I think two elevator shafts in another building and an elevator in one.

We have provided here funds to install an elevator in the other building. We have taken care of the things which we believe are essential, perhaps not so generously as we should, but I am satisfied that there is no use at this time of agreeing to any such amendment as this, unless the gentleman wants to build that sea wall with a granite face, costing $250,000, to put in oil tanks costing $100,000, and to fill one of the spaces between the buildings, estimated to cost $100,000 more. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the estimates have been eliminated.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am not interested in building the granite sea wall, but I am interested in giving the people a larger number of beds and mattresses, so that when they are obliged to remain there for two or three days they will not be compelled to sleep on the floor, as has been charged by the House committee which has investigated conditions at Ellis Island during the summer months.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

For enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto; expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expenses of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation; refunding of head tax and maintenance bills upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $3,000,000: Provided, That the purchase, use, maintenance, and operation of horse and motor vehicles required in the enforcement of the immigration and Chinese-exclusion laws outside of the District of Columbia may be contracted for and the cost thereof paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of those laws, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe: Provided further, That not more than $12,000 of the sum appropriated herein may be expended in the purchase and maintenance of such motor vehicles: Provided further, That the appropriation herein made for the enforcement of the immigration laws shall be available for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 148, line 13, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,500,000."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, 87 per cent of all the immigrants arriving in America pass through Ellis Island. We have 1,800 employees for the entire service for the whole country. At Ellis Island we have just 300 of these 1,800 employees. The total number of inspectors on duty daily to examine the aliens arriving at Ellis Island and the ships' crews at the port of New York is 85. Up to six months ago we did not examine the crews. Eighteen thousand seamen, who arrive at the port of New York, have to be examined every week. The importance of examining these seamen is patent. Many arrived who deserted their ships and never returned to them. In that way they evaded the visé law or the immigration law. Examinations were, therefore, commenced of all these seamen on board these ships. This leaves practically only 42 inspectors to examine seventeen to eighteen thousand immigrants arriving weekly, and you ask these inspectors to do what? To examine the passports which have been viséed on the other side, to pass on the literacy tests of these aliens, to sit as special courts of inquiry, and to work seven days a week in very numerous cases for the great big sum of $1,200 a year up to $1,900 and $2,000 a year.

What is the condition along the Canadian border? You have 76 ports of entry and 23 doctors to examine aliens who propose to come into America. Twelve million people are passing annually across that border. The condition on the Mexican border is far worse. The department is unable to keep the force that it had five years ago or three years ago or two years ago, and I will tell you why. Up in Montreal the few inspectors whom we have there can not get along on the money which we pay them, and they are compelled to accept meals gratuitously given by the railroad company. This morning I was called outside here by a young lady whose husband is our inspector at Quebec. He can not manage to get along there on account of the same conditions.

Let me illustrate the distinctions existing in treatment and pay of Government employees. In the same building in Montreal the United States Public Health doctor who examines the arriving immigrants receives board and lodging at the expense of the Government plus the regular salary given him. The immigrant inspector is supposed to live on the munificent sum of $1,400 a year. Complaint is made that we can not retain competent men to enforce the immigration laws. You never will be able to enforce present or future immigration laws unless you provide a sufficient force and give the employees of that service a living salary. Mr. Chairman, because I believe in the enforcement of the laws as we pass them, I am asking for this increase from $3,000,000 to $3,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Under the gentleman's amendment, would the inspectors actually obtain any more salary? The only effect of it would be to provide for more inspectors.

Mr. SIEGEL. It would have a double effect. It would remedy this disgraceful condition which I found in Canada and which the House committee found at Ellis Island and at the other places. I will add that the House committee is unanimous in stating what these conditions are; it is not merely my own views.

Mr. HUSTED. Are not the salaries fixed by law?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; they are not. If we were to proceed and provide that the inspectors shall receive a certain amount and that there shall be so many inspectors, then the men who have been in the service 18, 20, and more years would know what the increased amount would be. We have not got such a budget system, however. We appropriate a lump sum and go to work and say that Ellis Island, where 87 per cent of all the arrivals come, shall have one-sixth of the entire force of men. A few moments ago there was some discussion here in regard to these conditions. If you could have seen the ceiling practically falling in, rooms which have not been painted for years; if you knew that there was not a towel for a single immigrant, and you do not even provide paper towels of any description whatever for the immigrant, you would wake up to what the conditions are. They speak of the amount of money coming in from immigration. Yes. Immigration more than pays for itself. Immigration has paid more than $5,000,000 during the last nine years above all the appropriations which Congress has made, and this Congress and no future Congress should try to make a revenue proposition out of immigrants coming into America. Yesterday before the Senate Immigration Committee the commissioner at New York, Mr. Wallis, described conditions at the island. He frankly confessed that unless he got an additional appropriation, unless something was done to retain the men who knew the work, you might say the men who guard America against anarchists and criminals who may desire to come in, men who are trained in determining swiftly who comes within the law and who does not, his whole machinery would fall and break down. And when he understood that $3,000,000 was the total amount estimated for the whole country he said, "You might as well get ready for some one else to take control and run things at the island."

At this very moment on account of the lack of inspectors you have ships in New York having thousands of passengers kept in the bay. I say it is unfair to the inspectors and other employees to work seven days a week, and it is unjust to work them 12 hours a day on the kind of a salary which we pay.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Senate will pass that bill which they have had for such a long time we would not need so much of this.

UMI

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes, we would. I say unless you have more help we will be unable to properly guard the Canadian border. Why, it is the easiest thing in the world to slip across that border, and what is more, it is not taken seriously. A smuggler who was indicted the other day for bringing a number of people across the border was brought to trial and was fined $25 and sent to jail for five days. I am pointing out these things here to-day because it is only right and proper that the Nation at large may know where the responsibility lies. Congress should not complain about conditions if it neglects to act. Congress should not be overcritical and expect too much without providing the machinery and dealing fairly and squarely with the men who have been in the Government employ for 25, 30, and 35 years. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the situation with reference to this appropriation is this: For a number of years there was appropriated about $2,450,000. This year there was an appropriation of $2,600,000, and on December 1 they had expended a little more than one-half that amount. The committee therefore thought it was wise at the present rate of expenditure to increase the appropriation, and we have recommended an increase of $400,000 for this service. Now, the gentleman says they propose to patrol the Canadian border. We now have 225 inspectors patrolling the Canadian border, and it is only proposed to add 50 additional inspectors to patrol that border, and they can do that with the increase granted. It is proposed, however, greatly to increase the salaries of this force. That may be necessary. I stated the other day that in all services there was a demand for increase in salaries and increase in wages.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I did not bother the gentleman. I have only five minutes, and I hope to conclude in that time.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman kindly tell why a separate budget is not proposed to be carried out for Ellis Island, where 87 per cent of all immigrants arrive, when even under this amendment of $3,000,000 they will not add a single——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows why it is not. The gentleman is on the committee which can provide by law what the salaries shall be and what the appropriation shall be for an immigration station. It is within the province of the committee to bring in that kind of legislation.

What we have done here is to appropriate so that we can compare the appropriations and expenditures with the previous year. This year we are increasing the appropriation $400,000. The gentleman complains about this. The bill also carries a provision out of which it is proposed to take in a lump sum $100,000 from the Health Service and use it for the Immigration Service. So next year they will have $3,100,000 for the service. I submit to the membership of this committee, if we do this, we should give an increase to all the Government employees in the small cities of the country as well in all parts of the country, and that we do not limit the increase to Ellis Island alone. If we were going to make an increase, let the committee of the House that has jurisdiction of the subject bring in a legislative bill readjusting the salaries in the Immigration Service and every other service, so that men who are employed in the North and the South, in the East as well as the West, will have their salaries measured by the same yardstick. When we came to this service we did what we had done with every other service, which was to provide for additional service where needed, but not for increases of salaries. More than that, I think it is unquestionably true there will be legislation, and there ought to be legislation, shutting off some of this immigration that is pouring into the country. [Applause.] And if we have that kind of legislation, if we have the kind of legislation that is needed, the amount we have given here is ample to administer this great service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] yield?

Mr. GOOD. I do.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to know if the gentleman knows of any other service in the country where men are working seven days in the week with the hours that these men are working?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes. I know of no service that is conducted by individuals or corporations in the country where the hours of service are as short as in the Government service, if that is what the gentleman wants to know.

Mr. SIEGEL. As to the hours in the Government service, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these clerks, stenographers, and inspectors are working seven days in the week and 12 hours a day.

Mr. GOOD. On the Canadian border?

Mr. SIEGEL. On the Canadian border and at Ellis Island. They are entitled not only to an increase but they should work only six days a week.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if in the event of the passage of this amendment could any portion of the amount be used for the purpose of increasing the salary of some of these inspectors?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; that is what was asked for. That is the reason the gentleman is offering it. He says it is to correct the deplorable condition with regard to the service, and that is what was understood when the estimate was under consideration, a very large increase.

Mr. SIEGEL. There are two reasons for it, one to increase the inspectors, which you have got to have immediately, and the other is to increase the salary of simply a few men, and relieve conditions that now exist.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And this question also. The committee increased the current appropriation $400,000?

Mr. GOOD. It did.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Is it proposed by those in charge to use any part of that for increasing the force at Ellis Island?

Mr. GOOD. That was the object of the committee, namely, not to increase the salary but to give them the increased force necessary to take care of the service.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I find myself agreeing in great measure with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL]. It was my privilege some few days ago to visit Ellis Island and to spend two days there. I never have seen a more conscientious, hard-working lot of Government employees than the employees at Ellis Island and in the barge office at the Battery. I know from my own observation something of the number of hours they repeatedly spend there under the new régime. I was told that men in the Customs Service, for example, when it is necessary to stay on board a ship to complete the examination long after the customary day's work is done, are permitted overtime allowance, to be paid by the steamship companies through the Government to the customs employees. I was told, also, that right alongside of the customs employees immigration inspectors will be found working in order to clear the ship. This is for the benefit of the immigrants and the steamship companies. Not one of the immigration inspectors is permitted this additional pay. Now, it seems to me that is wholly unjust, and that there is much that can be said for the position of the gentleman from New York in reference to the way the Immigration Service has been treated.

I went out into the bay and boarded an incoming liner and watched our inspectors, the medical and immigration inspectors, examine the immigrants as they filed into the room from the first and second cabins. I know how efficiently they tried to do their work, how conscientious and humane they were in the treatment of those immigrants. I later saw steerage passengers examined on the island. One thousand two hundred dollars a year to $2,000 a year is certainly not enough for men in that kind of Government service who have to live in the city of New York. It is outrageous that we should ask men to do that kind of work at the pay they receive. I marvel at their efficiency.

On account of the very few men employed and that are available in the physical examination of the second cabin on board ship and of the steerage at the island, they put the immigrants through just like that [indicating]. Now, they are all skilled, and, considering the speed with which they must work, they make a minimum of mistakes. With the time allowed them, I do not see how they can make a more efficient examination. And I believe that if the emergency immigration bill is not passed during this Congress we will have to increase materially the appropriation for the Immigration Service.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Are there very many of these men who are receiving only $1,200 a year?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I was told there were several hundred employees there on the island.

Mr. SNELL. I understand there are only 300.

Mr. SIEGEL. If the gentleman will permit, there are 85 inspectors there doing the work that years ago was done by the same number, 85. They have to do the same kind of work. Since the literacy test came in and the examinations and visés of passports additional work has been put upon them, and they have to examine all these crews now, which was not done six months ago.

Mr. SNELL. How much do these inspectors get?

Mr. SIEGEL. From $1,200 up, and they work seven days a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I find myself in full accord with the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] as to the inadequacy of the force of inspectors there. I, with other members of the committee, have given considerable attention to the conditions at Ellis Island. We have seen the work there. The force is inadequate. The work is not being properly done. They tell us they have not sufficient funds. I know that the public welfare requires that a proper inspection of immigrants be made.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Concerning these inspectors, about whom such a noise has been made, the gentleman is aware of the fact that there are 8 inspectors at $4,500; there are a number of others at $4,500 and at $4,800; quite a number at from $3,000 to $3,500; there are 6 at $3,000, 6 at $2,800, 12 at $2,500, 25 at $2,400, 5 at $2,340, 12 at $2,220, 96 at $1,980. They all get the bonus up to $2,700, and there are very few that get less than $1,200, and all of these get the bonus of $240.

Mr. SNELL. How many of them get $1,200?

Mr. GOOD. There are only 145 at present.

Mr. SNELL. I mean at Ellis Island and New York.

Mr. GOOD. These are not given in that way.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BOX. I can not yield further at this time.

Answering to the questions propounded by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], I do not know about the salaries paid to individual members of that force, but I, with other members of the committee, saw them at work. We saw that there were not enough men there to do the work. We learned from many sources that they worked long hours, seven days in the week. We were convinced—and I think the judgment was unanimous on the part of the committee—that the force is inadequate, and we also understood that many of them were not sufficiently paid. I think there is no mistake about it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I was mistaken. In looking through the estimates I find the lowest salary paid to inspectors is $1,380, who get, with the bonus, $1,620.

Mr. SIEGEL. The inspectors in charge that the gentleman from Iowa mentioned are scattered through the various cities of the country and on the Mexican and Canadian borders. They are called "inspectors in charge."

Mr. GOOD. Those are not inspectors in charge. The $2,500 and $3,000 inspectors are.

Mr. SIEGEL. They are in charge at a particular place, because we have all those places of entry in the United States. But at Ellis Island—and I am referring particularly to Ellis Island—the gentleman can not point out inspectors in charge. We have a Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island, who is receiving $6,000 a year. Some of these inspectors do not do one-fiftieth of the work that is done by the inspectors at Ellis Island. Eighty per cent of all the aliens that come to this country are handled there by 85 inspectors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. The matter which concerns the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and especially that which concerns me in this connection, is the fact that the force is inadequate, that they work 7 days in the week and 12 hours in a day, and all the evidence and the facts disclosed by a personal inspection there during several visits indicated that this very important business, affecting the welfare of the whole country, is not receiving proper attention and is not being provided for as it should be.

I do not know exactly where the fault lies. I usually vote for a policy of the strictest economy, but I hope the Congress will make the necessary provision for Ellis Island and other places like it, and thereby secure proper protection against the incoming of people who should be kept out.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Has that committee reported legislation or asked for legislation by bill for consideration fixing the salaries of these inspectors?

Mr. BOX. Not within the knowledge of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. Very well, then. In a great committee like this, where there is contradiction back and forth, can you fix with certainty how much they ought to have, when the committee having jurisdiction has not reported a bill fixing the salaries?

Mr. BOX. The gentleman from Texas is not a member of the party controlling the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, he is on the committee and favors this legislation. It seems to me that the committee itself should say how many inspectors there should be, and what they should have at Ellis Island and along the Canadian and Mexican borders. They should say what they should have by legislation.

Mr. BOX. Without dealing with the details as to salaries, I think the gentleman from Texas has made himself plain that he is not concerned with the schedule of salaries paid individuals. The point which impresses me and to which I ask the serious attention of the Members of the House is the question of the inadequacy of the force, the time they have to work, and the kind of work they are thereby caused to do. I am sure every one of my colleagues on that committee knows, as I know, that the immigration inspection work at Ellis Island and other points is not being properly done. They tell us that it is because adequate provision is not made. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, of course, if the House desires to increase this particular item in the bill by the sum of $500,000 for the purpose of increasing the salaries of the inspectors, that is its privilege; but the Committee on Appropriations have endeavored to act consistently in these matters. We have refrained from increasing salaries, feeling that no salaries should be increased in the appropriation bills until after the Congress has considered the reclassification bill. [Applause.]

As was suggested a while ago, if the salaries of these inspectors are too low, then the committee which has legislative jurisdiction of this subject, the Committee on Immigration, should report a bill and have it considered in accordance with proper legislative procedure. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] states, the committee have recommended an increase of $400,000 in this item. The current appropriation under this head carries $2,600,000. That item has been increased in this bill to $3,000,000, or an increase of $400,000, which, it should be stated, includes the former appropriation for deportation of anarchists; but which should be sufficient to take care of the objection urged by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX] and others with reference to the inadequacy of the force, if there be such an inadequacy. But I wish to submit to you this proposition: This House passed a bill the other day which undertook to limit or practically to restrict immigration for a certain period of time. That bill is now pending in the Senate. If it passes that body and becomes a law, then I submit in all reason that the Government will not require that great force of inspectors to which the gentleman refers, and therefore I think this matter should be permitted to go over, and that we should wait and see just what the Senate is going to do with that immigration bill. But whether they pass it or not, I for my part want to protest against this attempted action here upon the floor of this House to increase the salaries of some of these inspectors by a lump-sum arrangement, giving the administrative authority the right to increase them without taking into consideration the salaries of other inspectors and other employees who are not increased in this bill, and estimates for whose increases were refused by the committee. I think we should be consistent in our action.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

UMI

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if this increase in this bill, of $400,000, is for the purpose of increasing the force at Ellis Island?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; it is not for the specific purpose of increasing the force at Ellis Island, but it is appropriated in a lump sum for the use of the Bureau of Immigration.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Not for the purpose of increasing salaries?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This increase was allowed by the committee for the purpose of giving them an opportunity, if they saw fit, to increase their force. As a matter of fact, so far as their salaries are concerned, it has been stated that there is no man who receives less than $1,380, and he receives, in addition, the $240 bonus, and will receive it during the next fiscal year.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Is it the understanding of the gentleman from Tennessee that the increase provided in the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] would be for the purpose of increasing salaries?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know for what it might be used; but the gentleman from New York stated that he introduced it for that purpose, and I assume that it would be so used, because, of course, it would be available for that purpose if they saw fit to use it in that way.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. There is no question but what this additional force is needed at Ellis Island. If it is for the purpose of increasing the force, I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that the Committee on Immigration would have jurisdiction to bring in a bill providing for the salaries of the various employees in that department. He will remember that about 10 years ago the power was taken away from the committee as well as the separate fund which up to that time was used by the department to carry on the work at Ellis Island. In other words, up to 10 years ago the head tax collected at Ellis Island and other ports was permitted to be used by the Commissioner of Immigration for the purpose of defraying the expenses of that service; but in the Sixty-second Congress, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, that was changed, and the appropriative power was taken away from the Immigration Committee, and the department was required by the act to turn over the head tax to the general fund, and ever since the appropriations were made for the service by the Appropriation Committee. Since that time I believe that more than $5,000,000 has been collected through the head tax over and above the amount expended by the Immigration Service. During the last four years there was no immigration, and consequently the amount appropriated was sufficient; but in the last six months—because prior to that, due to the war, the naturalized United States citizens have been unable to bring their families over to this country—immigration has increased, but the appropriation has not, and nothing has been done to enable the officials of Ellis Island to cope with the situation. I think it is manifestly unfair that we should make money out of these unfortunate men, women, and children who are coming to our shores. There should be no desire to make money out of them. The amount which we exact from them should be utilized to give them the proper accommodations and facilities when they arrive, so that they shall not be obliged to remain at Ellis Island for two or three days under the deplorable conditions that have been described by the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I am not interested in any of the employees, but I believe they have done their duty. Invariably when anyone asks for fair treatment of Government employees residing in New York or Chicago, some people are always ready to insinuate that those employees are being overpaid. Some gentlemen who live in the rural districts do not know that it costs from 50 to 100 per cent more to live in the large cities than it does to live in the country, and consequently they must of necessity receive larger compensation if they are expected to live, and not merely to exist.

It is not only because I believe that these men are entitled to fair compensation that I think this amendment should prevail. The main reason why I favor this amendment is because if we give the department a sufficient number of inspectors, examiners, and other needed help it will enable them to properly and efficiently enforce the present immigration laws. I am satisfied there would be no possible excuse for the present pending immigration legislation. I maintain that the present immigration laws are stringent enough and if proper inspection were had that no undesirables could possibly come into the United States. It is for that reason I am asking that this amendment prevail, so that the department shall have a sum large enough to properly enforce the present laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGEE rose.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to say that as a member of the subcommittee which drafted this bill I think that the committee has been eminently fair and reasonable in what it has done in respect to Ellis Island and in respect to the immigration stations and Immigration Service generally. It will be apparent to all that we could not go into the question of increasing salaries here and there. In the first place, we have no authority to do so, and, in the next place, it would not be just and equitable to the employees in the other departments. My observation has been that the poorest paid Government employees are the custodian employees who are paid from the appropriations made for the Treasury Department, and who work side by side in Federal buildings with other employees paid from appropriations for the Post Office Department who severally receive from five to seven hundred dollars per year more.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman state whether the committee in this appropriation made provision for increasing the force of inspectors?

Mr. MAGEE. That is the reason we appropriated an additional $400,000.

Mr. HUSTED. It is intended by the committee that that shall be used to increase the number of these inspectors, so that there will be adequate provision made?

Mr. MAGEE. We endeavored to provide for reasonable increases to meet their demands. The other poorest-paid employees of the Government called to my attention are the employees of the National Training School for Boys. The custodian employees in Federal buildings and the employees of the National Training School for Boys are, in my judgment, discreditably underpaid. But we can not relieve them as members of the Committee on Appropriations. You have had a commission appointed on reclassification of salaries. That commission has made a report. The thing for Congress to do is to act reasonably, justly, and equitably on that report and readjust salaries. We can not do it.

So far as the upkeep of immigrant stations is concerned, numerous items were presented to the committee. Those items we may designate as A, B, and C, A comprising the items that are most pressing. We took up the most pressing items. On page 147 of the bill there is an appropriation for new service pumps for water supply, including installation, $11,000.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. I have not the time. The gentleman, I think, misrepresented the attitude of the committee, and it is my intention to set the committee right. I am not going to stand for that from anybody. The committee has been fair and reasonable, and it deserves fair treatment. There is another item which we allowed, of the class A kind, for the renewal of plumbing equipment, Island No. 1, including installation, $20,000. They claimed that this item is pressing, and we allowed it. Then there is the item for an elevator in the administration building, contagious diseases hospital group, including installation, $12,500, which we allowed as a pressing item, and we gave them, as has been suggested, $400,000 additional to take care of additional employees if they choose to get them.

I want to say to my colleagues in the House that, in my opinion, the committee has been fair, and it has done the best it could under the circumstances. Of course, all of these employees would like to get more money. I have not seen any employees in any department who are satisfied with the salaries which they are receiving. I do not believe the Government could satisfy them. If you increase their salaries to-day, they will be back here next year and demand further increases. That is human, and I do not complain about that; but the point I make is that the Committee on Appropriations can not go into this question of increasing salaries. That must be determined in some other way. You must treat all the employees in all these different departments alike. You can not increase the salaries in one department and then pay no attention to the demands of the employees in some other department. You have the machinery with which to do it, and in my judgment Congress ought to act. I think that the employees of the Government ought to be reasonably paid, but the salaries of the different employees in the different departments should be fixed and determined along the lines of justice, fairness, and equality to all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIEGEL) there were—ayes 21, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nothing in the proviso contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 3, 1917, relative to augmenting salaries of Government officials from outside sources shall prevent receiving reimbursements for services of immigration officials incident to the inspection of aliens in foreign contiguous territory, and such reimbursement shall be credited to the appropriation, "Expenses of regulating immigration."

Mr. SIEGEL. I agree with my able and distinguished colleague [Mr. MAGEE] that the salaries of all of the employees doing the same kind of work should be equalized, but Congress does not seem to think so because it passed a law by which the customs employees working side by side with the immigration employees may receive from the steamship companies an amount for overwork and overhours, and, therefore, despite what my colleague may say upon the subject, we have those two sets of employees working side by side receiving different kinds of salaries. I know that he is by temperament and judgment always endeavoring to do what is right and fair.

The Committee on Appropriations has been repeatedly urged to take a trip to New York and go over to Ellis Island and look over the buildings and see the conditions under which not only employees are compelled to work but the condition of the building in which we are keeping each night approximately 3,000 immigrants. That condition is aggravated and made worse by the fact that when so-called anarchists and those who might become a public charge are brought from all over the country for deportation, they are sent to Ellis Island and not to the other ports from which they might just as well be sent back to Europe. They occupy the space which they never should be permitted to occupy, and for which Ellis Island was never equipped.

On account of these indescribable conditions and because of the fact that inspectors do resign and get salaries of $3,000, $3,500, and $4,000 a year from private concerns, such as occurred the other day in New York, we urge changes in this condition and will continue to urge them until Congress wakes up from the trance in which it appears to be. We are repeatedly told that the men who work in this service are receiving a decent living wage when such is not the fact. They are not receiving a decent living wage and you will lose the most competent men in the service, and by the action which we have taken to-day we are bound to lose those who have been in the service rendering a service which has been efficient and conscientious. They deserve the thanks of every good citizen who appreciates hard working, Government employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization, provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., vol. 37, p. 736), and May 9, 1918 (Stat. L., vol. 40, pp. 542–548, inclusive), including not to exceed $50,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street car fare on official business at official stations, together with per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for such per diem together with actual necessary traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; telegrams, verifications of legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; not to exceed $13,400 for rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia where suitable quarters can not be obtained in public buildings; carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 765), and in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil act of June 12, 1917; and for mileage and fees to witnesses subpœnaed on behalf of the United States, the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $525,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the compensation of assistants to clerks of United States courts.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 150, line 25, after the word "prescribe" strike out "$525,000" and insert "$550,000."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the conditions in regard to naturalization in the city of New York, as far as providing sufficient efficient machinery for aliens to become either declarants or citizens, has reached a point where it is most highly deplorable. Only a week ago the clerk of the supreme court and of the county of New York had to announce that he had to shut down for over a week accepting applications, because the Government of the United States, through its Naturalization Bureau, had failed to provide sufficient money. The responsibility rests upon Congress and not upon that bureau, however. It may be of some interest to the House to learn what the Naturalization Bureau has been doing. Let me read the following statistics:

Now, I am asking for an increase here of $25,000. This is another branch of the service which pays for itself. In other words, the Treasury has profited above all appropriations close to $800,000. Now, it seems to me that it is useless for us here to complain that aliens are not becoming citizens and constantly condemn them when we do not provide sufficient clerks and judges for that purpose. Now, I am referring particularly to the problem as it is in New York City; the problem in other places probably can be adequately handled by the amount which is to be appropriated here, but the New York newspapers, in editorials and news columns, have repeatedly called attention to the condition which I am describing here. I would like the House to bear in mind also that when every additional person becomes a citizen $4 additional goes into the Treasury of the United States. It is not a losing venture financially if we are to look at it from that angle, but we should look at it from a greater and bigger angle—namely, from the angle of incorporating into our citizenship those who desire and are fit to become citizens. I do not know of any more disgraceful sight than to see a large number of people who are applying either as declarants or for final papers being turned away and having to come back again and again because we do not provide sufficient clerks and judges. I recognize that there can not be permanent relief had in New York City until a distinct and separate court to deal exclusively with naturalization is provided for the metropolis. My amendment would help to relieve matters for the present.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will yield, with pleasure.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Are we to understand from the gentleman's very clear statement that immigration is coming in so fast it entails more clerical work than can be accomplished by the force now maintained?

Mr. SIEGEL. There is a difference between immigration and naturalization, as the two are managed by separate bureaus.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman did not make that distinction. But is it a fact that in New York City you have a great body of men who have enjoyed the privileges of this country for years without taking out their first papers?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; that is incorrect. This takes in all classes, people who have arrived in recent years and filed a declaration of intention and those who have filed applications for final papers——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Taking that statement with the other it means aliens or persons who have filed their intention papers are now seeking to complete or to begin the process of citizenship. Is it possible that Manhattan Island would have so many of these people that the clerks of the courts could not possibly handle them——

Mr. SIEGEL. The gentleman must remember that our judges are busy with other litigation. In addition, I refer simply to New York City, which means 6,000,000 of people, or one-seventeenth of the country.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is there such an enormous population in that situation now applying for citizenship that the ordinary clerical service of the courts can not accommodate them?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; the truth of the matter is this complaint has been going on for several years. During the war period we naturalized a large number of men from New York City and other places in camps and which the courts of New York did not handle. This condition of affairs is not new. It is useless to urge alien men and women to become American citizens when Members in Congress, who know the necessity for additional clerks and judges, can not get favorable action by an additional appropriation of the small sum of $25,000. To say the least, it is highly discouraging to those who are doing their utmost to have men and women become real American citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will say to the gentleman from New York that an increase of $25,000 would do very little toward improving the naturalization situation in the courts of New York City, and before that can be done, in my judgment, some legislation will have to be enacted—a bill will have to be brought in by the Committee on Immigration. This is a very deplorable situation. While on a trip to Ellis Island I sat in one division of the Supreme Court of New York on what was known as naturalization day, and I saw there 126 final judgments rendered in naturalization cases in 94 minutes.

Here is a man receiving the most important judgment that can be rendered in his favor, one making him an American citizen, in less than one minute, and that which should be a solemn judicial process becomes a farce.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not fair to say that a very thorough investigation of all the circumstances of each individual case has been made by an official duly appointed for that purpose before these men come into court?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. That investigation is supposed to have been made, but the facts developed through this proceeding convinced me that it had not been thorough. And, besides that, this process of naturalization ought to be something more like a solemn court proceeding. The applicants file in, the witnesses that are necessary are with them, and often judgment is rendered before they are through with the witnesses. The court was doing the best it could under the circumstances, but I do not believe that can be remedied until additional naturalization courts are established at the central points, like Chicago, New York, and other places where there are large numbers to be naturalized.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman that I have had a good deal of experience in trying naturalization cases in my own State, and although the preliminary examination would show the applicant could speak the English language and understood our institutions, I found on examination they did not understand the English language and did not know what a single institution of this Government meant to them.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. The situation in New York is that the courts are overwhelmed, and it is impossible for a judge to even make any kind of an investigation as to whether the examination by the inspectors has been thorough.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does that indicate to you anything with regard to the rate with which people were coming into the country originally? Is there not sometimes a back up and fill that we are trying to get rid of that shows that there has been an undue immigration?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I do not think there is any question, but there is, too, a greater volume of immigrants coming into this country now, and that for a number of years such has been the case. That is a question the House has acted upon, and the bill is now in the Senate. But this question of naturalization is one of great importance, and I do not believe it can be handled until there is some comprehensive legislation upon the question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Has the gentleman compared the number of people going away from the country with the number going away before the war?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes; I have made the comparison. I was not discussing the question of immigration, but the question of naturalization. That situation is very serious, and I do not believe $25,000 will add anything to the efficiency of that service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, relative to the naturalization branch of the work done in New York, I wish to concur in the opinion expressed by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON]. In line with the remarks made by him as to the manner in which aliens are naturalized or granted the rights of citizenship, a personal observation of that work, coupled with an investigation of the matter inquired about by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], will convince any thoughtful citizen that the work is not being properly done. When I saw those 125 men and the 250 witnesses accompanying them march past the judge in 90 minutes I saw that no investigation was being made, or, at least, no substantial one. My hope then turned to the investigation that had been made prior to that. I went to the naturalization offices and talked with the inspectors. I went into the extent of their investigation, and found that the gentleman from Louisiana does not overstate the case when he says that that is wholly insufficient.

Often the applicant reports to the naturalization officer, brings two witnesses, and the most formal inquiry is made, a very brief one—something almost as brief as that in the court. The naturalization rooms are crowded. There is not sufficient room for men to sit. A perfect throng keeps coming, there is disorder, lack of dignity, and a lack of thoroughness. Everything speaks of haste and a disregard of the importance of that solemn proceeding. The oath is administered in a hurried, muttered whisper that few understand and apparently nobody takes seriously.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is not that due mostly to the manner in which the law is administered by the officers of the Government rather than in the law itself? I have seen the law administered in a manner that made it impressive and where it was a thorough examination.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman is perhaps correct about that. I have had connection with some such cases myself. I am speaking particularly of the situation as it exists in New York, and so far as my limited study and observation have gone there is a breakdown there, due partly, perhaps chiefly, to congested conditions and partly to a general disposition to regard the whole matter slightly. The force of inspectors is insufficient and the number of men to be investigated is too large. The work can not be properly done when ten times as much of it is being offered as can be performed by the force available. Then, I fear few concerned take the situation or proceeding seriously. I am afraid the aliens acquiring the rights of citizenship do not. I fear the officers administering the law do not. It does not appear that the Congress realizes the magnitude or the importance of the work. I wish I could feel that the American people knew the situation and realized what momentous issues depend on what is now so lightly regarded.

I am inclined to think that an increase of $25,000 in the appropriation, without a realization of the seriousness of the situation and a corresponding resolution to correct it, would do no good. Whatever Congress may do with the proposition now before the House, I sincerely hope that Congress will give its attention to two things: First, to an arrangement providing for the proper inspection of immigrants upon their admission. It is not now being done, and no Member of this House will think so when he observes it. And, next, the proceeding by which men are granted the rights of citizenship, including the preliminary investigation inquired about, is almost a farce. It is formal; it is perfunctory; it is hasty; it is not at all in keeping with the very great importance of what is involved. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to admit that it is absolutely impossible for the department to carry out such investigation that might meet with the approval of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX] or the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON]. But that is not the fault of the department. I know that in the city of Chicago and in the entire district the officials there do investigate and examine every applicant, but it is absolutely impossible, with the few inspectors and examiners which they have, to give each and every applicant such investigation and examination that they should have. Nevertheless they are endeavoring to do the best they can. I believe the committee has erred again in cutting down the appropriation requested by the department.

Mr. Chairman, let me read the statement of Mr. Shoemaker in the hearings at the time he testified before the Appropriation Committee, when he urged that the appropriation for that bureau should be increased:

> During the fiscal year there were 166,925 civilian petitions filed in the various courts throughout the country. That is an increase of approximately 65 per cent over the civilian petitions filed in the preceding year, which totaled 107,000. That does not include the soldiers or the cases where alien soldiers in the Army were naturalized under the act of May, 1918. There were over 51,000 of those certificates issued to alien soldiers, from the figures I have been able to obtain. There was an increase this year in the filing of petitions anywhere from 20 to 36 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, this will disprove the charge that the aliens do not desire to become American citizens. They do desire to become American citizens, and when they go day by day into our courts and plead that they should be admitted to citizenship, they are obliged to come there with their witnesses twice and three times, and four times even, before an opportunity is given them to be heard.

I think it is manifestly unfair that we should profit or make money out of these applicants. I think that the fees that are being collected are sufficiently large to warrant this House in being liberal and appropriating the funds needed to properly investigate and examine and naturalize these aliens who are very anxious and desirous to become American citizens.

Now, as to the legislation, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] knows that we have prepared a bill, a naturalization bill, which is now on the calendar. It has been amended, and I believe the committee will have a chance and opportunity to bring it on the floor of the House and pass it; and if we do so, as I expect we will, it will be absolutely necessary to have additional help to eliminate these deplorable conditions that exist in the large cities in order that an opportunity may be given these men to become American citizens. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amount usually appropriated before for this service was from $250,000 to $275,000 for a number of years. This year we have recommended $525,000. Here again there was a demand for increased pay, and there was a demand for a service that I think Congress ought to pass upon and upon which there ought to be legislation that more clearly defines the right to carry on educational work. I doubt the wisdom of the National Government carrying on schools at various places, stuffing people overnight in order that they can pass the examinations and become citizens. At least before I want to vote for a large appropriation for that purpose I would want to hear the discussion on the legislative need of it.

Now, what are the facts? When the officer came before us he said, "We are running within our appropriation this year." They have all the money that is necessary. If they are slowing down, it is not because they do not have sufficient funds. The officer who came asking for an increase in the appropriation said they were running within their appropriation, and they have had $525,000 for this service this year, and we have given them the same amount in the bill for the next year, which, it seems to me, is liberal. Until we enlarge the scope of that work, if Congress desires to enlarge that scope, I think it is ample, and therefore I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. SIEGEL) there were—ayes 5, noes 36.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES HOUSING CORPORATION.

Salaries: For officers, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia necessary to collect and account for the receipts from the sale of properties and the receipts from the operation of unsold properties of the United States Housing Corporation, the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, property commandeered by the United States through the Department of Labor, and to collect the amounts advanced to transportation facilities and others, $70,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum, and only one person may be employed at that rate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$70,000" in line 12, page 151.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 151, line 12, strike out "$70,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, during the last session of this Congress this House passed a bill to wind up the business of the Housing Corporation. At that time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] filed a report reciting that all that this institution had been doing lately was to raise salaries, and cited one it raised from $5,000 to $9,996 a year. That bill passed the House and went to the Senate, where no action was taken upon it. The Senate, however, passed a similar measure, practically identical with the House bill so far as winding up the business of the United States Housing Corporation was concerned, and stopping the expense of it. That measure came to the House, but the House has never done anything with it. So we find the House and the Senate practically agreed in trying to wind up the business of this Housing Corporation, and each passing a bill of its own to do so, and yet no agreement reached between the two, and the extravagant Housing Corporation still exists. In the face of this we find the Committee on Appropriations providing for $1,040,000 more expense for this Housing Corporation for the next fiscal year.

In other words, they recommend appropriations amounting to $70,000, $15,000, $10,000, $35,000, $960,000, and $10,000, making a total of $1,040,000. The committee seem to have been almost as extravagant in their computation as the Housing Corporation has been in spending money, because in computing these sums they have made an error of $60,000 by saying, "in all, $1,100,000"; when, as a matter of fact, all of the items aggregate a total of only $1,040,000. The proviso in this paragraph seeks to limit the highest salary to be paid to $5,000 and states that only one such salary shall be paid. Well, why make that limitation unless they go further, because under the same authority that has been exercised heretofore by this Housing Corporation they could raise the salary of every other employee up to $4,999 under the provisions of this act, and it is shown that they have done such things heretofore, because in the report filed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] on the 30th day of July, 1919, committee report No. 181, it is shown that this Housing Corporation raised the salary of H. M. Webster from $5,000 a year at one fell swoop to $9,996 a year.

Mr. GOOD. Not out of this appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. But out of other appropriations; and if they can do it out of one appropriation they can carry on the same kind of procedure in another appropriation to which they have access. That is the reason I want to call your attention to the fact that it is a continual waste to keep up this matter. Why on earth can we not get rid of it if we want to do it? The House has voted to get rid of it, the Senate has voted to get rid of it, and yet we permit it to go on year after year. We continue to appropriate $1,000,000 for handling this business. I think if gentlemen are going to carry out their promises they should get rid of this institution and save this million dollars annually for the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is not a pro forma amendment. It is a substantive amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. It was intended as a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., Government hotel for Government workers: For maintenance, operation, and management of the hotel and restaurants therein, including replacement of equipment, personal services, and printing, $960,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum, and only one person may be employed at that rate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what revenues have been received from these Government hotels for Government workers during the last year, if he knows.

Mr. GOOD. The receipts will a little more than equal the expenses. It was necessary a while back to increase the charges, and now, because of a decline in the cost of supplies, they have reduced the price and the hotel is running a little ahead of the actual expenditure.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is, of this sum of $910,000?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, it does not cover the overhead expense?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it covers everything but a return on the investment. I think the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds brought in a resolution providing that it should not be run at a profit, and the receipts are just about enough to pay the expenses.

Mr. MACGREGOR. According to the testimony it was costing them $100,000 more than the income.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, that is immaterial in a big Government affair.

Mr. GOOD. That was not the testimony.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Why is it necessary to have so many employees—500 employees to take care of 1,875 occupants of these houses over there?

Mr. SIEGEL. That is not many in comparison with other hotels with which the gentleman is familiar. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. We are trying to get rid of these hotels and trying to get rid of all these Government activities of this kind.

Mr. MACGREGOR. One person to take care of three people.

Mr. GOOD. The committee called attention to that fact and criticized it, and I understand they have made a change in the management. How much they are increasing the efficiency there and reducing the cost I can not state, except they said that they had been running behind and had run behind at one time about $100,000—and the gentleman is correct in that respect—but they have increased the rates enough to make that up, and they say that with that increase of rates they are able to break even.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. After all, does not the gentleman think that this experiment has been worth about what it has cost, for it shows that even in running a hotel the Government can not do it as economically as a private individual?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I think it was worth something to explode that socialistic dream.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It takes 500 employees to accommodate 1,800 guests.

Mr. FESS. Can not we safely reduce that number?

Mr. GOOD. If they can reduce it, then, of course, there would be a corresponding reduction in the charges down there. A year or two ago we had to appropriate a large sum for a deficiency for this very hotel, and we criticized the large number of employees. I think the criticism was beneficial in bringing about some reduction.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Down by the navy yard we have about 14 buildings equipped with a splendid restaurant, all equipped. What is being done with those?

Mr. GOOD. I supposed that those had been sold. At least they attempted to sell them. They are not operating and never have operated that restaurant.

Mr. BLANTON. And they never have had an occupant in them since they were built.

Mr. GOOD. No; they were not completed when the armistice was signed.

Mr. MACGREGOR. They sold the furniture and then refurnished them.

Mr. GOOD. They did some foolish things, but I do not think they did that.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Yes, they did.

Mr. GOOD. We wanted to close this hotel, but there was a great deal of criticism on behalf of a good many good women throughout the country, and I understand that the department decided that the hotel should be continued for the present.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance, unsold property: To maintain and repair houses, buildings, and improvements which are unsold, $10,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses account of property sold: To pay taxes, fire insurance, special assessments, and other utility, municipal, State, and county charges or assessments unpaid by purchasers and which have been assessed against property in which the United States Housing Corporation has an interest, and to defray expenses incident to foreclosing mortgages, conducting sales under deeds of trust, or reacquiring title or possession of real property under default proceedings, including attorney fees, witness fees, court costs, charges, and other miscellaneous expenses, $20,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the words "fire insurance," which were inadvertently inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this item is offered to recover several hundred thousands of dollars that can be recovered by making this change in the law. It is subject to a point of order. Nobody has made it, and I shall not raise the point myself that the point of order comes too late if it be now made. I think I ought to bring this matter before the committee. The situation is this: During the war the Housing Corporation was authorized to use a part of the $60,000,000 appropriated for housing to extend street railway lines, electric lines, and to extend sewers, gas mains, water mains, and everything of that kind. There was a great deal of extension of sewers and of water mains and gas mains, under a contract with certain cities, that the cities would pay the amount back. Property was acquired by the United States Housing Corporation, and in a great many instances the cities commenced to levy taxes on such property. It is true that they have no right to levy taxes on property belonging to the United States, even though the legal title be in a corporation, but the cities now refuse to take over the water mains and the sewers and gas mains in which we have a very large investment unless the Government pays the taxes that have been assessed. In one case the investment for sewers, and so forth, is very large, whereas the taxes amount to only a few thousand dollars. By paying the taxes in the settlement we will make a large collection of a questionable asset. It seemed to the committee that by permitting the payment of these taxes, which, as I recall, amount in all to less than $50,000, scattered throughout many cities, the Government can recoup something over a million dollars. Therefore it seemed that we ought to bring the matter before the Committee of the Whole and let that committee decide.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What is the amount carried in the amendment proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. GOOD. Twenty thousand dollars. I think the Housing Corporation did a very foolish thing. For example, in my State where they had some houses at or near Davenport, they sold the properties on a basis of a cash payment of 10 per cent and took a mortgage, but parted with possession to the title. Under the laws of Iowa it is very difficult to dispossess a person in a foreclosure proceeding respecting real property for a period of much less than three years, and usually more time is required. Before the deeds can pass the court costs must be paid, and this is to take care of instances of that kind.

Mr. GARD. I gathered from the reading of the amendment that this had to do with certain expenses for foreclosing mortgages and things of that kind.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; largely sheriff and court costs in foreclosure proceedings, where the Government foreclosed mortgages.

Mr. GARD. I was wondering if that was not taken care of in the first paragraph where $70,000 is appropriated for salaries of officers and clerks and employees.

Mr. GOOD. That is for the District of Columbia expenses.

Mr. GARD. Oh, this is for property outside of the District.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations made herein under the title "United States Housing Corporation" shall be available for expenditure by the agency or agencies of the public service having jurisdiction of the affairs of the said corporation;

In all, $1,100,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations heretofore made and available for expenditure by the United States Housing Corporation shall be expended for the purposes for which appropriations are made herein.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed to correct——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has already been authorized to correct all totals.

Mr. BLANTON. The total here is incorrect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to foster, promote, to develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, to advance their opportunities for profitable employment by maintaining a national system of employment offices and to coordinate the public employment offices throughout the country by furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and by maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official station, together with their per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and printing and binding, $250,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is unauthorized by law, and it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I realize what has been done in regard to a similar item, but the language has been recast, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to the language, stated briefly, of the act creating the Department of Labor where it provides, among other things:

The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States; to improve their working conditions; to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

The language of this section provides:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to foster, promote, to develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States; to improve their working conditions; to advance their opportunities for profitable employment by maintaining a national system of employment offices; and to coordinate the public employment offices—

And so forth.

I realize there is some question in regard to cooperation with States and State institutions and other employment offices throughout the country. It is a question that was passed upon by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] two years ago, but the language has been changed since that time. The committee a year ago, in framing this language, tried to bring the matter within the provisions of the act creating the department.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does the gentleman think there is no limitation on the power to appropriate at all, that any appropriation would be in order just so it was preceded by the words of the organic act? Now, this provides for sending men down in the various States, establish offices down there, gather up information, gather up the employees, and send them from one State to the other.

Mr. GOOD. We do that under this act. For instance, the department collects information with regard to prices, and so forth, and that is all hinged on the provision of the organic act. The Department of Labor has a good many men traveling over the country, more of them, I think, in all the departments than we ought to have. I am largely in sympathy with the gentleman, but this amount of $250,000 is a reduction of the amount asked, because the committee did not feel that we could grant the appropriation asked for, that that would be clearly subject to the point of order, but that possibly this would get by.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Why would the $14,000,000 asked for some years ago——

Mr. GOOD. A couple of years ago.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Be subject to a point of order any more than $250,000?

Mr. GOOD. Well, there was a scheme then much broader than this, and held out of order by the Chair. We tried to narrow it both in scope and in the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Chair will pay some attention to the precedents of the House. The Chair will remember three years ago——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BLANTON. When practically the same amendment was offered, the same provision was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] in practically the same language——

The CHAIRMAN. To save the time of the committee, the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Did I understand the Chair was ready to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GALLIVAN. With a very short debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard against the point of order?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not if the Chair is ready to rule; not if the Chair has made up his mind. I do not want to take up the time of any man, but the Chair has made up his mind pretty quickly.

Mr. BLANTON. He is a parliamentarian.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appreciates that some points of order can be determined a little quicker than others, especially when the precedents are immediately at hand and the Chair has had his attention directed to the fact that this identical language was in the bill which was under consideration on the 11th day of May, 1920, when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] was Chairman of the committee and a point of order was made. The point of order was sustained on the ground that the language of the paragraph went beyond the authority of the act creating the Department of Labor, and that previously a similar paragraph, somewhat broader in scope, however, was included in a bill under consideration in a previous Congress and was held out of order by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], at that time Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and in view of those precedents the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GALLIVAN) there were—ayes 4, noes 52.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LANGLEY, for three days, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. DENISON, for one week, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. I make the same request.

Mr. BOX. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the necessity for meeting at 11 o'clock?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it may take the entire day to dispose of this bill, and I am in hopes we will dispose of it to-morrow.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand that there is a rule to be brought out to-morrow which will take some additional time for consideration?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There probably will be. The rule has been asked for by the committee, and the request has been concurred in by the members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. GARD. If there is to be time given to the presentation of the rule, I am not constrained to object. If there is not, I do not think we gain anything by meeting at 11 o'clock. There is never anyone here at 11 o'clock. I do not desire to stand in the way.

Mr. ALMON. It is not the purpose of the Committee on Rules to vote on the rule until this bill is disposed of?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Until the bill has been completed, and then go back to the item.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman says that they are going to wait until the completion of the bill before presenting the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is my understanding of the request; that is, that the reading of the bill shall be concluded and then to rise and go back to the item. I have no idea when the rule will be considered.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will yield, there is this situation, and I shall not object. But there are some important hearings in the morning, and I should feel inclined to object, although I should not take that responsibility, unless we were assured we would not be interrupted in those hearings until later on in the day. The gentleman suggests he will bring in the rule later.

Mr. MONDELL. The rule will come later.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit, the rule will come later, but we do not know how much later. The question of how long it will take to consider this bill renders the hour the rule will come up rather uncertain.

Mr. MONDELL. I know the gentleman will be in reach, as will all the other gentlemen.

Mr. GARD. Owing to the uncertainty, I shall have to object.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 8.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members. Those in favor of the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 244, nays 14, not voting 172, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will please resume the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Office of Public Printer: Public Printer, $6,000; purchasing agent, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,750; accountant, $2,500; assistant purchasing agent, $2,500; cashier and paymaster, $2,500; clerk in charge of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the Capitol, $2,500; private secretary, $2,500; assistant accountant, $2,250; chief timekeeper, $2,000; paying teller, $2,000; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 10 of class 4, 13 of class 3, 12 of class 2, 10 of class 1, 15 at $1,000 each, 6 at $900 each; paymaster's guard, $1,000; doorkeeper—chief $1,200, 1 $1,200, 5 assistants at $1,000 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; delivery men—chief $1,200, 5 at $950 each; telephone switchboard operator, $720; 3 assistant telephone switchboard operators, at $600 each; 7 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $148,590.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 156, line 9, after the word "Capitol," strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 156, line 9, after the word "Capitol," strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in all of the force of employees in this Government there is not anyone more faithful and efficient than this clerk, and while other salaries have been raised according to deserts in many cases, and not so much so in others, his has not been made commensurate with the value of the service he gives to the country.

I submit the matter without further argument. I think his salary ought to be increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Patent Office: For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, prints, and labels, exclusive of illustrations; and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indices, $585,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the chairman if there is any law authorizing the appropriation of $585,000 for printing this weekly?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes. There is law for printing the weekly issues of patents.

Mr. BLANTON. And the provisions of this paragraph come within the provisions of that law and are authorized by it?

Mr. GOOD. Out of this they print not only the patents but the designs, and they sell a great many copies.

Mr. BLANTON. All of that is in addition to the original law?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no. It is all authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, all this paragraph is authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and fixtures, typewriters, carpets, labor-saving machines and accessories, time stamps, adding and numbering machines, awnings, curtains, books of reference, directories, books, miscellaneous office and desk supplies; paper; twine, glue, envelopes, postage, car fares, soap, towels, disinfectants, and ice; drayage, express, freight, telephone and telegraph service; repairs to building, elevators, and machinery; preserving sanitary condition of building, light, heat, and power; stationery and office printing, including blanks, price lists, and bibliographies, $39,000; for catalogues and indexes, not exceeding $16,000; for binding reserve remainders, and for supplying books to depository libraries, $90,000; equipment, material, and supplies for distribution of public documents, $35,000; in all, $180,000.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KIESS: On page 166, after line 8, insert: "The duty of preparing, publishing, and distributing the semimonthly and session indexes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall be performed, beginning with the 1st day of July, 1921, and thereafter, by the superintendent of documents of the Government Printing Office, under direction of the Joint Committee on Printing. For the performance of this work the superintendent of documents shall assign from time to time from among the persons appropriated for in his office such of them as he may deem competent and necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this amendment I merely want to say that it puts into effect a joint resolution which was introduced by me and favorably reported by the Committee on Printing at the beginning of this session.

For more than 40 years the indexing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been done by contract, due to the fact that the printing law of 1881, which was reenacted in 1895, provided that it should be done by an indexer. Now, it takes from five to seven people to do this work, and the Joint Committee on Printing, not having authority to employ more than one person, had to have it done by contract.

We have been trying for a number of years to change this method. In the Sixty-third Congress, the first Congress of which I was a Member, a printing bill was introduced and passed which provided that indexers should be appointed, which would have made it possible to employ a number of persons, and in the Sixty-sixth Congress, on the 13th of August, 1919, a printing bill introduced by me and carrying this provision passed the House. This bill has not passed the Senate as yet, and in order to make this legislation effective, beginning with the new fiscal year, we decided to report joint resolution No. 384. It will not be possible to reach it on the calendar at this session, and for that reason I am offering this as an amendment to the sundry civil bill, believing that it is in the interest of economy. The men who will be employed will be under civil service, and when they are not employed on this work, when Congress is not in session, the superintendent of documents can use them for indexing other publications of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. As I understand the gentleman there are now seven employees under the civil service engaged in this work.

Mr. KIESS. Oh, no; not under the civil service. It is done by contract. One man has the contract, and he employs the others.

Mr. BLANTON. And they are not under the civil service?

Mr. KIESS. No.

Mr. BLANTON. They are entirely outside of it?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. So when we change this plan of indexing we will not leave seven idle civil-service employees in any other department with nothing to do?

Mr. KIESS. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GARD. I renew it.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. KING. Will this remove any of the employees from the pay roll of the House?

Mr. KIESS. No.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. How much does it cost at the present time to do this indexing?

Mr. KIESS. It is paid for by the page, and depends on the number of pages. For the eight Congresses prior to the Sixty-first Congress the average number of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for a Congress amounted to 12,851. We all know that in recent years Congress has been in session the greater part of the time.

Mr. TILSON. Unfortunately so.

Mr. KIESS. And there is a large increase in the number of pages; so that no one can tell what it will cost.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman have any idea that this change will save money?

Mr. KIESS. I am sure it will save money; and anyone who will read the report of the Committee on Printing which accompanied House joint resolution No. 384 will get a very fair statement of the situation.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that we carry in this bill six clerks to do this work, and their total compensation is $8,400. One year it cost nearly $20,000 to do this work under the contract; and unquestionably this will save from $5,000 to $10,000 a year. When the Committee on Appropriations learned that the gentleman's Committee on Printing intended to report out this joint resolution, the gentleman from Pennsylvania came and asked us to put it on the bill. We declined to do that, but we did put on the number of clerks necessary to do the work, and they are carried in the bill, and the gentleman said he would offer the amendment. I have no objection to it, because it will effect a real saving.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIESS. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. A question for information. It seems to me that six or eight clerks are a quite sufficient force to index a publication like the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which follows certain definite lines of matter, and whose system of indexing was long ago established in a uniform way.

Mr. KIESS. I do not understand what the gentleman is getting at, but at the present time there are no clerks employed by the House.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand that. What I mean to say is that it does not seem to me, from such knowledge as I have, that such a number of clerks would be required.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on his point of order?

Mr. GARD. Still reserving the point of order for the purpose of making an inquiry, do I understand that legislation from the gentleman's committee has passed the House covering this matter?

Mr. KIESS. Not with this exact provision. I said that the committee had reported out a joint resolution at the beginning of this session which they realize can not be reached in the ordinary course of business, and for that reason we have asked to have this attached to the sundry civil bill. I stated that in the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress a general bill revising the printing law passed the House, but has not passed the Senate.

Mr. GARD. Is that which the gentleman now asks contained in the general printing bill which passed the House and is awaiting action on the part of the Senate?

Mr. KIESS. Does the gentleman mean what we are asking to pass now?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. KIESS. No; the general printing bill provided that the Joint Committee on Printing should employ indexers instead of an indexer, which would have made it possible for us to get away from the contract system. The committee believe that this amendment is a better proposition, for the reason that no one knows how long Congress will be in session, and that with these people employed by the year the superintendent of documents can make use of them for other work when Congress is not in session.

Mr. GARD. How many more people will be employed under your amendment?

Mr. KIESS. Not any more.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota demands the regular order. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon his point of order?

Mr. GARD. If the regular order is demanded before I can secure information I shall have to insist upon it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the demand.

Mr. GARD. I have no desire to take up the time of the committee unduly. How many men will be added to the pay roll by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. KIESS. No one will be added, in one sense. At the present time the work is done by contract, and the man who has the contract employs six men. Under this proposition the work will be done under the supervision of the superintendent of documents, and the employees will naturally come under the civil service, the same as the other employees of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GARNER. And the saving will be about $10,000 a year?

Mr. GARD. Under the contract it is not necessary to have them under the civil service?

Mr. KIESS. No. This is a private contract. It has been going on for 40 years. We are trying to correct something and save the Government money. As a member of the Joint Committee on Printing for eight years I am familiar with it. We have been trying to correct it in a revision of the general printing laws.

Mr. GARD. What is the gentleman's estimate of the saving per year?

Mr. KIESS. The saving per year will probably be from $2,500 to $5,000. It will vary with the years, depending upon whether Congress is in session continuously or whether the RECORD is large or small.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition there is appropriated for the operation, maintenance, and extension of waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon during the fiscal year 1922 the necessary portions of such sums as shall be paid as water rentals or directly by the Government of Panama for such expenses.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15422, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 7, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

299. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting proposed item of legislation to appropriate certain sums to further educational facilities for enlisted men in the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

300. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Darby River, Pa.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

301. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Hudson River, N. Y., approaches to Troy Dam; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

302. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, which have been presented to this department and require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 956); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

303. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of Indian Affairs to pay amounts found due by the accounting officer of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1920 and for prior years (H. Doc. No. 957); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

304. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States, as submitted by the Attorney General, and which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 958); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

305. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund (H. Doc. No. 955); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15543) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1165), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 440) directing the Secretary of War to cease enlisting men in the Regular Army of the United States, except in the case of those men who have already served two or more enlistments therein, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1168), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4682) to amend section 74 of the Judicial Code as amended, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1169), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:
